Our work among Chinese women is well received. Much precious seed is sown, and many are interested in the doctrine. I believe that many are being gathered into the mission churches through our visitation. Women in Shanghai are mostly engaged in work which in fine weather is done outside their houses, thus making it easy for us to read, sing, and speak to them of Jesus. There are always men and children on hand, and I believe the men get more from our visits than the women. We ask an interest in the prayers of your readers.

A Note of Thanks.—Writing from Kobé, Japan, Dr. J. L. Atkinson, of the American Mission, says, "I have to thank you for another year's issue of THE CHRISTIAN. I enjoy it very much indeed for myself, and it is very helpful in giving and in suggesting material for a little paper I publish in Japanese. Great thoughts simply expressed are the need of the majority of Christians and inquirers in every land. As I read, I am often profoundly impressed with the variety and magnitude of the efforts that are being made to ameliorate the sad condition of many and to save all. May God add his gracious presence and blessing to all these endeavours."

AMONG THE CHURCHES.

Church of England.

The Bishop of Gloucester and Bristol has completed his seventy-eighth year.

The first missionary dismissal service in Durham Cathedral was held on Saturday.

Rev. H. P. Thornton, of Normanton, has resigned in order to devote himself to voluntary mission work.

The health of the Bishop of Durham seems quite re-established, and he is working in the diocese with his usual vigour.

The Bishop of London preached on Thursday the annual sermon of the Church Pastoral Aid Society at St. Martin-in-the-Fields.

Rev. E. Davies, who has done valuable work as senior curate at St. James', Hatcham, has been appointed to St. Paul's, Birkenhead.

The constitution of the Niger Delta Pastorate Church, which had previously been approved by the Committee of the C.M.S., has been signed by the Archbishop of Canterbury.

The York House of Laymen has marked its sympathy with the Queen Victoria Clergy Sustentation Fund by passing a resolution commending the cause to Churchmen, and voting a contribution of £200 to the Fund.

The Archdeacon of Northumberland's Charge, delivered on Tuesday week in Newcastle Cathedral, was one of his best efforts. His closing remarks on the Protestant nature of the Church were delivered with marked emphasis.

At Hereford Cathedral, on Friday afternoon, the Archbishop of Canterbury opened the new Cathedral Library, and unveiled a memorial of the late Bishop Hampden. The new library stands on the site of the mediæval library, and its erection is mainly attributable to a handsome bequest of £4000 by the late Canon Powell. The library contains a collection of two thousand chained volumes, including two hundred missals, and is the largest chained library in England.

The Church of England Training Colleges for Masters and Mistresses at Cheltenham owe their foundation to the late Francis Close when Incumbent of Cheltenham. A definite character was stamped upon these institutions from the first, inasmuch as "Dean Close and his coadjutors took care so to draw up the Trust Deed that the Colleges thus founded should not veer from the Scriptural, Evangelical, and Protestant principles of the Reformed Church of England, and ever since the committee have cordially endeavoured to sustain those principles with whole-hearted earnestness." The Colleges have taken a high place amidst similar institutions, and have done invaluable work.

Congregational.

Rev. Richard Lovett, of the R.T.S., has sailed for the States for a short tour.

Rev. W. Nicholson has entered with much hopefulness on his new charge at Selby.

Mansfield College has received a cheque for £1000 from Mr. William Flinmers, of Manchester, for its library.

Mr. George Müller preached last week in Morley Memorial Chapel, Fishponds, Bristol, in connection with the anniversary.

It is proposed to replace the iron church in Ramsey-road, Forest Gate, with a permanent "Tabernacle," at an estimated cost of £2500.

Rev. John Stewart has settled with many tokens of interest in his new charge as minister of the Evangelical Free Church at Felixstowe.

Rev. James Ervine has resigned the pastorate of the church at Kingstown, and will close his ministry there in the end of June. Mr. Ervine has been sixteen years in Kingstown.

Dean Lefroy proposes that a thanksgiving service in connection with the Jubilee should be held in Norwich Cathedral on June 22, and he suggests that Rev. Dr. Barrett should represent the Nonconformists of the city and read the lessons. Dr. Barrett has accepted the suggestion with pleasure.

The completion of the first six months of the Women's Monday meetings has been celebrated at Carr's-lane Chapel, Birmingham. Rev. J. H. Jowett presided, and said this gathering was the grandest sight he had witnessed since he came to Birmingham. The meetings were started in order that the women might, for a little while once a week, get away from themselves and the worries of home-life, and mingle with each other in prayer, praise, and communion. They began with 400, now the number had reached 900, and he trusted the membership would reach 1200.

Calls.—Rev. J. Ossian Davies, of Bournemouth, Paddington; Rev. H. H. Scullard, of York-street, Dublin, to Howard Chapel, Bedford; Rev. F. J. Fry, Stratford-on-Avon, to Boulevard, Nottingham; Rev. J. G. Easley, to Malmesbury.

Resignations.—Rev. A. D. Philps, of Coggeshall, Essex (after thirty-three years' pastorate); Rev. E. J. Hammond, of Guildford.

Baptist.

A new chapel is being erected at Redditch.

Mr. T. Beckett has been ordained at Bildeston.

Bunyan Chapel, Kingston-on-Thames, reports growth and real spiritual work.

The work at Mill-road, Cambridge, is reported as in a flourishing condition.

Rev. J. H. and Mrs. Weeks and Mrs. Stapleton have returned to their post on the Congo.

The pastor of Abbey-road Chapel is preaching a series of sermons on the cardinal doctrines held by the Church of Rome and the Ritualistic churches of England, and large congregations have assembled.

For some time past the church at Withington, Manchester, has been meeting in a hall. Land is being secured, and an effort is being made to erect an iron church. The district is rapidly growing, and the need is urgent. The building will cost about £400.

Calls.—Mr. R. R. Clifford, of Regent's-park College, to Barking-road, Plaistow; Mr. A. S. Langley, to Newcastle-under-Lyme.

Resignations.—Rev. J. E. Brett, of Tewksbury; Rev. J. Glaskin, of Tenterden.

Methodist.

A new mission hall is being erected at Melton Mowbray.

Dr. J. Booth, of Cork, has offered himself for the foreign mission field.

New chapels have been opened at Irthlington, Bank Top (Darlington), Audley.

The Tyneside Council begin a convention for the Deepening of the Spiritual Life on Monday, June 14.

The foundation-stone of the new chapel has been laid at Mundesley (Norfolk) by Lord Battersea, who expressed the hope that the doctrines preached by Wesley might again be abiding forces in village life.

The annual report of the Aldershot and North Camp Soldiers' Homes is of an encouraging character. The income is £2157 against £1877 last year. During the year an assistant chaplain has been employed at the summer camp at Pirbright.

The Trust sermons of the Wesleyan Seamen's Mission were preached on Sunday week by Rev. J. H. Grubb. The committee of this Mission contemplate changes in their methods consequent on the changed conditions of a sailor's life. The superintendent of the Mission, Rev. Wm. M. Grigg, has intimated his intention of retiring, after having had charge for the past fifteen years.

Presbyterian.

Rev. Robert Wylie, of Canonbury Church, London, proposes going to Tasmania for the sake of his health.

Society of Friends.

At the reopening of the Meeting-house in Stockton-on Tees, recently, an able lecture on "How we got our English Bible" was given by Robert F. Crosland, and a ten-days' mission was conducted by Clara R. Fearnsides and Wm. Hy. Wilson. These meetings were felt to be seasons of blessing.

The Friends' Christian Fellowship Union sent out parties at Easter to Gloucester and Thakeham and Hurstmonceaux, in Sussex, for evangelistic and other work. Good reports have been received of the services rendered.

While the meeting on ministry and oversight was sitting in Bristol, on the 19th ult., word arrived of the decease of the venerable Anne Hunt, a minister who had rendered noble service during a long life, and had now finished her course in deep peace.

The eyes of Friends are looking to the coming yearly meeting of London with real interest. Dublin yearly meeting, which began on the 28th ult., ends to-day probably. Several English Friends attended the latter, and good times were expected.

Fallen Asleep.

At Salford, Mr. John Lee, aged eighty, a liberal and large-hearted helper in Christian work, and one of the founders of the first ragged school in Liverpool.—At Tynemouth, Rev. S. L. Allard, aged forty-seven, an earnest leader in Christian effort.—At Idle, Mr. Joshua Booth, aged fifty-five a Sunday-school teacher for forty years.—At Ponkey, Ruabon, on 24th ult., Mr. R. Roberts, of Pleasant Creek House, for seventeen years one of the recognised leaders in Baptist work in the district.—At Penzance, on 25th ult., Mrs. Hannah Eve, aged ninety-six, a life-long abstainer, and an earnest Christian.—At Bedford, Mr. S. J. Henman, a prominent leader at Bunyan meeting.—At Ipswich, Rev. J. Mostyn, a retired Baptist minister.—At Bristol, Mr. Isaac Thomas, for twenty-five years a leading deacon at Broadmead Chapel.—At Saltaire, Mr. John Moore, aged seventy-five, a veteran Sunday-school worker and evangelist.—At Llanfyllin, Rev. John Jones, a retired Wesleyan minister.—At Brighton, Rev. W. Harrison, rector at Clovelly.—At Toddington, Beds, Mrs. Wordsworth, widow of the late Bishop of St. Andrews.—At Doagh, co. Antrim, Mr. Jas. Hunter, for over fifty years an earnest Methodist local preacher.—At Belfast, Rev. Jno. Beatley, senior minister of Roseyards Presbyterian Congregation, Ballymoney.—At Penzance, Mrs. Hannah Eva, aged ninety-seven, an earnest Christian and life-long abstainer.

Notices.

Applicants for Tracts.—Geo. H. Weekes, Town Mission, Lancaster; A. Young, 3, Affleck-street, Pentonville, N.; J. Jackson, 23, North King-street, North Shields; J. T. Stevenson, 19, Bristol-gardens, Maida Vale, W.; E. Heath, 31, Blomfield-road, Shepherd's Bush, W.; Miss F. Penrose, Rose Villa, Meadow-road, Shortlands, Kent; W. Midwinter, Utile Dulci, Baker-street, Weston-super-Mare.

Young Women in Paris.—A collection of curios and fancy sale will be held on May 11 to 13, at 24, Park-lane, London, W., in aid of the British and American Mission Homes and Christian Associations, 77, Avenue Wagram, Paris. Tickets at various prices from Miss Rhoda Mouncey, 22a, Queen's-road, Bayswater, W.

God's Blossoms.—While warmly thanking your readers who have responded to our appeal for flowers, we ask attention to the following rules:—(1) That no flowers may be sent to our private addresses unless by special request; (2) That friends kindly willing to help us will communicate first with either of us, that we may arrange for the day and address for the flowers to be sent direct to the various centres.—L. E. Tritton, 68, Cromwell-road, S.W.; E. M. Tritton, 36, Queen's Gate-gardens, S.W., Secs. Flower Mission and Factory Helpers' Union.

Armenians in London.—A constant stream of refugees is arriving on our shores, and more will come to escape the Turkish hate, stimulated by recent success. By arrangements made with "the Friends of Armenia," we have undertaken the care of these refugees, who are sent on to our homes, 14, 16, Kingdon-road, Hampstead, and thence into situations. We have lately opened a depôt at Birmingham, where there seems promise of employment. All this involves very heavy expenditure. In some cases, the refugees reach us in absolute need of every kind of help, food, clothes, medicine; in other cases, they are of gentle birth, ladies, students, merchants. We have two or three strong youths for factory work, shoemakers, a first-class barber, blacksmith, a skilful diamond setter, a modeller in plaster, an educated and refined widow for ladies' companion, a young girl of sixteen, who ought to be educated, and many others. Rev. G. H. Krikorian, Director.

Shansi, N. China.—The Lord's work here prospers. At our annual conference, held last October, we had the joy of baptizing twelve men and three women and ordaining three deacons. We also accepted thirty-one men and thirty-three women as candidates for baptism, and these will be at least another year on probation. The present outlook is very bright. We have at present twenty-three men living with us to be helped to break off the opium habit, and several others have had to be refused admission because we have no room for them. Our boys' school for the children of Christians also promises well for this year. I had a letter to-day from one of the literati in a village eight English miles off, telling me that he had put away his idols and was now trusting Jesus and serving God. Another man called on me and said that he had put away his idols. So we hear of fruit here and there throughout our very large field. Early in June we hope to leave for a needed furlough.

C.T.M., Pingyao, Shansi. Alex. R. Saunders.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

THE conflict between Greece and Turkey has ended disastrously for the former country, so that Europe apparently has to face the consolidation rather than the curtailment of Turkish power. When we remember that all the producing causes of the Armenian and Cretan disturbances are still at work, it must be admitted that the prospect is far from bright. We can but hope that the controlling Powers of Europe will have the common humanity to insist on the protection of the Sultan's subjects in any settlement that is made. Meantime we trust in God that, in his inscrutable wisdom, He will yet bring peace and righteousness out of the abounding confusion.

Soldiers of fortune are not an extinct class. We feel a sense of shame as we read of men in the Middle Ages who, with easy consciences and strong arms, passed from army to army as they were drawn by chance of gain or of distinction. The present war has shown that for love of fighting alone (the Sultan has no money to spare) soldiers can serve under the Crescent while professing to be Christians. Germany and Russia have supplied much of the military skill and knowledge which have given Turkey an advantage over Greece. On the other hand, the dynastic bond which is supposed to bind Russia and Germany to Greece has not had much effect upon the course of events. This war has been evidence again of the rarity of sincerity and purity of motive. The cruel indifference of rulers and soldiers to the dominance of an unjust anti-Christian power augurs ill for the nations of the East.

The great catastrophe by fire in Paris last week has awakened sympathetic echoes throughout the civilised world. The fact that the sufferers were of high social rank and were engaged in a work of charity has added poignancy to the national grief in France. The event is one that speaks loudly of the uncertainty of life and the fleeting nature of earthly possessions and vanities. It also has a severe lesson for the civic authorities of Paris, who have evidently shown culpable laxity in connection with the temporary structure which so quickly fell a prey to the devouring flame.

The statement by the Chancellor of the Exchequer of our national income and expenditure affords painful thought to a Christian patriot. Our wealth is enormous, yet our poverty is oppressive. Our expenditure on the Army and Navy grows more rapidly than our income ; two-fifths of our national income is devoted to them, and then, besides, there is the interest on the national debt, which is mainly, if not altogether, a war debt. The military rivalry between the Governments of Europe is one of the most crushing burdens on the nations, and also one of the greatest scandals to Christianity.

The immense claims of the mission-field, now so prominently brought forward, are compelling their advocates to urge on well-to-do Christians the duty of personal consecration to the work abroad. Money is good, sympathy and prayer are better, but self-consecration is best of all. What is lovely in a brother or a sister of small means is lovely also in one who has enough and to spare. Does not the poorer member really make the greater sacrifice ? For he or she can take none of the advantages which the richer one can retain. But without making contrasts or comparisons, which are likely enough to err in something, we want to emphasise the call for men and women, as well as the call for gold and silver. They are the very workers we want—those who can prove by their conduct that the joy of preaching the love of God in Christ is more to them than cultured ease and enjoyment, that the love of the poorest human being is more than the fellowship of their own class. The churches have some such, but they want more, for "the harvest is great, but the labourers are few."

Dr. Lawes, of New Guinea, gives in the Missionary Chronicle of the L. M. S. a most cheering account of the progress of the Gospel in that island during the last twenty-two years. For 700 miles along the south-east coast the people have been brought under its power. Where there was the utmost darkness and savagery there are now ninety churches and ninety schools ; 3000 boys and girls are scholars ; 1350 men and women are professed followers of Christ ; forty New Guineans and their wives are schoolmasters and pastors "respected by men and honoured of God." A second generation is coming on—four boys taught first by New Guinea teachers are now themselves teachers, and the sons of three are now in the college preparing to follow in their fathers' steps.

Travelling parties go unarmed, and visit places there that were a terror to their fathers. Spears and clubs are sold as curios.

All this is cause for devout thankfulness ; yet in our days of steam and telegraphs how few have known anything about it. Day is stealing all round the world, and the nations of Europe, so busy with their buying and selling, and enjoying their pleasures, observe it not. Still, there remains much to be done in New Guinea, for hundreds of tribes in the interior have never heard of Christ.

Movements now taking place in China are believed to portend a national change among that mighty people. There is a growing conviction in China that besides possessing the secret of immortality and personal salvation to every believer, the Christian Church holds the secret of the salvation of China as a nation. Hence the churches are getting aglow with new fervour and zeal for the salvation of their countrymen collectively as well as individually.

The past year has witnessed an extraordinary expression of liberality towards the C.M.S., and men and women have also freely offered themselves for service. The Society is on the crest of a high wave of enthusiasm, which we trust, may carry it on to larger usefulness than it has ever known. The meaning of this efficiency in spiritual service, this blessing of God upon work for converting the world, seems to us to indicate that the true defence of a party in a church, or of a church itself, is devotion to duty. To seek our life is to lose it ; to give ourselves up to the will of God is to gain it. The secret of power and growth lies in consecration. "Seek ye first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you."

The nation can never know of what burdens as a whole it is relieved by Christian willinghood which seeks out so many needy classes, e.g., orphans, aged men and women, idiots, persons in decayed circumstances, poor children. It does something for all these itself, but private benevolence also undertakes a large share. Some churches aim at maintaining all their own dependent poor. Dr. Stephenson, who does so great a work through his Children's Home, now proposes to take all children of Nonconformist parentage who are in workhouses, and train them as the orphans under his care are trained. If this can be done, it will bring some 2000 children into better surroundings, and it will be another evidence that Christianity is self-helpful, and a blessing to the home and the State.

We are glad to note that an endeavour is being made to establish home industries for English women. Basket-making has been selected as a suitable occupation for female labour. At present large quantities of baskets are imported from Germany, but English women can make them as well, and at a fair wage. We welcome any development in the direction of legitimate employment enabling the worker to earn an adequate living.

Bishop Hurst, of Washington, writing in the current issue of The Homiletic Review, shows Church History to be a fountain from which the preacher may draw much instruction. In Church History, on the one hand, we find encouragement to stand by great truths ; and, on the other hand, we are enabled rightly to appraise dangerous errors, and, in fact, to see their fate foreshadowed. Our dearest teachings and most useful methods are often shown by Church History to have a worthy ancestry ; while modern falsehoods appear in the light of resuscitated enemies that have many a time been met in conflict, and which Truth has scotched though not slain.

There was much wisdom in the remarks of Lord Rosebery at a meeting in Edinburgh on Monday, with respect to the necessity of making a calm and dispassionate survey of all public questions before passing definite judgment. The daily papers, which write more for the humour or the opinion of the passing moment, have a good deal to answer for in the formation of hasty judgments. Those who feel most strongly are often in danger of forgetting that almost every question can be regarded from differing points of view.

Englishmen in Africa.

IT is not only what a writer puts in a book, but what the reader draws out of it, that makes the impression upon his mind. A notable instance of this is seen in Olive Schreiner's recent book*, which by some reviewers has been denounced without compromise as coarse, profane, and blasphemous, and by others applauded without qualification as expounding the love and righteousness of God. The former have dwelt exclusively upon the method of the advocate, the other as exclusively upon the cause advocated. Probably also adherence to the cause itself or repulsion from it may have influenced the view taken on either side.

Seldom has the purpose of a book been so obscured or prejudiced by the manner of its presentation. The object is to show that South Africa has been exploited by unscrupulous men hasting to be rich, led by one commanding mind, ambitious to be great, without regard to the natural human rights of the coloured races, or the present and future well-being of the country as a whole.

The method of presenting the case is the self-told story of a trooper who shares in the selfish designs, the unscrupulous methods, the immoral character, and the seared conscience of his masters. The story is related with Zolaistic realism and coarseness, but without the pruriency or sensuality which have been unjustly charged upon this book. We cannot wonder that it has been refused by some libraries and cast out of others; for it is not a book for a drawing-room table, nor for the reading of innocent young people; though fathers and mothers might do well to get from it an idea of the language and conduct of some of our young men in foreign lands among inferior races.

But the horror of the book to every reverent Christian is that this cruel and shameful story should be represented as told in all its coarseness and profanity to Jesus, who appears as night draws on, to the trooper who has lost his way.

No one who held that name in reverence as the Son of God, could, it seems to us, have conceived such a situation: to have put it in print seemed impossible. From no point of view, historic or artistic, political or politic, was such a representation legitimate or necessary. Reverence for the Creator, and gratitude to the Saviour, and, if not these, yet regard for the convictions of those in whom such reverence and gratitude are the supreme motives of word and conduct, should have prevented so painful an outrage upon their feelings. Its effect has been to neutralise to a very great extent the cause it advocates, and to enable the partisans of those whose career it condemns as mischievous to hold up the book as a whole to condemnation.

Yet truth is true by whomsoever and howsoever spoken. A ship's captain would heed the warning of "Fire!" whether it were calmly said, or cried with gnashing of teeth.

The following is the Dedication:—

"To a great good man, Sir George Grey, once Governor of the Cape Colony, who during his rule in South Africa bound to himself the Dutchmen, Englishmen, and natives he governed by an incorruptible justice and a broad humanity; and who is remembered among us to-day as representing the noblest attributes of an Imperial Rule.

> Our low life was the level's and the night's;
> He's for the morning.

The real purpose of the book may be gathered from the following touching and eloquent appeals:—

"Great People, where is the sword given into your hand, that with it you might enforce justice, and deal out mercy? How came you to give it up into the hands of men whose search is gold, whose thirst is wealth, to whom men's souls and bodies are counters in a game? How came you to give up the folk that were given into your hands, into the hand of the speculator and the gamester, as though they were dumb beasts who might be bought or sold? Take back your sword, Great People, but wipe it first, lest some of the gold and blood stick to your hand.

"What is this I see!—the Sword of the Great People transformed to burrow earth for gold, as the snouts of swine for earth-nuts? Have you no other use for it, Great Folk? Take back your sword, and when you have thoroughly cleansed it and wiped it of the blood and mire, then raise it to set free the oppressed of other climes.

"Great Prince's Daughter, take heed! You put your sword into the hands of recreant knights; they will dull its edge and mar its brightness, and when your hour of need comes, and you would put it into other hands, you will find its edge chipped and its point broken. Take heed! Take heed!

"Wise men of England, you who, in peace and calm, in shaded chambers, ponder on all things in heaven and earth, and take all knowledge for your province, have you no time to think of this? To whom has England given her power? How do the men wield it who have filched it from her? Say not, What have we to do with folk across the waters? Have we not matter enough for thought in our own land?' Where the brain of a nation has no time to go, there should its hands never be sent to labour; where the power of a people goes, there must its intellect and knowledge go to guide it. Oh, you who sit at ease, studying past and future—and forget the present—you have no right to sit at ease, knowing nothing of the working of the powers you have armed and sent to work on men afar. Where is your nation's sword, you men of thought?

"Women of England, you who repose in sumptuous houses, with children on your knees; think not it is only the rustling of the soft-draped curtains or the whistling of the wind you hear. Listen! May it not be the far-off cry of those your sword governs, creeping towards you across wide oceans, till it pierces even into your inmost sanctuary? Listen!

"For the womanhood of a dominant people has not accomplished all its labour when it has borne its children and fed them at the breast; there cries to it also from over seas and across continents the voice of the child-peoples—'Mother-heart, stand for us!' It would be better for you that your race should die out than that you should listen and give no answer....

"Working men and women of England, you who for ages cried out because the heel of your masters was heavy on you, and who have said, 'We curse the kings that sit at ease, and care not who oppresses the folk, so their coffers be full and they be not troubled with the trouble of rule'; you, who have taken the king's rule from him and sit enthroned within his seat, is his sin not yours to-day? If men should add but one hour to your day's labour, or make but one fraction dearer the bread you eat, would you not rise up as one man? Yet, what is dealt out to men beyond seas, whom you rule, wounds you not. Nay, have you not sometimes said, as kings of old: 'It matters not who holds out our sword, marauder or speculator, so he calls it ours, we must cloak up the evil it has done!' Think you, no other curses rise to heaven but yours? Where is your sword? Into whose hands has it fallen? Take it quickly and cleanse it!...

"The sin that a man sins, in that he is taken up by the hands of a people and set up on high, and whose hand they have armed with their swords, whose power to strike is their power—his sins are theirs; there is no man so small in the whole nation that he dares say, 'I have no responsibility for this man's action.' We armed him, we raised him, we strengthened him, and the evil he accomplished is more our own than his....

"Do not think I wish for punishment on these men. Let them take the millions they have wrung out of this land, and go to the lands of their birth, and live in wealth, luxury, and joy; but let them leave this land they have tortured and ruined. Let them keep the money they have made here; we may be the poorer for it, but they cannot then crush our freedom with it.

"Shall I ask my God Sunday by Sunday to brood across the land, and bind all its children's hearts in a close-knit fellowship; yet, when I see its people betrayed, and their jawbone broken by a stroke from the hand of gold; when I see freedom passing from us, and the whole land being grasped by the golden claw, so that the generation after us shall be born without freedom, to labour for the men who have grasped all—shall I hold my peace?"

Evening on "Hill Difficulty."

"But oh! how nimbly did he go up the rest of the hill. Yet, before he got up, the sun went down upon Christian; and this made him again recall the vanity of his sleeping to his remembrance."—Pilgrim's Progress.

WHILE in clouds of amber
Sinks the setting sun,
See him toil and clamber,
Tired, belated one!
Step by step ascending,
Still he takes his way,
While the shadows blending
Change to deeper grey.

"Woe is me, I wasted
All that precious time
When I should have hasted
On my upward climb."
Thus hear Christian owning
His own carelessness,
Bitterly bemoaning
Want of watchfulness.

Men might pass unheeded
Though so very near,
Weary folk who needed
Words of earnest cheer.
Others downward going,
With a footstep brisk,
Souls who needed showing
Theirs a fearful risk.

They in sinful slumber
Sunny hours who lose,
Are not of the number
God will seek to use;
Thus how can I measure
What I may have lost,
Seeking slothful pleasure,
Careless of the cost?

Morija, Basutoland.—Rev. Henry Dyke writes: "We have had a new encouragement in our school work. In December we sent twenty-eight boys up for the Cape teachers' examination, of whom twenty-one have passed. Of three sent up for third year three have passed; of four sent up for second year four have passed; of twenty-one sent up for first year fourteen have passed."

Paul: A Servant of Jesus Christ.

OUR LIFE—GOD'S POEM.

Eph. ii. 10.

By Rev. F. B. Meyer, B.A., Christ Church, Westminster Bridge-road.

THE Greek word translated workmanship is poem. We are God's Poem. And as we review our life from the lapse of years—save where we have wilfully violated the obvious intention of our Creator—we shall perceive that there has been an underlying plan and conception, the development of which has proceeded in ever-widening circles. "I girded thee, though thou hast not known Me," is as true of our life as of Cyrus, who was raised up to be the destroyer of Babylon, the liberator of the people of God. God has a distinct thought in each human life. He creates with a purpose. As a great poet may adopt various kinds of rhythm and measure, such as may suit his conception, but has nevertheless a purpose in each poem that issues from his creative fancy, so God means something as He sends each life forth from the silence of eternity; and if we do not hinder Him, He superintends the embodiment of that conception, making our entire life, from the cradle to the grave, a symmetrical and homogeneous poem, dominated by one thought, but wrought out with an infinite variety of illustration and detail.

In a poem the expression is adapted to the conception. A rugged strain befits strong and terse thinking, whilst more flowing and mellifluous measures are better adapted to tender and plaintive musings. It may be that we can thus account for the differences which characterise human lives. Yonder is the fragment of a great epic; there is the lyric, or dramatic; here the sonnet, or elegy. Your life is smooth and flowing, or broken over stones of sorrow, or headlong in its impetuosity, because God's thought must be mated to the metre most suited for its expression. The career we are studying reminds us of the Odyssey, the Iliad, the Paradise Lost, or the mighty conception of Dante. It is ocean-like in depth, variety, and change. As in an oratorio, so here, the storehouse of expression is ransacked to convey the deep and varied transition of the Creator's thought, emotion, and passion. O child of man, yield thyself to God, and let thy days ever express his conceptions!

BE THOU HIS POEM!

See that no intrusion of thy self-will hinders the symmetrical development of his thought.

The poet's art demands that no touch of description or narrative, in the earlier lines, should be fruitless or redundant. To allow the canvas to be covered by figures or objects which do not conduce to the main intention of a picture is in the highest degree reprehensible. Watch well the earlier chapters of a great tale, and you will notice that the touches and descriptions of every paragraph prepare for the ultimate unfolding of the story, and lead up to the climax to which the closing pages hurry.

So in human life. God knows the works which are prepared, that we should walk in them. And as He has created them for us, so He has created us for them, in Christ Jesus. The year of our birth, the place and scenes of early childhood, our parentage and education, the influences that have moulded us, whether of books, or art, or the conditions of daily toil, have been planned with an unerring wisdom and predisposition, that through us might be made known unto the principalities and powers in the heavenly places the manifold wisdom of God, according to the eternal purpose which He purposed in Christ Jesus our Lord; in whom we have boldness and access in confidence, through our faith in Him.

In this connection let us notice how Saul of Tarsus was prepared for his life-work.

SAUL'S PREPARATION.

It was necessary that the wall of partition between Jew and Gentile, raised by Jewish intolerance and exclusivism, should be broken down. That wall was founded in the deepest convictions and oldest prejudices of the chosen people. The Jews had no dealings with the Samaritans, how much less with the Gentile dogs, that crouched beneath the well-spread table of the children. The majority of the apostles were largely influenced by this national caste-spirit. It was hard for them, though they had been moulded by the Lord Himself, to break through the ring-fence of early training. Had the shaping of the primitive Church been left to them, though theoretically they might have acknowledged the equality and in Christ, yet really and practically they would have drawn distinctions between the Jewish Christians and those other sheep which their Shepherd was bringing, but who were not of the Hebrew fold. Peter may go into a Gentile house, and eat with the uncircumcised beneath the pressure of the heavenly vision; but when the glory of that memorable day has somewhat faded, he withdraws from the Gentile converts and retires into the impregnable fastness of Jewish superiority.

Evidently another than James, or even Peter, was needed, who would dare to insist on the absolute equality of all who by faith had become stones in the one Church, or buildings in the one holy temple, that was growing into an habitation for God. A trumpet voice was needed to proclaim that those who were once far off were made nigh; and that Jesus had abolished in his flesh the enmity, that He might create in Himself of the twain one new man, so making peace.

Such an one was this man, to whom was entrusted the Gospel of the Uncircumcision, and in whom He who wrought in Peter unto the apostleship of the Circumcision, wrought also unto the Gentile. By birth, as we have seen, he was of pure Hebrew descent. This was an essential element in his fitness, else he could not have influenced Jews, or obtained admission into their synagogues. It was the fact of his being a Jew that made his association with Gentiles so intolerable to the Pharisees; though so full of light and leading for those who believed in and loved him. But the effect of his Jewish birth was greatly modified by other facts.

He was born in Tarsus, and from his boyhood was familiar with the tides of Gentile life that flowed up the silver Cydnus into that bright, busy, and prosperous city. Men from all the world met there for purposes of trade. The wharves and open spaces of the city were thronged with the costumes and rang with the speech of all nations. And thus in those days, though hedged in by the restrictions of early Jewish training, the lad must have learnt that there might be noble and generous traits in men who did not own the God whom he served from his forefathers. At the same time he would have abundant evidence, in the dark religious rites that were practised in the city, as well as in other ways, that it was

HOPELESS TO EXPECT ANYTHING FROM HEATHENISM.

None were righteous; no, not one. All had gone out of the way, and had become altogether unprofitable. The course of this world was according to the Prince of the power of the air. The way of the Gentiles was in lasciviousness, lusts, winebibbings, revellings, carousings, and abominable idolatries.

In addition to this he had been brought up at the feet of Gamaliel, who was known as the Great Rabbi, or the Beauty of the Law. He was a doctor of the law, had in reputation among all the people (Acts v. 34). Grandson of the great Hillel, he was, as the story of the Acts indicates, one of the leaders of the Sanhedrim. But, unlike most of his school, he was liberal and large-hearted, and went so far as to permit and advocate the study of Greek literature. In his speech before the Sanhedrim, given in Acts v., we trace the movements of a humane and generous man, who was willing to admit the workings of the Divine Spirit beyond the limits of rigid orthodoxy, and to follow the torch of truth wherever it might lead—a very holy man, deeply attached to the religion of his people, yet accustomed to look at all questions from the standpoint of a large culture and wide charity. The influence of such a nature must have been very potent on the young Tarsus boy, who had come to sit at his feet, and would regard him with an unbounded enthusiasm. In those days some of the seeds may have been sown which, under the sun of Christianity, would ripen into such sayings as: "There can be neither Jew nor Greek...for ye are all one in Christ Jesus."

There was needed in the moulder of the new age a perfect acquaintance with the law. "The law" must stand here as a convenient term, not only for the moral and Levitical code, as given in the Pentateuch, but for the minute and laborious additions of the Rabbis, who—to use one of their own illustrations—had so overlaid the sweet flute of truth with their gilding as to silence its music. The righteousness which was of the law consisted in meats and drinks and divers ordinances, washings, the length of fringes and number of tassels, the straining of wine lest there should be the dead body of a fly, the tithing of the stalk as well as the flower of mint, the punctilious observance of the Sabbath. One great Rabbi was in the habit of spending the whole week in considering how to observe the coming Sabbath.

No one could have appreciated the awful burden of this yoke of legalism, which, Peter said, "neither we nor our fathers were able to bear," unless he had been taught, as Paul was, "according to the perfect manner of the law of the fathers." To know that Christ had "redeemed from the curse of the law" meant more to one who had gone about to establish for himself a righteousness which was of the law, than it could possibly mean to those who had never been subjected to the

EXACTIONS OF THE PHARISEE SCHOOL.

As a Jewish boy, Saul of Tarsus had been thoroughly indoctrinated. At five he began to study the Scriptures with his parents at home, learning by heart Deut. vi. 4-9, xi. 13-27; at six he was sent to the schools, the text-books in which were the Books of Moses; at ten he began to study the oral law; at twelve he would be put to a trade; at thirteen he would be confirmed. At fifteen, he was instructed in the inner and mystical meaning of the Scriptures; and from that moment till arrested on the road to Damascus he was perpetually involved in the minute, elaborate, and wearisome routine of legalism. He could have said with the Pharisee of the parable: "God, I thank Thee that I am not as other men are...I fast twice in the week, and give tithes of all that I possess."

But what an education to one who was to speak to them who knew the law, who was to gain them that were under law, extricating them from the yoke of bondage in which they were held, and bringing them into the liberty wherewith Jesus makes us free! The future Apostle needed to appreciate how much of the law was holy, just, and good, that he might reverence it. No mere iconoclast could do what had to be done. A devout and reverent soul was required to teach that what was of God was imperishable, and would pass forward into the keeping of the Church, whilst only the wood, hay, and stubble would disappear.

As Luther was trained in the Roman Catholic Church, that he might appreciate the utter impotence of her system to pacify the conscience or appease the hunger of the heart, and that, having broken through, he might show the way of escape to others; so Saul of Tarsus must needs tarry for a time amid experiences of which he speaks so pathetically in Rom. vii., that he might shout—"Thanks be unto God, which giveth us the victory!" and argue, "There is therefore now no condemnation to them which are in Christ Jesus."

There was also urgent need for the requirements of his after-life, that the future Apostle should be able to meet the

PRELIMINARY CONDITIONS OF A GREAT TRAVELLER.

All the world was Roman. Roman governors in every province; Roman usages in every city: Roman coins, customs, and officials. To be a Roman citizen gave a man a standing and position in every part of the empire. He might not be beaten without trial; if he were, the magistrates would fear for their office and even life. He could demand trial at the bar of Cæsar: if he appealed to Cæsar, to Cæsar he must go. He would be permitted to plead for himself before the tribunal of Roman justice. So great were the advantages that men like Lysias, the chief captain, thought it worth their while to purchase the right of freedom with a great sum. How great an advantage for Paul to be able to say, "I was free born." Who shall say that there was not Divine workmanship in this?

But further; as Greek was the universal language of the time, it was of no small benefit for the Apostle to be able to speak it fluently. How else could he have preached on Mars Hill, or to the eloquence-loving Corinthians? And how else could his epistles have appealed at once to the whole world? His Greek may not have been of the purest; but it was intelligible, and, on occasions, could hold the attention of philosophers.

Moreover, for a travelling missionary the means of livelihood were needful. When there were no churches, no converts, no near base of operations, it was almost essential that the itinerant should be able with his own hands to minister to his own necessities and to those who were with him. This was partially met by the universal Hebrew custom that

ALL BOYS SHOULD ACQUIRE A TRADE.

"He that teacheth not a trade is as though he taught his son to be a thief"—so ran the old proverb. But what an evidence of the Divine workmanship appears in the lad being taught to make tents of goats' hair, a material which was plentifully supplied by the vast herds of goats tended on the mountains in which the Cydnus took its rise. Other trades would require a settled workshop and expensive apparatus; but this was a simple industry, capable of being practised anywhere, and with the smallest possible amount of tools and appliances.

In these, and similar particulars, it is interesting to trace the workmanship of God, who sought to fashion the chosen vessel, which was afterwards to bear his name. And we can understand with what deep emotion the Apostle penned the words, God separated me from my birth to preach the Gospel (Gal. i. 15).

Life is a Divine poem—sin excepted. Only yield yourself to God that He may fulfil his ideal, and that your obedient life may match his conceptions, as perfect expression mated to perfect thought. So shall your life be a Divine poem.

Caledonian Crescent Mission, Edinburgh.—This mission held its anniversary last week. Mr. W. D. Dunn, evangelist, spoke on the second advent of our Lord. Mr. Samuel gave a forcible address on the call of Jeremiah. The Mission is undenominational.

Theatrical Tea Meeting.—A large number of women and girls engaged in the theatres accepted the invitation of Mr. William Forbes to tea on Thursday last in Orange St. Chapel Lecture Hall. Songs and solos were sung and addresses were given. To each of the guests a New Testament was given, and a bouquet of flowers, with texts attached, from the Bible Flower Mission.

The "International Mission."

By COUNTESS A. SCHIMMELMANN.

IN 1895 I bought the yacht Duen of H.R.H. Prince Waldemar of Denmark, to use it for my mission. Her Majesty the Queen of Denmark graciously expressed her satisfaction, and was the first to propose to give her support to the mission by an annual subscription. Later on several members of royal families gave donations or subscriptions. In England H.R.H. the Princess of Wales and H.R.H. the Duchess of Connaught were pleased to show their interest in the mission by giving a donation. I changed the name of the yacht from Tumler to Duen (the Dove). It is a schooner of thirty-five tons register.

We have been able to shelter eighteen young sailors and lads. Of these fourteen have been placed in good situations and are doing well, many having been rescued both in body and soul. Two of them were sons of well-to-do people. Several were believed by their families to be dead, and are now at home and true Christians. One boy, a Russian, had no knowledge of Jesus Christ, asking for the "address of that gentleman." Neither did he know of God, or what prayer meant. He knows now.

Meetings have been held on board in English, Danish, and German for sailors of different nations. In Denmark and Germany separate meetings for dockers, women, little girls, and boys, were held with great blessing. Sometimes I have held as many as six meetings a day, and the yacht has been crowded with about 200 persons at a time. The meetings for boys were specially blessed in Copenhagen. The result of this is that I always find a group of "my boys" waiting for me when I land, asking for a little improvised meeting, or boatfuls come out to pay me a visit on board. In other places the quays are often crowded with listeners. Tea meetings on board or in the docks were specially held in London and Copenhagen.

Thanks to an English friend the cabins have been made as comfortable as possible for me, and give me the opportunity of staying on board even in winter, when mild. This is a great advantage in the saving of my strength, being able after the work to retire to my own little nook instead of staying in noisy hotels, or of visiting constantly from place to place. The cabins also afford a home for workers helping me, as well as to the lads staying on board; so that the work is not interrupted wherever we sail. We can also carry with us our stores of books and tracts in ten different languages for distribution or for sale.

Going from harbour to harbour we naturally come in contact with many ships of all nations, and being able to speak six different languages, the sailors gather readily around me, attracted by their own language in a foreign country, and so we have improvised Gospel meetings with great blessing. It is most touching often to see the sailors sitting on the railings, coils of rope, or tubs, and listening with all their souls. But as my time is limited, most of the ships are not visited by myself, but by those of my young sailors who are truly converted. In the course of last year I visited about 100 ships, and my young sailors 411. We have distributed 20,000 Gospels and tracts, and good books, in ten languages, without counting the books of my own writing, which are sold after the meetings.

LOST SONS RESTORED.

The fruit of this work has been specially seen, and many a lost son has been found and restored to his Heavenly Father, and also his earthly home. It has twice happened that there have been three such cases in the course of one meeting. One day there were in Hamburg two very remarkable conversions of the sons of good parents, who had gone so far astray that they had led their parents to believe they were dead. One especially of these cases, which I was able to trace later on, proved to be very satisfactory. The young man is now living with his parents and proving himself an admirably steady and happy Christian.

The same day as these were converted I related these cases to one of the few believing clergymen of the town, being just on my way to an evening meeting in a lodging-house for sailors. The clergyman replied, "Well, Countess, you seem to be a good hand at finding lost sons, counsel me what to do in such a desperate case as this," and he produced a letter, telling of a lady of rank whose son had left her "never to return," and he, being in such an exasperated condition, it was feared that by this time he was dead, yet there was a faint hope that he might have gone to Hamburg to get abroad. The poor mother was nearly losing her senses, and the clergyman was entreated to make inquiries in Hamburg.

"IT IS IMPOSSIBLE TO FIND HIM HERE,"

said he. "Now, what would you do in this case, Countess?" "Pray," I answered, "and then make it known in every meeting I hold for sailors. I will do both directly," said I, leaving him for my meeting. The meeting over, I mentioned the case, and was about to ask the sailors for their help in finding this lost one on any of the ships, when a young man rose, deathly pale, and drew me into an adjoining room.

I am not at liberty to tell more—except that before the clergyman was up next morning a note from me informed him that by this time the lost son was already in his mother's arms. This case made a young atheist with strong anarchist views acknowledge, "There is a God after all, and miracles are wrought in these days."

Perhaps the most interesting incident in my Sailors' Mission was a case in Hamburg, where I held a meeting for tavern-keepers and keepers of lodging-houses frequented by sailors. Seeing what a power these men had over the sailors, I thought it would be like saving hundreds of sailors if one of these innkeepers should be converted. Knowing it would be difficult to get them, I had neat cards printed, and sent them personally to every one, with a message that it was only to the gentlemen and their wives keeping lodgings and taverns I wished to speak. To my joy about 200 or 300 arrived, wondering very much what I wanted, so I told them that I had invited them as my confrères, that I knew a good deal about their trade, in fact, I was a lodging-house keeper for seamen myself, having had for many years homes for the Baltic fishermen. I would tell them how to make the trade profitable, and reckon up for them the profit and loss.

I told them of the cost of surrendering the whole life to Jesus, and the never-ending gain it brought. If, moreover, they would give up the selling of spirits, and everything that would bring them money at the cost of ruining the souls of others, the gain of it would be the blessing of many a mother and wife, and a satisfaction not to be brought by any gain of money. Thank God, there were tears in many eyes, and about six came and shook my hand, telling me with quivering voices, that from that day no sailor should be led to any evil in their houses, or as far as they could help it outside. I long to have another such meeting, and am sure they will come again.

(To be concluded.)

Sailors' Welcome Home.—The May muster of the "Christian Life-Boat Crew" was deeply interesting. The text for the month, "I will trust, and not be afraid," was commented upon by Colonel H. MacGregor, Rev. D. M. Cameron and Mr. Wm. Luff. Bright testimonies followed by sea-faring members of various nationalities, notably an Austrian delivered from the errors of Roman Catholicism. A special feature of the meeting was the presence of one member who has been instrumental in saving many lives from a watery grave.

Begin at Home.

By Mrs. Harvey-Jellie.

THE society of Waylands held its breath in astonishment, for in different and circuitous ways the news was handed round that the young fashionable wife of Raymond Crawfield had "become religious," and was altogether changed since returning from a recent tour.

Gertrude was singularly beautiful, and her husband was very wealthy—not from his own industry, but by inheritance; and they were sought unto by the young part of the social circles. Her receptions gave great satisfaction; her "at homes" were very popular. In dress her taste ruled, and her voice in song was reckoned of almost professional quality.

"What will this new idea of hers mean, I wonder?" said Ruth Gausden, as she settled herself in the hammock hanging from a tree in the garden.

"No telling, when people change like that," said her sister.

"Perhaps she wouldn't advise me to read this book now; but I'm going to, for all that. I think we ought to know all the strange things that go on, and it's all marvellously exciting and interesting; it doesn't seem half so shocking now as when I first read about it."

Ruth spoke truly, not only for herself, but others, and she steeped her mind in foolish and pernicious literature, till wrong seemed robbed of its sting.

Not far from where she lay reading, the one of whom she had spoken was walking in the avenue of her garden, thinking of some of the snares and dangers that beset the young women of present-day society, and with heartburning and indignation she longed to warn and save them.

"What is filling your mind, Gertrude, that you did not hear me coming?" asked her husband.

"Raymond, dare I speak out what I now see is right?"

"Dare you keep silent? That is the question. I intend (God helping me) to expose the sinfulness of fashionable sins among our society men. We have a work to do, and you well know how to get at some who are in special danger," he said.

The position was not easy to Gertrude—to be wholly Christ's, and yet maintain her place in the centre of her brilliant circle; but of this she was prayerfully resolute, that only as far as she could glorify Him must she go, and thus she asked that though in the world she might not be of it.

One spring afternoon, by special invitation, Ruth Gausden walked round the lovely gardens with Gertrude Crawfield, and they talked together.

"I've read the book you spoke of months ago," said Ruth.

"Would I had saved you from it, Ruth. I see now we should

SHUN THAT WHICH TAINTS THE MIND.

Knowing about evil does not keep or make us good. Eve, by getting to know the forbidden fruit, lost Eden. By knowing and being familiar with wrong and impurity we may lose our purity."

"I don't see we need be ignorant, and I am not religious," she added with a glance at Gertrude.

"Ruth, you and I know how unreal and unsatisfactory is the life we all have been living. You know, too, the empty sham in it all. When God meets us, and brings us to think we are immortal, and a Saviour has died for us, and that He offers us his love and salvation by eternal life, it makes us see things in the right light."

"But you will be Gertrude Crawfield still, with your place to hold in society. Are you to deny yourself all enjoyment?"

"I can only hold my place in so far as I may honour Christ and not sanction wrong. I would rather give up any enjoyment. When you know and feel as I do you will not consider much you now like to be pleasure. Still, it has come to me so clearly that I am sent back here after that glorious awakening to new life to lead a crusade against evil, and prepare the way for Christ's coming, and I take it as a God-given responsibility. It is no passing fancy."

"I believe you are in earnest, but it all sounds rather absurd to me. I'm going to dance to-night, and nothing will make me see wrong in it, even though I know queer things of some of the people there," and Ruth drew herself up in confidence, and left her friend to go her own way.

Raymond and Gertrude Crawfield, with humble gladness, took up their cross to follow Christ, and in the most difficult place, among their own class, where they lived and were known. The servants first felt the influence of their Christian life, and then it fell on others.

A grand reception and ball was held about half a mile from where they lived, and Ruth Gausden was the belle of the evening, in her cream satin and lace. Was she suffering from nervous debility, or had some trifling dream unnerved her? she wondered, as she took her place in the brilliant room. Then she tried to reason with herself that it was listening to Gertrude Crawfield's foolish talk, for her words resounded frequently, they were so strange on Gertrude's lips—"We are immortal," "Salvation and eternal life."

The music started, and as she went whirling round the room, clasping the hand of a man whose character could be questioned, she became more and more horrified at the confronting thought that she was immortal and was offered salvation and eternal life.

Gladly she retired that night, and laid aside her finery, hoping rest would restore her spirits and chase away her fears.

Weeks passed on, and reports of the new and beautiful life that was lived at Waylands Lodge came to be commented upon all round; for, with no ostentation, but quietly and humbly walking with God, and shunning no opportunity of confessing Him, the Crawfields caused their light to shine in contrast to the flash and glamour of the world.

Ruth Gausden was unexpectedly called to the death-bed of an aunt. For a few days the invalid seemed to rally, and Ruth sat beside her, trying to interest her in little details of her own life, until by sympathy and kindness she was drawn out to tell of Gertrude Crawfield and the impression her words had made.

"When you come to lie down at the end of life, Ruth, you will

SEE THE RELATIVE VALUE OF THINGS.

To me now those words are infinitely precious—'immortal,' 'salvation,' 'eternal life.' Don't try to shake them off; let them dwell with you till you enter into their wonderful meaning."

The day was over at Waylands Lodge—a busy, bright, and happy day, for life held a new and noble purpose to the inmates; three months of the joy and privilege of bringing every power into captivity to the service of Christ had been faithfully lived.

Gertrude had prayed for the one who had been her companion in the ways of the world, but of Ruth she had not heard since that day in the garden, and for aught she knew she had taken offence at what was said. She knew of her being away from home, and gathering up the incidents of the day (as was her custom) she laid them before her Master in believing prayer.

To her and her husband discipleship meant cross-bearing, for to be faithful, consistent, and zealous in the midst of the gay and fashionable was not easy, though they rejoiced in the honour of following Christ. On that evening He sent the inspiration of cheer by a letter signed, "Ruth Gausden," in which she said:—

"Those words coming from you strangely impressed me, and hearing privately of your life since then has added force to them, and by my dying aunt I saw the beauty and importance of them, and now I claim them as mine. This is what the hollow show of our gay society needs—loyal, earnest Christians to move among them and tell of immortality, salvation, and eternal life, and I thank God for you."

The letter was spread before the Lord, and bedewed with tears of thankfulness, and became the instigation of many a fresh effort among the wealthy, who, with all their temporal riches, were not "rich toward God." Now a wave of spiritual blessing has passed over Waylands, and where the worldly and the giddy ones lived in folly and sin, the devout and godly speak often one to another and say, "What hath God wrought!"

The Needs of Portugal.

AS yet there are only two centres of Evangelical work in Portugal—Lisbon and Oporto—for, though there is a growing desire all over the land for more Gospel teachers, the supply is almost nil. Very little is known abroad of the needs and opportunities there. One seldom sees a notice in the missionary magazines of work in Portugal, which is more often included with that in Spain, or overlooked entirely.

Yet requests for workers are frequently received which cannot be acceded to. Even Coimbra, the University town, is yet unoccupied, notwithstanding all the advantages of work among the students, and numerous applications received from residents there. In the country work is still difficult, as there is not yet legal liberty in Portugal to convert Romanists, to attempt which is a criminal offence. But in the cities public opinion is so far with the Protestants that the Romanists dare not put the law in motion.

A most promising feature of the work in Portugal is the success of the primary schools, in the face of much opposition. Thus, in Oporto, though the Romanist schools are free and a penny a week is charged at the Protestant schools (accommodating 180), sixty-five are waiting for admission to the latter. In another, which accommodates eighty-nine, there are 109 applicants on the books. Now, as it only takes about a sovereign a scholar per annum to maintain these schools, surely there should be no difficulty in providing the £150 or so per annum required to accommodate at least those who are anxiously waiting. The schools referred to are under Rev. R. H. Moreton, of the Wesleyan Church. The Reformed Portuguese Episcopal, or Lusitanian, churches, under Rev. Jas. Cassels (brother of the Bishop of Western China), doing equally good work, are in equal need.

In Lisbon the work is chiefly divided between the Lusitanian and Presbyterian churches, whose English and Scotch representatives are, respectively, Canon Pope and Rev. R. M. Lithgow. There are also two or three independent workers here and in neighbouring towns. Among the native pastors there are several who were once Romish priests, one of whom continues in his old parish. All these agencies pull well together, and even to the extent of both using the same hymn book.

A peculiarly promising branch of the work, with a strongly unifying tendency, is the circle of Y.M.C.A.'s established some two years ago, in association with the Swiss centre. There have for some time past been one or two small English associations, but those of which I now speak are entirely Portuguese. In Oporto, where they were first established, there are three branches, in connection with as many churches, under the presidency of Rev. H. da Silva, a promising evangelist and master of the Wesleyan schools. At the head of the Lusitanian branch is Senhor Dom Joaquim Pinto da Conceicao.

Priestcraft stands in but poor repute in Portugal to-day, where its representatives lack the respect of most, though in the villages they still hold sway over the minds of the women. In place of faith, though side by side with hard-dying superstitions, there is a growing spirit of indifference, which must inevitably absorb the majority of the half-enlightened young if more is not done to bring before them the truth.

One hopeful sign is an increasing readiness to purchase Bibles, although their circulation without authorised "notes" is prohibited. There are several small evangelical publications in Portuguese, some of which come across the Atlantic from Brazil, where in a freer atmosphere the Gospel seems to have taken root with most encouraging results, the effect of which is from time to time reflected to Europe. Thus a Portuguese merchant returning from Brazil has offered to build a new Protestant church in Lisbon.

In Lisbon and Oporto there are Episcopal and Nonconformist services for the considerable colonies of English to be found there, and at both ports Seamen's Missions exist, doing excellent work. Oporto, too, there is a small German service conducted by a layman; but except at Portalegre, where Mr. Robinson conducts evangelistic services at the cloth factory, there is practically nothing done as yet to spread the Gospel in Portugal.

Pastors' College.

By A MINISTER.

THE Conference of the Pastors' College Evangelical Association was well sustained in numbers, interest, and, we trust, profit. The standard displayed has been loyalty to Christ and his Gospel throughout. At the opening gathering at Shoreditch Tabernacle on Monday, May 3, this ensign was hoisted, and it has continued to wave at all the meetings. We are not aware, indeed, of any year of the Conference when any leaning to "modern thought" or to the "higher criticism" was in evidence; but, perhaps, never more so than on the present occasion has the pronouncement against all non-Evangelical views been so continuously emphasised.

As usual, the chief item in the programme was the President's address, which was given, as heretofore, at the Tuesday morning's meeting, and on this occasion occupied an hour and forty minutes. For the third time, since holding the office of President, Pastor Thomas Spurgeon has addressed his brethren in parables, and clothed his thought in similitudes—a somewhat risky device: still, never before has the new President been more at home in the region of comparison, or shown more Spurgeonic skill in making the dry bones of prosaic material live. We confess that when the announcement was made that "railways" were to be requisitioned to supply preachers with a train of thought, we were not oversanguine about the result; but undoubtedly the metals were made to speak, the train moved at a good pace, and, from the ticket-office and platform to the terminus, we had, what might be called, the aid of a profusely illustrated Baedeker. It is difficult sampling an address that moves on symbolic rails; but, with the exception of the arrival at the terminus, the naming of the station struck us as the point of greatest effectiveness. Broad-street would not do, for "have we not made up our minds to suffer reproach for being narrow, even though our fellow-Christians join the world in so styling us?" Neither is Waterloo to be thought of since "abstinence is not to be put in place of repentance, nor pledging instead of believing." Baker-street has something to recommend it, "for the people must be fed." Still stronger were the claims of St. Paul's. "So far as doctrine is concerned," said the speaker, "I am more than willing to call my station St. Paul's. Some professed to have outdistanced the Apostle of the Gentiles; some suggest that his words must not be regarded with quite the same confidence as those of Christ. Well, I fancy, that what he taught he learned from Jesus. But the best name of all for our station is King's Cross, for we preach King Jesus and his sacrificial death.... Oh, write it up legibly, call it out loudly, for we are not ashamed of the name of our station."

Following the President's address, there was the usual meeting for business, when the former officers were re-elected, and the names of brethren deceased affectionately recorded.

Without attempting to set forth in detail all the proceedings of the Conference, Dr. McCaig's address on "The Cross a Centre," delivered on Wednesday morning, calls for special mention. A better thing of its kind could hardly be. We only regret that certain blind leaders of the blind, alluded to by name and otherwise, were not there to hear it. Dr. M'Caig ably showed that the Cross was central (1) in the Divine purpose; (2) in the thoughts of Jesus; (3) in Apostolic teaching; (4) in Christian Doctrine; (5) in the ordinances; (6) in Christian experience; and (7) in glory—that, in a word, the Cross was beyond all analysis and above all praise.

Pastor Fullerton subsequently dealt with the "Present Dearth of Conversions," regarding the charge as well founded, and instancing, among other causes of the dearth in question, the adverse action of literary revival, and even the movement whose watchword is "the culture of spiritual life." It is but fair to say that Mr. Fullerton, in dealing with the latter point, was particularly careful to guard himself from misconstruction. Over-care about one's self, even in the best connection, has its snare, and the rich experience is apt to become "rancid." The true remedy for "dearth of conversions" lies in the feeling heart and in the tears of lament that then gush forth. It ought also to be said that, in this brother's view, philanthropic aim has blunted the edge of desire for conversions—a view that is doubtless correct—and also the unsettledness of faith through the indeterminate teaching that is so widely current. Pastor Fullerton pleaded for a greater sense of the reality of conversion, and urged that that to which we are converted must be more real.

Pastor Wilson, of Woolwich, then opened the Conference on "Soul Winning" in an address of considerable fervour and power, laying special stress on the importance of a due estimate of the human soul as the means of true incentive in the quest of souls. It is to be regretted that the Conference on "Soul Winning" virtually closed with the excellent opening furnished.

In the evening of the same day the wonted meeting for subscribers was held, Mr. W. Willet presiding, when popular addresses were given in exposition of the Pastors' College principles and methods of training, and also by way of sampling the Divine blessing in the case of men already in the field. The gifts amounted to £1600.

Thursday morning of the Conference, despite the fact that all the programme could not be carried out, was even richer in fulfilment than in promise. The Vice-President (Pastor C. Spurgeon) never in our judgment gave an address more inspirational in thought and form than on the present occasion. Based on Isa. vi., the subject was "God-touched lips a complement of God-touched hearts." It seemed as if his own heart had been touched by the flaming topic; and he spake with a capacity and vehemence that bespake a tongue on fire. "The sphere of true power is the heart. We must be furnaces ourselves, and then we shall know what fire can do. If fire is brought from the right place to the right place, then we shall have no need to fear as to our success."

Pastor W. Hackney, M.A., followed with a paper on "Our Dependence upon the Holy Ghost in Our Ministry"; and if we may say of the Vice-President's address that it was like the rush of fire, we may say of Brother Hackney's words that they were like the steady fall of the gentle rain on a weary ground. A better second could hardly have been found. We had been stimulated, and now we needed resting. We had had a supernal view, and now we needed a sight of the green pastures. Mr. Hackney's address may be summarised in the fourfold charge—depend on the Holy Ghost (1) for your character, (2) for your knowledge of God, (3) for your life-work, and (4) for your joy.

The limits assigned us admit only of a brief glance at the Thursday evening pleasant public meeting, in which the grave and gay alternated, particularly the latter. The President and Vice-President spoke, as also Dr. Usher and Pastors Jeffrey, Harris, and Fullerton. Dr. Usher claimed sympathy on the score of having been robbed of his points; while a student speaker voiced his experience in the Irishman's definition of hanging, "the most trying part being the suspense of it."

The closing meeting of the Conference was held on Friday, May 6, when a vote of thanks was accorded with acclamation to Mrs. Spurgeon, of "Westwood," Beulah Hill, for her welcome Conference gift; and the hosts who had so heartily entertained the brethren were similarly remembered. A sermon followed by the President—the text being Habakkuk ii. 2. The divisions were—Watching, Writing, Reading, and Running. At the communion service Pastor Frank White said a few gracious words, then, hands being joined, the Psalm "Pray for the peace of Jerusalem" was sung, and in a few words of benediction another year's Conference closed.

Lepers at Jerusalem.

The twenty-fifth report of the Leper Home at Jerusalem describes in brief the work of one of the most interesting of Moravian institutions. Last year began with nineteen inmates, and ended with twenty-six, fourteen men and twelve women. God mercifully preserved from serious illness all the nurses and other helpers.

It is satisfactory, says the report, to know that the treatment of leprosy is still engaging the most careful attention of experts. Brother Schubert, who has charge of the Home, states that during the past year an eminent Austrian physician visited Jerusalem with a view to making personal observations on the cases of several patients in the Home. He spoke of some new methods which had been tried in South America. The results had not been conclusive, but further discoveries would, he hoped, tend at any rate to mitigate the evil.

Communications regarding the work may be addressed to the treasurer, Mr. H. O. Essex, The Square, Fairfield, near Manchester.

The Indian Famine.

DEAR SIR,—In November last you published an appeal for help for the famine-stricken Koi people in South India. My estimate was that £400 might perhaps be sufficient to meet the wants of the comparatively few people scattered throughout the jungles in those parts, and of this £304 have been received and remitted to Mr. Cain. As, however, the hot season has advanced, and the fruits and roots found in the forest have been exhausted, it has become evident that £400 will not be sufficient. Recent letters state that much of the money received had been spent, and the fear is expressed that what is left may not suffice to meet the demands of the worst part of the famine time, which will last up to September at least. Space will not admit of many of the details which Mr. Cain gives illustrative of the state of distress when he wrote. Though there was then much suffering, and there must be still more now, he was certain that so far not a single person had died from starvation. The relief given has been enough to support life, and no more. The poor people are deeply grateful for the help already received, and readily acknowledge that without it large numbers must have perished.

Will your kind readers help once more? If they could send me half as much more as they have already sent, it might suffice to tide over the worst of the distress. There is a terrible want of clothing among the poor women.—Yours truly,

F. T. Haig, Major-General.

South Nutfield, Surrey.

On Thursday evening at the Conference Hall, Clapham-road, Lord Radstock gave a very interesting, though deeply touching account of the famine-stricken districts in India. It was truly pitiful to hear the terrible tale of suffering and death which is going on in our far-off Empire. Perhaps the saddest thing is, however, the apparent ignorance which exists among Christians of the true facts of the case. Half a million has been raised by the Mansion House fund alone! But what is this in the face of the awful ravages which the famine is making? It is totally inadequate to cope with little more than the fringe of this terrible calamity.

Lord Radstock pointed out that it is difficult to conceive the vastness of the territory over which the famine prevails. Two hundred and fifty thousand square miles have to be dealt with. In some parts two hundred natives per one hundred square miles are dying every month. Heartrending stories were read by Lord Radstock which he had received from missionaries and personal friends. The former are pleading for help, having opportunities now for reaching the hearts of these people in a way never experienced before.

What then shall be done? We cannot let them die—the thought is too awful! It cannot be! No! we cannot leave them—they must not die! In full light of the Cross of Christ, they must be reached and won for Him. It may mean sacrifice and self-denial, but what of this if by so doing dying thousands should learn to know that England loves them for Christ's sake! Soon loyal hearts will throb with joy for our noble Queen, but away in sad India—in village and plain—our dark brothers and sisters will lie down to die, unless help is speedily sent.

Lord Radstock will gladly forward any sums committed to him. His address is 42, Eccleston-place, London, S.W. H. P. Treeby, Major.

Clapham Common.

Qua Iboe Mission.—Mr. Edward Heaney, of the Qua Iboe Mission, West Africa, writes:—"On Sunday Feb. 28, we had twenty-eight baptisms; on the following Sunday one hundred and thirty sat down at the Lord's table. At present we have a large and increasing number attending our inquirers' classes. There is also an increasing spirit of liberality among the Christians. They expect to be able shortly to support a native worker."

The Stranger's Rest.—The monthly workers' meeting at Ratcliff Highway last Friday was of an unusually representative character, being attended by well-known Christian workers from many parts of London and suburbs. The Countess Schimmelmann gave an account of experiences in Denmark and Germany, since she was last in London, as examples of the faithfulness of God. The address was listened to with rapt attention by the large company of workers present.

OUR DAILY HOMILY.

SUNDAY, May 16.

"To draw nigh to hear is better than to give the sacrifice of fools."—Eccles. v. 1.

THIS advice well becomes the Lord's Day, in view of the holy services in which we may engage. We should ponder carefully the words of the Preacher, for we are all inclined to be rash with our mouth. We utter more words in prayer than we mean: we express higher sentiments in our hymns than we feel: we vow but do not pray. Some who would not attend a sacred oratorio, because they feel that words so high and holy should not be sung by thoughtless lips, are not always so careful as they should be in their own use of solemn words. It is not that we should lower the expressions of our worship to our life, but lift our life to their holy level.

Keep thy foot; take off the shoes from thy feet. Walk warily and reverently; behold! He is near; come into the assembly bringing the sense of his presence with you; be careful to maintain and diffuse it; let there be no irreverence in late arrival, or unseemly gazing around; let every attitude be worthy of the great God. And if you cannot attend the meeting of God's saints, be sure that the God of saints will come and meet you. He is in heaven, but also with meek and lowly hearts.

MONDAY, May 17.

"Under the sun."—Eccles. vi. 1.

The Preacher constantly refers to what is done under the sun, and is not this the clue to so much which is puzzling in this book? If your horizon is limited to the sun as its furthest point, it is impossible to get the true standpoint of vision, or to discover the real policy of life. If the world and time are all, this is an inexplicable maze. It is impossible to believe in the existence of a benign and wise Creator unless there is more than we can see, larger than we can grasp. You are driven to blank materialism, unless you believe there is Someone and Something over and above the sun, and that the sun and his attendant train of worlds is but a speck in the vastness of his existence.

O Christian soul, let you and me get beyond the sun, which one day will be no more, to the Lord who is an everlasting light. Let us sit with Him in the Heavenlies, and thence look down upon man and his little life. What inconsiderable atoms do kings and empires appear, and our affliction seems to be but light, and for a moment. Not on this side of the sun, but on that lies our true portion and home, our enduring substance.

In order to live as we should, the sun must be under our feet, and this is only possible to those who are in Christ Jesus. "I knew a man in Christ," says the Apostle, "caught up into the third heaven, and he heard unspeakable things." Would you be unworldly, seek to become other-worldly. Do you want the sun to grow dim, ask for the light which is above the brightness of the sun.

TUESDAY, May 18.

"Sorrow is better than laughter, for by the sadness of the countenance the heart is made glad."—Eccles. vii. 3.

Who does not know that our most sorrowful days have been amongst our best? When the face is wreathed with smiles, and we trip lightly over meadows bespangled with spring flowers, our heart is often running to waste. The soul which is always blithe and gay misses the deepest life. It has its reward, and it is satisfied to its measure, though that measure is a very scanty one. But the heart is dwarfed, and the nature which is capable of the highest heights, the deepest depths, is undeveloped; and life presently burns down to its socket without our having known the resonance of the deepest chords of joy. "Blessed are they that mourn."

Stars shine brightest in the long dark nights of winter. The gentians show their fairest bloom amidst almost inaccessible heights. God's promises seem to wait for the pressure of pain to trample out their richest juice as in a wine-press. Sorrow brings us nearest the Man of Sorrows, and is the surest passport to his loving sympathy. Only those who have sorrowed know how tender his comfort can be. It is only as the door shuts upon the joys of the earth that the window is opened to the blessedness of the unseen and eternal. Let sadness cover your face, Jesus will enter the heart, and make it glad, for the days in which you have been afflicted, and the years in which you have seen evil. God wipes tears from all faces.

WEDNESDAY, May 19.

"The King's word hath power."—Eccles. viii. 4.

When our King speaks it is done. He spoke in creation, and power went with his word to call all things out of nothing. He spoke in his earthly life, and power accompanied every word, in giving eyes to the blind, and life to the dead. He spoke, and the paralysed had power to walk. He spoke, and the tumultuous sea hushed to rest, because it had met a greater power than its own. He spoke, and men knew their sins forgiven. He spoke, and the dying thief passed into Paradise.

Whatever He bids you do by his word, be sure that He will enable you to do it by his power. He works in us to will and to work of his good pleasure; that is, He never directs us in any path of obedience or service without furnishing a sufficient supply of grace. Does He bid you renounce some evil habit? The power to renounce it awaits you. Claim it. Does He bid you walk on the water? The power by which to walk only waits for you to claim it. Does He bid you perform irksome duty? There is such transforming power issuing from Him as to make duty a delight, so that you shall say, "I love my Master, and will not go out free." Whenever you stand up to speak the word of your King, be sure to seek and obtain the power, which shall prove to be your best credential. Take the power of the King with you, and men will know that you have been entrusted with his word.

THURSDAY, May 20.

"The race is not to the swift, nor the battle to the strong."—Eccles ix. 11.

This is true in another sense than the Preacher meant. His conclusion was that time and chance happen to all alike in the race and battle of life. To us it means that God comes to those who are not swift, but like Mephibosheth lame on both feet, and gives them the prize which they could not win, and that He bends over those who are not strong, and gives them the victory which they could not procure. The Gospel is full of promise to younger sons, bruised reeds, lame and helpless souls, to those that have no might, whilst it hides its secrets from the wise and prudent, and withholds its rewards from the swift and strong.

You are not swift. Long ago the spring was taken from your life, and the elasticity from your feet. For many years you have lain by the Beautiful Gate asking for an alms, but you shall learn that He who knows your case can give you the prize of the high calling. It is a gift, and though you have not legs you have surely hands, and the true way of procuring God's best is to be willing to take. Remember the lame take the prey. "He satisfieth the hungry with good things, and the rich he hath sent empty away." You are not strong. But it is well. Many of us are too strong for God. He has to weaken us by touching the sinew of our thigh. When Jacob went from fighting to clinging, he became a prince with God.

FRIDAY, May 21.

"If the iron be blunt, and one do not whet the edge, then must he put in more strength.'—Eccles. x. 10.

If this is true, as we know it is, may we not often use it as an appeal to God? There are times with all who work for God, when they are blunt, through much usage. The brain is blunt, and cannot think. The heart is blunt, and cannot feel. The voice is blunt, and has lost its ringing note. How often the evangelist, towards the end of a series of services, feels blunt! Sometimes also there are private sorrows of which we cannot speak, which take off the edge. At all such times let us turn to God and say, "Put in more strength. Let thy power be magnified in my weakness. Give more grace, so that thy work shall not suffer." I suppose Paul meant this when he said that he gloried in infirmities, that the power of Christ might rest upon him. Surely more work is done by a blunt edge and Divine power, than by a sharp edge and little power.

This, however, does not justify us in seeking to be blunt. And when we are conscious that the edge is going off, it becomes us to seek a fresh whetting. The time is not lost in the harvest-field when the reapers whet their scythes with musical tinkle. A day in the country or a week by the seaside are very pleasant whetstones. Solomon says that friendship, the face of a friend, will sharpen a blunt edge; but the best of all is fellowship with God through his Word.

SATURDAY, May 22.

"Thou knowest not the work of God who doeth all. In the morning sow thy seed, and in the evening withhold not thine hand, for thou knowest not which shall prosper, whether this or that."—Eccles xi. 5, 6.

We are all tempted to look too much to the winds and clouds. We study the faces of people, their moods and circumstances, and say, "It is not a favourable time to approach them about their souls. He does not look to be a likely case, or in a likely mood." But how do we know? If we are always waiting for favouring conditions, we shall resemble the farmer who is ever looking out for perfect weather, and lets the whole autumn pass without one handful of grain reaching the furrows; or who is always studying the clouds, seeking for a spell of hot summer weather, and presently the chance is gone, and the crop lost.

In fact, we can never tell what God is doing in the secrets of the heart. He may have been prosecuting his deep and wise designs with the souls that appear most untoward and unprepossessing. He may have led them to such a point that they are most eagerly yearning for the hand to lead them into the light. Saul of Tarsus was the least likely man to be a Christian in all Palestine, but God had been at work with him. Let us dare then to trust God, not looking for winds or sunshine, never withholding our hand, but scattering everywhere the precious seed of the Gospel.

The Blackbird's Nest.*

God shield you mother-bird, I cried,
That in low careless wayside nest
Sits tightly-wedged, expectant-eyed,
With beating heart and brooding breast.

I saw her through the glimmering twigs
Leave hastily 'mid blotted leaves
Those four warm wonders of blue eggs—
By holy instinct that deceives.

God shield her dauntless faith, I say,
That at love's bidding straight took flight,
Lest her fond presence should betray
Her hanging homestead close in sight.

When love at love's superior call
(For love still shadows mortals o'er)
Abandons back to heaven her all,
God watches the unguarded door.

Hinduism Unveiled.

WHILE I was in Madras the city was stirred to its depths by the visit of Swami Vivekananda, a Hindu religious teacher, who went to the Chicago Parliament of Religions to represent the faiths of India, and was cordially received in the States. He was taken up by philosophical societies and clubs, and made much of in Unitarian and other circles. The Swami has now come back to India with an immense popularity—the creation of the Chicago "Parliament"; and his influence is, for the time being, the chief hindrance to Christian work in every town he visits. The people idolise him, believing, as he says, that Christianity is on the wane in the West, and that the millions of Great Britain and America are thirsting for the Hindu faith.

Great triumphal arches were put up for his reception along the broad roads of Madras, and 10,000 people, it is said, went out to meet him when he arrived on February 6.

The crowds that came to his lectures were so great that a charge of one and two rupees has been made for seats—an arrangement which half emptied the Victoria Hall, though hundreds attend his free discussion meetings, held every morning at 7.30 in a tent by the seashore.

The following paragraphs give specimens of his teaching:—

THE EVOLUTION OF GOD.

The Swami, during his travels in the West, has picked up a smattering of modern science, which he seeks to pour into the old bottles of Hinduism. The result is a strange jumble. In his Yoga Philosophy he thus impiously applies Darwin's theory of evolution to the Deity:—

Starting from some fungus, some very minute, microscopic bubble, and all the time drawing from that infinite storehouse of energy, the form is changed slowly and slowly, until in course of time it becomes a plant, then an animal, then man, ultimately God. (Page 43.)

DENIAL OF SIN.

Ye are the children of God, the sharers of immortal bliss, holy and perfect beings. Ye, divinities on earth, sinners! It is a sin to call a man so. It is a standing libel on human nature.

The worst lie that you ever told yourself was that you were a sinner, or a wicked man.

BLASPHEMOUS CLAIM TO DIVINITY.

In the New York lecture, quoted in The Brahmavadin, August 29, 1896, the Swami says:—

It is the greatest of all lies that we are men; we are the god of the universe. We have been always worshipping our own selves.

Thou art that (tat twam asi). And the whole universe of myriads of suns and moons, everything that speaks, with one voice will say, "Thou art that."

These are the doctrines now being daily taught to the 400,000 of Madras, and wherever this eloquent man goes throughout India. This is the "Neo-Hinduism" that he proposes his followers should—

Go out to preach to every nation. His plan is to start institutions in India to train young men to become preachers of this faith.

Strong men and sincere men, he says, are wanted. With hundreds such the world will be revolutionised.

Side by side with these facts may I put the words of a Hindu woman—a quotation from Pundita Ramabai? She writes in the last report of her home for Hindu widows:—

"A superficial knowledge of the philosophies and religious books of India has been misleading many Western people to think that the Hindus are the sole possessors of superior spirituality. I am not surprised that the good men and women of the West, who only see the outside of the grand structures of the Oriental philosophy, are charmed with them.

"This reminds me of the sight I saw at Agra. . . One day we went into the fort, to see the grand palaces of the Moghul emperors. The guide showed us the Rani's private rooms, the gardens and grand marble buildings once occupied by the kings and queens. He also showed us the beautiful pleasure-tower called Saman Burj. Visitors are shown all that is beautiful there, and they go away carrying very pleasant impressions of Agra with them. I was not satisfied with seeing the outside beauty of these 'poems in marble,' but wished to see the dungeons, and the place where the unfortunate women used to be imprisoned and hanged at the pleasure of the king. The guide at first denied the existence of such places in the palace; but, finally, on obtaining a promise to get a little more money for his trouble, he consented to show the dungeons. He opened a trap-door on one side of the palace, and showed us the many small and large underground rooms where the queens who had incurred the king's displeasure used to be shut up, tortured, and starved, until it pleased his Majesty to set them free. At the furthest end of the prison was a room underneath the Saman Burj, or Jasmine Tower, with a deep, dark pit in the centre, and a big beam placed on the walls right over it. This beam, beautifully carved, served for hanging the unfortunate women who once occupied the throne of the king as his queens, but had by some unknown cause fallen under his displeasure. Their lifeless bodies were let down into that dark pit, whence a stream carried them to the waters of the Jumna, to be eaten by crocodiles.

"I beg of my Western sisters not to be satisfied with looking on the outside beauty of the grand philosophies, and not to be charmed with hearing the long and interesting discourses of our educated men, but to open the trap-doors of the great monuments of ancient Hindu intellect, and enter into the dark cellars, where they will see the real workings of the philosophies which they admire so much. There are thousands of priests and men learned in sacred lore, who are the spiritual rulers and guides of our people. They have deprived the widows of their birthright to enjoy pure life and lawful happiness. They send out hundreds of emissaries to look for young widows, and bring them by hundreds and thousands to the sacred cities to rob them of their money and their virtue. They entice the poor ignorant women to leave their own homes to live in the Kshetras, i.e., holy places, and then, after robbing them of their belongings, tempt them to yield to their unholy desires. They shut the young helpless widows into their large Mathas (monasteries), sell and hire them out to wicked men so long as they can get any money, and, when the poor, miserable slaves are no longer pleasing to their cruel masters, they turn them out in the streets to beg their livelihood, to suffer the horrible consequences of sin, to carry the burden of shame, and finally to die the death worse than that of a starved street dog!"

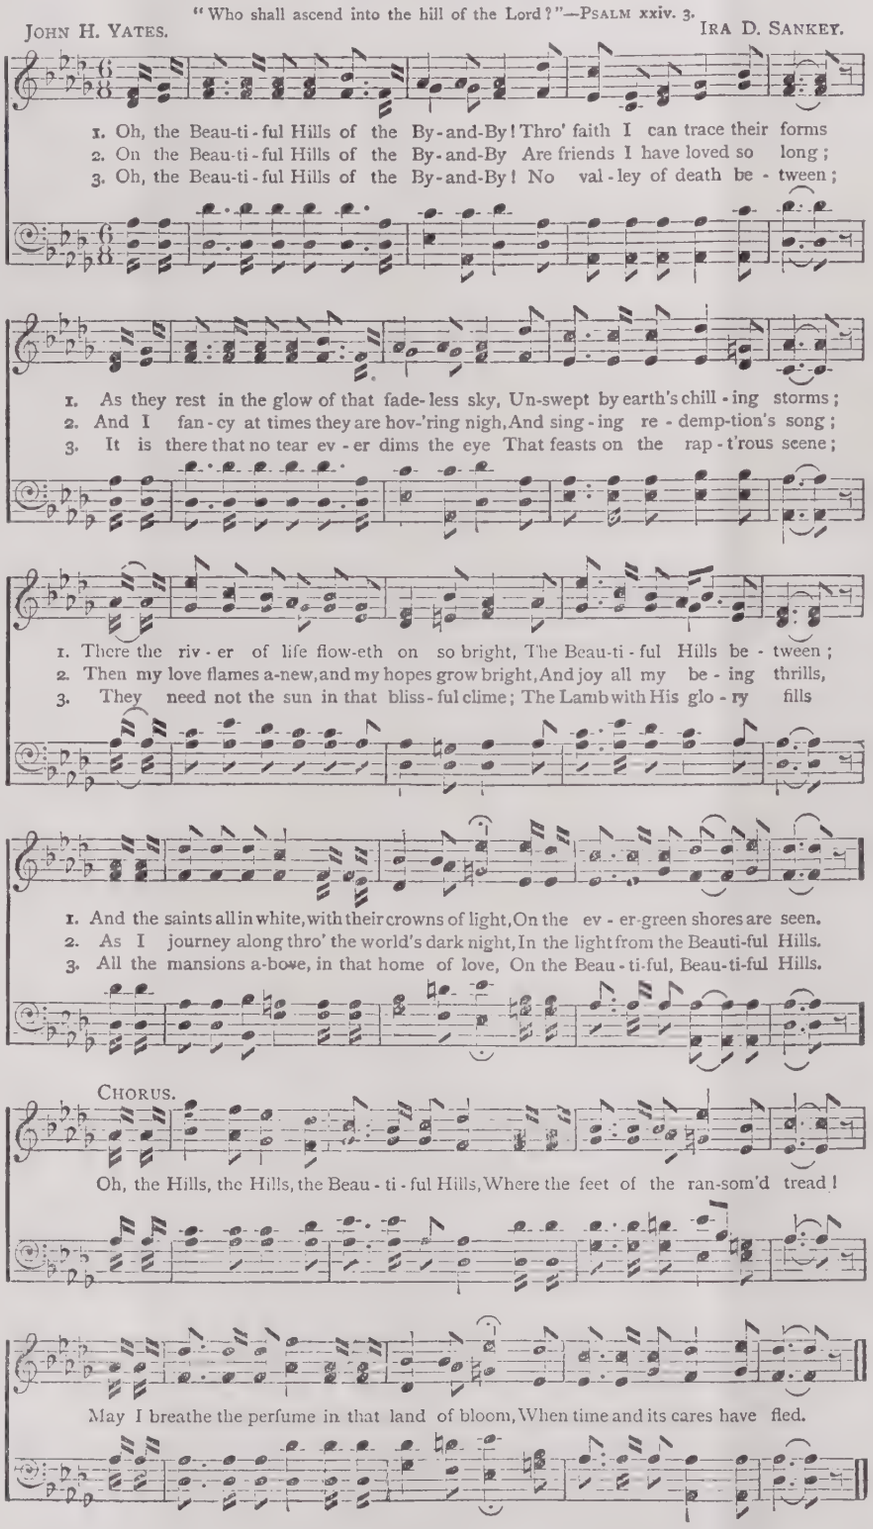
The Beautiful Hills.

"Who shall ascend into the hill of the Lord?"—Psalm xxiv. 3.

JOHN H. YATES. IRA D. SANKEY.



1. Oh, the Beau-ti-ful Hills of the By-and-By! Thro' faith I can trace their forms
2. On the Beau-ti-ful Hills of the By-and-By Are friends I have loved so long;
3. Oh, the Beau-ti-ful Hills of the By-and-By! No val-ley of death be-tween;
1. As they rest in the glow of that fade-less sky, Un-swept by earth's chill-ing storms;
2. And I fan-cy at times they are hov-'ring nigh, And sing-ing re-demp-tion's song;
3. It is there that no tear ev-er dims the eye That feasts on the rap-t'rous scene;
1. There the riv-er of life flow-eth on so bright, The Beau-ti-ful Hills be-tween;
2. Then my love flames a-new, and my hopes grow bright, And joy all my be-ing thrills,
3. They need not the sun in that bliss-ful clime; The Lamb with His glo-ry fills
1. And the saints all in white, with their crowns of light, On the ev-er-green shores are seen.
2. As I journey along thro' the world's dark night, In the light from the Beauti-ful Hills.
3. All the mansions a-bove, in that home of love, On the Beau-ti-ful, Beau-ti-ful Hills.
Chorus.
Oh, the Hills, the Hills, the Beau-ti-ful Hills, Where the feet of the ran-som'd tread!
May I breathe the perfume in that land of bloom, When time and its cares have fled.

In a letter written in Madras in February last, Dr. F. E. Clark, of the Christian Endeavour Society, says:—

"That Vivekananda's return has made a deep impression upon certain portions of the Hindu community is certain. But I cannot find that the Christian community has been greatly affected by his bombastic claims. The arrival of Dr. John Henry Barrows in Madras at about the same time is a powerful antidote to Vivekananda's poison. Dr. Barrows is so uncompromising and outspoken in his defence of Evangelical Christianity that he has won the hearts of all the missionaries and Christian workers. He has deeply impressed many Hindus as well."

South London Evangelistic Band.—The anniversary was held last week at the South London Tabernacle, Peckham-road, Camberwell. During the year over 100 services have been conducted, and twenty-one open-air meetings. Some have professed decision for Christ, and several pledges were taken. Addresses were given by Revs. W. R. Skerry, R. A. Elvey, and E. Roberts.

Mr. W. G. Anderson.

ONE of the brightest features of the past decade in connection with the work of Christ has been the large number of consecrated young men who have yielded themselves to the claim of the Foreign Mission field. We give to-day the portrait of one who has been well to the fore in the ranks of volunteers for service in the African campaign. Mr. W. G. Anderson has proved himself both called and blessed of God in work on behalf of the Dark Continent.

While engaged as a youth in the wholesale bookselling trade in London, it pleased the Lord to convert him. He was at this time resident at West Norwood. He joined the Chatsworth-road Baptist Church (then under the pastoral care of Mr. Fuller Gooch), and soon developed an earnest desire to go abroad as a missionary. In 1890 he offered himself to the Missionary Bureau, and was accepted for service in Further India; but having failed to pass the requisite medical exam. a companion went instead. The desire for foreign service in the cause of Christ was by no means lessened by this disappointment, and with the aim still in view he used every means available for fitting himself for future work.

In 1892, he was accepted for the S.E. Africa Evangelistic Mission, since amalgamated with the Cape General Mission. In July of that year he sailed for Natal, and after a few months, desiring to work in the interior and among a completely heathen population, Mr. Anderson was led, in June, 1893, to join Mr. Booth, then on his way to Nyassaland to found the Zambesi Industrial Mission. He was first placed at Chinde in charge of the transport work of the mission. Six months after his arrival he went on to Blantyre, and commenced preaching in the Manganja language, which he had been studying from the time of his landing at Chinde. Soon after he fell a victim to fever, and for thirteen weeks was prostrate. It pleased God to restore him, and to open doors of usefulness in the work to which he is evidently called.

From April, 1894, to May, 1896, Mr. Anderson was engaged in preaching the Gospel at Chinde to the European residents, and in evangelistic work on the banks of the river, and that with definite signs of blessing. A night school for boys was also carried on with good results. He set about learning the Sena language spoken by the Zambesi people, at which he succeeded so quickly as to be able to preach in it. He then commenced a translation of the Gospel of Mark, and the preparation of a grammar and a primer, all in the Sena tongue. While here he was brought into contact with many other missionary workers, his house being one of call and of ready hospitality for missionaries on their way to other posts. Several of these, among them our brother, Mr. F. S. Arnot, have written expressing their hearty interest in his return to the field. In June, 1896, Mr. Anderson came to England, bringing with him a native convert, for the twofold purpose of preparing him for service among his own race, and of getting help from him in the completion of his grammar and translation work while in this country. This convert is now in a training home at Colwyn Bay, and gives good promise of usefulness on return to his native land.

During his stay among us the Gospel of Mark in Sena as prepared by Mr. Anderson, has been published by the British and Foreign Bible Society, and the grammar by the Society for the Promotion of Christian Knowledge. The primer is also now printed and ready for immediate use, while other portions of Scripture are in hand. It will thus be seen that good work has been done, and that a prospect of much further usefulness is before him. The people in the immediate vicinity of Port Herald number over 14,000, while along the river, large and populous villages, easily accessible to evangelistic effort, and wholly without Christ, are numerous. Among these the subject of our sketch will find his sphere. It is important to note that no other society is at work in this district, or within 100 miles of the centre to which our friend is going. The Nyassa Industrial Mission contemplates establishing quarters at Port Herald, and is all the more encouraged to do so by the friendly relations established between themselves and Mr. Anderson's committee. Of the need for this effort there can be no doubt; every point of view confirms the guidance thus far given.

A committee has been formed to watch over the work, to which Mr. Anderson returns on May 15, sailing by the S.S. Herzog, of the German East Africa line, and a guarantee fund has been started to ensure the support of himself and wife for three years. Mrs. Anderson, while in Africa, proved herself a true help-meet; as soon as circumstances permit, she will rejoin her husband on the Zambesi. The committee invite practical co-operation from all friends of mission work among unevangelised portions of the human race: and Pastor Fuller Gooch, of West Norwood, will be glad to answer any inquiries or to supply fuller details of the plans proposed. It is hoped that additional workers may be raised up, and sent forth in course of time to assist, the field being so wide and necessitous. It is a soul-moving fact that westward from Port Herald, for at least a thousand miles, the country is without any messengers of the Gospel of Christ.

Some 20,000 young people attended a demonstration at the Crystal Palace, on Saturday, in connection with the Church of England Temperance Society.

[FROM A CORRESPONDENT.]

DURING the winter an interesting and successful Bible-class was conducted in Drumlemble, a mining village three and a-half miles from Campbeltown, by Mr. Alexander Fraser, assistant in the Lorne-street Free Church. The interest in Divine things evinced by the young people of the class was so marked that Mr. Fraser resolved to close the work with a week of evangelistic services. They were commenced on the evening of Sabbath, March 21, and for that night and the following he had the assistance of Mr. Hugh Brown, of Glasgow.

There was Divine power in the very first meeting; but it was on the second evening that the ice was broken, and from that night onward souls flocked into the Redeemer's kingdom. Night after night the school-room of the village was packed with people ready to listen to the Word, and during the first week several very striking cases of conversion occurred. A second week's work was inaugurated, and the wave of blessing flowed on. In that week a remarkable break took place among the mining and farming lads in the village and district. The blessed work has had the hearty and prayerful support of Christian ministers and workers in the town.

The changes wrought by the Spirit of the Lord through the preaching of Mr. Fraser, Mr. Hamilton (banker), and Mr. Dick (town missionary) have been very striking. Well-nigh the whole village has been brought to the Lord. One unconverted miner was heard remarking regarding the coal-pit, "Though I'm not a Christian, there's a great change here, and no mistake." Even the blasphemers have had their mouths closed, and the shaft rings not with ribald rhymes, but with songs of Zion.

Meantime, in the third week of the country mission a strong desire sprang up among the Christians of Campbeltown to have an evangelistic campaign started under undenominational auspices, and the Y.M.C.A. committee cordially took up the matter. The first meeting in the town was held in its largest hall, the Victoria, on the evening of Sabbath, April 11; at the conclusion of it, several entered the inquiry-room and decided for Christ. Ever since, the blessed work has gone on each night in the large hall of the Christian Institute and on Sabbath nights in the Victoria Hall; numbers have entered the Saviour's service, one night no fewer than forty-four having testified for Christ. Altogether it has been a wonderful and very hallowed time.

The old Christians naturally speak of 1859, but those of them who have young hearts say that this work is more striking than the upheaval of that memorable year. As we write, a very pathetic bit of news comes from the country, viz., that several young men and women there, who allowed the season of special opportunity and blessing to pass, are now in deep and urgent distress of soul, fearful lest they have sinned away their day by grace. Meantime, the work goes on in town, whole families being affected by it.

One of the many evidences of the genuineness of the work, is seen in the spontaneous way in which anxious ones enter the inquiry-room, and afterwards publicly testify before the town their acceptance of, and allegiance to, Christ as Saviour and King. The work in the inquiry-room is not, as a rule, arduous; decision comes readily, but firmly. The anxiety is brought about by nothing sensational, but by the preaching of the Gospel with its three R's—ruin, redemption, and regeneration—and the special honouring of the Person and work of the Holy Ghost in the conviction, conversion, and consecration of the sinner.

The reaping-time in the Sabbath-schools and Bible-classes has been truly wonderful, and will never be forgotten. All the churches have shared in the blessing, but the two Highland churches—Established and Free—have had a mighty ingathering. To God alone be the glory! Will readers of THE CHRISTIAN pray that the glorious work may continue till multitudes be saved?

HYMN.—"Hymnal Companion," 145.

I need Thee, precious Jesus,
For I am full of sin;
My soul is dark and guilty,
My heart is dead within.

I need the cleansing fountain,
Where I can always flee;
The blood of Christ most precious,
The sinner's perfect plea.

The Bell in the Steeple.

BY REV. JOHN MITCHELL.

DEAR YOUNG FRIENDS.—I have a long tongue and an empty head, but you must not think the less of me for that. Were it not for the emptiness of my head and the length of my tongue, I should not be able to do my duty. The phrenologist might be puzzled to discover my musical bumps, but I do not mind that. If you want proof of my musical ability, listen to me.

It does not matter what people say or think of us if we know we are right and doing the work required of us. You are, it may be, curious to know what people think of your performances, but I think it is wisest to do our best and leave the rest. You cannot please everybody; but seek to please God and obey your parents and teachers, and you will be blessed.

I am exalted in the world now, but it was not always so. Once I lay all shapeless in the earth until I was dug out, and it was only after undergoing great changes that I became a bell. All of you, I daresay, would like to be good and great, but you; too, must undergo a change ere that can be. Your souls require to be dug out of their sinful condition, and formed anew in the image of your Saviour. Then you will be exalted to live in heavenly places in Christ Jesus even here, and when your time comes to go up higher, you will be exalted to sit with Jesus on his throne. Although we bells can never have honours of that kind, I hope you may all make sure of them now. Do not delay and run the risk of losing them.

I did not place myself in this high position at the top of the church steeple. If living men had not taken me in hand and made me what I am, I should still have been hidden in the darkness of the earth, and you who are listening to my story would not have been what you are but for God. It is only by the power of his Spirit through Christ that you can ever hope to be raised to a new life.

You do not always hear me give forth sweet melodies; I know there is a time to be silent. You may enjoy listening to me now and then, but you would get tired of hearing me continually. A wise instructor of olden times charged double fee for his pupil because he said he had to teach him two arts—when to speak and when to be silent. Be still, and learn first how and what to speak, that when you do so you may have something good to say. There is often more wisdom in silence than in speech. You may laugh at me for having a long tongue, but then I know how to use it, and that is what some girls and boys, with shorter tongues, do not. And you ought to remember that my tongue is just the proper length for my work, and no more. You must not judge everything by one measure. You call a tongue of a few inches, long, but an arm twice its length you would laugh at because of its shortness. Learn to judge the right proportions of anything by the work for which it is made.

My chief duty is to call people to the house of God. But if people really loved God with all their hearts, I do not think it would be necessary for me to do that. If there is any place of pleasure you wish to attend you do not need any bell to remind you of it. Those who love the good God to whom they owe all they are and have, love his house and rejoice to meet with others who love Him that they may unite in his praise.

Perhaps you do not love God's house? Then why? Because you have not the new heart which loves the things of Christ. Some people make an excuse for not attending God's house by saying they can worship God at home or in the fields. But, really, the secret is that they have no true desire to worship God at all, but rather wish to selfishly enjoy themselves. God is the great thought-reader and knows the secrets of every heart.

Although I am so high up above mankind, I am connected to the earth by a long rope. The ringer cannot see me, but he believes I am always in my place, and so pulls the rope, and then the whole village knows I am on duty. Suppose the ringer said: "There is no use my pulling the rope as I see no bell," you would think him very foolish. Some of you may think there is no use praying to God or speaking to Jesus because you cannot see them. How foolish! Pull the rope of prayer and God will speak to your hearts and bless your souls. Believe Him and trust Him although you cannot see Him. Never forget that earth and heaven are connected by an invisible rope. Believing what you cannot see is faith, and it is by faith you are saved.

Now I think I have said enough, and that it is time for me to be silent. I fancy you will think the same. Farewell, from your friend, THE BELL.

A Little Hero.

I promised last week to tell you about a little boy who did a very brave thing for the famine-stricken in India. He was a member of the Working Lads' Institute at Finsbury Park, but his father was dead, and he and his mother were very poor, and sometimes did not know where their next meal would come from, nor when they would get it.

He had learnt at the institute a little about how to help people who had been injured, or nearly drowned, or who suffered from fainting or epileptic fits. Perhaps the fact that his father had been killed by accident made him all the more sympathetic in this direction.

One day when he was in the City he saw a crowd, and found a young lady had fainted. Her father was there, but neither he nor the bystanders quite knew what to do. So the little fellow edged his way in, saying, "I can help her if you let me pass, please," and kneeling down by her he applied some smelling-salts, and by-and-bye brought her to.

Her father was so pleased and grateful that he offered the lad five shillings, but he said, "Oh, no, thank you, sir, I did not do it for reward." The gentleman, however, insisted, so at last the little boy said, "Well, sir, I'll take it if you will let me give it to the starving children in India." What could the father do but accede to such a request? and in a few minutes the five shillings were safely dropped into the big money-box placed by the Lord Mayor outside the Mansion House for the Indian Fund.

Don't you think he was a very noble and generous lad, when you remember how very poor he was? Surely he will one day hear the Lord Jesus saying to him—"Inasmuch as ye have done it unto the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto Me." (Matt xxv. .)

"We Want to be Kept."

So said two little girls to Major Whittle during his recent mission at Woolwich. One told him, "I gave my heart to Jesus last Monday." "And I on the Thursday before," said the other, "and now we want to be kept. Will you pray for us?"

"Indeed I will," replied Major Whittle. And I am sure he will keep his promise. Will you pray for them, too?

And what about yourselves? Many of you have given your hearts to Jesus as well. But you must not stop there. That is only the beginning. Now you have been "born again" (John iii.). "You must grow in grace and in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ" (2 Pet. iii.). "In order to grow you must take food—the 'milk' of the Word of God" (1 Pet. ii.), "the 'meat' of doing his will" (John iv.), "the bread of life which is Jesus Christ" (John vi.). These will make you strong; then you will be able to walk aright in the way of God, for He "is able to keep you from falling" (Jude). So here is a little prayer, very soon learnt, and easily remembered, which I want you to learn by heart, "Hold thou me up, and I shall be safe!" (Psalms cxix.).

UNCLE TOM.

THE MAY MEETINGS.

London City Mission.

In the report of this Society, read by Rev. T. S. Hutchinson, secretary, at the annual gathering in Exeter Hall last Thursday morning, the Committee unite in gratitude to God for the immense advance which has been made during the Queen's reign in the social well-being of the people, as well as in the elevation of the tone of society. At the same time they rejoice that, as regards the great metropolis, a spiritual work has been steadily and successfully, though quietly, carried on by the agents of the Society among the degraded, as well as among the respectable poor.

Mr. Robinson Souttar, M.P., characterised the report as most interesting, and in many parts touching. It would be a deplorable thing if anything should happen to reduce the working strength of the Mission. Experience as superintendent of the Oxford City Mission helped him to understand a mission which he regarded as absolutely essential, in view of the extent to which those responsible for ordinary church effort are overworked. The great thing about the City missionary is that he is understanded of the people, understands the people, and can win their respect in a peculiarly successful way. Mr. Souttar closed with a very brotherly word of encouragement in God for the workers present.

Rev. W. H. Griffith Thomas (Portman Chapel) said that the work of this Mission among the ever-increasing population of London, appeals to Christian pity and patriotism. The churches cannot possibly cope with the evils which arise from the intemperance, impurity, gambling, and indifference of a great city. We need a strong, pure London, full of the Gospel of the grace of God, especially in our capital's relations to other parts of our own country and to foreign lands.

Dr. Robt. Anderson (Assistant-Commissioner of Police), who presided, strongly advocated the claims of the Mission, because its work is eminently philanthropic, thoroughly Protestant, and intensely Christian. The general diminution of crime in our city and country may be fairly attributed in part to various official reforms; but civilising, elevating, and Christian agencies such as this must be awarded a large share of credit for the result. Even upon this lower ground the Mission may be regarded as a most valuable investment.

Ten-minute testimonies followed from two converts of the Mission now engaged in the work of the society. Chas. Elgar, of Canning Town, spoke with unbounded enthusiasm of salvation from drink-crave and of nineteen years' happy work in Christ's service. Another homely but graphic story came from the lips of Hy. Palmer, who was "a beauty to save, too." He had no desire to become "a big pot," and was only a quiet worker, but God had used him in getting many of the devil's slaves out of Shoreditch public-houses.

Rev. John Wilson (Woolwich Tabernacle) said he read the report with thankfulness to God, but with something of the feelings of Nehemiah, who fasted, prayed, and wept; for it is still true that one-half of the population never enters any place of worship whatever. Shame, sin, and sorrow are in possession in the slums, and Christianity is the only force to elevate men from such evils. Would that we might begin this new era by doubling the number of City missionaries, one of whom had been called in the speaker's hearing "a soul-saving man." Such loyalists to the Cross of Jesus Christ work on a principle which goes to the root of human need. There must be no recision or withdrawal, but this Gospel chariot must drive on.

A splendid testimony was borne by Mr. James Dunn, now one of the district secretaries of the Mission, and who years ago worked in an engineering factory where 700 men were employed. One of his companions was converted through a tract given him by a City Missionary, and this so impressed him that he spent night after night in agonising Bible-reading until he had to say, "The Book has won!" He was here to say that for twelve months after his soul's eyes were opened no other book could he be persuaded to read but the blessed volume. Conversions followed in the factory; and ultimately the Book was placed in his hands by an agent of this society, who said, "Go and teach that." "Brothers," said he in conclusion, "we'll stand by the Book."

Hon. Hy. Noel and Mr. W. H. Seagram also spoke of the value of the Society's continuous, persevering, and wide-spread operations.

West London Mission.

Annual reports of religious work, whether at home or abroad, have an unfortunate reputation for dryness and general lack of interest. We cannot see why it should be so. There must be more real and true romance in a year's work of any one of our large home or foreign mission societies than can be found in all the fiction of a generation. But, unhappily, all superintendents and secretaries are not at the same time literary artists, and so the work suffers from lack of proper presentation. Such a remark certainly does not apply to the West London Mission, whose annual record is always a fascinating and thrilling narrative of work attempted and done in one of the most important, and one of the neediest, fields in the world.

The present year's pamphlet is not a whit behind any of its forerunners in all that ought to attract and interest earnest Christian hearts. There are chapters by Rev. M. Guy Pearse and Rev. H. Price Hughes, telling of the vastness, the wickedness, and the misery of London. Another of the staff, Rev. W. H. Tindall, describes the strictly church work of the Mission; while the story of the many-sided social work is told by some of the devoted Sisters actively engaged in it. Many of those who read the report will share the astonishment expressed by Lady Foster in her little speech at the Sisters' meeting last week as to the varied nature of the work.

The tenth anniversary gatherings in St. James's Hall were spread over Friday last, a preliminary social function having taken place the previous evening at St. Martin's Hall. The morning preacher was Dr. Monro Gibson, who discoursed very practically from the words in our Lord's prayer, "I pray not that thou shouldest take them out of the world." At the public luncheon in Craven Hall, excellent addresses, full of appreciation of the work of the Mission, were given by Sir John Hutton, Sir Walter Foster, M.P., and Rev. Dr. E. E. Jenkins.

The afternoon as usual was given up to the Sisters' meeting, when every speaker (with the exception of Mr. Price Hughes) is a lady. The speech of Lady Foster, who presided, was very sympathetic and appreciative, especially in her references to the unsectarian character of the Mission.

After no small experience, the present writer does not hesitate to say that the talks of the Sisters are always the greatest treat at the disposal of the May meeting-goer. They come to the platform fresh from their contact with London's poverty and need. On Friday the first to speak was Sister Lily, who expounded the nursing work in a most delightful way. She defended her fellow-workers from some aspersions cast on religious nurses in recent popular literature, and declared that no nurses were so welcome in homes of the poor as Christian women such as the five nurses engaged in connection with this Mission. Sister Lily lifted the veil that hides so much of lowly London life, and told a tale of Christian endurance and fortitude worthy of a martyr. There were very few dry eyes in the assemblage, we judge, when the pathetic recital was ended.

Then Sister Constance gave a message from Bisley, in the Cotswold hills, where she has charge of the holiday home, and in connection with which much excellent Christian work is done. There was humour mingled with the graver aspects of the Sister's report, and one could easily realise what a centre of spiritual life and helpfulness the holiday home is in the beautiful village where it is placed.

A very lively account followed from Sister Adelaide, who has been experimenting at living in a kitchen with Sister Marion for the last six months. The idea was to put themselves on a level with the poor among whom they work, and judging from the Sister's account it has been an unqualified success. They have plenty of visitors of all kinds, and no doubt their influence with the young people who are their special charge, has been sensibly increased by their self-abnegation in daily life. A little closing appeal by this vivacious young person for help in paying for their furniture, which was still "hanging over them," led to a gratifying response. Sir John Hutton immediately sent word to the platform promising a cheque for the amount, so that the two Sisters will now occupy their kitchen with a light heart.

The special department allotted to Sister Elizabeth is the mothers' meeting, but before she said something about that she expressed the intense enjoyment she had in the work. Some strong things were said as to the terrible evils of drink, and of overcrowding in poor neighbourhoods, which are a great drawback to full success in carrying the Gospel to the people.

Last of all came Mrs. Price Hughes, who said that in a two hours' meeting it was impossible to give any adequate account of the Sisters' work. Gathering up the fragments that remained from the preceding speeches, she referred to the operations on behalf of the young—the Crêche, the Bands of Hope, the Guilds, and the summer holidays. The overcrowding spoken of by Sister Elizabeth is one of the saddest features of their West End experiences. The workhouse teas, and other efforts to catch the "drifts of humanity" in these gloomy retreats, were described as the greatest possible success—"one bright hour in dreary lives." In many cases the lives of these paupers have been completely changed through the saving knowledge of Jesus Christ. The "Guild of the Poor Things" is a beautiful endeavour to band together in mutual sympathy those who are in any way afflicted. "Drawing-rooms" are held at all the three halls, when the poor are periodically received "at home," and much colour and happiness are thrown into hundreds of dull lives. The rescue work is another branch of the work in praise of which too much cannot be advanced. Mrs. Hughes said that some small receiving centre in London itself, where girls could be sent and cared for at once, is greatly needed. There is much work done that cannot be tabulated and only the last day will reveal it. The great thing needed in all this and such work is the power of love; it never fails. The Sisters seek to lavish their love on all, and they continually see the fruits of it. Before the meeting closed, Mr. Price Hughes invited ladies interested in the Mission to give Mrs. Hughes or some of the Sisters an opportunity of speaking in their drawing-rooms.

Another enthusiastic and successful gathering was held in the evening.

London Jews Society.

Those who are rejoicing in the possession of country, Queen, good government and laws, may well commiserate that race which has neither country, king, nor constitution, but is a wandering people in many lands. When Christians thank God for all the blessings of this life, and, above all, for the redemption of the world by the Lord Jesus Christ, for the means of grace and for the hope of glory, let them remember that the King of kings took upon Him the seed of Abraham, and that salvation is of the Jews.

Prominent among the societies which labour for the spiritual and temporal good of Israel is the London Society for Promoting Christianity among the Jews, which held its annual breakfast last Friday morning in Exeter Hall, immediately followed by the annual meeting, under the presidency of Sir John Kennaway.

After some details of the extensive work, read from the report by Mr. W. Fleming, secretary, the Chairman remarked that we cannot but be impressed by the advance of the Jewish question in the great events which are taking place all around us among the nations of the earth, recent persecutions having forced many of those who belong to Israel nearer Palestine. Real progress had been made by this Society, including opening of new Mission schools at Streatham Common, and of the hospital in Jerusalem, an institution devoted to commendation of the Gospel by the Christ-like work of healing ailing Jewish bodies. It behoves us to be going forward in every good work, as well as in new developments, for time is short, and it is impossible to stand still without retrogression.

Mr. H. H. Bemrose, M.P., commended the report, and marvelled at the wide area which had been covered with the amount of means at the Society's disposal. There could be no missions of greater importance than those to Jews; and considering the obstacles which lie in the way of conversion, the measure of success and stability was decidedly satisfactory. Bearing in mind the persecution to which the Jew had been subjected at the instance of of Christian nations, his faults were not to be wondered at; and events might soon put him into a very different position from that which he now occupies. Certainly when their King is recognised by Israel, they will be the premier nation.

An aged but active agent of the Society labouring in Bristol, Rev. J. M. Eppstein, declared himself a Jewish convert of fifty-four years' standing, and spoke in warm terms of what had been accomplished through the Society's publications, including the New Testament in Judeo-Spanish, Judeo-German, and various languages. Loving intercourse between earnest Christian workers and Jews had borne the best results.

Rev. Lewis Crosby, secretary of the Irish Executive, gave interesting instances of good fruit in this cause, from female effort among Jewish women in Ireland. He also described some of his interesting daily experiences in the general work. Surely it must be the first duty of the Christian Church to evangelise Israel, when St. Paul says, "If the casting away of them be the riches of the Gentiles, what shall the receiving of them be but life from the dead?"

The claims of the Society were also earnestly urged by Rev. J. S. Flynn, Rector of St. Mewan, Cornwall, from considerations of the advantages all Christian peoples have derived from Jewish history and from their sacred literature. The race has more good in it than Christians have ever succeeded in getting out, and has a great future before it with which is bound up the best interests of the whole world. Rev. C. F. W. Flad, Missionary from Tunis, closed with experiences which constituted a strong appeal for supporting the Society's operations.

Missions to Seamen.

The annual meeting of this Society, which was held last week in St. Martin's Town Hall, Charing Cross, was presided over by Sir William Willis. From the abstract report, read by Rev. E. B. Backhouse, secretary, it appeared that the receipts last year were larger than ever before, amounting to £38,291. During the year 10,753 Divine services and Scripture readings were held on board ship by the chaplains and readers of the Society, besides what were conducted at sea by the 1275 volunteer helpers and associates amongst their shipmates. In addition to these services afloat, 17,666 services were held in the Society's churches, institutes, or mission rooms, or at coastguard and Royal Naval reserve stations. New Missions to Seamen churches have been opened during the past twelve months on the Tees, and at Plymouth. New seamen's institutes were opened at Plymouth, Portland, Antwerp, Sydney, and Kobe. Whilst there was but one chaplain employed to minister to crews afloat when the Queen ascended the throne, now sixty-nine mission vessels and boats carry 110 chaplains and readers, etc., afloat day by day, to minister to the crews on board ships, fishing vessels, barges, and light vessels, and to the isolated inhabitants of remote lighthouses, islets, deep-water forts, and coastguards; whilst there are eighty-seven Missions to Seamen churches and institutes for the special use of sea-going men when ashore.

After a comprehensive speech by the Chairman on the work of the Society, an address was delivered by Rev. H. J. Holderness, chaplain for Portland Roads, who pointed out that the chaplains boarded both outward-bound and homeward-bound vessels, and distributed good, pure literature, held conversations with the men, and, when possible, conducted services on board. Sometimes a vessel would be detained in the roadstead for two or three weeks, and then they were able to pay several visits, and the men were often delighted to see them, and gave them a hearty welcome. Rev. N. S. Milnes Atkinson, chaplain for Rotterdam Harbour, followed, dwelling upon the great dangers which surround sailors while in foreign ports, far worse perils even than in English seaports. The Institute at Rotterdam was often crowded with sailors of all nationalities, who accepted with gratitude the hospitality afforded them, and trusted the chaplain as their friend. Sir George Baden Powell, M.P., regarded it as a high privilege to do all in his power to assist in so great and good a work. Rev. W. E. Dixon, chaplain for Bristol Harbour, touched briefly upon three of the most prominent features of the Mission's work. First of all, there was the social, the humanising work; then they had the rescue work; and, lastly, the more distinctly spiritual efforts. Their work was progressing, but they wanted more help, and he appealed for further support.

The Bible Society.

The meeting of the friends and supporters of the Bible Society has for years been one of the largest and most influential of the "May" series; and the ninety-third meeting, held on Wednesday last week in Exeter Hall, was no exception to the rule.

An abstract of the report, read by Rev. J. Gordon Watt, was a document crowded with facts, combining the minimum of statistics with the maximum of information on present-day needs and Bible enterprise. Quite naturally there was a reference to the sad loss sustained by the Society through the death of Rev. George Wilson, its literary superintendent; and with equal reason, in this Diamond Jubilee year, a comparison was drawn between the present year and that of Her Majesty's accession. In the past sixty years the number of the Society's versions has increased from 135 to 335, and its annual circulation has advanced sevenfold. Amid opposition and misrepresentation in Roman Catholic and Mohammedan lands, the Society not merely occupies a tolerated position, but actually thrives. More than ever the Romanist reads the Holy Scriptures, making acquaintance at first-hand of the words of our Lord and his apostles; and while the Moslem reviles the Christian teacher and preacher, he receives his Holy Book.

In the department of translation and revision considerable activity was reported. The entire Bible is now in the hands of the people of Uganda; the New Testament in Kien-Ning, on the publication of which the late R. W. Stewart (of martyr fame) had set his heart, has been carried through the press by Miss B. Newcombe; the Bible in Tukudh, the tongue of Arctic tribes, is in process of completion, and a new edition of the Four Gospels for the Eskimo is also being issued. In the matter of circulation, many grounds of encouragement were instanced. As showing the importance of the Russian field, mention was made of the fact that one-seventh of the Society's income is spent in Russia, and more than one-seventh of its total circulation is in the great Slavonian empire. The aggregate issues for the year, in Bibles, Testaments, and portions, exceeded three millions and three quarters, making a grand total of upwards of a hundred and fifty-one millions since the commencement of the Society in 1804. The balance-sheet showed a substantial advance on the year, the new income amounting to £128,504.

The Earl of Harrowby, who occupied his accustomed place in the chair, was unable, through ill-health, to make more than a brief speech. He was for taking a high view of the object of the Bible, and maintained that the reason which had prompted its circulation was no less than this—that the Book makes men wise unto salvation, happy in this world and happy in the world to come. That exalted view, which has prevailed ever since the glorious Reformation, was the standard of the Bible Society. The Book is not for some merely, but for all, for man, woman, and child—in fact, open to all as the test of any teaching that may be presented, and the infallible guide for human life.

The first speaker was the Bishop of Newcastle, who, in the course of a vigorous address, expressed special pleasure at the noble spirit shown by Russia in facilitating the circulation of the Scriptures among its millions of population. With regard to Christian effort among the followers of the great ancestral religions of the East, the Bishop said that the chance of progress would be very slight were it not for the Bible, because having been accustomed to consult standards, the people inquire with reason for the Christian counterpart. In conclusion, the Bishop thanked God for leading the Society to produce the Book in such a way that it is useable by all bodies of Christians, and herein the Society does much to minimise the divisions of the Church.

Rev. J. H. Shakespeare, M.A., of Norwich, spoke of the Bible as emphatically God's Book. As the Bible is a message, the questions which it suggests are—What is the message? and who sends it? Until those questions are answered, it is little use discussing the bearer and the envelope. The speaker had a poor opinion of such criticism, as is simply destruction; it is like children pulling to pieces things that transcend their understanding. The Bible is the great missionary agency, and possessed of it other books may easily be done without. There is, of course, a human element in the Bible; but the only human element that we need trouble about in our short life is to publish and circulate it, because it is the Word of God.

Canon Edmonds, of Exeter, followed with a sketch of the Society's work during "these sixty years." The other speakers were Rev. D. Kemp, from Cape Coast Castle; Sir Charles A. Elliott, late Lieut.-Governor of Bengal; and Mr. George Spicer.

Religious Tract Society.

The annual meeting of this Society is one of the popular fixtures of the season; among other attractions is the preliminary programme of song by school children. The gathering on Friday evening last was as bright as ever, and well-known voices were raised in praise of the work of the Society at home and abroad. The chair was occupied by Mr. J. Compton Rickett, M.P.

The ninety-eighth report, read by Rev. Dr. Borrett White, was not a mere budget of figures, although there were figures quite colossal in character. These showed that there had been issued during the year 658 new publications, of which 241 were tracts. The total circulation from home and foreign depôts, counting books, tracts, periodicals, and cards, reached fifty-eight millions. The Society has already published in 220 languages, dialects, and characters. The receipts on trade and missionary accounts amounted to £135,344; the expenditure exceeded this by £11,502, which difference was met by money withdrawn from reserve funds. The grants in aid of mission effort amounted in value to £29,063, towards which part payment was provided by the recipients, leaving £6,850 to be borne by the general funds of the Society.

Particulars were given of assistance, in varied forms, to home and foreign agencies, also of exertions for the promotion of Biblical education in Board schools. Among other interesting details was a slight comparison of present operations and those of 1837—the year of the Queen's accession. It seems that sixty years ago the Society's periodicals were two only, the Child's Companion, which is still with us, and the old "Tract Magazine," now continued in Light in the Home. To-day, everybody knows, the serials are a host, and the other publications are everywhere highly esteemed. After mentioning recent publications of the Society, the report gave some account of work in all the continents and the isles of the sea.

After some opening words by the Chairman, a vigorous address was delivered by Canon Fleming. Having emphasised the object of the Society—the production and circulation of pure literature—the Canon pointed out that the first literature of which we hear in this world was that which God gave to the children of Israel—the moral law, which has never been abrogated. In pursuing its work the Society follows the Divine model, and therefore has no need of apology or defence. The noble founders of the Society had the great commission of the Lord to evangelise the world burned into their hearts, and until this day the same motive rules the work. Referring to the efforts to meet the various forms of unbelief, the speaker described the series of "Present-day Tracts," now made up in thirteen volumes, a great phalanx against the forces of unbelief. Since the glorious Reformation, when a stop was put to attacks upon the truth by means of the axe and the faggot, infidelity has changed its methods; now it attacks truth by defiling the mind rather than binding or burning the body. Therefore, the defence of the Gospel must take another form—it must aim at informing the mind. The Canon urged that in the spread of education and the sanctified use of the printing-press we should see the hand of God. In conclusion, he contended for the distinctly evangelical and essentially undenominational character of the work.

Rev. Henry Haigh, Wesleyan missionary from Mysore, India, in an able address, acknowledged the service of the R.T.S. in work in the East. He sketched the difficulties of promoting a newspaper in a native language; but was able to report considerable success attending his efforts, thanks to the timely and substantial grants of the Society. He was also able to tell of important service to religion and humanity in India by means of his paper. The last speaker was Mr. E. Rawlings, whose words were few and hearty.

Missionary Leaves Association.

BISHOP ROYSTON, late of Mauritius, presided over the annual meeting of this Association, which was held on Wednesday last week at Exeter Hall, and attended by well-known missionaries and their friends.

The report, which was read by Rev. R. B. RANSFORD, concluded as follows:—"You who are auxiliary helpers, and who take pains and time not only to make garments and collect funds and gather help, but also write the kind and sympathising letters to the missionary to whom you are helper, will be glad to be assured that your labour is not in vain in the Lord, but that it affords cheer and encouragement just when and where these are most needed. We who make your executive will back you up by gift, and effort, and prayer. We are with you, and the Lord is gone out before us. Be strong and very courageous; turn not aside to the right hand or to the left, that thou mayest prosper whithersoever thou goest."

The CHAIRMAN, speaking from a wide experience, testified to the joy it was to missionaries to receive the bales sent to them from time to time, and a still greater joy to receive those letters of sympathy from the M.L.A. auxiliary helpers, telling of the prayers and interest of those at home. Twenty-five years ago, when he was going to Mauritius, he was told, "You can't do anything at all unless you know Mrs. Malaher," and so they found both mother and son engaged in doing this most important and happy work.

Bishop TUGWELL bore emphatic testimony to the work of the Association. Other speakers were: Rev. E. J. Peck, of Cumberland Sound; Bishop Phillips, of the Yoruba Mission; and Rev. George Holmes, of Athabasca.

Moravian Missions.

AT the seventy-ninth annual meeting, in Exeter Hall last week, of the London Auxiliary of the Moravian Missions, praise was offered by Rev. Dr. Gritton for multiplied opportunities and agents, with much of the Divine blessing resting upon the work. The sterling character of the work is widely known, outstanding facts in connection with the Mission being (1) the largeness of the staff in comparison with the relatively small church membership; and (2) the rule which has been followed from the first of sending the Gospel to the most degraded and benighted sections of the human race.

Rev. W. WETTON COX read the report, which showed financial advance and enlarged operations. An addition of nearly 2000 souls to the various congregations indicates the spiritual results, while extension and demand for extension, which are the tokens of life and progress and Divine blessing, come from almost every quarter. For Labrador and the new mission ship some £7000 or £8000 is required. As regards the leper work in Surinam, the new hospital has been completed, and the charge of this work, now transferred from Roman Catholic to Protestant hands, should claim warm and generous support.

As Chairman, Sir GEO. WILLIAMS said this Society represents a body of workers which was among the first to come out boldly for Christ in the fires of persecution. The Moravian has been a pioneer society, exercising persistent courage and great love for the souls of men. Support was deserved because of the broad Christian character and thoroughgoing religious life which marks the work.

Rev. CANON MCCORMICK said his sympathies went out strongly to three Continental classes—the Pietists of Germany, first to begin labours for the conversion of God's ancient people; then the Waldensians; finally, the Moravians. The living of selfish religious lives is a great obstacle to the cause of missions, and until this is removed there will be no great progress. If we could catch the Moravian spirit of love to Christ, a wonderful impetus would be given to God's work on earth.

In the absence of two expected speakers, Mr. WAKEFIELD proved to be a valuable substitute, having had opportunities of visiting many workers connected with various societies. He spoke of what he had seen in South Africa and at Labrador of the work of the Moravian Missions, and was convinced that for simple Gospel teaching, economy, and wide sympathy towards the lowest races of mankind, this work is second to none. Actual experience had shown him that most of the adverse talk about missions had no solid foundation. He mentioned several instances of patient, wise, and kindly dealing with men of low moral estate on the part of the Moravian gospellers.

Having had the pleasure of spending some time in a Moravian settlement, Rev. Dr. MONRO GIBSON said he considered it a little section of heaven, for there he had seen a great many signs of intense brotherhood, and never was a place more evidently built round the Church. Long before Father Damien was heard of, the Moravian Church was doing patient work among the lepers. This had been little reported on, the Moravians being emphatically modest. They were doing most difficult work with heroism and self-sacrifice. Unitas fratrum is a ruling and very attractive principle with our Moravian brethren. Their work has been the inspiration of all Christendom.

Rev. G. COUSINS (L.M.S.) bore testimony to the same effect, and gave some particulars of cordial co-operation between his own Society and the Moravian Board of Missions. He had the greatest pleasure in commending this Moravian organisation to the tender sympathy and generous support of all English Christians. A missionary from the E.C. Africa Mission, Rev. TH. RICHARD, gave a vivid picture of the difficulties under which Gospel work is carried on there, through lack of adequate supplies in men and means.

The Church Army.

AT the annual meeting in London last week, under the presidency of the Duke of Fife, an encouraging report was presented. Mr. E. Clifford, secretary and treasurer, stated that the staff had been recruited by eighty-six officers, and detachments of the force had been sent to India and to Marseilles, while in America there are several promising offshoots. The social side of the work, of which some account was given by Mr. C. F. Campbell, includes forty-seven institutions, in which 9000 cases have been dealt with during the year. The labour homes found work last year for 2500 inmates, who enjoyed the refuge thus afforded for periods ranging from one to four months, and it has been ascertained that at least 750 of them are now doing well in permanent situations.

The CHAIRMAN expressed his opinion that the secret of the Army's success lay in the fact that it did not huddle men and boys into huge barracks, but placed them instead in small homes, where their cases met with individual treatment. Its charity was of a thoroughly practical kind, free from all pauperising tendencies; and it brought the Church to the classes who had been too far removed from its influence.—The Bishop of Ely spoke with warm appreciation of the work done by four Church Army vans in his own diocese.—The Dean of Windsor described the work as most patriotic; it took in hand men and women who were the despair of society, and made them once more useful members of it.—Mr. Ruggles Brise expressed his admiration for the prison work done by the Army, and announced that it had been determined to try an experiment suggested by Mr. Clifford in permitting the lay missionaries of the association to second the efforts of prison chaplains. He was glad to say that the Church Army had twenty-four labour homes in connection with the prisons of the country, and he hoped that work of this kind would be extended into less accessible localities.

Sunday School Union.

THE Union makes extensive and effective use of music in its good work among the young. At the annual meeting in Exeter Hall last Thursday evening, the selection given by a juvenile choir of some 300 voices under Mr. Wm. Binns was received with much favour by a large audience.

The chairman was Mr. LANGLEY, M.P., who had been connected with Sunday school work for twenty-five years. His opening address made much of the importance attaching to educating the will and affection of children, and the great honour which God places upon all who distribute the bread of life to the young. He strongly deprecated any teaching or training which would tend to foster in the minds of boys a liking for miltary glory, so contrary to the compassionate spirit of the Prince of Peace.

The customary outline of the past year's labours had been previously distributed throughout the Hall, and was taken as read.

Rev. DAVID DAVIES declared that those who loved the young never grew old in heart. He thanked God for the great men who foresaw the need of this noble movement. A sense of indebtedness to Christ who has saved them, and to the young whom they desire to bring to his feet, makes men teachers. All Christians are bound to use their possessions, mental and material, not for self-aggrandisement, but for the well-being of those less gifted than themselves.

Rev. A. J. PALMER said that in the many-sided activities which this Union has initiated and sustained with such signal success, it has rendered a service in the religious education of the young the importance of which it is impossible to exaggerate, doing a work which is the natural outcome of steady development and vigorous life. With this cause the future of the Church and the nation is most intimately interwoven. Let the minds of boys and girls to-day be thoroughly saturated with the principles of God's Word; then shall go forth from our schools an influence that shall touch the last syllable of time and cover the widest extent of local diffusion.

Rev. J. G. TRAIN added some cheery words to "fellow-teachers" on the happy multiplication of their tools in the present day. On the other hand, how important it is that we ourselves be in the best possible condition of preparation for allowing God to use us to the full extent of our capacity. Oh, the sad fatigue in our work when edge is wanting in the instrument! Intercourse with other workers, the use of quickening literature, and, above all, communion with God and meditation on his Word, are all useful moral whetstones.

Mr. JOHN CLARK (Norwich) and Mr. SAMUEL WATSON having added a few words, choir and audience joined in the "Hallelujah Chorus."

Female Education in the East.

THE annual meeting of the Society for Promoting Female Education in the East was held a few days ago at 118, Westbourne-terrace, W. Mr. T. F. Victor Buxton presided. The first speaker was Rev. T. W. Drury, principal of the C.M S. College at Islington, who, referring to his recent tour in Palestine, said he was much pleased by what he saw of the work of the Society.

Miss GAGE BROWN, a former worker in the East, described the small beginning and subsequent development of the Society's schools. The girls took the deepest interest in their studies, and many learnt by heart large portions of the Holy Scriptures, as well as the Lord's Prayer and various hymns. Such was the interest that, when the lady missionaries had to take a holiday, and the school was closed, they used to meet together and go over with each other what they had learnt. So well was this done that when the missionaries returned they found that the girls had not forgotten one single thing they had been taught.

Miss WEBB, secretary of the Society, stated that during the past year six new missionaries had been sent out, while others had returned to the field. One of the ladies who had thus returned was Miss Oxlad, who, thirty-four years ago, went to Hong Kong, and remained there for ten years, doing excellent work. When she came home on furlough she brought with her 300 of the best hymns which she had translated into Chinese, and thus the Society had had the honour of giving the first vernacular hymn-book to China. She was afterwards sent to Japan, where she translated Mr. Eugene Stock's Lessons on the Life of our Lord into Japanese, and that had since been used as a text-book in the mission schools. Twelve years ago, however, Miss Oxlad had to come home to nurse an invalid mother, and everyone believed that her work in the mission-field was over. But on the death of her mother in the spring of last year, Miss Oxlad asked to be sent back again to Japan. The committee hesitated, but seeking indications of the Lord's will in the matter, they were speedily assurred of it. Miss Oxlad had accordingly gone back to Japan. Her reception was most cordial, and she asks friends in England for their prayers. Miss Webb also spoke of the missions at Foochow, Singapore, Agra, Multan, and the Armenian school in Persia. In regard to finance, more help had been given to the Society during the last twelve months than in any other year of its existence.

The Chairman, in a few remarks, spoke of the work as he had seen it at various places, and emphasised its importance as a direct spiritual and individual work. The Society was the pioneer of zenana work in India and in the harems of Cairo. In Palestine the missionaries laboured under great uncertainty, but all opposition from the people had now stopped.

Scripture Gift Mission.

The annual meeting of this Mission was held on Friday last at the Chapter House, St. Paul's Churchyard, E.C., by kind permission of Archdeacon Sinclair. The audience included several warm friends of the work, and others who had been attracted by an exhibition of upwards of sixty new drawings, depicting Oriental scenes, from the pencil of Mr. J. Clark, and designed for the illustration of the publications of the mission.

In an account of the year's operations, the Secretary, Mr. W. Walters, said that many testimonies had been received from Christian workers in various countries, of blessing resulting from the circulation of the illustrated Scripture portions. The booklets had been readily received — their artistic and bright exterior ensuring this; and in soldiers' barracks, and on board ship, as well as among men and women of various classes and races, it had been observed that the familiar pages have, in the form supplied by the Mission, appealed with all the freshness of a new and strange message. The English portions comprise the four Gospels and the Epistle to the Romans; the Acts of the Apostles is nearly ready, and it is hoped soon to issue the Epistle to the Hebrews for Jews, and the Epistles of Peter for Roman Catholics. Gospels in French, Spanish, Portuguese, Arabic, and Modern Greek have met with a ready acceptance, and urgent requests for other portions, for which striking illustrations have been prepared, will be complied with as speedily as funds allow.

The Archdeacon presided, and spoke some hearty words, after which a brief address was delivered by Rev. F. B. Meyer, who thanked Mr. Walters for putting the "apples of gold" in "pictures of silver." Mr. James Clark, the artist, who has just returned from the Holy Land and Egypt, related some of the difficulties he had encountered on his sketching tour, mainly owing to the well-known prejudices of Orientals. A typical case was that of a Jew who, though in deep poverty, steadily declined to pose; he would not do such a thing "for a house-full of gold!" With regard to the scenes he witnessed, Mr. Clark said that he agreed with the American traveller who said that a tour in the East was like being "dropped into the middle of the Old Testament." The other speakers included Colonel Philips, Professor Bertrand, and Mr. F. C. Brading, all of whom warmly commended the work of the Mission.

Ragged School Union.

Among the numerous agencies to befriend the little ones, the Ragged School Union has taken a large part during the Queen's reign. It was fitting, therefore, that at the annual festival celebrated on Monday evening in Queen's Hall, Langham Place, Earl Compton, President of the Union, should, on behalf of the council, submit to the large gathering a telegraphic message of congratulation to Her Majesty. Needless to say this was adopted with great enthusiasm. It was interesting to be reminded that as far back as 1848, a joint donation was received from the Queen and Prince Albert, and her signature now continues to be affixed to the good-conduct certificates presented for faithful service to those who have passed through the Ragged Schools.

The Secretary, Mr. John Kirk, furnished a brief retrospect of decided progress during the past year, on the part of an organisation which evidently continues in multifarious ways fully to justify its existence, and which has now absorbed quite a cluster of once separate agencies, thus securing uniform, economical, and increased usefulness.

Thanksgiving to God for the work which he has enabled the Union to accomplish, was the opening note of the Chairman's address. He rejoiced that Sunday work for Christ is being carried on by the Union in 164 separate buildings, with an average attendance of some 45,000 children, who are ministered to by 6000 devoted and self sacrificing voluntary workers; while the educational and recreative needs of the week are in no shape overlooked. Touching reference was made to the experiences among London's army of crippled children. Much more, however, ought to be and could be done by a professed Christian country.

Warm words followed from Canon Fleming concerning the paramount demands of destitute and suffering child life upon Christians who have known the blessings of parental love in happy homes. There are many reasons—prudential, political, national—which, apart from Christianity, may urge us to save young lives from the fearful education of the street. Should we not try to gather more of God's jewels, even though they come under our eyes in very battered caskets?

A very pleasing feature of the programme was a distribution, by Lady Arnold, of faithful service prizes to individual winners and to their representatives from seventy-eight affiliated schools and missions. The periods of service ranged from one year to five, and the prizes, nearly 600 in number, comprised Bibles and certificates (with the Queen's autograph), work-boxes, desks, and silver watches. Lady Arnold spoke briefly, but in highly appreciative terms, of this blessed and successful work.

Rev. Wm. Cuff said the meetings had been inspiring to the last degree. Our sympathies had not only reached up to the throne, but the eyes of our mind had been turned upon the slums of London; and Union workers touch life in such places, not with the tip of the finger, but with love, sympathy, and help in forms which can never be tabulated. He came from the centre and soul of this Union work, where he had for twenty-five years worked side by side with its devoted agents; and he said emphatically that such efforts are more needed than ever, and have lasting effect upon many a humble home.

Mr. Percy Alden had been much impressed, during seven years' experience at the head of a university settlement in the East-end of London, with the need of increased loving service on behalf of slum children. He thanked God for what the Union is doing among the teeming streets of our great city; but it must be ours to see that the need of vast extension should be compassed.

After a few words of commendation from Mr. Frederick Warman and Mr. Parkinson, L.C.C., Earl Compton appealed for additions to the body of voluntary workers, and the proceedings terminated with the National Anthem.

South Africa General Mission.

The annual meetings of this Mission recently took place at Exeter Hall, and were largely attended. Additional interest was added to the occasion by the presence of the following outgoing workers:—Mr. and Mrs. John Baillie, Miss Constance Grieve, Miss Thomson, Miss Brown, Miss Hay, Mr. A. E. Estall, and Mr. Young, who were about to enter into new spheres of mission work in South Africa. The Mission is carrying on a useful work among Europeans, natives, and Jews in South Africa, by preaching the Gospel to every creature, and aiding existing evangelical missions and churches. The workers were dependent for the most part upon freewill offerings, other workers were honorary and self-supporting, while many friends in South Africa were in their spare time contributing most valuable help. The management is undertaken by a council in London, assisted by an executive in South Africa, who have the advantage of conferring from time to time with the president, the Rev. Andrew Murray, of Wellington, Cape Colony.

The afternoon meeting, which was conducted by Mrs. Penn Lewis, of Leicester, was a solemn time which few present will forget. Mr. Thos. B. Miller, of Barnet, occupied the chair at the evening proceedings. The Secretary, Mr. Arthur Mercer, said that some ninety workers were already in the field, and additions were gradually being made to the number. The Society's income at present was not sufficient to meet existing demands. About £8000 had, during the past year, been received in South Africa, and about £5000 from the home friends. An Englishman in Johannesburg, seeing the good work they were doing, had recently given them property to the value of about £1000. Sir Donald Currie and Co. had given them the excellent map of South Africa, appended to the short sketch of the work, so that friends of the Mission might see where it was carried on.

Mr. Dudley Kidd, on the South African executive, had stated by the last mail that the meetings in the hall at Cape Town had recently been full to overflowing. Much had also been achieved at Johannesburg, where a hall had been built to accommodate from 500 to 600 people, and where a deeply interesting work was being carried on amongst the natives. In Durban, Swazieland, Pondeland, Zululand, Bomvanaland, and other parts of South Africa, the work was receiving God's seal.

As to financial matters, about £1000 was needed for future efforts. Of that amount nearly £450 had been contributed, and it was hoped that the balance would be forthcoming in the course of the next few weeks.

A few words of farewell were then given by each of the outgoing missionaries. Mr. Baillie, who had been working in Swazieland for some six years, spoke more especially of the work there. Mr. H. W. Maynard, who had seen the Mission in South Africa, spoke of the excellent work being carried on in Cape Town and elsewhere.

Mr. Walter Sloan then gave a searching address on "Conditions of Discipleship," from Luke xiv. 25 and following verses.

The office of the Mission is 14a, Lingfield-road, Wimbledon, S.W.

Pastor A. G. Brown at Denver.

This city has been greatly stirred by the clear, forceful messages of Pastor Archibald G. Brown. From his first meeting in the Trinity M.E. Church through the week at the Baptist Church, and the closing days at the Central Presbyterian Church, an encouraging feature was the large attendance and appreciative interest of the pastors, not only from Denver, but from remote points in Colorado. Mr. Brown felt constrained in his closing words to state that at no place had he ever enjoyed three weeks of such loving fellowship with brother ministers. Many a preacher will be nearer the divinely given pattern—a preacher of the word—through being blessed by the rich expositions of our brother. Large audiences bear eloquent testimony to the power of the "old, old story."

During the first week heavy snowstorms militated against the attendance, but despite this, a good work of grace was wrought through helpful sermons on the Holy Spirit. Many Christians were led to cease self-effort, and say in the language of the text of the last sermon, "Not I, but Christ." Real Colorado weather set in with the opening services at the First Baptist Church, and daily the interest increased, culminating in the monster closing meetings at the Central Presbyterian Church.

The services of the last ten days were marked by deep conviction through the manifest presence of the Holy Spirit, the people often being loth to rise from their seats after the benediction. The afternoon services were remarkable in point of attendance and power, from 1200 to 1500 people being present at some of the meetings.

Denver. Joshua Gravett, Baptist Pastor.

Union Tabernacle, Wandsworth.

The annual meetings of the Gospel work carried on here by Pastor D. M. Cameron, combined with a conference on the spiritual life, were held last week. Helpful addresses were given by a number of brethren, and it was felt to be a time of refreshing.

The pastor said it is much desired to erect a hall for work among the children of this densely populated neighbourhood. A site has been secured, but money is needed for the building. About £100 is also required for necessary outgoings and current expenses in connection with the existing hall. The workers at the Tabernacle are poor people, and unable to bear any additional responsibility; an appeal is therefore made to outside friends to help in the matter. Pastor Cameron's address is 515, Wandsworth-road, S.W.

The Annual Meeting of the Church of England Temperance Society, last week, was presided over by the Archbishop of Canterbury, who said that, watching the evidence before the Licensing Commission as it went on, he was more and more inclined to deal with drunkenness itself as a crime, punishing the drunkard, and also those who aided and abetted his drunkenness.

Missionary Letters.—For some years Mr. J. Lampard, of Nikkum village, Balaghat, C.P., India, has issued, from time to time, letters showing what he has been able to do within a certain radius in one of the worst-affected famine districts in India. He believes that missionaries render best service by dealing with the natives around them. Hence, in the way of relief work and labour on his Industrial Farm, he has been able to support regularly fifteen families, while many more have been relieved. For this important service at least £200 are required. It is cheering to note that all through this terrible trial God has been giving tokens of spiritual blessing—fresh inquirers, several new converts, and at least one—a most suitable man—has been led to offer himself for the evangelisation of his fellows.

Evangelistic Notes.

THE Brothers Weaver have concluded a fifteen days' mission under the auspices of the Perth City Mission. The City Hall was crowded on the three Sabbath evenings, and Knox's Free Church during the week. Many professed decision; backsliders were restored, and saints revived.

Mr. W. R. Lane has concluded a nine days' mission at the Assembly Rooms, Cheltenham, under the auspices of the Y.M.C.A. A marked feature of the effort was the unity of different bodies of Christians in the work. All co-operated in a systematic house-to-house visitation, no less than 40,000 invitation cards and papers being distributed in a population of 45,000. The hall seats 1200, and at no evening meeting were there less than 1000 people present. A men's meeting was attended by over 800, who listened with rapt attention for an hour to a most solemn address on "Sin: Its Consequences and Its Remedy." Many, it is believed, decided for Christ during the mission, while it proved a season of great refreshment to believers in the town.

Mr. Newton Jones has conducted a mission at Cottage Green Chapel Sunday-school, Camberwell. The meetings for boys and girls and also those for adults were well attended, and richly blessed by God. At the thanksgiving service at the close of the mission a great number (mostly senior scholars in the school) testified to having found the Saviour through the mission.

Six days' Gospel services have been held at Sheildmuir Methodist Church. The spiritual life of believers has been quickened, and many have sought the Saviour. The church was filled from the outset, and no night passed without earnest inquirers asking, "What must I do to be saved?" This work continues.

Mrs. Booth Clibborn has for some weeks been working in Liège with a few devoted officers. In spite of the universal indifference and infidelity, a concert-hall has been filled every night with Roman Catholics and worldlings. The furthest from God have been obliged to admit that power Divine is present at the meetings. A profound spirit of conviction is upon the people.

A time of revival has been recently experienced in Nuneaton, in connection with an eight days' mission held by Rev. Thomas Cook. Many converts were enrolled; the inquiry-rooms after each service were scenes of great blessing. Two holiness meetings were a source of strength and quickening power to believers.

A remarkable work of grace is in progress at Lurgan, Ireland, in connection with a mission by Rev. W. H. Aitken. Never since the old days of the early seventies, says a correspondent, have I seen a more remarkable movement. Crowds are flocking to the church, and numbers are coming to the Cross for blessing.

Mr. Wm. Dunn, for thirty-four years an able Gospel temperance advocate has held an eight days' mission at Ringland, Norwich. Good audiences assembled in the Baptist Chapel each evening, and much interest was awakened by the addresses of the missioner. Several pledges were secured.

Mr. Geo. Hunter, of Aberdeen, has closed a ten days' mission at Wendover, with great interest among the people. Large numbers came nightly to hear the Word. Christians were brought together and blessed, and there is reason to believe that God has been glorified in the salvation of souls.

Mr. James Eyres has paid a visit to the Baptist Church, Hollinwood, Oldham. He conducted mission services for eight days, and much blessing attended the effort.

The National Temperance League has arranged for a National Diamond Jubilee celebration on Friday, May 21. There will be an afternoon reception to those who have been abstainers for sixty years, and a public meeting in the evening, in the Queen's Hall, Langham-place, W., will be presided over by the Archbishop of Canterbury. Tickets from Mr. Robert Rae, 33, Paternoster-row, E.C.

Letters to the Editor.

SABBATH OBSERVANCE.

DEAR SIR,—Under the sad and most serious increase of Sabbath breaking on every hand, and the extreme laxity of views as to the obligation of Sabbath observance, may I ask a question which goes to the root of the matter for all who regard the moral law or "ten commandments" as still binding on them and all mankind?

When or where has the Divine command to keep, or the human obligation to observe, the fourth commandment been weakened or set aside, any more than, say, the second, sixth, eighth, or others of the Decalogue?—Yours faithfully,

AN OLD INDEPENDENT.

THE BIBLE IN THE TRAIN.

SIR,—May I be allowed to refer to the suggestion of a correspondent in your issue of May 6, who wishes for the publication of a Bible which by its outward appearance shall conceal its contents?

Is it true that the Christian of to-day wishes that the offence of the Cross should cease? Is our wonderful Book of God's message to us so little worthy of our honour and delight that we shall shrink from the risk we incur with regard to the opinion or contempt of others?

If—as it well may be—there are circumstances when it is wiser to abstain from reading the Bible in public, let us do without willingly; but if the time and place are to our own conscience fit, then let us read boldly, and it may carry a message to some compromising Christian. Will anyone—Christian or worldly man—respect our religion if it requires such an unworthy subterfuge?

Is not the hesitation of many of us, in publicly studying God's Word, caused rather by the fear that we may compromise this definite profession of godliness by our outward actions when travelling? Let us then both practise and profess the glorious service of the King of kings. EMILY SHARP.

DEAR SIR,—The reasons why I do not read my Bible in the train are (1) because I cannot concentrate my mind upon it as I feel I ought amid the distraction of railway travelling. (2) Because I feel it may convey the impression to others that I am too lazy to rise early enough to read it at home before I start. (3) Because I regard Bible study in the same light as prayer, concerning which our Lord bids us to "enter into thy closet and shut thy door."

Of course circumstances may alter cases, and there may be special occasions when it is not only justifiable, but advisable. I do not lay down a rule for others. They must satisfy themselves.—Yours faithfully, A TRAVELLER.

DEAR SIR,—The correspondent you quote (6th inst.) brings forward a very important subject—the reading of the Scriptures in the train, the tram, the 'bus, etc. I have made a systematic practice of doing this for some years back, and have also spoken to Christian friends about it, with the result that several have adopted the practice likewise. If ever there was a time for aggressive Christianity, it is now, when evil and wickedness are becoming more and more aggressive daily. I rejoice to see signs that Christianity is becoming more aggressive, of which fact your correspondent, Mr. D. M. Drysdale, is an encouraging, but by no means solitary, proof.

Those who read their Bible or Testament in public places, however, will not be looked upon as Pharisees or hypocrites, but as fools, and for this they must be prepared. A few weeks, however, will inure the most timid and susceptible. Christians ought to be willing to be thought fools for Christ's sake. The apostles were told to expect hatred from all men, and persecution, and death; and they met it without flinching. And shall we be ashamed of a little cheap ridicule and contempt?

Some time ago I made a record of the reading I observed in my railway carriage, between Balham and Victoria. The following is the result for ten days:—

Newspapers	4	8	3	6	4	5	6	7	4	7
Books or magazines	4	1	0	0	4	0	0	1	0	1
Nothing	1	1	1	0	0	3	3	1	0	2

Some of these passengers I know to be Christian men, whose attention ought to be called to the benefit of reading the oldest, best, and most divinely influential book in the world, in preference to the journalistic trivialities or sensations with which most people are so careful to fill their minds daily. Why not start a league for the purpose of carrying out this practice on all occasions practicable?—I am, yours truly, AVARY H. FORBES.

Balham, S.W., May 7.

DEAR SIR,—A correspondent of THE CHRISTIAN suggests that an edition of the Bible should be published which could be read when travelling without being too conspicuous. I think there is something in it. I write to say that "The Master's Guide for His Disciples," published by Mr. Elliot Stock, 62, Paternoster-row, to a certain extent answers that purpose. It contains nothing but the words of Christ in the Revised Version, grouped according to their subject. It is very small and handy for the pocket, with a bright blue cover. I use it as your correspondent suggests, and have given away a large number to friends.—Yours faithfully, HENRY TOYNBEE.

THE DRINK IN WESTERN AFRICA.

DEAR SIR,—I have received a copy of an English paper, and am sorry to see in it an exaggerated account of the evil of the drink trade in Brass and Bonny. I read these words: "Towns like Brass and Bonny are almost given over to drinking, gin and rum being sold at every few yards in the open streets."

I have lived in Brass now for more than a year, and can safely say I have never seen a bottle of gin bought or sold. I see cases of it going up and down the river in the canoes, and occasionally see a man or woman carrying a bottle, but during my residence here, including a fortnight's visit to Bonny, I can safely say that I have not seen more than three people drunk. Of what village in England of over a thousand inhabitants could you say more than this?

Greatly do we deplore as Christians, and as missionaries, the horrid degrading of a degraded people by this detestable traffic, but do not let us injure our cause, which is Christ's cause, and give an opportunity to the promoters of this traffic to declare that we are grossly exaggerating the evil we are trying to abate.—Yours in our Master's service,

(Rev.) N. TEMPLE HAMLYN.

C.M.S., Brass, West Africa.

The Seed is the Word.

AS spring advances, we see everyone who has a garden putting in seeds. Shall not Christians be as eager to sow the seeds of Bible truth? To help such the British and Foreign Evangelical Tract Society was formed in 1882. To those who are asking where they can get good seed, I commend this Society, in which workers are united, not as buyers or sellers, but as brothers and sisters.

Let me give a few examples of good done by tracts sent out from the Society. From Madras comes the following:—"One evening while distributing at the sea-side I accosted a soldier and begged him to read a tract, which resulted, I afterwards learnt, in his definitely seeking and finding Christ as a Saviour who saves to the uttermost. I ascertained his sister's address in Liverpool, and lost no time in intimating to her the glad news. I received a touching reply from the lady, who informed me she had been praying for a long time for her unconverted brother away in a foreign land. The tract that helped save this soldier was one by the 'Glasgow Merchant.'"

A pastor at Port Limon, Costa Rica, writes:—"An old man, greatly tempted, and falsely accused, decided to shoot himself. He took up the gun to do the horrid deed. Just then he caught sight of a tract given him by my wife some time before. Some of its words arrested his attention and prevented him from committing the rash act. Some time after he came, telling us this, and thanking us for the tract."

Perhaps some who are not tract distributors themselves might be able to send seed to those who are at work. The Society is a grand medium for so doing. Letters are constantly coming in, stating the great need. The Society handles only Scriptures, text cards, and such papers, booklets, and cards as contain soul-saving truth. It has no accumulation of funds, and its store of tracts is continually being turned over. Therefore all money received is immediately utilised for the purposes of "seedtime and harvest." Any wishing to join this company of seed sowers and suppliers will find the secretary, Mr. S. E. Roberts, at 26, Paternoster-row, E.C., London. WM. LUFF.

The Y.M.C.A.

The British Conference of Y.M.C.A.'s is to be held in Glasgow from September 7 to 10.

Mr. Alfred Thomas has relinquished the secretaryship of the Eastbourne Association, and purposes entering the ministry of the Church of England.

The Lord Mayor and Lady Mayoress of Manchester recently gave a reception at the Town Hall in connection with the Association of that city having completed its jubilee.

Canon Taylor-Smith (Bishop Designate of Sierra Leone), who has recently arrived in England, will give a special address in Exeter Hall, on Thursday, May 27, at 7.30, on which occasion Canon Fleming and Rev. G. H. C. Macgregor will also speak.

The annual meeting of the Exeter Association, on the evening of May 5, was crowded and enthusiastic. A membership was reported of 417, being an increase of thirty-four. A decision was reached to go forward with a scheme for enlarging the building, involving a cost of £800.

In connection with the Glasgow United Y.M.C.A., Mrs. Penn-Lewis held a short mission to Christian workers, from May 2 to 5. Two meetings were held daily. The attendances were large, and the Spirit was given in great measure. Many Christians have got fresh light and much stimulus in connection with their services for the Lord.

The conference of the Liverpool and North Wales District Union was held at St. Helens on April 29. Mr. R. D. Thomas, travelling secretary, read a paper on "Work amongst Young Men in Small Towns, and our Relationship thereto"; and Mr. Thos. Jenkinson, of St. Helens, dealt with the subject of "The Sunday Afternoon Bible Class; How best to make it Successful," both papers being very helpful.

The monthly meetings of the National Council of Young Men's Christian Associations were held at Exeter Hall on Friday under the presidency of Sir George Williams. It was reported that, as one of the results of the recent demonstrations in the North-East Metropolitan District Union, some 200 men had been introduced to the membership of the various churches in the neighbourhood. The Soldiers' Christian Association, an auxiliary of the Y.M.C.A., now numbers 193 branches, with 2400 members.

The thirteenth anniversary of the Hackney Association was held on Tuesday last week by afternoon and evening meetings. Sir George Williams presided in the afternoon, and unveiled a roll of honour tablet, containing the names of eleven members of the Association who had gone forth as foreign missionaries. Two died on the Congo. The secretary's report was of a most encouraging character. Many agencies are at work. Helpful addresses were delivered by Mr. R. L. Barclay, Dr. John Gritton, and Rev. J. H. Bird. Mr. G. Rayner presided at the evening meeting in the Morley Hall. This was a fine gathering, the leading feature being the splendid missionary tone pervading the audience. Addresses were delivered by Dr. Pierson, Dr. Harry Guinness, and Mr. B. S. Lower, leaving for the Congo early in June.

The Y.W.C.A.

In connection with the Blackburn branch, two addresses on the deepening of spiritual life were recently given in the Town Hall by Rev. G. H. C. Macgregor.

The annual social meeting of the Oban branch was lately held. The secretary stated that the winter fortnightly meetings had been well attended, and that there were now 128 on the roll.

The annual meeting of the Banbury branch was held last month in the Cadbury Memorial Hall. The report showed that many losses by death had occurred, incidentally causing an increase in the deficit of last year.

Under the auspices of the Kirkwall Association a missionary meeting for women has been held. Mrs. Tate, from British Columbia, delivered a deeply-interesting account of her work among Red Indians on the Pacific coast, showing the wonderful change wrought by Christianity among them.

The first restaurant for women in London was started many years ago in Marylebone by the Y.W.C.A. Larger premises were afterwards obtained at 101, Mortimer-street, and the effort to provide meals at moderate charges has proved a great success. In order to accommodate the numerous applicants to the Home the want of sleeping accommodation has been keenly felt. For this purpose a house (No. 36, Great Portland-street) has been taken, which, through the liberality of a well-wisher, has been furnished throughout free of expense. It was formally opened on April 29.

Request for Prayer.—For blessing on meetings by Lord Radstock in the Conference Hall, Eccleston-street, S.W.

University Notes.

[From Our Own Correspondent.]

OXFORD.

Missionary interest is increasing here. Nearly £100 was raised last year, in addition to the ordinary gifts to the society, for our own missionary in West Africa, Rev. E. H. Elwin. A new departure has been made in connection with the Inter-Collegiate Christian Union. An evangelistic meeting is to be held on Sundays at noon at the Hannington Hall. The first address was given by Mr. Selwyn, of Boscombe.

Canon Christopher, who has been rector of St. Aldate's now for over thirty-seven years, is still wonderfully active and energetic; he was in Gloucester a few days ago preaching and speaking for the C.M.S.

An influential meeting has taken place, under the presidency of Dr. Ince, Regius Professor of Divinity, to consider the possibility of a new departure in the study of the text of the New Testament. Prebendary Miller and Professor Sanday took part in the discussion.

Scottish Notes.

The assemblies of the Established and Free Churches commence next week. An important item in the programme of the latter will be the filling of the professorial vacancies.

The annual assemblies of the U.P. Synod and of the Congregational Union were held in Edinburgh last week. It was the jubilee gathering of the Synod, and special interest was created by the many fraternal congratulations expressed by delegates from other churches. The question of union with the Free Church was favourably discussed. In the Congregational Union meetings it was agreed to coalesce the theological halls of the Union and of the Evangelical Union which was amalgamated with the larger body last year.

Dr. Alexander Whyte, at one of the meetings of the U.P. Synod, made the admirable suggestion that on the coming thanksgiving celebration of the Queen's Diamond Jubilee, on Sabbath, June 20, there should be a universal interchange of pulpits throughout Scotland, and that the day should be generally observed as a "communion day" in all the churches.

Personalia.

Pastor Chiniquy has been invited to lecture in Holland and Germany.

Rev. Alfred Rowland, of Crouch End, has been elected to the chair of the Congregational Union in succession to Dr. Charles A. Berry.

Mr. Monro Collings, evangelist, has for some weeks been laid aside by illness, but is now mending, though rest will be necessary for a time.

Mrs. Mountford (née Miss Von Finkelstein) has recently been giving lectures on the Holy Land in Salt Lake City, Utah, to large audiences.

Dr. H. M. Field, editor of the New York Evangelist, was seventy-five years old on April 3. He travels about as he has always done, and writes with a pen as vigorous and graceful as ever.

Mother Stewart, the well-known temperance leader among American women, has celebrated her eighty-first birthday. Many friends gathered in Springfield, Ohio, to congratulate her.

Major Whittle addressed the noon prayer meeting at Aldersgate-street on Thursday last week, and greatly interested the friends present by telling some of the fruits of the special mission lately closed at Woolwich. Mr. and Mrs. Stebbins sang two songs from The Christian Choir with much feeling and power.

Mrs. Grattan Guinness, Senr., says The Regions Beyond, continues in good health. After spending about three months in London, she returned to Cliff early in April. Dr. Grattan Guinness' last letters are from Mandalay and Rangoon, written on his way to China. He has been deeply interested in visiting Burman Missions.

Rev. W. Cuff, of the Shoreditch Tabernacle, has, with much regret, declined the offer to spend six months in Australia, through fear that the work he has in hand at home might suffer through his being so long away from England. He was asked to supply the pulpit of Rev. Mr. Chapman, at Melbourne, during six months.

Three-fold Option.—The U.P. Synod and the Congregational Union of Scotland have both refused to sanction the "three-fold option" scheme now being advocated in that part of the kingdom for dealing with the drink traffic. They object to the option of local municipalisation of the trade.

Obituary.

ARCHDEACON DOBINSON, OF THE NIGER.

News has reached London of the death in West Africa of the Ven. Henry Hughes Dobinson, Archdeacon of the Niger. Mr. Dobinson joined the staff of the C.M.S. Niger Mission in 1890, at a time of peculiar difficulty and trial in connection with the work there. He was stationed at Onitsha, and latterly acted as secretary of the Mission. Speaking on Wednesday last at the annual meeting of the Missionary Leaves Association, Bishop Tugwell said that by Mr. Dobinson's death the Mission had sustained an almost irreparable loss. Before he went to the Niger, Mr. Dobinson was curate of St. James's, West Hartlepool.

DR. SOUTHAM, ECCLES.

The late Thomas Southam, LL.D., whose death took place at Eccles on Friday last, was formerly a well-known and respected solicitor who practised his profession in Manchester for over thirty years. His loss will be deeply felt by many whose rough road through life has been made easier for the kindly and enlightened help and comfort of such a friend and adviser. Dr. Southam was a friend to, and a liberal supporter of the religious and charitable institutions of Manchester, was one of the early organisers of the Manchester City Mission, and a ready helper to any who came to him needy or in distress. He had been in failing health for some few years, having been stricken with paralysis, but to the last, in spite of his infirmity, he was able and willing as of old. He retired some years since from the active duties of his profession in Manchester, and resided at Bentcliffe, Eccles, where he was greatly beloved, and the news of his death has filled many hearts and homes there with sorrow and sadness.

DR. J. H. BROOKES, ST. LOUIS.

This well-known minister of the Presbyterian Church died at his home in St. Louis, on Sabbath, April 18, and so ended a career of great ability and fruitfulness in the ministry. He was the son of Rev. James Hall Brookes, a minister of extraordinary mental gifts, whose work left an extended and gracious influence in Tennessee. His first pastorate was at Dayton, Ohio, until 1858, when he became the minister of the Second Presbyterian church, St. Louis, until 1854, and then of the Walnut-street church, until he retired a year or two ago, becoming the pastor emeritus.

Since 1875 he has conducted The Truth, largely devoted to the support of the views, as to the pre-millennial advent of Christ, which for many years Dr. Brookes has advocated with ability and zeal. He was a Christian minister of much intellectual force and spiritual power. His preaching was made notable by his knowledge of the Scriptures and his command of its riches, and by great earnestness of conviction. His ministry was richly blessed in abundant fruitfulness. He was permitted to continue his labours unto the end of an intensely earnest and active life.

Returning from a visit to Mississippi, he preached in St. Louis on Sunday, April 11, but after the second service he suffered an attack from which he rallied only in part, and passed away at sunrise on the next Sabbath, April 18.—Central Presbyterian.

For many years (says the Boston Congregationalist) he was a close friend of Mr. Moody's, and at Y.M.C.A. gatherings and evangelistic conferences he was a welcome speaker. If he had been a little less uncompromising in his advocacy of his own theological beliefs, his admitted ability would have made him more widely influential, though he drew to himself many warm admirers.

In a letter with respect to Dr. Brookes's home-call, Major Whittle writes:—"He was loved by friends of the Bible, and feared by its enemies as none other of his generation. His influence in giving an orthodox and stalwart character to the testimony of the younger generation of men, who came in contact with him at Northfield, Niagara, and in Y.M.C.A. Conventions, was simply incalculable. He was a 'Great-heart' and 'Mr. Valiant for the Truth' combined, and will be sadly missed by those who have been privileged to know and love him."

Sailors' Rest, Marseilles.—This work, founded at Marseilles by Mr. Faithfull, for sailors of all nations, is going on as before. A good number of sailors come to the reading-rooms where they find recreation and where Gospel meetings are held regularly. Religious papers, tracts and New Testaments are distributed to sailors leaving the port, and at the hospitals, where visits are paid every week. All the branches of the work are in active operation, and gracious tokens of blessing follow the preached word. If the work is to go on, it will need to be sustained by gifts for Christian friends elsewhere. The directress is Mdlle. Merz, and her address is 38, Quai Du Port, Marseilles.

THE BOOK WORLD.

MISSIONARY LITERATURE.

If it be true, as Dr. George Smith, of Edinburgh, thinks, that the existing missionary periodicals are not adequate to the demands of the great cause, there is at any rate no lack of general missionary literature. With the advent of the spring season, when the missionary anniversaries are being held, some interesting additions have been made to the store. First of all we may notice a new edition of Dr. G. Smith's excellent work, A Short History of Christian Missions, issued as one of the series of "Handbooks for Bible-classes" (T. & T. Clark. 2s. 6d.). Wonderfully comprehensive is the author's survey of the slow progress of missionary work from the days of Abraham all through the Judaic and early Christian period, then through the long centuries of "Latin preparation," on to the century of modern missions which has now closed. Anyone who carefully studies this "handbook" will have an intelligent understanding of a vast subject.

Another book, similar in purpose, is Rev. P. Barclay's Survey of Foreign Missions (Blackwood and Sons. 3s. 6d.). The question is here regarded from the geographical rather than the historical standpoint. Under the divisions of Asia, Oceania, Africa, and America, Mr. Barclay gives a cursive, impartial, and popularly written view of the present condition of mission work in all the lands. There are five maps of the different divisions of the field, and altogether the book is one that ought to intensify interest and stir up zeal.

Two other books are before us from the capable pens of workers in the field. In the Tiger Jungle, by the veteran American missionary, Dr. Jacob Chamberlain (E. Stock), affords very vivid glimpses of experience among the Telegus of India. There is plenty of movement and romantic interest in the volume, with beautiful photographic illustrations. We indorse the opinion expressed by Dr. F. E. Clark in an introduction, that it ought to be in the library of every Christian Endeavour Society and mission circle. A deeply attractive and profusely illustrated book is On the Threshold of Three Closed Lands, by Rev. J. A. Graham (R. & R. Black). It forms a delightful introduction to the work of the Church of Scotland Mission in the outposts of the Eastern Himalayas. The "three closed lands" are Nepaul, Bhutan, and Tibet, on the borders of which these Scotch friends are at work. The one hundred and twenty illustrations are not the least attractive feature of this informing and encouraging record.

China and Formosa. By Rev. James Johnston. (Hazell, Watson & Viney.) The jubilee of the Chinese Mission of the Presbyterian Church of England is being held this year. Hence there is particular timeliness in the appearance of this illustrated story of the mission from the able pen of an honoured former missionary. The story begins with the going forth, in 1847, of the devoted Rev. W. C. Burns, whose labours were so much owned of God. The various noble men and women who have followed receive notice, while the dawn and peculiar usefulness of medical missions are not overlooked. The writer believes that to the Presbyterian Church in England "her Chinese mission has been the source of prosperity as well as a sign of life." This attractive volume ought to be in the hands of all lovers of missions.

Old and New London. Last week's part of the cheap re-issue of this work began the third volume. The entire work will be a source of much entertainment and utility in London homes. (6d. weekly. Cassells.)

Knowing and Doing. By Mrs. H. B. Paull. (5s. Hodder & Stoughton.) Eight short well-written stories for young people, illustrating certain practical precepts of the Bible bearing on every-day life and work—such as "Overcome evil with good," and others of a like character.

East and West: A Weekly Record of Foreign Missions. (1d. Office, 13, Cecil-court, W.C.) This publication, carefully edited and well produced, promises to prove of great service to missionaries, and of wide interest among the friends of world wide evangelisation. The editorial contributors include Rev. A. R. Buckland, Dr. C. F. Harford-Battersby, Dr. J. L. Maxwell, and Rev. A. T. Pierson, D.D.

The Quarterly Statement (April) of the Palestine Exploration Fund gives another report by Dr. Bliss on the excavations at Jerusalem, and valuable papers by Dr. Conrad Schick and Colonel Conder. "A Journey to Petra—1896," by Mr. Gray Hill, is full of information, while "Morals of the Fellahin," by Mr. P. J. Baldensperger, is a valuable contribution to a subject of great interest. International S.S. Lessons.

Sunday, May 23.

The Conference at Jerusalem.—
Acts xv. 1-6, 22-29.

Golden Text.—Verse 11.

GAL. ii. 1-10 should be read in connection with this lesson. The story includes three things:—

A Dispute.
Deliberation.
Decision.

I. The Dispute arose through the teaching of "certain men" (1), who were formerly Pharisees (5), and who not only retained their zeal for the law, but sought to enforce it upon all others. It was to the Gentile converts that their teaching was directed; their demand was that these converts should be circumcised and become Jewish proselytes in order to be saved (1, 5). Endeavour to make the point of this dispute clear, for very much depends upon it.

For many reasons it was a most serious matter. (1) Because all dissension in the Christian Church is serious. When one who became eminent in the service of God was asked, what had been his great hindrance in coming to Christ? he replied, "The dissensions among Christians." It is possible that many exaggerate the importance of these dissensions; and some who do not want to be saved point to them as a mere excuse; yet it is still true that internal strife is the Church's weakness. Think of the position of power and influence the Church, during the twenty years of its history, had gained. What would have been the result if now this dispute had led to division on the important question of salvation?

(2) But chiefly because it denied the principle of grace. The language of Paul in his epistles to the Galatians, the Romans, and the Ephesians, shows how jealously he guarded this principle. To demand any Jewish ceremony as a condition of salvation involved the obligation to obey the whole law, and what then became of salvation by grace? The gift of God cannot be purchased by obedience to an outward ceremony. It must either be accepted as a free gift or not at all. It is important that young people should be taught to understand this. Do they not often speak of "being good" in order to be saved—of doing, or praying, or trying? What is this but salvation by works? The Gospel plan tells of a work done, of a salvation offered, and asks only that it be received. (Read and explain the Golden Text.)

II. The Deliberation took place in Jerusalem (1.) Summarise briefly Peter's address (7-11), who declared his own experience in connection with the conversion of Cornelius; then the story of the two missionaries (12), who told how God had set his seal upon their testimony among the Gentiles; and then the speech of James (13-22), who showed that the conversion of the Gentiles was one of the themes of Old Testament prophecy.

From all this we learn, first, that neither Peter, nor James, nor any other apostle was regarded as a kind of primate or pope, who had power to settle a dispute by his authority. We see next that in settling this question not only the "apostles and elders" (6) but the whole church were called together (22, 23). And, thirdly, we learn that when the church thus assembles, with sincere desire to know the mind of God and to be obedient to his Word, the Holy Ghost never fails to guide them. Note the significant phrase in verse 28.

III. The Decision (22-31).—Two other brethren accompanied the apostles (22). Of Barnabas nothing else is known. Silas, or Silvanus, was afterwards Paul's companion in missionary work (40).

It was customary, in connection with idolatrous sacrifices, to burn some portion on the altar, and send the rest to the market, or use it at the table. For the Jew to eat such meat would be a defilement; and since there were weak, i.e., uninstructed, Christians who had not learned that an idol was nothing, it was necessary for others to abstain for their sakes. Blood, too, was, in various forms, regarded as a delicacy among the Gentiles, and they "drank blood mingled with wine at their sacrifices." The Levitical law forbade this among the Jews (Lev. iii. 17; xvii. 10-14). Fellowship between converted Jews and Gentiles would be impossible if the Gentiles did not concede this. Things strangled are in the same category. They could not be eaten by the Jews, because their blood was in them.

Note that in all these particulars the Gentile converts were to make concessions to their Jewish brethren. Things that were right and lawful for them to do were not expedient. They must practise self-denial for their brethren's sakes. Apply the principle to matters that concern us to-day. Ask, not only, Is it right? but, Is this expedient? Will it wound the conscience of another, or prove a stumbling-block in his way?

AMONG THE CHURCHES.

Church of England.

The result of the polling in the Archdeaconry of Middlesex for the election of a Proctor in Convocation has been declared as follows:—Prebendary Villiers, 162; Prebendary Kitto, 95.

The Archbishop of York has announced that his visit to Russia was to familiarise himself with the ceremonies of the Greek Church, and "of a private character, and in no sense official."

The vicar of St. James's, Hatcham (Rev. E. J. Kennedy), dispensing with the annual bazaar in aid of church funds, this year instituted special thankoffering services. There were crowded congregations, and about £150 was taken.

The confirmation of the election of Dr. Owen to the Bishopric of St. David's took place at Bow Church a few days ago with the usual formalities. No opposition was offered, and the proceedings were absolutely without public interest.

The Bishop of Durham, in a published letter, says the Church reform most urgently needed is "a complete development of the constitution and government of the Church, central, diocesan and parochial, and especially the admission of laymen of all classes who are bonâ fide Churchmen, to a substantial share in the control of Church affairs."

During last year the agents of the Church Association visited 1575 villages, gave 2780 addresses, and sold 42,394 and distributed 86,597 publications. The report severely censures "lawless bishops" for encouraging Romanising clergy and unwarranted fraternising with unreformed churches. The Society's income was £7000, and its expenditure £6375.

Rev. T. Sprenger, vicar of Portsdown, having been warned by the Bishop of Winchester against attending a Protestant meeting in a Baptist chapel at Cosham, wrote, in reply, a faithful letter on the great advance of Ritualism. He concluded in these terms:—"I am an old man, and I shall not trouble either you or the Church much longer; but, with my last and latest breath, I shall, God helping me, oppose 'tooth and nail,' in every way and place, even in a Salvation Army Barracks, if it is necessary, this common enemy of true religion and piety in our land—Romish false doctrine!"

Congregational.

Rev. A. D. Philps has been elected Chairman of Essex Union for the Centenary Year, 1838.

Rev. G. Ossian Davies, of Bournemouth, has accepted the pastorate of Paddington Chapel, in succession to the late Rev. Isaac Morley Wright.

The Manual of Lyndhurst-road Church, Hampstead, a work of 215 closely-printed pages, gives details of manifold agencies at work in the cause of religion and philanthropy. With a membership of 1,098, the church has raised for all purposes during the past year £6,042.

At the annual meeting of the Channel Islands Union, Rev. E. Mann delivered an address on "Open Churches." Resolutions were passed on the Guernsey Education Question, the Federation of the Churches, and Arbitration. Rev. Mark Arni was elected chairman for 1898.

At the challenge of Mr. Edward Crossley, of Halifax, who is one of the trustees, the committee are promoting an effort to pay off the mortgage of £11,750 still remaining on the estate connected with the Northern School, Silcoates, Wakefield. Mr. Crossley has offered conditionally £1000, and Mr. William Hinmers, of Manchester, has given a like sum.

The third part of Medland Hall men for Canada left Liverpool a few days ago. This completes the total of 100 for which arrangements were made early in the season. All the men previously sent are in employment. The experiment has proved highly satisfactory, an outlay of £800 having transferred 100 men from destitution in London to remunerative employment in a British colony. The London Congregational Union and the Self-Help Emigration Society have united in this effort.

Calls.—Rev. J. Clement Angel, Axminster, to Bexley, Kent; Rev. Thomas Slevan to Wigan and district, in connection with Forward Movement (all accepted).

Resignations.—Rev. A. Forrester, Napier-street, S.E.; Rev. J. Southwood Jackson, Stockwell; Rev. W. J. Temple, Millwall.

Baptist.

The Baptist Church lately formed at Broadstairs is receiving great and constant kindness at the hands of neighbouring churches. The C.E. Society, started in connection with the Church, is making satisfactory progress.

John-street Chapel, Bedford-row (Rev. Frank S. W. Nicholson), has been reopened after renovation. The report of work for the past year shows encouraging progress. The renovation of the buildings has included the introduction of the electric light.

The memorial-stone of a new chapel at Bowerchalke, near Salisbury, has been laid by the Countess of Pembroke. The Earl of Pembroke expressed his pleasure at being able to render assistance to a church belonging to a different denomination from his own.

Calls.—Rev. F. Smith, B.A., to Manvers-street, Bath; Mr. W. Tooke, to Clare; Rev. E. W. Davies, Ton, Rhondda Valley, to Holyhead; Mr. W. Lewis, of Aberystwith College, to Ffynnonhenry, Carm.; Mr. E. Williams, of Cardiff College, to Hay (all accepted).

Methodist.

The P.M. Jubilee Fund has now reached a total of £33,293, more than £7000 having been received during the year.

Memorial-stones have been laid of a new Wesleyan chapel at Burley, Leeds, to accommodate 800 people and cost £6000.

It was hardly expected that the General Centenary Fund (N.C.) would reach £80,000 by Conference. But during the month £4044, in sums promised and mostly paid, has come in, raising the total to £83,314.

There is every probability that the Centenary Conference of the New Connexion will record an increase in church membership. Although the returns are not complete, a net increase of about 400 is assured in England and Ireland, and the returns of probationers are most promising.

Dr. Rigg, in the course of a correspondence on the selection of president of the Wesleyan Methodist Connexion, which vests in the pastoral as distinguished from the representative session of the annual conference, says:—"Men have been proposing to govern and manage Methodism according to the principles of modern democracy or the conventions of trade meetings."

The anticipation that the American Methodists were ready to sanction the admission of women delegates to their General Conferences proves to have been fallacious. The vote of the Annual Conference on the question makes it pretty certain that the proposition has received a decided set-back. There is a large majority in its favour, but the requisite three-fourths vote fails by a much larger figure than when the question was last submitted.

Presbyterian.

The Year Book of the Church will be discontinued unless it is better supported.

Rev. A. Aldridge, a Huddersfield curate, who had changed his views regarding Church polity, has been received into the Presbyterian ministry.

It is expected that the Marylebone congregation will take no decided steps to call a minister until after the visit of Dr. Lorimer, of Boston, who arrives in July and will occupy the pulpit for six weeks.

The memorial-stone of Westminster College, Cambridge, the new home of the Theological College of the Presbyterian Church, will be laid on the 25th inst. by Mrs. S. S. Lewis and Mrs. J. G. Gibson. It is expected that Principal Oswald Dykes, Dr. John Watson, and Dr. Moinet will take part in the ceremony.

Fallen Asleep.

At Ballaghmeehan Glebe, co. Leitrim, Rev. Dr. Scott, rector of Killtyclogher and Ballaghmeehan, aged eighty-three years.—At Horncastle, Lincs., Mr. John Panton, a prominent supporter of Wesleyan undertakings.—At Dawlish, Miss Bawden, a generous helper among the Congregationalists.—At Hebworth, York, Rev. Robert Smith, for over fifty years a minister among the Primitive Methodists.—At Sunderland, Mr. Thomas Coke Squance, a leader among the Wesleyan Methodists.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

AT last we are having real summer weather. The country around London is looking its very best, and our mission workers in the great city are now busy taking large contingents of the children of the slums for a day's feast of health under the blue sky. Will our kind readers, especially those who have abundance of rural enjoyment, help us, as in former years, to aid these workers in their good and necessary endeavours?

We would again remind those readers who have derived benefit from the series of Memory Lessons by Rev. J. Kilburn, that have appeared in our columns, of the privilege of contributing a thankoffering to some mission effort, according to the suggestion of the writer of the papers. We are glad to know that some missions have benefited in this way, and we should be pleased to hear of other similar results.

We learn from many sources that the finances of various mission agencies are suffering greatly from the diversion of funds into "Jubilee" celebrations. We rejoice in every effort put forth to do justice to the unique event of next month, but we earnestly plead the cause of our toiling Christian workers, that their arduous endeavours to reclaim the lost and alleviate suffering should not be made doubly difficult by lack of needful monetary help.

Is it too much to hope that the authorities will not grant the requests for an extension of the facilities for obtaining drink on the Queen's Diamond Jubilee Day? If an extension be made, it will certainly lead to a great deal of additional intemperance and crime. The mere coming together of so many thousands of people will be sure to form an occasion for the perpetration of theft and violence, and there will probably be a good deal of drunkenness; but it will be deplorable if public-houses are allowed to remain open a longer time than usual, and if licences for the sale of drink are increased. This is just an occasion when the administrators of law can preserve the people from the temptation that destroys, if they cannot succeed in making them moral.

The Duke of Westminster, with his accustomed kindness, is proffering his hospitality to all who are interested in the prohibition of the sale of liquors to the native races. We wish the Society God speed in its excellent work.

We could not help thinking as we mixed with some of the crowds attending the May meetings that it would be hard to find in them an illustration of the common idea that religion is a gloomy thing. The friendly salutations, the quick, keen interest visible in most faces, the readiness to appreciate anything genial and humorous in a speech, revealed something of the bright side of religion. A writer in The Daily News seems to have been similarly impressed by the meeting of the London City Mission, for he says that after but a brief experience he came to the conclusion that May meetings are happy and cheerful reunions after a year of good works.

A hymn sung by a thousand voices moves even the most hardened sinner! The great mass of earnest, uplifted faces, engaged in a fervid-sounding prayer, affects one strangely.

There is a freedom about the speeches, a bonhomie, a geniality, an utter absence of self-consciousness, a humour which makes you friendly with the orator at once.

He thinks the jokes are good, and "none can fail to sympathise with such fervid zeal as you find in Exeter Hall." Gratifying testimony from such an influential daily paper.

When will the promoters of public meetings learn wisdom in the arrangement of their programme? The craze seems to be for a long list of speakers. We saw a programme the other day announcing ten speakers for the same meeting. Only five put in an appearance—and no wonder! Busy men are brought from distant points and their whole evening taken up to speak for ten minutes or less. We hardly marvel that speakers sometimes "disappoint." To say nothing of the wasted power, two addresses, in addition to that of the chairman, would afford the hearers some chance of remembering a few of the things they have heard, and the speakers of saying something worth listening to.

If you were going to a race meeting, or were otherwise on pleasure bent, we could help you, but we cannot possibly reduce the rates for a religious convention.

This is, in effect, the reply given by the Great Western Railway Company to the Christian Endeavourers in the south-west of England, who applied for special fares to enable them to attend the annual convention at Liverpool. Surely the Christian community deserves more than such scant courtesy as this, and we should have thought on purely commercial grounds the policy of the company is a mistaken one. A hundred or two extra passengers are not to be despised, and we imagine most of the shareholders will endorse this view.

Compare with this the facilities given to the theatrical troupes, for which Sunday by Sunday scores of special trains are provided at immense cost of working. The forethought, and arrangement of "cross-country" trains, thus involved are enormous, as well as the amount of Sunday labour. This also we commend to the attention of Christian shareholders.

The Spectator devotes two columns to an article on "missionary work," and a remarkable article it is. It describes the diffusion of Christianity as "the biggest thing we Europeans have undertaken to do." The point of the whole is its earnest insistence on the employment of natives for preaching the Gospel to their own people. A doubt is expressed as to whether the supporters of missionary societies give any preference in Asia to Jewish missionaries, though all early teaching came from such men, and though teachers sprung from that stock would understand Asiatics as Europeans could hardly hope to do. "The effort to convert Arabs is far too negligently pursued." Yet the influence of the Arab among negroes stands altogether above that of any European, and if he has been so efficient in spreading Mohammedanism in Africa, why, if he is equally in earnest, should he not spread Christianity as widely?

Good agents for Africa might also be found among the negroes of the Southern States and the West Indies.

Now, this language is not new, though we are glad to see it repeated. Moffat used to say that Africa could only be won by Africans. The last discussion we heard on a Missionary Board was mainly in favour of employing converted Africans on the spot, rather than sending men from the West Indies. The missionary societies are, perhaps, not so belated as this writer thinks.

The Spectator thinks that, in missionary work, we should count our success not by converts, but "only by the converts who are capable of becoming, and are willing to become, evangelists." But is this the way of the New Testament? Paul, the greatest of the evangelists, has naturally a great portion of the Acts of the Apostles allotted to him, but the writer of that book again and again gives us the number of the converts either in precise figures or in the general language—"multitudes were added unto the Lord." One convert, if he be real, is a success; and it is out of the multitudes that the men of ability and grace come forth who can do the work of evangelists. The more converts the more evangelists. But every convert should be regarded, and taught to regard himself, as a witness for Christ.

It is cheering to note the increasing interest which is being taken in Sunday-school work by the churches generally. This is evidenced by the attendance at anniversary week-night meetings. Not many years ago, in and around London, these meetings were so thinly attended that even with the perennial attractions of a tea they could not be considered a success. Now, happily, it is no unusual thing to find the body of a large church comfortably filled. Those who are still mourning over a lack of interest will say, "How is it done?" As a rule, it is accomplished by utilising the services of the senior scholars in recitations, dialogues, &c. This naturally has a great influence with the parents, who turn out in large numbers to hear them.

There are texts that find out preachers, and there are texts that preachers find out. It may be necessary sometimes for preachers to search the Scriptures long, carefully, and with much prayer for the word which contains God's message to the people for a given time; and the work becomes a means of grace. But, on the other hand, the texts that find out the preacher, that come right into his heart as a message from God, are sure to be words of power. There are texts which a preacher has to work his way into; there are also texts which work their way into him. The former have, in a sense, to be mastered by him; the latter master him, subduing, purifying, comforting, uplifting him.

There is a service which demands hard work, close observation, patient endurance; and there is a service which is like Philip's, when the Spirit of God caught him up and pressed him along from place to place. Each is good. The moments of inspiration come most frequently to him who toils on patiently through all weathers. The texts that find a man and penetrate him come to him, and to him alone, who searches the Scriptures diligently.

There are many who find it difficult to rise to that manliness of spirit which says, "I am not ashamed of the Gospel of Christ." At the bottom of this lurking shame lies ignorance. The beauty of the Gospel is perceptible at a glance, but its full beauty is not revealed save to its ardent friends. Those who know experimentally least of the Gospel are the most likely to be ashamed to be identified with it.

Mrs. G. Linnæus Banks, who died the other day, published, in conjunction with her husband, many poems, the chief of which are probably contained in "Daisies in the Grass." But of all her poems none was so widely known or so helpful in inspiring young men, in concentrating their ambition and enthusiasm as that beginning:

I live for those who love me,
Whose hearts are kind and true;
For the heaven that smiles above me,
And awaits my spirit too;
For all human ties that bind me,
For the task by God assigned me,
For the bright hopes yet to find me,
And the good that I can do.

This is a "chord of power" which will wake echoes in thousands of hearts when the writer is forgotten.

Another tale of horror comes from the Upper Congo, brought by one of the American Baptist Mission. It is a tale of robbery, extortion, and murder, under the most painful circumstances. For the sake of gain made by the sale of rubber, which becomes more and more difficult to get, the people are treated with the utmost severity, and failure to do the impossible is visited with death. Mr. Sijoblom testifies that the country is rapidly becoming depopulated and impoverished. The policy pursued is, on every hand, creating fresh obstacles to the progress of true civilisation. In this quarter of the world, as in so many other quarters, the question is asked with a curse, "Why did the white man ever find his way to my country?" The public opinion of Europe ought to be able to move the King of the Belgians to see that this crying iniquity is ended at once.

A correspondent in India writes:—

The whole of Hindoo society is saturated with superstition. In the zenana of the well-to-do it finds a favourite dwelling-place; but it takes its firmest hold and produces its most vicious fruit among the ignorant poor. A little while ago several children belonging to one mother died. She consulted a local sorcerer, who advised the propitiation of the death-god by the sacrifice of a human victim. The result was that a little six-year-old boy was taken and murdered in cold blood. This occurs in a land which claims one of the most ancient religions in the world, and in its present form one of the most despicable.

The Mildmay Conference.

OUR readers must have learned with general and genuine satisfaction and approval that the theme chosen for the Mildmay Conference this year will be "The Evangelisation of our Generation." Yet, possibly, none of us have adequately perceived the overwhelming, unparalleled, pre-eminent importance of the subject. For this is the end to which everything else is the means, so far as the work of the Church on earth is concerned.

Before man was created the covenant of peace was ratified between the Father and the Son, and in the purpose of God Jesus was the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world.

When man fell before the tempter the righteous Judge promised that the Seed of the woman should bruise the serpent's head—a promise repeated in many forms during the subsequent four thousand years.

Then the Seed was born who was to be a "Light to lighten the Gentiles, and the glory of his people Israel."

Baptized, after all the people, into Jordan, with the baptism which meant confession of sin, He thus took the first step in the fulfilment of all righteousness, according to Daniel's prophecy, that Messiah should bring in everlasting righteousness. He confessed the sins of men as his own (Psa. lxix.), and said in effect, to the righteous God upon the throne, "Jerusalem and all Judea, representing all mankind (except those who go about to establish their own righteousness), have sinned against heaven and in Thy sight. Put that to my account: I will repay Thee." And when by the sacrifice of Himself He put away sin, He fulfilled his pledge, redeemed the world, and repaid with an exceeding interest the debt of man to God.

Thus the work was done at infinite cost, to give effect to which it was absolutely essential to make it known.

Therefore, upon the infant Church at Pentecost, grafted into Israel's good olive-tree, was poured out the promised Spirit, to qualify them, each and all, to be witnesses of Him, the risen Saviour; as of old to Israel Jehovah had said, "Ye are my witnesses that I am God."

That is the Church's function in the world:

'Tis all her business here below
To cry, Behold the Lamb.

For this she has been redeemed. "This people have I redeemed for myself, that they may show forth my praise." For this she has been sanctified: "For their sakes I sanctify myself, that they also might be truly sanctified"; "A vessel unto honour, sanctified, serviceable to the Master, prepared unto every good work." "Wherefore Jesus also, that He might sanctify the people with his own blood, suffered without the gate. Let us go forth, therefore, unto Him without the camp bearing his reproach." "Eat up the little book...Thou must prophesy again, before many peoples, and nations, and tongues and kings...And I will endow the two witnesses of Me [my kings and priests*] and they shall prophesy...clothed in sackcloth." "And they tormented them that dwelt upon the earth."

Happy if with their latest breath
They may but gasp his Name;
Preach Him to all, and cry in death,
Behold, behold the Lamb!

* Whatever the Two Witnesses may specifically mean, it is unquestionably true that all Christians are called to be Witnesses to Christ, clothed in sackcloth; or, in other words, to go forth unto Him without the camp, bearing his reproach.

"Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature." "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; he that believeth not shall be condemned." "And this Gospel of the Kingdom shall be preached in all the world, for a testimony [the testimony of Jesus is the spirit of prophecy] unto all the nations, and then shall the end come."

Evidently the theme of the coming Conference is the supreme question of the present age; the corollary and sequel to the death and resurrection of Jesus the Christ; the object nearest and dearest to the heart of God, to which all others tend, and which gives effect in the lives of his people to all the objective and subjective truth with which He has fed their souls. Birmingham Convention.

THE eighth annual Convention for the deepening of spiritual life was held in the Town Hall, Birmingham, last week. Capt. Tottenham presided, and the speakers included Revs. E. H. Hopkins, G. H. C. Macgregor, G. C. Grubb, R. Middleton, W. Y. Fullerton, J. D. Brash, W. H. Griffith Thomas, and Mrs. Penn Lewis. A very exceptional feature was the early morning gathering at seven for prayer and praise, when over a thousand, working people for the most part, met morning by morning. This in a busy city like Birmingham is surely almost unique in Convention history. Mr. Macgregor's messages were greatly valued, especially that on Wednesday morning on "Partakers with Christ." Mr. Grubb spoke with great power each day, and in particular on Thursday morning on "Walking in Newness of Life," which was defined as Walking in the Spirit, Walking in Love, and Walking in Wisdom.

Mr. Hopkins could only stay part of the time, but his word on Heb. xiii. 5, 6, was manifestly used of God, judging from the testimonies at the praise meeting. Mr. Middleton is known to and valued by Birmingham Convention-goers, and he was used to give several "words in season." Mrs. Penn Lewis' Bible-readings were the means of much instruction and blessing, and not soon will the word on Thursday evening, "What did Christ die for?" be forgotten. Mr. Griffith Thomas spoke on "Joy" and "Peace."

Ministers' meetings were held on Tuesday and Thursday, and were well attended by local clergy and ministers. One of the Convention addresses was given by the venerable George Müller, of Bristol, whose presence and testimony were deeply appreciated.

A missionary meeting on Friday, with addresses by Rev. J. Roscoe, of Uganda, and Mr. W. B. Sloan, closed a week of great blessing and power.

Pastor A. G. Brown.

Dear Sir,—The great Tabernacle of East London has suffered a serious loss in the resignation of Pastor Archibald G. Brown. For thirty years Pastor Brown's manly courage and faithfulness to the Word of God have only been equalled by his marvellous hold on the thousands who have continued to throng the Tabernacle. God has worked through his servant as through a chosen instrument, and vast numbers have been saved and added to the church.

Most natural is it that when, after unusual strain lasting for a course of years, Mr. Brown has felt impelled to resign, his people should wish to make him a parting gift, expressive of deep gratitude for all that God has enabled him to be to them. They feel that there are many throughout the country who would delight to share this privilege, if friends only knew that a testimonial fund is being raised.

May I, therefore, invite all such friends to send in their contributions not later than May 27, directed to Mr. W. Hossack, East London Tabernacle, Burdett-road, London, E., marking the envelope "Testimonial Fund"? Trusting this informal notice may meet with a hearty response.—I am, yours in Christ's service, H. Grattan Guinness, M.D.

The Inner Revelation of Christ

By Rev. F. B. Meyer, B.A.

Gal. i. 16, 17.

IN these wonderful verses we have an epitome of the Apostle Paul's life. There is, first, his separation in the Divine purpose before his birth for the high and blessed work of ministering the Gospel; then his vocation by the grace of God, when a voice called to him which his prepared ear detected, though to others it was as thunder; then the three successive steps with which we have to do now—the revelation of Christ; the ministration of human sympathy and help; and his isolation in Arabia; whilst, to crown all, there is afforded an indication of his life-work of preaching among the Gentiles the unsearchable riches of Christ.

How different to his anticipation was Saul's entrance into Damascus! He had probably often solaced himself during his weary six-days' journey by picturing the reception which would be accorded to him by the authorities at Damascus, on his arrival at their city as the Commissioner of the High Priest, charged with the extirpation of the Nazarene heresy. But instead of honour, there was consternation and surprise. No one could quite explain or understand what had taken place. Dismounted from his horse, he went afoot; instead of the haughty bearing of the Inquisitor, the helplessness of a sightless man appealed for hands to lead him; shrinking from notice and welcome, he was only too eager to reach a lonely chamber, where he might recover from the awful effects of that collision between his mortal and sinful nature and the holy, glorious Son of God, whom he had so ruthlessly persecuted.

He seemed a stricken, dejected, broken man—"trembling and astonished"; but his soul was radiant with the light of the glory of God in the face of Jesus. The fire that shone in the burning bush had suddenly kindled upon him. As a lightning flash illumines the ink-black night, revealing the precipice towards which the traveller was stumbling, and unveiling for one brief instant the city with its glistening buildings, the country with its expanse of forest, river, and pastureland, so in that moment he had seen God, Christ, the Old Testament Scriptures, and the mistaken purpose of his life. But as at dawn the sun enters a room with a southern aspect, to abide there all day, so from that moment his soul would be lit with the inner presence of the Lord, who had so become to him his everlasting light that the days of his mourning were ended. In other words, the Father had

REVEALED HIS SON IN HIM.

It is marvellous to notice how much of the teaching, which the Apostle gave out in after days, may be discovered in germ in the records of his conversion.

"I am Jesus, whom thou persecutest": there is the believer's identification with the Lord, involving all that wonderful teaching of the oneness of the Head and members.

"To appoint thee a minister and a witness": there is the origin of his constant reference to witness and testimony-bearing.

"The Gentiles, unto whom now I send thee": on this he rested his claim to be considered specially the Apostle of the Gentiles, and perhaps those two great revelations were made known to his inner consciousness; the one that the Gentiles should be fellow-members, fellow-heirs, and fellow-partakers with the chosen nation in all the privileges and rights of the Gospel; the other, to make all men see what is the fellowship of the mystery which from eternal ages hath been hidden in the heart of God—the riches of the glory of this mystery, which is Christ in you, the hope of glory—that even the hearts of Gentiles may become the dwelling-place and temple of the living Saviour. (Eph. iii.; Col. i.)

In Acts xxvi. 17-18, we find an epitome of the first chapter of the Epistle to the Colossians. It is, in fact, the seed-plot of the Apostle's thoughts on the justification and sanctification of the soul. The whole of his message might be focussed around these two points—remission of sins, and an inheritance among the sanctified, through faith in the living Christ.

Imagine the abundance of revelations made to the blinded man during those three days and nights of silence and solitude in the house of Judas. Is it wonderful that he became oblivious to the needs of the body, and did neither eat nor drink? There are hours when we lose all consciousness of time, and already live in eternity, when the soul loses count of the moments, sets sail from the coastline of earth, and finds itself out on the broad bosom of the ocean of eternity; and such was the experience of this soul, which, like the acacia-bush in the wilderness, suddenly found itself

AFLAME WITH THE FIRE OF THE I AM.

What mysteries began to pass before him, like the procession of the Divine Nature as God proclaimed his Name to Moses down the mountain gorge! We talk about discovery, we should rather speak of disclosure. Is there such a thing as discovery? Is it not rather true of all invention, of all fresh readings of nature, that God is taking man up into the mountain of vision and showing him the things which have been, and are, and shall be, bidding him write them in a book for the generations to come? During those wondrous hours God unveiled secrets which had been kept in silence through times eternal, but were manifested to him according to the commandment of the eternal God, that he might make them known unto all nations, unto obedience of faith.

From this moment mysteries which prophets and kings and princes of this world had sought after, but never known, were open secrets to the pupil of Gamaliel. God made known unto him the mystery of his will. By revelation was made known to him the mystery which in other ages was not made known unto the sons of men. The mystery of the Gospel, the mystery of God which is Christ, the mystery of God's manifestation in the flesh, the mystery of the hidden wisdom, the mystery of the heavenly Bridegroom's love to his Church, the mystery of the indwelling of Christ in his Church by the Spirit, the mystery of the resurrection of the saints, who may not all sleep, but shall all be changed—such were the mysteries which it pleased God to reveal to this favoured soul, who was a chosen vessel to bear his name before the Gentiles, and kings, and the children of Israel.

But the crowning revelation of all is that on which he lays especial stress. It was much to learn that Jesus of Nazareth was in very deed the Son of the Highest, and that the Christ must suffer and be the first by his resurrection from the dead to proclaim light unto the people and the Gentiles; much to be taught that remission of sins and the heritage of a holy life were the gift of God to the open hand of faith; much to discover that there was no distinction between Jew and Greek, but that the same God was Lord of all, and rich to all; but more than all was the unveiling of the indwelling Christ, living literally within him by his Spirit, so that whilst he was in Christ, Christ was also in him, as the branch has its place in the vine, and the vine lives through the branch.

O soul of man, has this revelation ever been thy experience? Dost thou know that Christ is in thee? If thou truly believest in Him, there is no doubt of it. "Know ye not as to your own selves that Jesus Christ is in you? Unless, indeed, ye be reprobate." And yet thou mayest be in ignorance of this transcendent possession. Ask God to reveal his Son in thee, to make thee know experimentally the riches of the glory of this mystery. He will rend the veil of the inner life in twain from the top to the bottom, and disclose the Shekinah between the cherubim in the Most Holy Place of thy spirit. If thou art prepared for the crucifixion of thy self-life, this rending and revelation are assured. "O Thou that dwellest between the cherubim, shine forth!"

God was pleased to make this revelation to this sincere seeker for goodly pearls, and to show that the pearl of pearls was hidden in the holy depths of the nature of Jesus of Nazareth. God would be equally pleased to make the same revelation to thee, more especially if thou art

PREPARED TO PREACH HIM.

O preacher of Christ's Gospel, see to it that thou dost receive a revelation of Christ before thou dost attempt to preach Him.

From that moment Saul was bound as a slave behind the conquering chariot of Jesus Christ, content to wave the sweet incense of his worth, and to make all men see the stewardship of the mystery. He was constrained by the love which had been shown him, no longer to live to himself, but to Him who for his sake had died and risen again. He was from that moment crucified with Christ, and became a new creation; old things had passed away, behold all things had become new. He lived no longer, but Christ in him, and the life which he henceforth lived in the flesh was a life of faith in the Son of God, who had loved him, and given Himself for him.

Christ! I am Christ's! and let the name suffice you;
Ay, and for me He greatly hath sufficed;
Lo, with no winning words I would entice you:
Paul has no honour and no friend but Christ.

Yes, without cheer of sister or of daughter;
Yes, without stay of father or of son;
Lone on the land, and hŏmeless on the water,
Pass I in patience till the work be done.

His life lay mapped out before him unto the western sea. He was to be a minister and witness of those things which he had seen, and of those in which the Lord would still further appear unto him. His highest designation, Paul a bond-servant of Jesus Christ. His function, that of a steward. Let a man so account of us as of ministers of Christ, and stewards of the mysteries of God. "I have a stewardship entrusted to me" (1 Cor. iv. 1, ix. 17).

Blackdown Hills Mission.

WRITING from Clayhidon, Wellington, Somerset, Mr. W. H. Brealey says:—

During the past winter we have had the privilege of much happy work for the Lord in these districts and elsewhere, and have seen precious fruit from the seed sown, both in visiting the homes of the people and in the preaching of the Word. The Gospel and other meetings in our six mission rooms are exceedingly well attended, and no diminution either in numbers or interest is anywhere apparent. The two day schools and four Sunday schools are still continued with much to encourage the workers.

We are about to commence Gospel Tent Work in a very needy district, and hope during the summer months to reach many dark villages with the Gospel. I have put the tent under the care of an earnest worker, Mr. F. Glover, of Weston-super-mare, who will take the entire responsibility of that work. He will be glad of the co-operation of any godly brethren who would be free for a few days at a time during the summer. I shall be very happy to receive and forward to Mr. Glover any help toward the needs of the tent-work.

At Bishopswood for over twenty years we have had, in addition to the usual Gospel and mission services, a flourishing day school and Sunday school. Since January, 1883, Mr. and Mrs. Radcliffe have been labouring for the Lord there with great blessing, taking the oversight of the meetings, Sunday school, visiting the homes of the villagers, and in all particulars living for the Lord's work and the blessing of the people. The house in which they have lived for fourteen years has been sold, and no other is available. Without one they could not continue the work. It has been suggested that a house be built for them, and it seems to us the only solution of the difficulty. About £250 would be needed.

With the "Midnight Sun."

SUPPLEMENTARY LETTER.

OWING to our loss of time at Jaffa, I spent the three days at Alexandria, while most of the party went to Cairo. After finding Mr. Summers and Mr. and Mrs. Dickins, of the North Africa Mission, I called on Rev. W. Cowan, the active and genial Presbyterian minister, who invited me to the Bethel ship, where on Sunday evening I had the opportunity of speaking to a room full of sailors. I also called on Rev. T. R. and Mrs. Lawrence at the Soldiers' Home, but was unable to attend a gathering of Christian workers and others on Monday, at which Miss Nicholson, of Liverpool, gave a very pungent Gospel address. In fact, the heat during a rather hard-worked day on Sunday upset me. I was ill on Monday, and have not been quite right since.

One of the features of philanthropic and Christian interest at Alexandria is the Asilo of Mr. Rudolf, who spends his life on behalf not only of his Jewish compatriots, but of any others who are in need. Three hundred Armenians and others had been fed there on the Saturday when I called. Marie Kirieakopolo, a Greek lady, is collecting money for a building. A lady in Ireland supplies Mr. Rudolf with Scriptures. He is very anxious for night schools to be established. Everything depends on the people being taught, especially the children.

PALERMO AND NAPLES.

Before I joined the Midnight Sun, I called on Mr. and Mrs. Moses Neilson, who have charge of the Church of England and Sailors' Rest at Palermo. Mr. Neilson had a revival sort of conversion, and was trained in the Church Army. He is doing good work at Palermo, in this branch of the Gibraltar Mission to Seamen. The Bethel at Naples is conducted by the Presbyterians, under the superintendence of Rev. J. Irving, the resident minister, upon whom I called on my outward journey. He courteously offered me his pulpit, and gave me the pleasure of meeting some Christian friends at luncheon afterwards. The Bethel is afloat just off the pier. Mr. Bell, the missioner, is a capable and gracious man, doing good and unostentatious work in visiting ships, holding services, etc. With the Sailors' Rest, carried on by Mr. Stephen Burrows and his helpers, superintended by a committee, our readers are pretty well acquainted. After visiting the Bethel on Sunday evening we turned into the Rest, and found that Mr. Burrows was out warning sailors against the syrens and harpies who seek for them with an evil diligence.

The Wesleyan minister, Rev. T. W. S. Jones, appears to have charge of all the mission work connected with that body in Southern Italy. He gave us much interesting information of divers kinds, gathered in his long residence in Naples. His family are his devoted fellow-labourers in evangelical, educational, and philanthropic work of many and various kinds. I can only mention these, and thank our friends for their repeated kindnesses. The Lord's Supper (when he gave me the opportunity of speaking before him to his people) was a very cheering time.

ROME.

From Naples to Rome. Here we called on Rev. H. J. Piggott, Wesleyan minister, where we met Rev. Mr. Potts, from Western Australia. He said that the Roman Catholic priests were so pleasant and neighbourly and kind that he had not been disposed to enter into the lists, as we were doing in England, against Popery. But when he saw what Romanism was at Rome, he thought very differently of the system.

In the same building is Cav. Luigi Capellini's chapel, where we had the gratification of sitting down at the Lord's table on April 14, the twenty-fourth anniversary of the formation of the Military Church, when several new communicants were received. Several other visitors besides ourselves were present, including Mr. George Williams, the leader in open-air preaching, to whom is due the liberty to preach the Gospel in the streets of Galway, Cork, and other towns and cities in Ireland. It was a great enjoyment to sit down with those seventy or eighty Italian soldiers and their British friends. Mr. Piggott presided, a brief Italian address was given by Canon Bell, who happened to be in Rome, and Signor Capellini spoke to the soldiers.

Dr. Gordon Gray, at the Presbyterian Church, gave the last of a series of lectures on the Apostle Paul. These had been preceded by a course on Peter, in which the possibility was admitted of that Apostle having been in Rome, but though this were so, it was shown that the validity of the Popish claims on the Apostle would not be advanced a step.

The Coliseum reminded me of the poem "The Martyrdom of Marius," by the late Mrs. Crewdson, which was the most interesting recitation of our musical evenings on board. It was given by Mr. Samuel Thomas, a relative of the esteemed and accomplished author (see p. 18).

Mrs. Burtchaell continues her work among poor Jews in Rome, to their great comfort and relief. The Ghetto has been cleared away, and many old Roman remains are laid bare.

A Y.M.C.A. has been begun at Rome, and Mr. Stokes, an American gentleman, has promised to supply it with a local habitation, having conferred a similar benediction on Paris.

My old friends Rev. J. and Mrs. Wall were among the first we visited. A large number of the common people, like those who heard Jesus gladly, are reached constantly with the Gospel at the various halls in different parts of Rome, the principal of which is at 35, Piazza in Lucina. Here we found about 120 people, chiefly men, listening eagerly to an Italian evangelist. In Trastevere we looked in upon Mrs. Wall's meeting of poor men, by whom Mr. Wall, who was with us, was loudly cheered.

We stayed through Holy Week, so-called. I never wish to spend it again in Rome. Amongst other idolatrous functions was the preparation of the water for use in baptism. In the Baptistery of St. John Lateran was a vessel like an ordinary bath, full of water. After a quantity of Latin had been read, the officiating Cardinal made the sign of the cross upon the water; he breathed upon it, presumably to communicate the Holy Spirit; a great lighted candle was put to stand in the water; lastly, two phials of oil were emptied into it, and the Cardinal mingled the two elements as far as he could, and then the mixture was ready for use.

FLORENCE.

At Florence we heard Professor Lindsay on Easter Sunday preach at the Presbyterian Church, an excellent evangelistic and missionary sermon from John x. 20. I regretted not having had a further opportunity of conversation with Dr. Macdougall, whom I had heard spoken of at Naples as one of the best men in Italy.

Of course I called on my old and valued friend, Dr. Comandi, of whose beneficent work among the boys of Florence we have often spoken, and to which we hope soon to make further reference. In looking at the Cathedral, with its elaborately sculptured front, the Doctor emphasised what most of us are familiar with, that in former centuries of our era, on canvas and in stone, Christ was everything, and the Virgin a secondary figure; but in later times, cherubim and angels, patriarchs and apostles, art and history, poetry and music—everything in heaven and earth—is made to do homage to the Virgin with or without the Child. In those lands, where we are continually seeing the Babe in Mary's lap or the dead Saviour on the cross, we need to feed daily on the Gospel of John, with its eight recorded signs, written that we "might believe that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God, and that believing we might have life through his name."

The Medical Mission carried on by Miss Roberts is a very desirable institution. A hundred children in the Sunday School have been obtained through the Mission. There are three dispensaries in Florence, carried on by Dr. Comandi, Miss Roberts, and the Waldensian Pastor Luzzi—all excellent.

In these letters we have necessarily only referred to those churches and missions which we were able, in the brief time at our disposal to visit. Much more Christian effort is put forth, on which the blessing of God rests, and of which what we have mentioned are but a sample.

If what has been written should lead Christian travellers and tourists to visit the Christian workers on their route, and thus confer and receive good, we shall be thankful that we travelled, and that these letters have been penned.

Mr. Aitken at Lurgan.

[FROM A CORRESPONDENT.]

A SEVENTEEN days' mission, conducted by Rev. W. Hay Aitken, assisted by Rev. Norman Bennett and Mrs. Crouch, has been held in Lurgan, Ireland. In many ways the work may be described as wonderful. It goes without question that the name of the missioner would attract crowds to the services, and crowds that increased night after night till the church (the largest parish church in Ireland) was packed to its utmost capacity. Those who came to one service seemed compelled to come to the remainder, and a spirit of earnestness unparalleled in the experience of any here has taken hold of the community. Deep devotion, earnest inquiry, decided profession, have been the order of the day. Conversions have taken place by the pew-full, yet no excitement, but a deep spirit of expectancy, or of realised peace and joy. Many of the workers at the after-meeting were '59 men; but they say that the revival of '59 did not seem nearly so thorough as this revival of '97.

Some may attempt to account for the phenomena by the oratory of the preacher, or the wonderful power he seems to wield over the immense congregations he addresses, and his clear, logical statement and exposition of Divine truth. But even these great gifts will not account for the results in Lurgan. Nothing short of the "Finger of God" will satisfy the conditions. God has been working marvellously. Towards the close of the Mission large numbers were waiting after every service to have a word with the missioner, most of them professing conversion, and the remainder receiving a refreshing and renewal of their spiritual life.

Each morning Mr. Aitken has given an address on some matter dealing with the spiritual life, its conditions, dangers, and possibilities. These addresses were primarily intended for those who had already decided for Christ; and though the hour of service was inconvenient for many, they were attended by large numbers, some of the business men of the town being the most regular attendants. Those who had the privilege of hearing these most helpful addresses found their experiences examined in a way that astonished, assisted, encouraged, and edified, revealing to themselves their strength and weakness. The message seemed inspired, and the hearts of the hearers, like the disciples of old, burned whilst the preacher spoke. Amongst the women Mrs. Crouch has done a fine work, and Mr. Bennett's labours amongst the young were wonderfully blessed.

"The Gospel Cyclists," supported by local Christians, held a well-attended open-air meeting in the Market-place, Romford, on Saturday. These meetings are held every Saturday in the various villages and towns in Essex. Particulars of membership may be had of the hon. secretary, Mr. A. F. Borton, Hermon Hill, Wanstead.

Lord's Day Observance.—Lord Hobhouse has again introduced into the House of Lords his Bill for setting aside the Lord's Day Act, in favour of Sunday Societies and similar organisations. The committee of the Lord's Day Observance Society (20, Bedford Street, Strand) are taking steps to oppose this measure, and will supply forms of petition to those prepared to obtain signatures.

Major Cole in Nebraska.

A ROUSING CAMPAIGN.

SINCE November last this evangelist has been labouring in the Gospel in some parts of the State of Nebraska, U.S., with results that may truly be described as remarkable. We cull the following particulars from some newspaper reports that have reached us:—

"During the nine weeks and three days of the work at Hastings much prayerful consideration was given to the very needy condition of the churches and towns of central and western Nebraska. The spiritual destitution among the many vacant churches, and the struggling, needy condition of other churches and communities made the field a most needy one. At the close of the work in Hastings, notwithstanding urgent calls from the united churches of Omaha, and other large cities, Major Cole started westward to the smaller and more needy towns of Nebraska. The first town reached was Holdrege, where there was a much larger work than at Hastings in much less time. McCook was chosen as the next centre of operations. It was not long until the more marked instances of unusual manifestations of spiritual interest were witnessed. Three men were found to have prayed all night in the battery room of the telegraph-office, in the great struggle in making their surrender. The first Friday night of the meetings one young man who was converted was found to have driven, with a party, thirty miles to attend that service, and the party was going to drive home after the close of the service at 10.30 p.m. Others were found to be driving great distances to attend the meetings.

"Conviction of sin brought thirty-eight to the altar one evening, thirty-four of whom were men. There has been hardly any hour of the day or night which has not witnessed of sin surrender and accept Christ as a personal Saviour. The interest has not been confined to times or places. Judges, Government officers, merchants, professional men, travelling men, and all classes have been reached. Meetings have been held in all churches, stores of all kinds, barber shops, business offices, street corners, and all places.

"One spirit has pervaded the community, until McCook has been so changed that a man who had been absent from the city for a while said he could hardly recognise the place, it had been so changed, and they were talking religion everywhere. Leaders in fashionable circles and social amusements openly declare their abandonment of harmful amusements. Hundreds of young people are enthusiastic in the new service. The railroad people have been largely reached by the meetings. One saloon will close with the fiscal year, and the business most affected by the revival has been the saloon and billiard-room business."

Another report says:—

"Perhaps no town in Nebraska was ever so greatly changed in a short time as Culbertson has been in the past few weeks. After conducting the campaign in Hastings with its 10,000 or 12,000 population, in Holdrege and McCook with 2,500 each, it seemed strange for Major Cole to take three weeks for the much smaller place of Culbertson with its 300 population. But small as Culbertson was, its need was great, perhaps greater than any other town of similar size in the state. The numerous murders, the number sent to the State penitentiary, the sad history of the past—too sad to touch upon in this connection, had brought the place to be notorious in this western country. The churches were sustained almost entirely by a few faithful women. The active Christian men in the churches could have been counted on the fingers of one hand, and not all of that one hand would have been needed; but so great has been the change that almost as small a number now remain who are not Christian men as there were Christian men at the beginning of the great work.

"Since the meetings began other points have been reached. Imperial, fifty miles distant, was visited, the train being held one hour for a long-mid-day service. At that service there were eight decisions, two of men having driven eighteen miles to attend that service and one twelve miles. Wauneta, thirty-three miles distant, was visited and a special service held. One of the converts here at Culbertson was found to have DRIVEN FORTY MILES TO THE SERVICE.

One prominent feature of the meeting has been the deep interest in the work taken by the young converts at McCook. One evening, a company of thirty-five, nearly all of them young converts, drove fourteen miles from McCook. Many companies came at different times on wheels, in buggies, or by hand-car, to have the luxury of helping in the harvest at Culbertson.

"One interesting feature of the meetings was the activity of the children. Their simple faith and earnest spirit did much in leading many to a decision and in causing older ones to start out in personal work. Persons were found under conviction and led to make their surrender in stores, the hotel and dining-room, the barber-shop, the post-office, the lodge-rooms, anywhere, everywhere, at any time when the personal call was made. Many wakeful, watchful hours of the night were spent in seasons of prayer for loved ones or in earnest appeal to make the start in the Christian life. The work is no longer confined to one community, but the effects of the work elsewhere are extending in various directions."

The "International Mission."

By COUNTESS A. SCHIMMELMANN.

(Concluded.)

THANKS to my English friends, I was able to re-erect the destroyed Fishermen's Home (Seemannsheim) at Rügen. Before it was re-opened, my weather-beaten sons, with whom I had previously spent several years of my life, gathered round me. I found them grown in grace, though many of them during the four years I had been away had never been near any Christian meeting, their church being far away and their clergyman spiritually dead. They had never seen in all that time either a tract or a magazine, or a Christian book, nor come across anyone to speak of Jesus. They are very hungry for spiritual food, and any reading, and I am unable to provide enough for them, although I distributed a good many tracts. Coffee is distributed free, and in the first week the Home was opened, 2000 mugs were served out. Two windows that were placed in the hall "to give light" were presents from the English gas-work men to the Pomeranian fishermen, given in the love of Christ; and this stands inscribed above them on the wall to preach for itself in Germany.

We greatly need more such homes for fishermen, as well as mission halls in the villages, the latter being wholly unknown in Germany. We also need permanent workers to take charge of such work. Yet we lack funds for these things. The only thing we can as yet see our way to starting is a small mission cutter, the German Duen, Die Taube.

In the public meetings I have frequently been allowed to speak to thousands of people. It is impossible to give the number of hearers correctly for the whole year, yet those I can give will be enough to give an idea of the work. In the course of one fortnight I spoke to about 15,000 people. I held 358 public meetings in the course of fifteen months, and the last ones were daily attended by 1000 to 3000 people. The words that have stirred my soul for the last month are also appropriate to these meetings, "Not by might, nor by power, but by my Spirit, saith the Lord of Hosts." Weak in body, and often tired to death, with a naturally weak voice, I have many and many a time stood before thronging crowds composed of all sorts of people. My audience often contained all classes, from the municipal authorities to anarchists, from ladies of title to coalheavers, and from the police to burglars.

The largest halls had to be filled, and yet they were so overfilled that hundreds stood outside in the street unable to gain admittance. Yet God has given me on such occasions such a strong voice that it has not only filled the hall but several times was even heard distinctly outside. The noisy crowds became motionless, and every one of us felt and knew that it was not a weak woman doing her work here, but God Himself. An atheist of influence in Jutland said, "If anything could convince that there is a God it would be these meetings, because it is clear that supernatural powers are at work. She could not keep them spell-bound like this."

The meetings were held principally in Germany and Denmark; also some in England. I feel that it is specially in Germany that the Gospel is needed, because, in fact, it is little known. Of eligious people there are plenty; of converted people, few. Yet truly the souls are very hungry for the saving truth of the Gospel, and again and again have I seen those who were believed to be incurable enemies of Christianity melt in tears when they were shown Christ Himself.

An anarchist speaker in Hamburg, who last year rushed up to me waving his heavy stick close to my face, crying out, backed up by his comrades, "We are Anarchists, and won't hear God spoken of," is now to be found with a beaming face at the Christian meetings. The police have told me that he has become "as meek as a lamb." An atheist in Hamburg told me, "I felt from the first word you spoke that it was true what you said, but I would not believe it, yet when you prayed, 'Christ, let the Holy Spirit now at this moment touch every soul in the hall,' I was shaken to the bottom of my soul. It was impossible to resist this power of the Spirit; now I love Jesus with all my heart. Here is my wife, she came next; then five or six friends. Now we are twenty gathering in my house to pray and read."

At Lübeck the gentleman who let the halls laughed at me when I wanted to have the largest hall possible. "I know this town," he said, "and

YOU WILL NOT GET TEN PEOPLE TO COME."

Knowing that I had not come by my will, and being sent with a full expectation of great blessing, I answered, "Let me have the hall, and as sure as God sent me to this town He will send the people of the town to the hall, and before a fortnight is gone you will find the mayor there side by side with the striking labourer." After a week I spoke to that gentleman again. That hall had been so crowded that the mayor, coming late, could only enter with difficulty, and stood amongst a group of the striking workmen. I cannot tell of all the blessing that has followed the work.

In Denmark there is much spiritual life in the lower classes, but very little in the higher. Yet though I love and am loved in my own country, I feel that the greatest part of my work has to be done where it is needed most, and that is in Germany. The work in both countries is not so easy as here in England, and meets with much opposition. For example, you would smile here in England at the accusations raised against me in Germany. They are specially raised by the Christians, and are these: "That I am a woman, and as such I must not speak of the Gospel in meetings, especially not to men." The other is, "That when speaking of conversion I do not show this to be penitence, but call it the act of turning away from the world towards God." In the higher classes in Denmark things are not much better.

How little known, in some classes, a call to Mission work seems to be, is well illustrated by a pamphlet written by the doctor who entrapped me. The last words I spoke to that man three years since whilst an imprisoned, helpless victim in his hands were, "I call this day on God Almighty to be judge between you and me, and be sure of it, that whatever you do the victory is mine." I instituted no legal proceedings against him, nor did I think much more about the man, until now he himself writes in a pamphlet:—"There is a point when one has nothing more to lose...It cannot be worse with me than it is...I am a beaten man, I am the most unpopular figure in Copenhagen. I am an outcast...Parliament took from me the grant as a State doctor, and I was told from a very competent quarter that I had to look upon this as a token of the public being indignant with me." After openly revealing that six years previous to my imprisonment a plot had been going on between my relations and himself to carry out this scheme, he says:—"And after all was she not mad? Did she not believe herself to be graced by heaven with a special call for Mission work, and that, therefore, the powers of darkness were opposed to her?"

I acknowledge myself to be possessed of such madness still, and God grant that this "special grace in the call to Mission work may not be withdrawn from his servant."

WORK IN THE MINE COMPOUNDS.

THIS work increases in interest daily. Many of the formerly closed doors are now open, and our evangelists take full advantage of them. We now visit and preach in twenty-eight mines with much encouragement. Several of the compound managers are very kind, friendly, and helpful. Our audiences, mostly in the open air, are fluctuating, varying from twenty up to four hundred. In almost every compound there are converts, with some of whom the Lord is dealing in a very wonderful way. Many interesting episodes occur, many interesting questions are asked, and many simple, pathetic prayers are offered. Wherever we can get permission, we supplement the preaching with teaching in school. One of these schools is in a "lock-up," where refractory, skulking, and drunken natives are incarcerated, handcuffed to a chain in the wall. It is somewhat embarrassing to have prayer, singing, and teaching interpolated with shouts and howls and curses.

In The Christian of October 22, we mentioned a colloquy with the manager of a mine who refused to allow us to preach to the natives in his company's compound, and expressed our belief that the Lord would remove him. He has just been compelled to tender his resignation, and we have hopes of favourable treatment from his successor. The prohibition of the sale of liquor to natives has been an immense boon to the natives as well as to the companies. Thirty managers of companies have testified unanimously to the great benefits derived, notwithstanding the indifference and even connivance of the authorities in some districts in the illicit sale. At the Nigel we have an East Coast boy of eighteen years of age who lost the sight of both eyes and had three hundred wounds as the result of a dynamite accident. He fell asleep and was not noticed when the charges were exploded in the drive. We are now caring for him and nursing him, and at the same time praying for and with him. His relatives evince little concern or interest, and are not in anywise grateful for what is being done for him. The hospitals for sick natives on the mines are insufficiently managed, and very many lives are sacrificed. We have now a splendid opening for a consecrated man and wife who have had hospital training, and who would be willing, in the Master's name and for his sake, and without remuneration, to take charge of a hospital for white and coloured men on one of these mines, and believe the Lord will send us them. A doctor would be in daily attendance, and there would be a fine opening for ministering to the souls as well as bodies of the patients.

April 11.—Our hopes of more favourable treatment from the new manager of the Meyer and Charlton Mine were well founded. Yesterday we obtained permission to recommence work in this compound, so to-day at 2.30 we had an open-air meeting, which was attended (notwithstanding the counter-attraction of a big dance) by an audience of one hundred and fifty East Coast natives, who paid the greatest attention and joined heartily in the choruses.

At 7 this evening we held another service in a room kindly placed at our disposal by the compound manager, and were crowded out, many going away unable to get in. A hundred and fifty odd squatted on the floor and listened to our message from God.

One native to-day, at the Village Main Reef Mine, took off his anklets, finger and ear-rings, and renounced them on his knees before the onlookers, and with tears in his eyes prayed for pardon and life. He is a Zulu, from near the Umzimkulu in Natal. A young, dressed, and educated native entered into an argument with our evangelist, Charlie Bhengu, whilst we were dealing with this soul. He had begun by denying our right to require men to give up ornaments, alleging that we had no Scriptural authority, and then proceeded to allege that the Bible nowhere taught deliverance from sin in this life. We followed him up into his room, and in presence of a small circle of onlookers referred him to 1 John i. 9, Ephes. ii., Phil. ii. 15, and on the first question to Isaiah iii. We then went through Romans vii. into viii. Before we were finished he had subsided. The discussion was conducted gently, and in the spirit of the Master, and concluded with prayer, and we were glad that he himself had opened the way for the letting in of light into his own soul.

Last evening we gave a magic-lantern display at the Primrose Mine to a large crowd of natives, exhibiting the Nativity, Miracles, Passion, Death, and Resurrection of our glorious Saviour and King. At the close one Shangaan brought sixpence and presented it, saying, "I give this as an offering, for I want to worship Jesus." To-day a lad called "Jamloot" brought a shilling, saying he owed it for school fees, long ago in arrears and forgotten. Our new hall at Germiston was opened this evening for the first time. In the City and Suburban Mine our teacher, Rev. H. E. Mabille, has a Sunday morning class for those desiring baptism, and has over thirty in attendance at 7 a.m.

In the midst of the thick darkness, the superstition, the drink, the corruption of officials, and the indifference and opposition of the natural heart, there is cause for much thanksgiving and encouragement, the true light is shining, souls are being saved, Christ is lifted up and God is being glorified. There is a great field of labour for devoted evangelists to the white employés on the mines, hundreds of whom never darken a church door. Cricket, tennis, football, the bar-parlour, or lolling idly about their rooms, is the ordinary way of getting through the Lord's Day when not at work. It is a grand field for the tract-distributor. We are doing what little we can in this direction, but our call is specially to the natives, and our staff is far too small to meet their needs. A packet of well-assorted tracts and booklets will, however, be gladly received and distributed by us if any reader of these lines should be prompted to send one. Our address can always be obtained from Mr. R. C. Morgan.

Some people question the expediency of requiring renunciation of tobacco, snuff, liquor, ornaments, etc., but we find that these are the very things that are robbing the native Christians of all their power, deadening their souls, destroying their influence, and making them stumbling-blocks to the unconverted. Without any solicitation on our part, our evangelist, Charlie Bhengu, volunteered the following confession as we were returning from our service this evening: "I was very fond of snuff. After I joined you in evangelising in the compounds and heard you preaching against the use of tobacco, snuff, etc., I still held on to my snuff-box. My conscience began to accuse me, but I did not want to admit it to be wrong. By-and-by the snuff made my head ache, so I laid it aside for some weeks. As soon as I was quite well again, I took to the snuff again. Again, as I went with you in the compounds and the heathen were renouncing their idols, my conscience reminded me of mine, and I resolved to lay it aside. I did so, and for three days fought against the craving for that snuff. On the fourth day the craving was so strong that I got down and prayed to God to deliver me, and He took the desire right away, and has given me such a blessed filling of his Spirit as I never realised before. I thank God that He brought me into contact with you to learn this lesson of the way I was enslaved and yet knew it not."

Is it not strange. There are preachers, missionaries, and teachers, who denounce gambling in unmeasured terms, and yet promote bazaars and raffles and dips for church purposes; who denounce the smoking of bhang and hemp, while they themselves smoke pipes, cigars, and cigarettes; who have the bottle and the wineglass on their tables, and yet are greatly surprised at the insobriety of their congregations. Oh, the terrible muster-roll of those who are being shipwrecked by the self-gratification of those who should be beacon-lights and examples of everything Christ-like to their flocks! It is bad enough for the convert from heathenism to have the world, the flesh, and the devil to combat, without adding the stumbling-block of his missionary's fleshly indulgences.

Lord, open the eyes of the ministry, and teach me also the full meaning of the words "temples of the Holy Ghost!" A. W. B.

South American Missionary Society.

EVANGELISTIC FORWARD MOVEMENT.

DURING three hundred and fifty years the despotism of the Papal system has oppressed and cruelly deceived the civilised and semi-civilised peoples of South America, and has left the aboriginal Indian tribes to languish in their native paganism. Rapid and very important changes have taken place within the last ten years. The old religious system has fast lost its hold on the people; thousands are revolting from Romanism; the absolutism of the Jesuits is broken. Ecuador, the stronghold of South American popery, is now open to the Gospel; the work of evangelisation may be carried on in every part of the continent, and thousands will welcome the colporteur and the missionary.

In many parts an earnest spirit of inquiry is abroad, and probably no part of the foreign mission field is whiter unto the harvest than are these almost unknown, forgotten South American lands. Recognising in the voice of opportunity the call of God, the committee of the South American Missionary Society have decided on making a vigorous, prompt, and systematic advance into the field. It is proposed to greatly extend the missions already established among the Fuegians, Patagonians, Araucanians, Gran Chaco, and other Indian tribes; also to strengthen and render more effective the work among the English-speaking settlers, and the missions to sailors in the seaport towns; but special attention will now be given to a great forward evangelistic movement among the thirty-two millions of Spanish and Portuguese speaking people (these represent four-fifths of the population of the entire continent).

New centres will be opened at once in some of the leading cities and towns of the Argentine Republic, extending later to other countries. The new plan includes the renting of suitable buildings to be used as mission halls for services and Sunday-schools in Spanish, opening of mission day-schools, colportage work, house-to-house visitation, the widespread distribution of suitable tract literature, the advocacy of the Gospel in the native Press, and the organising of a missionary training school in which native converts may be prepared for missionary work, for without doubt the greater part of the evangelisation of these lands must be done by native workers. The writer has been appointed by the committee to undertake this work in Spanish, and hopes to proceed shortly to the field.

To strengthen and greatly extend the work among the Indians, but especially to open these new centres of evangelistic work, the committee earnestly appeal for £5000, and also for increased annual contributions. Many of these new stations will in all probability quickly come to be self and locally supported. The writer will be glad to give information on behalf of this work at drawing-rooms, public meetings, etc. All communications should be addressed to The Secretaries, South American Missionary Society, 1, Clifford's-inn, Fleet-street, London, E.C.

In South America the need is of a specially urgent character; these people are passing through an important period of transition; the present is a unique, a God prepared opportunity; if it be allowed to pass unused, spiritualism, materialism, atheism, and many gross forms of iniquity, will assert their reign; indications are not wanting that such would be the case. Will not your readers do all that is possible by love and prayer and gifts to hasten forward the evangelisation of these South American peoples, from whom for centuries the Bible and the Christ have been hidden? With the prompt obedience and generous enthusiasm of holy love let us seek to make known to them the Gospel of the grace of God.

Young Women in Liverpool.—The "Bethesda" Training Institution, Netherfield Road South, fills a necessary place in Liverpool life. It has performed an incalculable amount of good in promoting the spiritual and temporal welfare of friendless young women. No fewer than 600 young women have been saved from dropping into the pitfalls of city life, and trained for domestic, laundry, and other services. Many have to be turned away for want of funds. A debt of £170 is now burdening the work. Mr. Arthur Price is hon. treasurer.

OUR DAILY HOMILY.

SUNDAY, May 23.

"The Preacher sought to find out acceptable words."—Eccles xii. 10.

THE wise Preacher or Teacher is not content with merely teaching the people knowledge, he will ponder and seek out and set in order the lessons of Divine wisdom, and when these are settled he will go on to find out acceptable words. We must be careful to have the "apples of gold," and no less careful to have the "pictures of silver." Not that we are to make beauty of language an object in itself; but having conceived high and holy thoughts we should give them a worthy expression, so that the Royal word may ride forth in a fitting equipage. It is unfit that the vessels of the sanctuary should be carried only in badger-skins; their first covering at least must be "all of blue." Be careful to commend the word of Christ with everything that will appeal to the attention of your hearers, that they may not turn from it with disgust.

Remember, however, that the words of the wise are as goads and nails. They must have points, sometimes to prick to duty, at other times to stick fast in the memory. In every sermon or lesson there should be points. To arrest and compel attention is more important than to please the ear.

Words that best befit the enunciation of God's ruth are given from the One Shepherd. We are enriched by Him, not only in all knowledge but in all utterance. He who made the mouth can put his words into the mouth. Ask Him to speak to thee that thou mayest speak in accents borrowed from his tone. It is not ye that speak, but Jesus who speaks in you.

MONDAY, May 24.

"The King hath brought me into his chambers."—Song of Sol. i. 4.

We cannot force an entrance into the inner chambers of the love of God. They remind one of the apartments which are reserved for the personal use of the sovereign, and are private from the foot of strangers. All the world is welcome to the State apartments, but only the favoured few to the inner sanctuary. So it is with the love of God. It is open to all the world, but its heart is hidden from the wise and prudent, and revealed to babes. You must wait for the King to take you into his chambers, and to show you the secrets of his heart.

It is pleasant to think of the chambers of the King opening one from the other in a long and glorious succession, and to imagine each inscribed with its text and adorned with characteristic emblems. The Chamber of Regeneration leading to Assurance; and this to Consecration; and this to the Enduement of the Holy Spirit; and this to the Quiet Heart; and this to a Life of Victory; and this to Abiding Fellowship. Each is a distinct phase of the Christian life, and from one to another the King leads the obedient and loving heart. At each advance the chambers become more magnificent and delightful, until the last one opens out upon a terrace which looks across the brief space to the City of God.

Will you let the King do this? Then you must begin by enthroning Him in your heart and obeying Him in your life. You must keep his words, and the Father will manifest Himself in Jesus as He does not unto the world. Draw us, and we will run after Thee, O King of Love.

TUESDAY, May 25.

"The voice of my Beloved."—Song of Sol. ii. 8.

There are times when winter rules within, and the atmosphere is full of rain, and the birds are mute. It does not necessarily argue that we have backslidden, only that the rich emotional life has for a little died down, as the sap sinks to the earth during the winter's pause.

The first symptom of returning joy is the voice of the Beloved Master. We do not seek Him, but He us. We do not call, but He calls. The voice of spring is heard sounding through our soul. The sweet, clear, tender notes of the Saviour ring melodiously around us, and as we hear them we know that our winter is past, the rain is over and gone, and the flowers and birds are at hand.

Rise up, my love! Rise up from lethargy and sloth, from the low levels on which you have lived, from the earth with its attractions, and the grave with its fetters. And as the command issues from his lips, He gives rising grace. Come away, He cries. There is richer life and wider upon the mountains. Let us climb the heights that beckon us. The voice of Christ is constantly summoning us to fuller experiences, to know Him and the power of his resurrection.

How appropriate these words are as we may conceive of them being spoken to the expectant Church! After centuries of waiting she shall hear the archangel's trump, and it will be the call of her Beloved to rise up and come away. Then her winter will be past for ever, and in the Paradise of God the unwithering flowers will appear; the time of singing will have come.

"I sought Him, but I found Him not."—Song of Sol. iii. 1.

God lets us seek, hiding Himself to draw us after Him. How much our race owes to his hidings! He has hidden pearls in the ocean, jewels in the rocks, coal in the earth, fish in the deep. By all these methods He has drawn men forth from lethargy and inaction, to strenuous and vigorous lives, so that the gains of their toil have consisted not only in the treasures they have obtained, but in the developed faculties which have come to them in the course of their search.

Is it not so in the spiritual life? Our Lord withdraws Himself, not in anger or disappointment, but that we may be sensible of not having attained, nor being already perfect, and that we may follow on to know the Lord, and to apprehend something more of that for which we were apprehended. Do not be disappointed, O Christian soul, if some time you should cease to feel the familiar delight in certain hymns, services, books, or teachers. Thy Master has withdrawn Himself from these, but thou wilt find Him further on. Never rest till you have discovered Him in some deeper revelation. The watchmen that go about the city, and who are probably messengers of Divine truths, may not help you in your quest, but the Holy Spirit waits to lead you into all truth. Open your heart to Him. It is but a little time, and as you pass from all human teachers you will find Him whom you love, or perhaps be found of Him. Then hold Him, or better, be held by Him. It is a sweet motto, "Teneo et teneor," "I hold and am held."

THURSDAY, May 27.

"Come, O north wind, and come, thou south, and blow upon my garden."—Song of Sol. iv. 16.

The garden of the heart is like one of those old-fashioned gardens, surrounded by high brick walls, prepared for fruit trees. I have one in my eye as I write, on the south wall of which old apple-trees have bloomed and fruited for generations. The garden is filled with all manner of spices, "spikenard and saffron, calamus and cinnamon, and with all trees of frankincense." Sometimes, however, the spices hang heavily upon the air. They are present, but hardly discernible to the quickest sense. Then the wind is needed to blow through the garden path, that the spices may flow out and pass beyond the barriers to the passers-by.

How often it has happened in the history of the children of God, that those who have known them have never realised the intrinsic excellence and loveliness of their characters until the north wind of sorrow and pain has broken with blustering force upon them. Then suddenly spices of rarest odour have exhaled and been carried afar. How the delicate trees dread the north wind! What a tremor goes through the crowded garden walks when they hear the husbandman calling to the north wind to awake. We all choose the south wind. But remember that the Euroclydon that swept down the ravines of Crete upon the Alexandrian corn-ship brought out spices which had slumbered unknown in the heart of the great apostle. Courage! Patience! The power of inspiring hope amid despair, and breaking bread with thanksgiving! Ah, north wind, thy ministry has been of incalculable worth to all of us.

FRIDAY, May 28.

"What is thy beloved more than another beloved, that thou dost so adjure us?"—Song of Sol. v. 9.

The daughters of Jerusalem, each of whom had her beloved, could not understand the urgency of this maiden who had lost her beloved. Her anguish at her loss was so extreme, her heart sickness was so agonising, her frenzy so bewildering, that they were startled into feeling that he of whom she was bereft was no common lover. There had been times when each of them had been temporarily forlorn, but they knew that they had never suffered like this! The greatness of her pain was the mirror in which they caught a glimpse of the ineffable beauty of the Bridegroom.

Speak of Christ so that men and women around may be constrained to cry, "Your Beloved excels our beloveds. We cannot speak of them as thou dost of Him. To gain them does not fill us with the same ecstasy, or to lose them with the same woe."

What are the beloveds that men seek after? There is the beloved of worldly success, of human adulation and applause, of art, science, and war. They intoxicate their admirers, but fail to satisfy. Who can say of them that they are chief, and outshine the gold of Ophir, beryl, sapphires, ivory, and cedar, the rarest products of earth, as synonyms for priceless worth? But all these gathered together are poor and unworthy emblems of the peerless beauty of Emmanuel. White in purity, ruddy with the bloodstain, his bushy locks emblematic of immortal youth, his eyes like water-brooks reflecting the deep azure of the sky and telling of eternal love. Ransack earth for metaphors, and they fall short of the truth.

SATURDAY, May 29.

"I am my Beloved's, and my Beloved is mine."—Song of Sol. vi. 3.

To get the full significance of this precious sentence we should compare it with chap. ii. 16. Remark their parallelism, and their contrast.

My Beloved is mine, and I am his.
He feedeth his flock among the lilies.

And this

I am my Beloved's, and my Beloved is mine.
He feedeth his flock among the lilies.

In the first of these couplets the spouse lays the first emphasis on her hold of the Beloved; only secondarily does she congratulate herself that she is his. But in the second couplet her chief thought is that she belongs to Him.

In the earlier stages of Christian life, we think most of what we have in Christ; afterwards we love to dwell on the fact of his possession of us. You are Christ's, believing soul, and you ought to know the riches of the glory of his inheritance. You are his estate, for Him to cultivate and rear successive crops for his praise and glory. You are his jewel, to obtain which He renounced all, and on which He will expend infinite care, cutting your facets, and polishing you to shine brightly in his light. You are his house in which He can dwell, opening out unexpected apartments and passages. You are a member of his body, through which He will fulfil his holy purpose. You are his bride, to win whom He came from afar. You are owned, possessed, inhabited, loved, with a peculiar personal affection. As Keble says: "Thou art thy Saviour's darling; doubt no more."

The Congregational Union.

A LARGE number of delegates assembled for the May anniversaries. At the business meeting of the Union, Rev. Alfred Rowland, of Crouch End, was elected next chairman. He will enter on his duties on January 1, 1898. The election is a very popular one, though Mr. Rowland, in returning thanks for the honour done him, modestly disclaimed the possession of the gifts of his two predecessors. The report for the year of the Union's works and gifts was satisfactory.

At the meeting on Tuesday morning, an immense audience gathered in the City Temple to hear Dr. Berry's address, which was on "Congregational Churchmanship: Its Principles, its Privileges, and its Obligations." It proved to be a lucid and powerful exposition of what Dr. Berry conceives to be the New Testament idea of the Church of Christ. He quickly found himself in antagonism to the sacerdotal idea, and forcibly pointed out some of its inconsistencies.

SACERDOTALISM AND INFALLIBILITY.

The argument for the sacerdotalist claim is now based on what is called the doctrine of development, a doctrine which affirms that the Lord of the Church, in due course inspired and guided the leaders and teachers of the Church to set up this one visible and indivisible institution as the proper guardian and agent of the then familiar and well-understood Gospel. Of this theory, Dr. Berry said: "It was set up too late, and its operations were closed too early to justify its acceptance; that by robbing grace of its universalism, and exalting rites into equality with righteousness, and creating dictators over a heritage which the Master committed to brethren, it was a reversal rather than a development; that it has failed to justify itself by its fruits, in the promotion of either special piety or brotherhood." Besides, "if one visible and indivisible organisation had been according to the mind of the Master, organisations standing outside it, either in pained protest or in friendly emulation, would never have won any tokens of the Lord's favour."

Dr. Berry very cogently reminded the assembly how a leading sacerdotalist, in defending the validity of Anglican orders, contended that the "infallible" Pope must be wrong in his judgment of them, because of the Divine grace that many of his hearers had found through the ministries of the English Church. "The argument is as old as the Apostle Paul, who justified his own apostleship by an appeal to its spiritual fruits." "Therefore, he exclaimed, "the Church that fosters saints and rears prophets must be from God. The blessed facts of Christian history, the saved and gracious souls in all the churches, give happy dispatch to a narrow ecclesiasticism, and restore the only possible groundwork for Christian unity."

PRINCIPLES AND LIFE.

The address was very searching and powerful upon the necessity for spiritual life in the Church. After pointing to some painful symptoms of feebleness in the churches, he said: "That there is grievous deficiency somewhere is obvious. Where shall we look for it, and how shall we correct it? My own rooted conviction is that it lies in the absence of adequate occasion in our church life for fellowship in prayer, for quiet communion with God, for mutual converse and encouragement in spiritual things. There is too little secrecy and inwardness in our church life, too little corporate retirement into the holy place, too little contemplation of the spiritual objects of our faith, and the spiritual sources of our strength." The fact that a man such as Dr. Berry, who has taken such a prominent part in public life, should thus have refrained from saying a word on any subjects but those of supreme spiritual importance, may be taken as a sign of coming blessing, and the more so as his words were received with the heartiest sympathy.

TEMPERANCE WORK.

A temperance meeting is now a regular thing, and that held this May heard good news; eighty-three per cent. of the ministers are abstainers, and ninety-eight per cent. of the students. The chairman, Mr. George Spicer, gave an address, which was excellent both for its kind, firm tone, and for its putting of the temperance argument. He said something that will be heard again when he declared his wish that the chairman of the Congregational Union should also be the chairman of the temperance meeting. That, of course, can only be if he is a temperance man.

PUBLIC QUESTIONS.

The assembly usually gives a deliverance on public questions, and this year it was first upon Primary Education, declining to accept the recent Act of Parliament "as, in any measure, a settlement of the future position of denominational schools as a part of our national school system. It affirmed with great enthusiasm that it would insist on such further legislation as shall place within the reach of every child of school age in the kingdom an elementary school under the management of elected representatives of the people, and free from sectarian and clerical control. A deliverance was next given on International Arbitration, which was cheering for its hopefulness of a treaty being ultimately formed with the United States. On the Eastern question the mind of the assembly was expressed in regret that the European Concert had shown such excessive consideration toward "the barbarous Turkish Empire," and in an opinion that "their vacillation and dilatoriness" had chiefly been the cause of the war between Turkey and Greece. It called upon the Government to hasten the conclusion of hostilities, and to prevent the re-imposition of the Turkish authority over any territories that have escaped from it.

THE DIAMOND JUBILEE.

A crowded and enthusiastic meeting was held in the City Temple to celebrate the Queen's Diamond year, and to express thanks for the progress made during the last sixty years. The feature of the evening was undoubtedly Dr. Parker's speech, which contained some vigorous and healthy speaking. Among other things, he said: "It may be true that uneasy lies the head that wears a crown, but sevenfold uneasier would his head lie who attempted to profane that spotless throne through any, even a remote and cunningly calculated suggestion of licentiousness, or gambling, or party. The moral standard of the throne has been fixed, and woe to him, though the King's own blood, who would even in centuries to come negatively attempt to tamper with its righteousness or sully its spotless purity."

Both the Colonial Missionary Society and the Church Aid Society are rising into new power and efficiency. Signs of coming blessing are visible in many directions.

A Swiss Keswick.

A CONFERENCE for the deepening of spiritual life was held at Ried, near Bienne, Canton de Bienne, from May 4 to 7. The kind and hospitable house of Mlle. Julie Robert was once more crowded by many Swiss and other friends who have met there every May for some years. This year about 110 assembled from different parts of the world and various fields of labour. Two meetings were held each day, in the now historic studio of Monsieur Paul Robert, the Christian painter of our times, and brother to Mlle. Robert.

The meetings were presided over by Pastor Stockmayer, whose opening powerful address was on the men of God who have been trained by desert experiences. In the afternoon this view was further enlarged by Pastor Stockmayer and Pastor Morel of Môtiers.

On Wednesday morning Pastor Stockmayer spoke of judgment beginning at the house of God. He was followed in the afternoon by M. Clerc, who led up to the point of individual consecration. A sister from New York gave the key-note on "I will obey Thee," and all hearts echoed her words.

On Thursday morning Pastor Stockmayer discoursed of the preparations of the "Bride"—that we must reflect Christ in our lives so perfectly as to be one with Him. M. Teannet, of Neuchâtel, spoke suggestively in the afternoon on the analogy of the Books of Ruth and Esther, which he called the marriage books of the Bible. On Thursday evening there was an additional meeting, conducted by M. Lombard, of Geneva, on the subject of "Faith Healing." Testimonies were given by many who had received healing by faith in the Lord alone. Friday, the last day, was very interesting. Pastor Stockmayer spoke for two hours on Revelation xii. in the morning, and was exceedingly profound on the Lord's coming and the meetness of the Bride for Him. In the afternoon a profitable time was spent at the table of the Lord.

Conferences at Northfield.

THE coming Conference season at Northfield will open with the usual promise of good things in store for those who seek physical and spiritual refreshment. The season really begins with the opening of "The Northfield" on Thursday, June 10, for the accommodation of summer guests. Monday, June 14, marks the opening of "Commencement Week" at Mount Hermon School and Northfield Seminary. Graduation Day at Mount Hermon is Tuesday, June 15, and at the Seminary Wednesday, June 16. The Commencement exercises present to the visitor a rare opportunity to become acquainted with the work of the schools.

The World's Student Conference will be held, Friday, June 25, to Sunday, July 4. Among the speakers secured for this Conference are President F. L. Patton, Princeton, Rev. Henry Van Dyke, D.D., New York City; Rev. Alex. McKenzie, D.D., Cambridge; Rev. A. F. Schauffler, D.D., New York City; and Mr. D. L. Moody. The Y.M.C.A. encampment, open during the months of July and August, is another gathering for young men.

The Y.W.C.A. Conference is from Friday, July 9, to Tuesday, July 20. The group of speakers include Mr. John R. Mott, Rev. A. T. Pierson, D.D., Rev. R. A. Torrey, Mr. R. E. Lewis, Mr. Moody, and others.

The General Conference for Christian workers, continues from Thursday, July 29, to Monday, August 16. The following speakers and teachers are expected among others: Revs. George H. C. McGregor and Campbell Morgan, London; Bishop Newman, Washington; Mr. W. H. Stanes, and Mr. V. D. David, the Tamil evangelist, India; Dr. H. C. Mabie, Boston; Rev. A. C. Dixon, D.D., Brooklyn; Rev. R. A. Torrey, Mr. D. L. Moody, etc. Between the Conferences and after the Convention of Christian workers special Bible lectures will be given by prominent Bible teachers. Those who cannot be present during the regular Conferences, or prefer the more quiet sessions, will find these post-conferences particularly helpful.

A prominent feature of all these gatherings has been the services of song conducted by Messrs. Ira D. Sankey, Geo. C. Stebbins, and D. B. Towner.

"The Northfield," a large, finely-appointed hotel, offers first-class accommodation to visitors throughout the season at reasonable rates. The Seminary buildings are open during the World's Student Conference for the college delegates; during the Young Women's Conference for its delegates; but during the General Conference for any who wish to attend that gathering.

General information regarding the conferences, or about board at "The Northfield" and with private families, may be had by addressing Mr. A. G. Moody, East Northfield, Mass., U.S.A.

The McAll Mission.

THE twenty-fifth anniversary of this Mission was recently held in the Church of the Oratoire, Paris, under the presidence of Monsieur Sautter. An interesting report of the work of the past year was given by Mr. Greig. Pastor Theodore Monod gave his recollections of the beginning of the work and of the early days of the Mission, which has been so blessed during its twenty-five years' history. Pastor Jean Meyer, of the Lutheran Church, followed with a stirring appeal to all who had received blessing in the work to be up and doing, and to endeavour to bring in those around them. He gave a warm testimony to the blessing he had himself received through working with Dr. M'All and his helpers.

The welcome announcement was made that the heavy debt of three thousand pounds which had so hampered the work was now practically cleared off, thanks to generous help from friends in Great Britain, France, America, and elsewhere. All present felt greatly encouraged by the meeting, and stimulated to renew their efforts for the evangelisation of France, over which land so heavy a sorrow has fallen. Mrs. M'All was present.

A Device of the Devil.—When Satan cannot prevent our good deeds, he will sometimes effect his evil objects by inducing us to take an undue and selfish satisfaction in them. So that it is necessary, if we would not convert them into destructive poisons, to be crucified and dead even to our own virtues.

Dr. T. C. Upham.

The late Rev. H. E. Brooke.

THE subject of this sketch was born in Dublin on May 20, 1829. He was the third son of the late Right Hon. William Brooke, Master in Chancery, of Taney Hill, Dundrum, near Dublin. His father was a devout Christian, and he was brought up in the truths of the Christian religion as contained in Holy Scripture. He was educated at Redland, Bristol (Mr. Knight's), and Trinity College, Dublin, where he took a first class in Divinity and the first prize for Biblical Greek in March, 1852. It is believed that his actual conversion took place about 1848, and was in some measure due to hearing the news of his elder brother's conversion in India, and reading his letters home on the subject. He has often said that the text that brought light to his soul was: "Whosoever will, let him take the water of life freely" (Rev. xxii. 17).

From this time he seems to have set his heart on the ministry, for he refused a good post offered him by his father in the Court of Chancery, but he had difficulties with regard to entering the ministry of the Established Church. In 1853 he visited the Eastern States of America with letters of introduction to some of the American bishops and divines, in some hope of settling down in the ministry over there, if he could find a sphere more compatible with his difficulties than was the church at home. But he returned in four months without finding what he sought (Aug., 1853), and shortly afterwards he was offered a post as "moral agent," or lay spiritual worker, by the Duke of Manchester on his estate at Tanderagee, in Armagh co. He went there in October, and remained until the following April, 1854, when his difficulties with regard to the Established ministry appear to have disappeared for the time, and in response to urgent persuasion on the part of some of his friends he decided to enter the Church, and was ordained at Armagh by the Primate of Ireland on Palm Sunday, April 9, 1854.

His first curacy was under Archdeacon Alexander Irwin, of Armagh, at the district parish of Aughavilly. On the Friday succeeding his ordination the following entry appears in his diary: "First service in Aughavilly. Preached badly on 1 Cor. xv. 3."

In October, 1854, he became curate to the Rev. Joseph Callwell at Brookeborough, near Colebrooke, in co. Fermanagh, the seat of Sir Arthur Brooke, and seems to have worked chiefly in the district parishes of Tattykeeran and Littlemount. In 1856 he was offered by the Primate of Ireland the incumbency of St. Mark's, Drogheda, which he accepted; but in a year's time, desiring a fuller sphere of work and more varied experience than was afforded here, he accepted a curacy under the Hon. and Rev. Orlando Forester (the late Lord Forester, canon of York) at Broseley, Shropshire, early in 1857. He remained there two years, and it was here that he met his wife, a daughter of the Rev. J. A. Jetter, then incumbent of the adjoining parish of Ironbridge. They were married in February, 1859, when Mr. Brooke left Broseley and entered upon his last curacy under the late Prebendary Cadman, at that time rector of St. George the Martyr, Southwark. His old difficulties now returned with renewed force, the most prominent among them being in connection with infant baptism, and in June, 1859, he retired from the ministry of the Established Church, and devoted the rest of his life to undenominational Evangelical ministry, and to the deep study and faithful exposition of the Word of God.

As a matter of fact his whole spiritual and mental calibre and constitution were such as would have made it difficult for him to work successfully for any length of time on any denominational lines. Spiritually-minded in every sense of the term, and of abstract though by no means visionary mind, his whole idea of the Church of Christ was that of a spiritual body consisting of the sum total of true believers whatever their earthly distinctions or limitations; and the idea of any section of this body regarding itself as the sole repository of Divine wisdom and revelation was altogether alien to his mind. Perhaps nothing will give a better idea of his position in this respect, and a more typical formula of the principle that has underlain his whole life and teaching, than the following extract from his diary twelve years later, dated July 20, 1871: "Wrote to-day to ——— as follows: 'I am a great advocate for every true Christian, whilst being free to use any, yet being a nonconformist at heart as to every church system which could possibly be formed upon earth, and this simply on the ground that you cannot have anything upon earth that the Christian can feel at home in. Our citizenship is in heaven, our service—Divine service—is in heaven, our temple is in heaven, our Priest is in heaven, from whence we shortly expect Him.'"

After leaving Southwark, Mr. Brooke filled two small posts at Bushey Heath and Bude in Cornwall, and in 1861 he accepted an invitation to become minister of the Iron Room at Wimbledon, a small place of worship conducted on free lines. The Prayer Book was used at the morning service whilst the evening service followed the pattern common to Nonconformist churches. He remained there for ten years, after which the church was licensed and rebuilt as the present Emmanuel Church. It is a significant fact that three of Mr. Brooke's charges have become Church of England on his leaving, and may be taken as showing how small a difference separated him from the Church, and how much nearer in spirit and method his teaching was to that of the Established Church than to that of any outside body or sect.

In May, 1871, he left Wimbledon and became minister of the Ashbourne Free Church in Derbyshire, just then built by Mr. Francis Wright, of Osmaston Manor. He left in a year's time, and the church was shortly afterwards licensed as a Church of England incumbency. In May, 1872, Mr. Brooke came with his family to South Norwood, and in January, 1873, moved to Roehampton, where he lived until 1876. During these four years his ministry was scattered over various places, sometimes for months at a time, and sometimes for single Sundays—e.g., the Drill Hall, S. Norwood; Mission Room, Upper Norwood; Chelsea Chapel (during absence abroad of the Rev. Frank H. White); Trinity Presbyterian Church, Notting-hill (where he assisted the Rev. Dr. Adolph Saphir in 1875); and other places. Early in 1876 Mr. Brooke accepted an invitation to become permanent minister of the Mission Hall at Dovercourt, Essex, a fine building erected by the late Mr. Robert Bagshaw, of Dovercourt, and which had hitherto been supplied week by week by the Evangelisation Society. His ministry here extended over ten years, and it was solely owing to ill-health that he was obliged to leave in 1886. Towards the end of his stay there he was first troubled with painful attacks of internal neuralgia—aggravated by the severe east winds in the spring—which have so burdened his later years, and, for the last five years of his life, greatly increased in intensity and periodical frequency.

On leaving Dovercourt Mr. Brooke came to Bromley, Kent, as the first minister of Christ Church, Bromley Park, a Free Church, built by Mr. Samuel Causton, of Bromley Park, and which was the third of Mr. Brooke's churches to be licensed at the close of his term of ministry in October, 1889. This event was closely followed by the marriage of his only daughter to her cousin, Mr. Graham Wilmot Brooke, and the departure for the Central Sudân Mission at Lokoja in 1890, followed by the deaths of the leaders of the party, Rev. J. A. Robinson and G. W. Brooke, within six months of each other.

In December, 1891, after a few months ministry at Ealing at a Presbyterian church, where he was succeeded by Rev. Dr. Thain Davidson, Mr. Brooke came to Beckenham, where he resided until his death. His health has been much broken during this time, but when it permitted he has taken a Sunday evening service at the Public Hall until the present year. In September, 1892, he suffered from a bad attack of jaundice and general prostration, which caused much anxiety at the time, but he recovered from this, and the last five years have been divided between intervals of much pain and suffering, and alternate periods of relief and comparative activity, and this state of things continued almost to the end; nor was there anything in his condition apparent to his family or his doctor indicating a critical phase of the illness until a day or two before his death.

Mr. Brooke was for many years a regular speaker at the Mildmay Conferences, and a member of the council of the Evangelical Alliance, and notes and articles from his pen have appeared from time to time in the pages of Evangelical Christendom and of The Christian. His teaching was Evangelical and Protestant, and of an essentially expository character. Strongly averse to politics from the pulpit, and holding the view that a Christian had no concern with earthly politics, his sermons did not reflect the current thoughts, feelings, and passions of the hour, but rather drew his hearers out of and away from the present; nor did they ever take the form of rhetorical orations, moral homilies, or literary essays, but always of Scriptural and doctrinal expositions. The text was never a mere peg or motto to his sermon, but its germ.

He was scholarly in exegesis, clear in mental vision, sound in judgment, and gifted with excellent powers of expression. In early and middle life he had devoted much time to prophetic study, and had adopted the principles of the historical school of interpretation, which he never abandoned, although in later years he came to admit that possibly the truth might be found to embody the leading features of both schools of interpretation to the extent of the broad historical fulfilment on the year-day scale being followed by a literal or futurist fulfilment at the close of the dispensation; but in his interpretation of the prophecies relating to the "Antichrist" he remained a historicist to the last.

In his domestic and home life Mr. Brooke displayed a consistency of principle, fairness of mind, and sweetness of disposition that endeared him to all. His Irish origin had given him a keen sense of humour and a natural brightness of spirit which did much to counteract the depressing effects of ill-health. The same cause was also probably responsible for a keen love of and genuine talent for music. This was natural and spontaneous with him, for he had given little time to its cultivation or study; but he had the gift of extemporisation, and of playing by ear, and his musical taste was refined and classical, if perhaps somewhat conservative in attitude towards the modern school of composers.

To his friends, acquaintances, and the world at large he was genial and courteous, gentle in nature and avoiding strife and controversy, of fair and judicial mind, moderate in action, and generous. Taking his life as a whole, he was a man raised up for a peculiar work in the Church of Christ, and, as is generally the case in such instances, far more adapted for this particular work than for any other. He was one of our earliest literary friends, and we were often indebted to his sound judgment and accurate thinking.

The National British Women's Temperance Association has found it necessary to change the place of meeting for the day meetings of its annual Council, in consequence of the number of delegates elected being much larger than was expected, so that St. Martin's Town Hall is found to be too small. These meetings will therefore be held (on June 1, 2, and 3) at Westminster Chapel, James Street, Westminster, but all the other meetings will be held at the time and places already announced.

The Preciousness of Christ. — There are those in this superficial age who imagine that Paul's Jesus is too narrow for the times, and that Peter's theological attire has become so tattered and torn that the keys of the kingdom of heaven have fallen out through the holes in his pockets. But the Christ of Peter and Paul will be the foundation of the world's hope when these modern sages will have gone into everlasting oblivion. To them that believe He is precious. And the faith that lays hold of Him is precious. And the Divine energies that course through the centre of faith are precious. These are the precious things that have no parallel in this life of ours. These are the "precious stones" of earth. Upon these, without any baser intermixture, must rise the walls, the towers, and the palaces of the city of God (Rev. xxi. 14-20).—Rev. John Thomas, M.A.

The Martyrdom of Marius.

By the late Mrs. Crewdson.

"Give the Christian to the lion!"
Wildly cries the Roman throng.
"Yes, to Afric's tawny lion!"
Shout the warriors bold and strong.

"Let the hungry lion tear him!"
Echoes glad the laughing crowd.
"Fling him, fling him to the lion!"
Shriek the noble matrons loud.

"Do not spare him! Let him tear him!"
Cry the fair patrician girls,
With their dark hair softly braided
Underneath a band of pearls.

With their small feet purple-sandalled,
And their arms with bracelets dight,
And their robes of Indian tissue,
And their black eyes flashing light.

"Date illum ad leonem!"
Spake in accents soft and low,
From their curule seats of honour,
Senators in goodly row.

Then from flight to flight redoubled,
Shout and cheer and laughter peal,
Till the giant Colosseum
'Neath the tumult seems to reel.

And the clamours of the people,
Through the arch of Titus roll,
All adown the Roman forum
To the towering Capitol.

Then a pause. Hush! hush! and listen;
Whence that wild and savage yell?
'Tis the lion of Sahara
Raging in his grated cell.

Fierce with famine and with fetter,
Shaketh he his tawny mane,
For a living prey impatient,
Struggles he 'gainst bar and chain.

But a voice is stealing faintly,
From the next cell chill and dim,
'Tis the death-doomed Christian, chanting
Soft and low his dying hymn.

With uplifted hands he prayeth
For the men that ask his blood,
With the holy faith he pleadeth
For that shouting multitude.

Lift the grating, they are waiting;
Comes he forth serene to die,
With a radiance round his forehead,
And a lustre in his eye.

Never when 'midst Roma's legions,
With the helmet on his brow,
Pressed he forth to front of battle
With a firmer step than now.

Lift the grating, he is waiting;
Let the savage lion come,
He can only rend a passage
For the soul to reach her home.

* * * * *

"Brother, thou art gone before us!"
Sings the martyr funeral band;
Pacing lowly, pacing slowly,
With the torchlight in their hand.

Little knew they, as they whispered,
Sad and low, the burial psalm,
And as Christ's dear name was graven
On a little branch of palm,

That this tombstone, rude and rugged,
Should be deemed a precious gem
Ages hence, when crushed and shivered
Is the Cæsars' diadem;

When the wild vine weaves her tendrils
Over palace, fane, and hall,
O'er the golden house of Nero,
And the Colosseum's wall.

Reforms in Scottish Prisons.

GLASGOW.

Scotland is fortunate in having among those who are in authority in her prison world, a number of good men and true, who evidently think of the higher interests and welfare of her criminal population. One of the highest officials said to a Justice of the Peace: "Do you think you are doing all you can for the spiritual welfare of the prisoners?" He replied that he would see what was being done. Soon after this he instituted Bible-classes in the large city prison in Glasgow, with most excellent results.

On visiting this gaol, the Governor conducted me round, remarking, "Things are very different to what they were when I first entered the service forty-two years ago. The penal cells were never empty; now they are never used, and the warders are a real help to the men."

The Presbyterian chaplain is an enthusiastic lover of souls. He left an important church in order to win the prisoners, and he is succeeding. The Governor attends all the services, and is ever on the look-out to improve the moral welfare of those under his charge. I was privileged to address the City police in the section-house on the South Side, and found a goodly band of stalwart officers, who are usually gathered every week by Miss Logan.

EDINBURGH.

At the beginning of the year Major Whittle preached and Mr. Stebbins sang the Gospel in Edinburgh Gaol. Permission was granted to give away a number of books—such as "The Way to God," "Probable Sons," etc.—to prisoners throughout Scotland. Being in the city later on I was asked to preach in the prison on the Sunday morning. At the close a number of men desired prayer on their behalf, and a good many stayed to an after meeting, when they evidenced a desire to begin a new life. Visiting the prison next day we found that a revival had broken out. Three and a half hours were spent visiting the men from cell to cell. Two cases of conversion were found as the result of Major Whittle's preaching, and another was very anxious.

Services were held each morning till I left for London, and the forepart of the morning was passed conversing with the anxious. Lack of space here hinders my mentioning individual cases of blessing. Letters to hand state that at one Sunday service in the prison fifteen stayed behind to be dealt with.

A Free Church minister in a small town near Edinburgh tells of the conversion of a notorious criminal of whom the head constable said, "He has inspired terror in the minds of nearly all my men." This man rose in a men's meeting and testified to the power of Jesus Christ to save, and is working amongst disreputable sinners who are becoming "beloved saints."

Systematic Bible Teaching.

A Conference in connection with this Mission was lately held in the Council Room, Exeter Hall, Rev. Chas. Stirling in the chair. The object of the Mission is to promote pure religious teaching in the home, through the lessons taught in the Sunday-school.

The Chairman dwelt on the spread of Ritualism and Romanism, and the necessity for such work as that of the Mission. He urged the value of systematic Bible teaching in the training of the young. The meeting was addressed by other friends who bore testimony to the good work carried on by the Mission. Its funds are at a low ebb, and an appeal was made for help to enable it to extend its usefulness.

National Temperance League.—The annual meeting of members was held in Sion College on Friday. Mr. R. Rae, the secretary, presented the annual report, which showed that the League had held numerous social gatherings and conferences for different classes of the community during the year, including meetings in connection with the British Medical Association and the National Union of Teachers. Lectures in colleges had formed one of the most important branches of the work. The committee was largely represented on the council of the Army Temperance Association. The Royal Naval Temperance Society, the superintendence of which Miss Weston undertook at the request of the League, continued to make satisfactory progress, and last year 4791 temperance pledges were taken at Portsmouth and Devonport alone. An appeal was made for a Twentieth Century Fund of £10,000, for aggressive work during the remaining years of the nineteenth century.

ONLY a wee ragged boy, with tattered coat, dirty face, untidy hair, no hat or shoes, pacing up and down the cold pavement, heedless of the late hour and falling rain, with an eager, earnest expression on his thin, white face, and grasping in his little hand something which to him is evidently a great treasure, judging from the care he bestows on it.

Up and down, up and down, slowly he walks, watching the passers-by, when suddenly he catches sight of a tall figure in a black coat just appearing round the corner, and away he darts. Here comes the friend little Jack has been waiting for, the teacher of the Ragged School that he has been attending for some weeks past, but whom Jack expects to see for the last time to-night; for, in a few days, he is going away, far across the seas to great, needy China to tell boys and girls and men and women who are living dark, miserable lives, of One who loves and cares for them, but of whom they know nothing.

Only a few months ago little Jack was almost a heathen, knowing very, very little about God and the Saviour who died for him, but now, having listened with earnest attention to the words of his teacher, he loves the Lord Jesus, and is anxious that others should know and love Him too.

Breathless and speechless, Jack stops in front of the gentleman, who pauses in his hurried walk and asks, "Well, my little man, what is it?"

"Oh! please, sir, please I've got something for you," and, opening his dirty little hand, discloses—just one little brown penny; "and please, sir," continues Jack, "will you take it with you to China, and buy a Testament and give it to some little boy there, that he may read about Jesus?"

The missionary looks down at the poor, ragged little fellow, and, putting his hand on his head, says, "Look here, Jack, wouldn't you rather I took your penny and put some of my pennies to it, and bought you a pair of boots?"

"Oh! no, sir," Jack replies without hesitation; "you see, father would pawn the boots, and I would much rather you took the penny to China, so that some little Chinese boy may get to know Jesus."

SO THE PENNY CHANGED OWNERS

on the spot, and was placed in the missionary's pocket, and away Jack trotted to the miserable attic he called home.

After some weeks the missionary arrived in a Chinese port, and there purchased from the British and Foreign Bible Society a Gospel in Chinese characters. The first few months were spent in busily studying the language; but after a while the missionary became interested in a little boy as poor as Jack, but not as ragged, for he had no clothes at all, and offered to give him, if he would learn to read, the Gospel purchased with Jack's penny. The little fellow steadily persevered, and in due time was rewarded with the Gospel.

Day by day this little Chinese boy, with his yellow skin and long pigtail, read from the book of Jesus, and his heart was won by the love of the Saviour, who gave his life for him, and he became a follower of Christ, and now, to-day, having grown to be a man, he is busy working as a native evangelist, telling his fellow-countrymen that the Saviour that he has found will be their Saviour too.

Little Christian boy and girl, have you ever done as much as little Jack did for the heathen? Have you ever given one of your many pennies to help send the Gospel to those who are living year after year in such darkness and ignorance? They know nothing about the Saviour you love, nothing about Jesus your best friend, nothing about heaven, but are going on helplessly from day to day, with no one to comfort them in sorrow, no hope beyond the grave, no freedom from the chains of sin, no bright, happy Sundays, praying only to gods that cannot hear and cannot relieve; and now God stoops to ask your help. He does not send the message by swiftly-obeying angels, but entrusts it to us, his children.

"But," you ask, "what can I do?"

Shall I tell you of one of his commissions that you need not pass on to the "grown ups" and think it has nothing to do with you? It is this: "Pray ye" (Luke x. 2). Perhaps you feel you don't know how to pray. Have you ever heard it said, "God's biddings are enablings"? That just means that if God tells you to do anything He will teach you how to do it. So, if you don't know how, just come to Jesus and tell Him that, and He will teach you, and fill your heart with love to all those for whom Christ died.

Early Surrender.

Has Jesus won thy heart, my child?
Has He thy sins forgiven?
And doth He curb the passions wild
That dim thy thoughts of Heaven?

With sunshine oft the world is bright,
And rich in splendour seems;
The bounding steps of youth, how light,
How brilliant are its dreams!

What thought of danger doth he know,
Whose heart with joy runs o'er,
While dreams of pleasure round him flow,
And hope points on before?

But danger's signal oft should rise
Where youthful pilgrims stray,
For folly never lacks disguise
To tempt from wisdom's way.

Then to thy Saviour, even now,
Thy heart's affection give;
Before his glorious presence bow
And nobly shalt thou live.

More sweetly shall the blackbird sing,
More fondly coo the dove,
For sunshine gladdens everything
Where dwells the Saviour's love.

Personal.

UNCLE TED writes:—After what I said last Missionary Week about the fear of famine in Morocco, you will rejoice that just in time God sent rain, and all the people round me are rejoicing that again their bread is sure, though the locusts are coming up so thick that they will have to fight hard for it. These are like the little creeping sins, which, if not slain in time, may even take from us the Bread of Life. But do not let us forget those in India who still continue to need our help. I wish the sums sent in each week for the immediate relief of the starving kept up to sums sent in a couple of months ago. Remember, that for many weeks more this need will continue.

MAY WATSON.—I will correct the mistake in your name. MILDRED FRYER (Sydney).—Am glad to welcome you, and perhaps Dorothy will soon be able to belong. Several of my nephews and nieces are only six years of age, and send in their answers every week, and get them right, too! THE "MAYFLOWER" GIRLS.—Thank you for your kind wishes. QUENNIE MATTHEWS.—Am sorry you have found the Searchers lately too difficult. I think this last week's will suit you. KITTY DONALDSON SELBY.—You should have answered questions 2 and 3. MARGERY MATTHEWS.—You did not enclose the postal order in your letter. EVELYN HEWER.—Thank you for your long letter. I am glad you are having such a nice holiday in the country. JANET GARRETT (Kimberley).—Do not forget to give your age.

Many thanks to a kind friend for sending a jacket and anecdote cards, etc., which will be sent to some sick children.

UNCLE TOM.

Tientsin.—We learn from the report of the London Mission Hospital at Tientsin that during the year as many as 7,000 copies of the Gospels were sold, as well as a large number of religious pamphlets, calendars, etc. There has been quite a revival of religion in the wards. In one of the large wards every patient and attendant was baptized, while in the other large ward about half were baptized. Some of the cases of conversion were of a very touching description, manifestly the work of the Spirit of God.

THE MAY MEETINGS.

London Missionary Society.

The echoes of Mr. Arnold Thomas's splendid missionary sermon in the City Temple on Wednesday morning found their way in the evening to the great public meeting of the L.M.S. in Queen's Hall. In the opening prayer by Mr. Perkins, direct and appropriate reference was made to it.

The president of the evening, Mr. T. Ellis, M.P., was most sympathetic in his tone towards the object of the evening. He pointed out how close is the connection between missionary devotion and religious prosperity at home. He gave personal testimony to the noble work done by the Society's missionaries in Madagascar and South Africa, and expressed deep regret that, partly through the tortuosities of diplomacy, the work in Madagascar had received a temporary set back.

A very interesting speech came next from Rev. George Cousins, who is acting foreign secretary in the absence of Mr. Thompson. After some personal references to various staunch helpers of the Society, and to the important tour of the foreign secretary, Mr. Cousins dealt with some features of the year's report. Passing by India and China, which were to be represented by the succeeding speakers, he touched on the gratifying progress of the work in Central Africa. Then he had discouragements to speak of in the troubles of Matabeleland and Bechuanaland, and most of all in Madagascar. It was not to be wondered at, he said, that under the stress of disciplinary providence, many of the nominal professors among the Hovas were found out. What is so hard to bear in this Madagascar crisis, is the extent to which human wickedness, unrighteousness, and wrong-doing have been mixed up with the events of the past twelve months. Mr. Cousins spoke very strongly of the action of the Jesuit fathers towards the Protestant workers and the mission property—action which even Roman Catholics at home have admitted would be, if true, most immoral. Happily, the work of the Society has received at this critical time the hearty sympathy and co-operation of the Protestants of France; this is a source of strength and help.

As an Indian missionary of nearly two-and-twenty years' experience, Rev. J. R. Bacon, of Gooty, said that he had learned that a Christless people is a people without strength and without hope. But he had also seen many of India's dead sons raised to life and filled with desire for the salvation of their fellows. India has had a great past, and she has been inclined to rest on that, ignoring the spiritual movements that were pulsing through other lands and peoples. The theism of Islam has proved of no benefit to India, and to-day the Hindu and the Brahmin are sternly at variance. Happily, Christ has also come to India, especially in the latter decades of the century. The leaders of thought to-day among native Indians are taking the Christian attitude in their scheme of life. Among the masses of the people in India Christ's Gospel is making great headway; for the work among these Mr. Bacon pleaded most earnestly that a more adequate supply of workers should be sent to lead these dumb millions into the way of life. The hearts of the middle classes in South India are also now open to the Gospel message. Moreover, the whole of the Indian educated class is to-day in a state of mental ferment; and no scheme of life or system of religious thought will meet with acceptance among them that does not involve the personality of God, and an incarnate Saviour Christ is almost as great a figure in the mind of cultured India now as He is in the mind of Christian England.

The last speaker was Dr. Sewell McFarlane, medical missionary at Chi-Chou, North China. He described the locale of his work—some 200 miles to the south-west of Tientsin; the origin of the Mission; the methods of evangelism among the inquisitive and superstitious Chinese, and the vicissitudes of the work of preaching and healing. The "parish" embraced in this particular effort has in it seven large cities, four thousand villages, and a population of four millions. A very gratifying contrast between "then" and "now" was drawn by this young missionary, showing great advances in the number of chapels and converts, and in the blessed Christlike work of healing the ailments of the people while telling them also of the Christ who can save the soul as well as cure the body. In closing, he said that self-supporting missionaries, or those sent by individual churches, are much wanted in China.

Evangelical Alliance.

Many times have the members and friends of the Evangelical Alliance gathered at Regent's Park College for the annual conversazione, and by the kindness of Rev. Principal Gould occasion was found for another of these pleasant reunions on Tuesday afternoon, 11th inst. From four o'clock light refreshments were served in the dining hall, affording opportunity for social intercourse, and half-an-hour later the company were assembled in the library for a meeting, presided over by Lord Kinnaird, vice-president.

Rev. Dr. Newman Hall opened in fervent prayer for increased manifestation among all Christians of the spirit of unity.

A brief summary of the work of the Alliance during the past year was given by Mr. A. J. Arnold, general secretary, who referred to the Jubilee celebration last year, which is found to be still held in appreciative remembrance by many friends abroad. In regard to growth, 400 new members have been added to the British organisation, and new branches have been established in various parts of the world. Although much progress had not been seen in regard to religious liberty in Russia, watchful attention was being given to the matter by the Alliance, and the work of relieving Armenian sufferers from the late massacres had, through the agency of the Alliance, been carried on to a very generous extent. Mr. Arnold mentioned that the Annual Conference of the Alliance is to be held in Cambridge this year on September 27 and two following days.

Rev. F. Storer Clark moved the adoption of the report and re-appointment of officers, with some additions, and this motion was seconded by Rev. Professor Redford, and unanimously carried.

Touching upon the remarkable times in which we live, the Chairman took a hopeful view of the work which the Church of God has on hand, and called upon

Rev. C. F. W. Flad, from Tunis, who spoke of a life work in Africa, tracing much of the blessing now witnessed in North Africa to the influence of modern missions. Numerous services of various kinds go forward among three or four nationalities in a church of which Mr. Flad has the use in Tunis. The little building is full several times a day, and it is a most happy work. Thus the spirit of Christian fellowship finds congenial ground for growth, and a marked exemplification of the spirit of the Alliance is realised. Observance of the Week of Prayer has made gradual and steady growth in the place, until it is well established and embraces petitions in some half-a-dozen languages. The sufferings of persecuted missionaries in Abyssinia, and much prayer made in the past on their behalf, were now bearing fruit to the praise of God through his Gospel. Native converts are much blessed in the work, and they have even been bold to bear testimony before King Menelik, from whom they have received written permission under the royal seal to preach.

Much interest was manifested in Dr. Baedeker's account of recent travels in Russia, which he designated as really virgin soil for the Gospel with wonderful openings for Christian effort. It is remarkable that the civil authorities in some places have granted him preaching permits. Russia comprises 128 languages, and so affords ample scope for the international work of the Alliance. Dr. Baedeker had been permitted to preach the Gospel in all the prisons of Russia and Siberia; this blessed work being now carried on in his absence by two friends, who stand upon the same authority. The British and Foreign Bible Society is covering the whole country with God's Word with the full cognisance of the Government. At the foot of old Mount Ararat there are gathered representatives of no less than 128 nationalities; and there is here fine ground for the good seed of God's truth. Let us have hope for Russia. The Stundists are leaving traces for good wherever they go. Some of these refugees were found in Roumania preaching the Word and filling large fields of usefulness. Russian prisons are actually more open to Gospel-preaching than are English ones. Dr. Baedeker came across one prisoner to whom he had given a Bible four years ago in Siberia, the man having treasured it ever since. The work of scattering God's Word over Russia is a work worth living for.

Rev. M. E. Barakat (Syria) rejoiced in the extension of Christian sympathy to all peoples of the globe through modern facilities of inter-communication. Drawing a vividly descriptive word-picture of Damascus as a representative Syrian city, with its old Bible associations and confirmations in modern customs, he reviewed interesting incidents of the life which is led by the races of Druses, Mohammedans, and others who find habitation there among the Christian descendants from olden times. Details followed, showing the way in which the Bible in the hands of Christian missionaries wins its way in spite of priestly opposition. Amid much persecution, the spirit of loyalty to Jesus Christ is prevalent and strong among the converts. Governmental misrule has borne fearful fruit among the people in the massacres which have claimed so many victims. He saw nothing better for this Christian country to do in this Jubilee time than to increase to the greatest possible extent the work of covering all the lands of the earth with copies of God's written revelation.

Rev. John Sharp, of the British and Foreign Bible Society, exhorted to the spirit of thankfulness for the Spirit of Christian union which so widely characterises our age. Words of gratitude might well be followed by active use of the agencies and opportunities for the spread of God's Word and truth, which He has so abundantly placed in our hands.

A few words from Rev. Principal Gould acknowledged the thanks of the meeting, and indicated warm appreciation of the spirit and scope of the varied work to which the Evangelical Alliance is devoted.

Country Towns Mission.

This Society works in our country towns and villages on the same lines as the London City Mission, its work being of a distinctly missionary character. In connection with the sixtieth anniversary, the annual meeting was held at Exeter Hall last Thursday evening, with Mr. H. W. Maynard in the chair.

The secretary, Mr. G. H. Mawer, gave some details from the report. The principal work of the missionaries is to visit the homes of the people. They also hold cottage meetings, preaching in the open air and in mission-rooms, and by every means in their power labour to make known the glad tidings of the grace of God throughout their districts.

London, with its enormous claims, was designated by the Chairman as a huge sponge absorbing not only large numbers annually from provincial districts, but overshadowing country needs as to evangelisation, so that they are too often in large measure forgotten. Despite the beautiful natural surroundings of country life, the world, the flesh, and the devil are as active in the isolation of rural existence as in city life; while the same remedy is demanded, namely, the grace of God in the Gospel of Christ. Spiritual power in individual workers is the great means for bringing this remedy to bear, and is well worthy of increased sympathy and support.

Impediments found in village visitation were spoken of by Mr. Bennett, a missionary employed by the Society in work at Cheltenham. Cheering stories, however, were also simply told, descriptive of spiritual fruit for his faithful dealings with some of the poor souls who are far removed from spiritual privileges. Mr. H. Richardson, another of the Mission's workers, who takes the glad tidings of salvation into Newport, Salop, and its neighbourhood, told a plain story of how the Gospel wins its way when faithfully brought to bear upon our villages. His words constituted a strong appeal in favour of the work. Similar testimony was borne by Mr. James Ivey, who works in the villages near Rugby. He reported some of the victories of God's Word over Romanism and Ritualism. The influence of God's Spirit had been largely experienced in work among the children, the blessing extending through the little ones to whole families.

Rev. John More (Woolwich) had, during a long period of ministry in the provinces, been brought into touch with the Colportage Society, with the Evangelisation Society, and with this Country Towns Mission; and he gloried in a simplicity of operation among their agents, which God not only made powerful against rustic ignorance, but also mighty to the breaking up of educated indifference and ecclesiastical deadness. Mr. H. C. Nisbet also warmly commended the simple but direct and effective methods employed by the Mission.

The Pentecostal League.

The annual meeting of this League recently took place at Exeter Hall. The morning meeting was held in the Lower Hall, under the presidency of Mrs. Reader Harris, when delegates from all parts of the country gave reports of the work of the League. There was a striking unanimity in the reports, showing that the League solves the question of the true reunion of the Churches. The membership of the League shows a large increase. The afternoon meeting was held in the large Exeter Hall, which was well filled. After brief addresses by Rev. J. Ferguson, D.D. (Primitive Methodist) and Rev. H. C. Sturdy (vicar of Dorking), expressing sympathy with the aim of the League and appreciation of its value as a means of uniting believers, Mr. Reader Harris gave an address, showing that united prayer preceded all the great epochs of history recorded in the Bible.

The evening meeting was an inspiring time. The large Hall was filled by an enthusiastic audience, and the platform was occupied by representative ministers and delegates. Mr. Reader Harris presided. Brief addresses were given by Rev. A. Allan (Presbyterian), of Hull, Rev. D. H. Moore (Baptist), and Rev. Dr. Lawson Forster (Congregationalist), after which Mrs. Harris and Mr. Harris spoke. The latter emphasised the fact that the League does not teach "sinless perfection," but the perfection commanded in the Sermon on the Mount. At the close many in the audience rose for prayer. It was announced that the League would hold three meetings in the City Temple on the three following Wednesdays in May, at 8 p.m.

Irish Church Missions.

Hopeful signs of progress were spoken of at the annual meeting in Exeter Hall last week. Although Ireland remains to-day in the main a Roman Catholic country, it is evident to those who have followed the course of events that a great change is coming over the minds of large numbers of the people in regard to the teaching received from the priests. Denunciation of Protestant teaching and of Bible-reading, though still powerful in many cases, has not the same force as in days gone by. Although the Bible is still a prohibited book to the great mass of the peasantry, there has been, and is, a constant demand for its possession. During the past ten years alone, among other useful operations, the colporteurs working with the Irish Church Missions have sold to Roman Catholics 102,800 copies or portions of Scripture.

Presiding over this well-attended meeting, Lord Kinnaird made sympathetic reference to the decease of Lord Plunket, Archbishop of Dublin. The progress of ordinary education in Ireland is a sign which tells much in favour of disseminating God's truth in that land. Opposition to the open-air work of this Society is considerably lessened. He was glad the committee had faith to go on with their good work, despite the lack in regard to income.

Rev. N. F. Duncan, clerical secretary, read an abstract of the comprehensive report. Among other things it recorded the fact that the winter months, during which fairs and markets are not so accessible, have again been utilised by holding, in various towns and villages, magic lantern meetings, at which the truth of the Gospel has been communicated to thousands of Roman Catholics. The income from all sources had been largely exceeded by expenditure, necessitating a serious withdrawal from the reserve.

Rev. Gilbert S. Karney, of St. John's, Paddington, said he felt much interest in this work, and had lately visited the country where it is carried on, to find that there has been a great lifting up from the Lord. On every hand there was to be seen much thoroughness on the part of men and women moved by the Holy Ghost rather than eager for controversy. A spirit of love to souls and of prayerfulness pervades all the work.

Rev. F. W. Ainley, superintendent of the Mission in Cork, reminded the meeting that the Society's children are increasing, while the family loaf is not growing in size. He added some plain words about the characteristics of the Romish system, which render this work a conflict and every open door a victory for God. A great change, however, has undoubtedly come over public opinion favourable to Christian effort in Ireland. There is a spirit of hopefulness among the Mission's agents, but there are not enough of them, while abundant scope exists for voluntary workers.

Rev. W. H. Griffith-Thomas (Portman Chapel) added a few earnest words on Ireland's need and England's opportunity in connection with these missions.

Friendless and Fallen.

The forty-first annual meeting of this excellent institution was held on Wednesday afternoon last week in the Council Chamber at Exeter Hall. As is well known, the work is preventive and reformatory in character, and it is carried on in half-a-dozen Homes, conducted on the family principle, situate in various parts of London. In a general way, the interest centres in cases of (1) destitute friendless girls, who need training for service; (2) friendless virtuous young women placed in circumstances of moral peril; and (3) fallen and outcast young women, who desire to forsake ways of sin and sorrow.

In the unavoidable absence of Sir C. Douglas Fox, the chair was occupied by Commander Key, R.N., who, in a few words, described his work among women in Portsmouth; and, as showing that the work in London is national in its operations, he said that he had sent many cases to the "Friendless and Fallen" Homes. Recalling Prov. xxiii. 27, he said that sinners of the class helped by the Society are "in a deep ditch," and in a position from which they cannot extricate themselves. They require a kind hand extended to aid them, if they are ever to be brought from their painful condition and restored to society and God.

The report, an abstract of which was read by the secretary, Mr. W. J. Taylor, told of great need for the friendly work of the institution, and of continued activity in the various departments. The Open-all-Night Refuge has again proved its merciful and effective mission, in presenting an open door for the immediate admission of the penitent, as well as the friendless and erring girl. The rescue work in general has been accompanied by the Divine blessing. The training imparted, the discipline of the Homes, and the after-supervision have all yielded encouraging results; and the matrons give good reports of the majority of the young women under their charge. These results include family reconciliations and marriages of former inmates, as well as good tidings of some who had shared the shelter of the Homes. All the young girls aided by the preventive agencies were delivered from surroundings of a dangerous and criminal character, and, humanly speaking, saved from moral ruin.

The Committee had dealt with several maternity cases during the year. Intelligence was to hand of many promising young women, who in former years were rescued from a sad career, and are now living profitable lives. Others have shown evidence of the working of Divine grace, and some are now doing their utmost to bring their acquaintances under the influence of the Gospel. In matters of finance, the report spoke with cheering buoyancy, the income having fully covered the expenditure. In a "Summary of Operations" it was shown that over a thousand cases were dealt with during the year, and what this means for individual blessing and social purity, for public well-being and the glory of God, present conviction may reassure us, but only eternity can fully declare.

Rev. J. P. Gledstone bore hearty testimony to the excellence of the work. He deplored the awful fact that, although in some respects there is a decrease in criminality, in the wickedness under consideration there is no sign of decrease. Another shocking fact was that the women who are entrapped are in many cases orphans, and from the country, and very young—therefore friendless, inexperienced, and weak. While the Word of God deals as it does with the sin of unchastity, and while (in another way) general literature brings the subject continually under notice, he saw no justification whatever in Christian ministers and others being silent. He praised God for the Ever-Open-Door, which is like the arms of the Good Shepherd, always ready to receive wandering girls, upon whom impulses for good come so suddenly that it is a blessing to know that it is possible for them to be acted upon without delay.

Addresses were also delivered by Revs. E. G. C. Parr, who told the story of a young woman whom the Society rescued from the depths of sin and degradation, and held that the Society deserves the heartiest support; and by Mr. A. W. Ireton, who had been associated with the work for many years. A hope was expressed by several of the speakers that the Diamond Jubilee would be marked by the opening of a new Home, towards which, by a resolution that was carried, friends were asked to give their help.

Women's Total Abstinence Union.

The annual public meeting of this Union was held at St. Martin's Town Hall, under the presidency of Mrs. W. S. Caine. The report stated that the number of directly federated societies had risen to 203, being a gain of thirty-four in the twelve months. There were also branches in connection with various local societies. The receipts amounted to £1657, and the expenditure left a balance in hand of £56.

Mrs. W. S. Caine, in the course of an address, said it was unhappily true that drunkenness amongst women was on the increase. This was a very terrible thing, because if a wife and mother took to drink the home was nearly always ruined. Even where the husband was a drunkard, if the wife kept strictly sober she could keep the home together and rescue the children. It was a shocking thing that young children should be sent to the public-house to fetch the drink which would demoralise the mother. It was also a miserable reflection that the past year's drink bill reached the enormous amount of £148,972,230. In face of this they could not help feeling how comparatively paltry were the sums spent in philanthropic and evangelistic efforts. However, it was encouraging that the Irish Sunday Closing Bill had been read a second time; and they could only devote themselves with renewed ardour to the cause of temperance. Mrs. Caine concluded by proposing the adoption of an address congratulating the Queen on the completion of the sixtieth year of her illustrious reign. The address was agreed to amid cheering. Other speakers dealt with temperance topics.

At a Conference on the following day several important papers were read on different aspects of the movement, followed by discussion. At the meeting of the Council on the closing day Lady E. Biddulph was re-elected president of the Union.

British Jews Society.

The fifty-fourth anniversary of the British Society for the Propagation of the Gospel among the Jews was celebrated on Thursday last, when Sir George Williams presided over a meeting of friends and supporters in Exeter Lower Hall. Founded and fostered by Ridley Herschell, Murray McCheyne, and Andrew Bonar, the Society has a grand record, and its friends hope for a still better record among "things to come."

As usual, the secretary, Rev. John Dunlop, read a long report. Among the outstanding facts were the following:—The Society has twenty-six missionaries and many voluntary helpers engaged in Evangelistic, educational, and philanthropic work, in England, Germany, Austria, Russia, and Turkey. It supports schools for the young and medical missions for the poor, and through its means the Holy Scriptures and Gospel literature are circulated in various languages. Moreover, the Society has two homes for aged and destitute Christian Israelites. The year's income, with balance in hand at the beginning, amounted to £8148, and expenditure was so regulated as to leave a balance on the right side at the end of the year. Financial conditions had been singularly favourable, the year having passed without an overdraft at the bank. Quite fittingly, Mr. Dunlop concluded with a review of Jewish progress and mission work among the ancient people during "these sixty years."

After a few gracious words by the Chairman, an address was delivered by Rev. Dr. Lawson Forster, who declared himself warmly in sympathy with the Society and its work. Granting that there were many difficulties in the way of evangelising the Jews, he would not admit that it was more difficult than reaching the upper classes in India or the lower classes in London, in which so much interest has been taken during recent years. He appealed for greater sympathy in the work, and for energy that befits an earnest purpose to take the Gospel to the Jews. A hundred years ago there was not a single missionary to the Jews; but the work that has during the intervening years been done has been attended by significant results, and in every walk of life you will find Jews who are living under the wing of the Christian church—being, in fact, Jews by birth and Christians by faith. The British Society had come into a splendid heritage, and it behoved Christians to rise to present opportunities.

Rev. W. D. Walters followed, commending the Society for its evangelical basis and operations. He held it to be a special duty of Britain to spread the Gospel among Jews as well as Gentiles. Mr. Richard Cory, treasurer, having given a financial statement, a few words were spoken by Colonel J. T. Griffin. The last speaker was Rev. A. Sternberg, mission deputy, who, having just come off a Continental tour, had a few interesting things to say. As showing the changed attitude of Jews in relation to the Gospel, he described visits to rabbis in Italy, who received him kindly, and readily engaged in conversation.

Seamen's Christian Friend Society.

The anniversary meetings of this Society were held last week. A devotional meeting was held on Tuesday week at the Aldersgate-street Y.M.C.A. In the afternoon a well-attended meeting was held at the society's headquarters, opposite the London Docks, when the claims of the society were advocated by Rev. W. Fuller Gooch, Dr. J. H. Gladstone, Mrs. Maynard, and the Countess Schimmelmann. The last-named declared that she had met with seamen in many parts of the world who had received blessing through contact with the agents of the Society.

The annual public meeting, which was largely attended, was held at the Great Assembly Hall, Mile End, under the presidency of Sir George Williams. The secretary, Rev. G. J. Hill, reported an increase of work in every department, attended by a large measure of spiritual blessing and a slightly-improved income. About forty ports had been missioned by twenty-one agents, assisted by a large band of unpaid workers. Large numbers of seamen had signed the temperance pledge, and many both at the English and foreign services had been converted to God. The income for the past year, £3346, although greater than that of the previous year, had not sufficed to meet the expenditure of £3410, so that increased help is needed to maintain existing operations.

Mrs. H. W. Maynard and Mrs. W. H. Seagram bore personal testimony to the spiritual character and efficiency of the Society's work, and to its need of better support. Dr. A. T. Pierson laid stress on the terrible isolation of a sailor's life, his separation from home life and from the society of good women, and pleaded strongly for the support of the society. Dr. Harry Guinness likened the Society to a good ship whose progress was impeded by the barnacles of debt, and counselled that these should be cleared off, so that the vessel might go forward in full sail on its mission of mercy to imperilled seamen.

B. and F. Sailors' Society.

The Duke of Cambridge presided at the seventy-ninth annual meeting of this Society at Salters' Hall, St. Swithin's-lane, on Monday week. There was a good attendance. The report showed that money grants had been made to seventy-three stations at home and abroad. The Society is associated with eighty-one ports, at which there are ninety stations and eighty-two sailors' institutes, Bethels, rests, etc. A new enterprise for London is the Albert Victor Rest, West India Dock-road. The Victoria Jubilee Fund was founded ten years ago in aid of aged seamen, and it is proposed, if possible, to double this during the present year.

The Chairman expressed great interest in the work of the Society, which, reaching as it did into all parts of the world, was of enormous value. All who took an interest in their country should support such an effort. Addresses were also given by Sir Thomas Sutherland, M.P., Rev. H. Harwood, Rev. A. J. Palmer, Rev. W. J. Mathams, Dr. Gritton, and others.

Protestant Reformation Society.

Sir C. R. Lighton, Bart., presided over the seventieth annual meeting of the Protestant Reformation Society, and opened the proceedings with a candid survey of present-day thought and attitude in relation to Romanism. Rev. L. G. A. Roberts followed with some account of the year's work. It pointed out that the Society existed for many years with only one missionary, while to-day it has many labourers in different parts of the country. It was something to be able to say that whereas the Romanists claimed two millions of our countrymen in 1861, to-day they only number 1,362,000. The report also gave particulars as to the circulation of Protestant tracts and manifestoes among clergymen and others.

Rev. Talbot A. L. Greaves, in the course of a sympathetic address, referred to the Society's work among Roman Catholics. He held that the tide was flowing in favour of Romanism. In the pulpit, in the Press, in the school, and in the University the influence of Rome, was increasingly felt. In whatever way possible, Rome was creeping in and endeavouring to regain her power. Mr. J. H. Tucker, who followed, spoke of the growth of ritualism and sacerdotalism, and urged all to search their Bibles, and warn their fellow-countrymen of the danger they were in.

Rev. Dr. C. H. Wright dealt with the reply of the Archbishops to the Pope's Bull. He declared that if the doctrines put forward had been those adopted by the clergy and laity, in accordance with the constitution of the Church of England, he for one would never have joined the Church of England. He refuted the idea that in receiving the Holy Communion they were partaking of the actual body and blood of Christ. They could not bring our Lord down from heaven in person. They must feed by faith upon Him, whose blood was shed for their sins. He took his stand by the Thirty-nine Articles, and emphatically stated that the doctrine set forth in the Letter to the Pope was not the doctrine of the Church of England.

Rev. W. R. Mowll maintained that the answer of the Archbishops was not only unfair, but unwarrantable. Who gave them the authority to send that answer? The clergy had no voice in the election of their archbishops and bishops; if they had, he ventured to say the archbishops would have hesitated before sending such a letter to the Pope of Rome. Was an answer to the Pope needed? If so, the only answer which Englishmen—true Englishmen who wished to be loyal to the Queen and to uphold the liberty of the State—could give was this, "We fail to recognise your authority at all; we repudiated it at the time of the Reformation, and we repudiate it now."

Bible Lands Missions' Aid Society.

On Monday week the anniversary meeting of this Society was held in the Lower Exeter Hall, the spot where its public career commenced forty-three years ago. Lord Kinnaird presided. An abstract of the report was read by Rev. W. A. Essery, Hon. Sec. The absorbing labour of the year, he said, had been given to the gathering and distribution of relief to the suffering Armenians in Asia Minor. Through the agency of the American missionaries exclusively had the work been carried on. New orphanages for massacre orphans have been started during the year, and now stretch from the western to the eastern limit of Turkey in Asia. Over 2000 of the most destitute are sheltered in homes of light, and hope, and peace. The Nestorian and Armenian refugees, who fled into Persia from their destroyers, were relieved by the Society. Since the great tribulation ceased, the door for the Gospel is open, and an appeal for £2000 has been made to sustain the native pastors and teachers in their evangelistic labour.

Lord Kinnaird presented the financial statement, showing receipts: for general fund, £657; special objects, £871; and for massacre relief, including orphans, £6684. His lordship remarked on the smallness of the sum subscribed for spreading Christ's Gospel as compared with that for the relief of physical suffering.

Dr. Monro Gibson, in a most sympathetic speech, pleaded that Turkey needed the Gospel beyond all other parts of the world, that as political action had done so little there was the greater obligation for evangelistic endeavour. He spoke highly, from personal knowledge, of the American workers in the Ottoman Empire, and deprecated the setting up of rival British agencies; he pressed earnestly for sending larger and larger aids to Gospel work through the channels of the Bible Lands Missions' Aid Society.

Mrs. Isabella Bishop's recital of her own observations and experiences in Bible lands was listened to with the deepest interest. She said: Though I have travelled for more than eight years in Asia, I know of no part of the Asiatic world in which a living Gospel is more needed than in the dominions of the Turk. I spent three months in travelling through the highlands of Armenia. This is six years ago, and even then a reign of terror existed; the people were hunted like sheep. I have seen men actually shot down in the fields by the Kurds. I have seen flocks and herds of the villagers driven away in broad daylight even, because their owners were Christians. I do believe that the Turkish peasantry, if they were once influenced by the Gospel, would be one of the finest populations on earth. I often thought, in travelling in Kurdistan and in Armenia, how many of us professing Christians would go through one half of what those people were daily going through for the sake of Jesus Christ.

Lord Radstock followed with a vigorous address calling upon British Christians to join generously in evangelising the subjects of the Sultan; and Rev. Dr. Wm. Wright, with memories gathered by nine years' missionary labour in Damascus, brought an unusually large and interesting meeting to a close.

Presbyterian Foreign Missions.

The annual meeting of the Presbyteries of London in the interests of the foreign missions of the Presbyterian Church of England was held in the Queen's Hall, Langham-place, on Friday evening. Lord Reay, late Governor of Bombay, had been secured as chairman, but urgent business in the House of Lords detained him until the meeting was half over.

The special feature of the Mission is to raise up a Chinese church in China which shall be self-governing, self-supporting, and self-propagating. Already fifteen pastors are wholly supported by their own flocks, and the Chinese have in turn become missionaries to others. The growth of the Mission during the last twenty-one years has been solid and substantial.

In some sense this meeting celebrated the jubilee of the Mission to China, as the first missionary—the late Rev. Wm. C. Burns—was ordained at Sunderland fifty years ago. Mr. Hugh M. Matheson, who has been the treasurer and convener for the whole of that time, having made a short introductory statement, Mrs. Bishop followed with an interesting account of her visits to some stations of the Mission—at Swatow and Wu-king-fu. She testified to the excellence of the workers, and to the wisdom and devotion which characterised their work, specially mentioning the work of the Women's Missionary Association. She was convinced that the acceptance of Christ made a greater difference in the lives of the Chinese than of any other nation. The Medical Mission Hospital at Swatow took in more patients than any other Mission Hospital. The cures were wonderful, but the cure of the soul was the more wonderful still. In her extensive travels through China she was gravely impressed with the little that was being done—missions had barely touched the fringe of China. In face of that how could they go on spending money on themselves and neglect to offer it upon God's altar.

Dr. Parker brought from the meeting of the L.M.S. in the City Temple cordial congratulations and hearty good wishes. Rev. Wm. Burgess (W. M. Society, of Hyderabad, India) also spoke. Rev. J. Hudson Taylor said he had the privilege of working for a time with Mr. Burns during the commencement of the Mission. There was a holy atmosphere and a spiritual calm about him that struck everyone. The change that had taken place in the attitude of the people during the last few years was remarkable. Mr. Geo. Wales (one of the missionaries from Chin-chew, Amoy, thought it was a pity that people who could afford it did not visit the mission field to give encouragement to the missionaries. The discouraging side of the work was very present to those in China, and they needed a word of cheer.

Lord Reay said that while in India he had carefully watched the work of the missionaries, and he was convinced that there was perhaps no work more arduous and requiring more pith than that pursued by the missionaries. Therefore, it was the duty of the Church to cheer and encourage them as much as possible.

Spanish and Portuguese Church Aid.

THE loss of Archbishop Plunket, who had piloted the Society's destinies for many years, was the thought uppermost in the minds of the friends who assembled at the annual meeting a few days ago in St. Martin's Town Hall. The report for the year (read by Dr. NOYES), set forth that while the old work had been maintained, new was being undertaken, notably at Barcelona, whither a well-tried reformer had been sent to organise a church.

The Bishop of WORCESTER, who presided, made a vigorous speech, in which he asked whether it was or was not true that the Articles of the Church of England were framed on the broad principle that the Church itself protested against the errors of the Church of Rome. All attempts at reunion with that body appeared to him a direct surrender of the thirty-nine Reformation Articles, and in such surrender he for one could have no share. The Bishop concluded by announcing his intention of doing all in his power to help forward the reform movement in the peninsula.

The Bishop of CLOGHER intimated that the Bishop of Worcester had kindly accepted the office of president to the English branch. Addresses were also delivered by Revs. H. W. WEBB-PEPLOE and BROOKE LAMBERT, and Mr. SYDNEY GEDGE.

The Bible League.

THE fifth annual meeting of the League was held in St. Paul's Church-room, Onslow-square, on Monday, May 10, Prebendary Webb-Peploe in the chair.

Rev. HANDLEY C. G. MOULE gave a deeply instructive address on his recent experiences in the Holy Land, as bearing on the veracity of the Scriptures. This address will be reported in succeeding issues.

The Hon. Sec., Rev. JOHN TUCKWELL, read the annual report, which contained a very encouraging account of the usefulness of the League during the past year. Fully one hundred lectures and addresses had been delivered to Christian workers of almost every description.

Prebendary WEBB-PEPLOE explained the object of the League, which was to resist the open and determined attack now being made upon the inspiration and infallibility of the Word of God.

Stornoway.—As in former years, all the Stornoway hotel licences declined by the local justices have been granted by the appeal Court of Quarter Sessions.

Yorubaland.—The coloured missionaries, Mr. and Mrs. Ricketts, are settled in Yorubaland, and are now asking for their children to be sent to them. They left them behind in Jamaica, when sent for two years ago by a missionary society, which intended that they should return to the Congo, where they formerly laboured. By a change of plan, for which they are not responsible, they went to Lagos, and have now settled inland at the village of Jebu. It is much desired to let them have their children: the boys to help their father in cultivating the land, and the girls their mother in the home. The cost of the passage from Jamaica to Lagos is considerable. Mrs. Hind-Smith, Summerfield, Haywards Heath, will gladly answer inquiries and receive help towards this object.

Anglo-Indian Evangelisation.—The annual meeting of the Anglo-Indian Evangelisation Society was held in the Christian Institute, Glasgow, last week. Mr. Donald Graham, Lord Dean of Guild, said that as a resident a good many years in India, he could testify to the value of the work of the Society. Rev. D. C. Boyd, general secretary, stated that owing to the calamities which had during the past year overtaken India, the work of the agents of the Society had had to be carried out under circumstances of a depressing nature. Notwithstanding this, the year had been a most successful one in the history of the Society. Dr. Donald Macleod said our young men in India, lost among the great masses of the heathen world, required some such Society to care for their spiritual welfare, It was most unsatisfactory that the Society was so limited in its operations. Instead of having only seven agents, it ought to have two or three times as many. Dr. Ross Taylor said £1000 was a totally unworthy sum for the whole of England to contribute. The Society ought to be cherished because of the possibilities in it.

The simple poor estate;
But while he seeks the latch, the poor
Have entered heaven's gate.

Letters to the Editor.

THE LATE REV. H. E. BROOKE.

DEAR SIR,—Some may be glad to know, from one who once had much intercourse with our valued brother, what were his thoughts on a few disputed questions.

1. In Tit. iii. 5, and Eph. v. 26, the R.V. margins call up sad thoughts. In the former place the margin "or laver" leaves us free to retain the rendering "washing"; in the latter we are told that the Greek means "laver." The truth is, this word is never used by the Septuagint for "laver," a cognate word being used. Mr. Brooke's memory is to me bound up with these passages as follows:—In 1878 he had seen with interest an admission of Bishop Ellicott to me, that though in his commentary he rendered "laver," he could not be sure that "washing" was wrong. Mr. B—— then gave me a few references in favour of "washing"; one of them is easily remembered. In Ps. lx. 8 we have "washpot." In a Greek version, dating about 150 A.D. (Aquila's), the controverted word occurs as the rendering of "wash." We thus see that the natural sense of the word is not "laver" which would be nonsense as combined thus with "pot") but "water used for washing" (bathing). The importance of the true rendering, "washing," is seen when we remember that even in Dean Alford's "Revised New Testament" (1870) we have "the font of regeneration."

2. "Covenant and Testament." The American Revisers, in No. X. of their notes appended to the R.V., reject "testament" everywhere except in Heb. ix. 15-17. When Mr. Brooke was in association with Dr. Saphir in Dec., 1875, he preached firmly on this passage, with the thought of "covenant." In the year 1883 he wrote to me in the same view. A living expositor of rare gift once wrote to me, "If I could be quite sure that the verb could be used of the covenant victim in a semi-passive sense (i.e., as 'making the covenant' by bearing its requirement in death) my last difficulty [in rendering everywhere covenant] would be gone."

3. 1 John v. 18 R.V., "He that was begotten of God keepeth him" (the believer). Mr. Brooke accepted the text of the R.V., interpreting the above words of our Lord Himself, "the only begotten from the Father" (John i. 14).

Among us in Talbot Tabernacle his voice was heard last on Dec. 25. In speaking of the titles of our Lord in Isa. ix. 6, he expounded the words "the Everlasting Father" with the Septuagint (some texts of it) as "Father of the Age to Come." There I had to differ.

It is remarkable that he fell asleep in the same month and day (April 4) as did his friend Dr. Saphir six years before him.—Yours truly,

100, Lancaster-road, W. S. BLOXSIDGE.

IS CAMBRIDGE BEING ROMANISED?

DEAR SIR,—In a recent CHRISTIAN your Cambridge correspondent alludes to Dr. Cunningham's lectures on "The Historical Evidences of Christianity" as promising to be "the main feature of the May term." It is right to point out that Dr. Cunningham is a sacerdotalist, a member of the E.C.U., and that a most objectionable book on the Communion is used in his church, a book containing rank Popery. The reverend gentlemen is an ex-Presbyterian, and, as often happens in the case of 'verts, a man of extreme opinions. Protestant parents ought to be warned as to the character of much of the so-called religious work in this town. Twenty-two years ago there was only one church that could be called Tractarian, now there are eight. The vicar of one was in the habit of administering previously-consecrated bread to the patients in the local hospital, a practice which he has, after pressure had been brought to bear on him, fortunately relinquished. Several of the clergy, including a fellow of one of the colleges, are members of the Confraternity of the Blessed Sacrament. I know one instance of an undergraduate who was brought under the influence of a Tractarian vicar here, and who ultimately joined the Romish Church.

Cambridge is rapidly losing its Protestant character. Three at least of the Divinity professors are decided sacerdotalists, including the Regius professor, who some time ago had a controversy with Dr. Barnardo, in which he showed his animus against Protestantism. Parents and guardians ought to make due inquiries before sending young men here to be led aside by these enemies of the Reformation. There are, of course, potent influences acting in a contrary direction, but priestcraft is advancing here as elsewhere. Father Maturin, who has recently joined the Romish Church, was one of the preachers selected last year by Dr. Cunningham to address our youth.—Yours truly, X.

Evangelistic Notes.

MR. B. H. ANGEL is holding tent meetings in Godstone, Surrey. The opening services were encouraging. Prayer is asked for much blessing.

Mr. and Mrs. Corsie, of Campbeltown, who have been labouring in different parts of the Island of Arran, have closed a blessed mission in Shiskine. Many have testified to having found the Saviour during the mission, which continued for a month. The evangelists have begun a mission at Machrie Bay. A. McA.

Mr. Newton Jones has conducted special services at Percy Hall, Dockhead, holding meetings both for children and adults. There has been a good work done, especially among the little ones. The adult meetings, though not so largely attended, were very impressive, and there were professed decisions there also.

An interesting mission has been held at Abersychan by Pastor Owen Tidman. The congregations increased each night. The evangelist's faithful utterances against sin in all its forms, and the gentle loving drawing of believers to a deeper spiritual life, have made lasting impressions. The houses were personally visited by Mr. Tidman and his band of workers, and many anxious ones were dealt with. The good work is still going on, and the churches in the town are feeling that a time of refreshing has come from the presence of the Lord.

A week's mission has been concluded at Ebenezer Baptist Church, Potter-street, Great Homer-street, Liverpool. The services were conducted by Mr. G. M. Scott, and in the afternoon for women by Bessie McLachlan, hon. superintendent of the Bethesda Girls' Training Institution. Many have awakened to their responsibility and been quickened; whilst unconverted ones have professed decision, among them some notable cases. The labours of the workers were so greatly honoured by God that a second mission is in contemplation.

PETER MCMILLAN, Pastor.

University Notes.

[FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENTS.]

OXFORD.

THE annual meetings in connection with the London Society for Promoting Christianity among the Jews took place last week. Rev. W. T. Gidney and Rev. S. T. Bachert represented the Society. The latter has been working for twenty-four years in Hamburg, and gave some very interesting and impressive accounts of the work.

An excellent programme for the term has been arranged by the University Missionary Union. Mr Hope Gill, of the China Inland Mission, has already spoken, and no less than five bishops are to visit us. We trust that many may be led to consecrate themselves to God's work abroad.

Rev. R. T. Ottley draws large numbers to his Bampton Lectures on the Old Testament.

Several Oxford men are to go out to the mission field this year either as clergymen or laymen. Japan, South Africa, and North Africa are some of the places to which they are going.

CAMBRIDGE.

Professor MacAlister delivered a lecture on Friday last in the Divinity Schools on "Anthropology and Christianity," which was well attended by graduate and undergraduate members of the University.

The University sermon on Sunday was preached by Dr. Montgomery, Trinity College, Bishop of Tasmania. He spoke mainly of the religious needs and disadvantages of the Australasian branch of the English race and our duty to them.

The C.I.C.C.U. address was delivered by Dr. Saumarez-Smith, Bishop of Sydney and Primate of Australia. His text was Neh. iv. 6, "For the people had a mind to work." The lesson drawn from it was our obligation as a nation to arise from our religious apathy.

Golden Text.—Verse 18.

JAMES was introduced to us in our last lesson as president of the church in Jerusalem, and taking an important part in the council held in that city. He is called the brother of our Lord, and was either the son of Joseph by a former marriage, or the actual son of Joseph and Mary, or a cousin adopted into the family. During the life and ministry of Jesus he had not believed in Him (John vii. 3-5), but after the crucifixion and the resurrection he is found among the disciples in the upper room (Acts i. 13). His character may be judged by the very practical tone of his epistle, by the conciliatory spirit he showed in the Jerusalem council, and by his title, James the Just.

There appears at first sight to be some conflict between Paul and James. If some of the statements of Rom. iii. and iv. were placed side by side with some verses from this lesson they would appear contradictory. "Not of works," says Paul; "Not without works," says James. The one labours to exclude works, the other labours just as earnestly to include them. But they do not disagree. They are writing with different objects. One seeks to correct the self-righteousness which makes works the ground of justification; the other warns against a mere notional faith that produces no effect upon the life.

The lessons to be enforced are these:—

1. There may be a worthless profession of faith (14-17). Note the word, "If a man say" (14). It deals with the man's profession, which he may make by accepting the Christian creed, by submitting to Christian ordinances, and by joining a Christian church. There is nothing wrong in a Christian profession. On the contrary, it is right and necessary (see Mark xvi. 16; Rom. x. 9, 10). Every man who has faith ought to "say" it; but many may say it while they do not possess it.

Now, what is the value of such a profession? James answers by an illustration (15-16). Describe the scene he suggests—the naked brother needing help—the profession of sympathy (16) (again note the word "say"), and the withholding of practical help. The question, "What doth it profit?" (16), does not refer merely to the destitute man, but to the man who professes sympathy for him. Feelings of sympathy that do not express themselves in action only harden the heart. To weep over the sorrows of another without doing anything to relieve them is worthless. "An ounce of help is worth a ton of sympathy." So faith, if it be a mere profession, is unacceptable to God, and worthless to the professor (17).

2. Living faith manifests itself in good works (18—23). Mere orthodoxy is therefore not true faith. The devils are orthodox (19). But their faith works no repentance—no change in their conduct, and is therefore worthless. It is as dead as the body when the spirit has departed from it (26).

The man of true faith opposes his "say" against the empty "say" of the worthless professor (18). Faith will "shew" itself. God can see it in the heart (Mark ii. 5); but man can only see it in its outward effects. It is not by a label that you know a fig-tree, but by the fruit that grows upon its branches. It is not by Abraham's profession that you know him to have had faith, but by his life. James, like Paul, says that Abraham was justified by faith (23); but James shows that his faith manifested itself by works. Run through some of the events of his life, and show how faith was always the spring of action. His call when in Mesopotamia; his separation from Lot; his fight with the four kings, and his refusal to be enriched by the King of Sodom; his offering up of Isaac—all these showed his faith in action. He believed God, therefore he obeyed.

It is foolish to say that it does not matter what you believe so long as you act aright. There can be no right conduct that has not faith for its basis. Test it in the Garden. God has said to man, "Eat of this fruit and you shall die." The serpent says, "You may eat and not die." The conduct is determined by the faith. Which of the two does he believe? Now apply it to yourselves. Do you believe God's message concerning sin and judgment, concerning Jesus as Saviour, concerning the necessity of repentance and faith in Him? Then, of course, you have repented and believed, and are now living to serve and please Him. If not, what is the worth of your faith?

Lifeboat Saturday was observed in London on Saturday last, when street and other collections were made. It was hoped that a considerable sum would be realised for the benefit of this valuable and life-saving institution.

The Y.M.C.A.

A new Association has been started at Blyth Northumberland, and others are in course of formation at Epping and Lewisham.

A site has been acquired by the Leicester Association for a new building, and a scheme for the erection of a handsome and commodious structure is being developed.

At a meeting at the Stafford Rooms, Edgware Road, Association, on Thursday evening, a presentation was made to Mr. Basil Hewer, general secretary, who has taken up the work at Aldersgate Street.

The Spring Conference of the South-East District Union of the Y.M.C.A.'s was held at Tunbridge Wells, by invitation of the local Association, on Wednesday. The report showed a slight decrease in the number of Associations, but an advance in membership upon the return for the previous year.

The last of a series of "At Homes" at the Coventry Association was held on Thursday, and was crowded out, The Mayor acted as host, and defrayed the cost of the gathering. The secretary stated that the membership had gone up to 260; the open-air mission was doing good work, and the various organisations prospering.

Reports are to hand of the annual meeting of the Pietermaritzburg Association, which is doing an excellent work, and has in hand an important scheme for a new building. Mr. Henry Bale, the president, said the Association had become a necessity to a large number of young men. He believed there was nothing like their Sunday night meeting in the whole of South Africa.

The thirty-second convention of the Young Men's Christian Associations of America has just been held at Mobile, Ala. The attendance was not large, only 345 delegates and 153 corresponding members being present, owing to the long distances to be travelled. But it is felt that the gathering will mark an epoch in Association history. In all over 13,000 dollars were pledged for the international work, more than any convention has done before.

The Y.W.C.A.

At the annual meeting of the Newport Branch very encouraging reports were submitted. The secretary, Miss Kerr, who has been most indefatigable in her work, is resigning.

The Edinburgh Association had its annual gathering of friends last week. There are now in the city forty-two branches with over 2000 members. The Institute in George-street is self-supporting.

Mrs. Martin, a very active worker in the Stornoway Association, is about to leave for Oban, to the great regret of all her friends. Mrs. Martin held the post of president for nine years, and as a token of esteem and respect, was presented with a purse of sovereigns, subscribed for by the members of the Association and others.

At the annual meeting of the Clapham Institute, Rev. F. A. C. Lillingston, who presided, urged all members to attend the Bible and other classes. Miss Parker Brown gave an account of the work of the Factory Helpers' Union, and Rev. J. Carnegie Brown spoke on the Lord's promise, "I will never leave thee nor forsake thee."

The annual meetings of the Swanage Branch were held on the 13th inst. The principal speakers at both meetings were the Hon. Miss Portman, district referee for Dorset, and Ardill, hon. sec. South of England Division. The latter gave most interesting addresses on the world-wide character of the Association. The annual report tells of steady progress, and of God's blessing on the local work and the holiday home work.

A movement has been set on foot by Miss Alcock, in the name of the Irish Y.W.C.A., to commemorate the Queen's Jubilee by raising a sufficient fund to assist the thirteen homes and institutes which the Y.W.C.A. have opened throughout Ireland. Each home is to a certain extent self-supporting, but most require outside help in the form of voluntary contributions; these will be gladly received by Miss Phœnix, 75, Harcourt-street, Dublin.

In connection with the opening of a Y.W.C.A. Ladies' Club, at 26, George-street, Hanover-square, W., an At Home was held by the Viscountess Portman, president of the London Association, on Thursday last. About 250 friends of the Association attended, and short addresses were given. Two rooms on the second floor, to be used as tea and writing rooms, and three bedrooms on the top floor have been set apart for the use of members of the club. A good number have already joined, and it is believed that country workers especially will find the rooms useful when visiting London.

The annual meeting of the Dundee branch was largely attended. The membership had been increased by 151 members. The institute, boarding house, and registry office have all been largely taken advantage of, as well as the restaurant, which had proved a great success. A new club, as a development of "The Welcome," will be started as soon as the new building is finished. The reports from the Errol, Broughty Ferry, East-end, and other branch meetings were read. Mission work had been energetically carried on while all the domestic economy classes had been well attended, the numbers joining amounting to 1045.

Personalia.

Mr. W. G. Sprigg, secretary of the Cape Town Y.M.C.A., is now visiting this country. He proceeds to Scotland next week, and hopes to sail for America at the end of June, going thence to Australia on his way back to South Africa.

Rev. Dr. Samuel Kinns.—A correspondent writes of this esteemed clergyman, widely known as the author of "Moses and Geology":—"Last Lord's Day I went to hear the Doctor at Holy Trinity Church, Minories, on the eastern border of the City. A quaint, old-fashioned edifice, the church is itself worth a visit; but it is a pity that such small congregations (the rule with City churches) gather to hear the preaching of the aged vicar. There are certainly few places where can be heard nowadays sermons of such quality as Dr. Kinns is accustomed to deliver. The sermon in the morning was the first of a series on the life of Abraham."

Obituary.

DR. MACTAVISH, INVERNESS.

One of the fathers of the Free Church has passed away in the person of Rev. John Mactavish, D.D., senior pastor of the Free East Church, of Inverness, who died on Tuesday last week. Dr. Mactavish was in the eighty-first year of his age. The inclement weather of the past few weeks had taxed his health. About a week ago he had a severe attack of influenza, which developed into inflammation of the lungs.

Dr. Mactavish held to his post to the last, though assisted latterly by Rev. Allan Cameron, associate pastor, who succeeds to the charge. He was a Highlander, but was for many years minister in the Presbyterian Church of Canada. Three years ago his jubilee as a minister of the Gospel was celebrated with an enthusiasm which evinced the respect and love in which he was held throughout the North of Scotland. His preaching was distinguished by a fine breadth of view, a masterful grasp of theology, and a keen evangelical spirit. He leaves a family of four daughters and a son to mourn his loss.

MR. SAMUEL COLGATE.

The death is announced of Mr. Samuel Colgate, a wealthy member of the family of American Christian philanthropists. Like William, his father, and James, his brother, his benefactions were largely in aid of Baptist colleges and missionary institutions. He died on April 23, at his home "Seven Oaks," near Orange, New Jersey, at the age of seventy-five. The Chicago Standard says of him:—"He studied in Madison University (now Colgate), intending to follow one of the professions, but eventually entered the old house of Colgate and Co., founded by his grandfather, in the business of which he participated with Christian zeal and good business judgment. A lover of missions, he gave liberally, and, when it became necessary, gave time to the executive direction of our missionary societies. His benefactions to Colgate Academy in connection with those of his older brother, and later to Madison University, were among the earlier large and noteworthy gifts to education which have since led the way for others. He served for twenty-five years as member of the finance committee of the American Tract Society, and for a long time as president of the Society for the Suppression of Vice."

Irish Notes.

The Irish Methodists report an increase this year of nearly 400 members.

Much regret is felt by a wide circle of friends in this country at the death of Rev. J. S. Collins by drowning in China. It is not yet known how the sad event took place.

The Missions of the Irish Presbyterian Church in China have made progress during the past year. There have been 610 baptisms, and the membership has increased from 1202 to 1790. From India also most encouraging reports have come to hand.

Fifteen adult converts have been received into the Church of Ireland in Dublin, from the Church of Rome. In July last thirty-three similar converts were received at a single service. This makes nearly fifty in less than a year.

THE BOOK WORLD.

DIAMOND JUBILEE LIVES.

The Life of Queen Victoria (1s. F. Warne & Co.), simply told for Children, by Mrs. L. Valentine, surveys, with abundance of illustration, the career of "our Queen and Empress," and sketches the progress of industry and invention.

Queen Victoria and Her People. (1s. 6d. Educational Supply Association.) This is a very comprehensive story. Copies are offered to school managers, masters, and mistresses, as well as S.S. superintendents at 6d. net, provided they are given or sold without profit to the children. The terms may be had from the E.S. Association offices, 42A, Holborn-viaduct.

The Queen's Reign for Children, by W. Clarke Hall (2s. 6d. T. Fisher Unwin), is not exactly a personal biography, but a review of what has been done during her long reign for the amelioration of the condition of oppressed children and the prevention of cruelty towards them in many forms. "Out of a hundred statutes passed directly in the interests of children ... not one dates back beyond the Victorian era." The barbarities of the past are horrible reading, but it is gratifying to recall the heroic efforts of Lord Shaftesbury and such men.

The Story of Queen Victoria. Among the many biographies of Her Majesty a prime place must be given to BRITAIN'S QUEEN; The Story of her Life and Reign. By Thomas Paul. (5s. J. F. Shaw & Co.) The book is produced in royal style, and has seventy-five illustrations besides an excellent collotype portrait. For some years Mr. Paul's story of the Queen has enjoyed wide popularity; this edition, with "ninetieth thousand" on the title-page, is enlarged and brought thoroughly up to date. The book will be a favourite for presentation purposes. A cheaper edition, the "Silver" (1s.), will be welcome in Sunday-school and village libraries. It is not so complete as the more expensive edition, but yet it is a marvel in its way. The smaller work may also be had in a still cheaper form, the "People's" edition. (6d.)

DEAN FARRAR ON THE BIBLE.

In the introduction to his new work on the Bible,* Dean Farrar informs us that his aim has been to strengthen the cause of Christianity by exposing and meeting misconceptions such as distress many earnest men and women of our day. He sets himself to show the inestimable preciousness of the Bible; but before coming to this he jealously distinguishes between the Book as he views it and the Book as it is loved and studied by many other men, whose piety he does not call in question, and whose learning he cannot pretend to dispute. He claims to be mainly positive; but much that he calls positive is only so with qualifications, and to many readers it must bear a decidedly negative relation.

It is sadly true that we have to look for Christian doctrine under immense accumulations of ecclesiastical opinion and theological thought; and "what is the chaff to the wheat" in intrinsic value? Dr. Farrar holds that it is the same with the Scriptures; hence, before writing on the supremacy of the Bible, he conducts a process of "simplification" in a series of chapters on the Canon and Inspiration, Interpretation and Higher Criticism, and so forth. The Dean treads heavily in this part of his work; although here, most assuredly, he should have taken off his shoes, and have walked as on holy ground. As is usual with advanced writers, he discusses at length theories and definitions, old and new, and apparently he has little notion that some of the positions he assails would not for a moment engage the defence of many of the most conservative scholars of our day. As to Inspiration, in particular, there is a growing disposition to have done with theory and definition, and to rely upon Scripture statement, acknowledged facts, and the unchallengeable word of Christ.

The Dean serves up an imposing selection of familiar difficulties and discrepancies, and although he hesitates to hold the Book responsible for these, he keeps them prominently and prejudicially in view while claiming to show what the Bible really is. Statements which have been advanced in mere speculation, Dr. Farrar repeats without reserve and with emphasis. To expose the fallacies and inconsistencies, and present the other point of view, with its ever-increasing body of facts and reasons, is impossible in a brief review. It is with pleasant surprise that one passes from the first part with its assault and battery to the second with its high commendation of the Book, accompanied by illustrative incidents from history, and gleanings from a wide field of literature. Here the Dean's ready flow of language and characteristic fervour are employed to real purpose; and it is easy to see that what he has said of the existence of other sources of light beside the Bible, may be allowed to stand on the principle of the infinitely small being contrasted (not compared) with the infinitely great.

There is refreshment in this book; but it is not uniformly refreshing. It is a book for those who can discriminate, not for others. The author has a horror of people taking a set of doctrines or views to the Bible; but we can see little to choose between this condition and that of a man who would go to the Book with his mind made up in agreement with the Dean on theories of inspiration, and with his method of cutting knots that might in reverence of spirit be untied. It is deeply true that we find in the Bible what we look for—some see a bundle of documents, and others the Word of God, amply authenticated and worthy of all confidence; some see a mere literary style, others a Divine revelation, progressive it is admitted, but yet "full of grace and truth." These latter look for truth, on the surface and beneath, and they see nothing besides; others, such as the Dean, having a critical eye, think they detect mistakes, microscopical and otherwise. As a bold denier of infallibility to the Book, the critic is, of course, prepared to hear of a curious personal slip; and may have observed with surprise his error on p. 206, where he refers to the sections into which the Pentateuch is divided for Sunday lessons in the synagogue!

* THE BIBLE: ITS MEANING AND SUPREMACY. By F. W. Farrar, D.D., F.R.S., Dean of Canterbury. (15s. Longmans, Green & Co.)

Joy: A Fragment. By Mrs. H. L. Sidney Lear. (2s. 6d. Longmans.) This is all that was written of a companion volume to Mrs. Lear's well-known "Weariness." A prefixed memoir, brief but interesting, does not conceal the High Church principles of the author.

In their New Pansy Series (4d. each), Messrs. Partridge & Co. have issued Miss Priscilla Hunter and other stories, by "Pansy"; Avice, a Story of Imperial Rome, by Eliza F. Pollard; and Wild Bryonie; or, Bonds of Steel and Bands of Love, by Jennie Chappell. These are excellent books in a popular form.

Prophecy Made Easy, by I. S., is a handy little work, opening up those portions of Holy Scripture which are held to predict the fall of the Mohammedan power, and such as foretell the return of the Jews to Palestine. The pages are altogether reverent, and calculated to kindle in the heart of many the bright hope of the Lord's return. (1s. Partridge.)

Litanies of Life. By Kathleen Watson. (2s. James Bowden.) These brief sketches are full of the mingled pathos and tragedy of human life. They are a reminder of the many hidden, but fateful dramas that are being enacted all around us—known only to God and the chief actors. The imaginative power of the writer is very marked.

Mrs. Keith Hamilton, M.B. By Annie S. Swan. (3s. 6d. Hutchinson & Co.) These leaves from the diary of a Christian lady doctor will be of deep interest to many, especially as they are here ably handled by this brilliant writer. Vivid and telling glimpses are afforded by many of the follies and sorrows that lurk behind the polish of modern society.

On the Use of Science to Christians. By Emma Marie Caillard. (1s. and 1s. 6d. Nisbet). Here we are told why we should accept Evolution, and view prayer and faith through scientific spectacles. The author is always reverent; but her articles (for the most part reprinted from Good Words for last year) do not strike us as calculated to assist experienced Christians.

Collins' Complete Atlas. (6s. Wm. Collins, Sons & Co.) This is a very useful publication, containing eighty full-page maps of modern geography, embracing the latest discoveries and changes in boundaries, with an alphabetical index of fifty thousand names. There are many small inset maps, also several setting forth physical phenomena. For general purposes this is a very good atlas.

The Story of the Year—1896-7. By Sarah Geraldina Stock. (1s. C.M.S. House.) An ideal publication in its way. It is a delight to read its outline of work, and a pleasure to examine its engravings, some depicting scenes of heathen life, others portraying workers whose features are familiar at home as well as honoured abroad. Students of missions should not overlook this annual, upon which much conscientious labour has been bestowed.

Someone is Coming. By the late Rev. John MacNeil. (Marshall Bros. 2s. 6d.) Few will forget the shock when tidings of the sudden death of this marvellous evangelist were flashed from the Antipodes; hence this work, on which he was engaged at the last, will be eagerly welcomed. It is a simple, clear, practical, and deeply spiritual setting forth of the truth concerning the coming again of the Lord Jesus Christ. Rev. H. B. Macartney describes it as straightforward, brief, moderate in view, and penned in absolute subjection to Scripture.

Theology Older than the Bible. By Rev. James Ervine. (1s. net. Dublin: Eason; Belfast: Cleland.) The heavenly constellations, beginning with Virgo and ending with Leo, are here "read" to set forth sin and redemption, the serpent's evil work and Messiah's glorious victory, as outlined by early man on the face of the heavens, and at length placed on the page of Holy Scripture. The treatment is clear, though slight.

Flashes of Wild Beauty. By Rev. Charles A. Fox. (Partridge & Co.) We have often been surprised that the poetry of Mr. Fox is not more widely known than it is; quite apart from the deeply spiritual tone which pervades his verses, there is a high degree of literary excellence about them which gives him a distinctive place amongst modern writers. The present volume will be welcomed by all who value the author's larger work. It is characteristic throughout, and has the freshness and subtle beauty of previous efforts. In our last issue we gave one of the poems.

The Silver Cross: A Collection of Poems and Hymns for the Sick and Suffering. Compiled and arranged by Helen Douglas. (3s. 6d. G. Bell & Sons.) Bishop Wilkinson, of St. Andrews, writes an introduction to this chastely-produced volume. The compiler's aim has been to bring together pieces bearing a message of strength and comfort to the sick and weary, and in this particular she has achieved a distinct success. She has gone wider afield than many of our readers would care to go; but with the exception of here and there an expression in hymns from Roman Catholic or Ritualistic sources, the book is beautiful, with its contents calculated to lighten the burden of many a sufferer.

The Evolution of the Universe, by William W. Howard, though a large work, is but a portion of a system of philosophy, the outcome of long years of thought and inquiry. The author aims to show that Theism, and Theism only, can afford a solution of the problem of existence. He examines with care the views of Descartes, Spinoza, Kant, Spencer, Darwin, and others; he believes in Divine revelation as well as in human reason. Dealing with the philosophy of the Infinite, Mr. Howard writes on immensities, and enjoys the exercise; he is always reverent, and ever employs clear and unaffected language. On such subjects as Being and Creation, Time and Space, he is eminently readable; and Atheistic and Pantheistic theories, though to-day so greatly favoured in the world of thought, are shown to explain nothing, while Agnosticism is a mere adjunct of Scepticism. Evolution is regarded as involving Involution, and the ultimate aim of God is held to be "to evolve all the available parts of creation into forms of intelligence, to enjoy his goodness, delight in his praise, and luxuriate in his knowledge." Mr. Howard's is a buoyant and hopeful philosophy, and the perusal of his book is a mental stimulus. The weak points in the generalisations and arguments of great men are boldly exposed. We do not think that Mr. Howard has done much to establish the Evolution theory. As an argument that only Theism can account for existence, this work of 700 large pages deserves the attention of thoughtful readers. (12s. 6d. net. Nisbet & Co.)

Mr. Cheyne Brady's publications are now on sale at the Children's Book Room, 158, Aldersgate-street, E.C.

GOD BLESS THE QUEEN, by F. C. Griffith (Weekes, 2d. net), is a chorus suitable for Jubilee celebrations. An edition of words only is also obtainable, 3s. per 100.

Messrs. Shaw have issued T. Paul's BRITAIN'S QUEEN in their popular "Home" series. (3d.) An abridged edition "for the million," has been published for 1d.

Mr. W. L. Card, of Bristol, has written a booklet on "Why all Christians ought to shun the drink traffic," which is published by Messrs. Burnett & Russell, 337, Strand, W.C., price 2d.

AMONG THE CHURCHES.

Church of England.

Dr. A. Hamilton Baynes, Bishop of Natal, who is now on a visit to this country, has been seriously ill from typhoid fever.

The Bishop of London has intimated his intention to assign thirty places to Nonconformist ministers on the steps of St. Paul's Cathedral for the Jubilee service on June 22.

The Bishop of Liverpool has attained his eighty-first year. His health continues to be very good, and he still retains plenty of his old vigour. He is the oldest Bishop on the Bench.

Canon Tristram, who recently met with an accident while travelling in the East, and was detained at Jerusalem, has now returned to the College, Durham, and is progressing favourably.

Towards the cost of the restoration of the parish church at Ansterfield, Notts, the home of Bradford, one of the Pilgrim Fathers, the sum of £250 has been received from the Society of Mayflower Descendants in America.

Rev. A. Bromley Crane, Roman Catholic priest, has been received into the Anglican Communion by Rev. L. H. Postgate, curate of St. John's Church, Kidderminster. Mr. Crane read the form of renunciation of the errors of Rome, appointed by Convocation in 1891.

Bishop Ellicott's invitation to the clergy of Bristol to listen to a "good-bye address" does not indicate the Bishop's resignation. It means that Lord Salisbury will shortly recommend the Crown to appoint a bishop to the new see of Bristol, Dr. Ellicott continuing to hold the Bishopric of Gloucester.

Rev. R. J. Seton-Adamson, writing from Brookholm, county Grey, Ontario, pleads for help in building a mission church at that Canadian station. The ground is purchased, and £200 is needed for the building. Rev. William Adamson, The Vicarage, Old Ford, London, E., will be glad to hear from sympathising friends.

Rev. W. R. Mowll, vicar of Christ Church, North Brixton, has been presented with an illuminated address of welcome upon his return from a two months' trip to the Holy Land, the presentation being made by Rev. J. P. Hobson, on behalf of the congregation. It was accompanied by an album, containing signatures of over 500 members of the congregation.

Archdeacon Madden, in the absence of the Bishop of Liverpool, dedicated at St. Helen's, last week, the new mission and colportage van, which has been presented to the Church Army, for work in the Liverpool diocese. The Archdeacon said that a church, to be a living church, must be aggressive, didactic, and parental.

The Queen Victoria Clergy Sustentation Fund, due to the initiative of Lord Egerton of Tatton, has received such general support throughout the country that within the year the amount paid or promised reached a total of £30,668. The object in view is to make annual grants to supplement the incomes of poor benefices, and not to increase the value of the living by any permanent endowment.

Congregational.

Rev. Frank Tucker, formerly of Durban, Natal, has accepted a call to the pastorate of the church at Looe, Cornwall.

Albion Sunday-school, Southampton, has held its anniversary sermons. The school roll numbers 800, and twenty scholars have joined the church during the past year.

A new mission-hall is to be erected at the village of Upnor, in connection with Vines Church, Rochester (Rev. J. Kitto Baker). The estimated cost is £750, towards which £500 is already in hand.

Wilts and East Somerset Union has celebrated its centenary. Rev. S. B. Stribling, who read a paper on the history of the union, referred to the sad condition of the country one hundred years ago, especially in the rural districts, as compared with the present state of affairs, and spoke of the revival of Whitefield and Wesley that led to the formation of that and similar unions throughout the country.

The special commission on the work of the London Congregational Union have decided on their report, and it will shortly be presented to every delegate of the Union. Briefly, the commission have considered four questions: (1) Whether the work of chapel-building should be severed from the general work of the Union; to which the commission answer, No. (2) Whether there should be a devolution of authority to the various districts; and after weighing the evidence it is recommended that each district have control of its own affairs, except that the final decision as to grants recommended by the district committees remain with the Council. (3) The best way of appointing representatives on the Council; concerning which the opinion is that the representative system now adopted be adhered to, but that the Council have power to co-opt a number not exceeding twenty in addition.

Calls.—Mr. C. H. Shave, of Cheshunt College, to Barry, Glam.; Mr. J. W. Smith, of Fakenham, to Shillington, Beds.; Rev. W. H. C. Palmer, of Spa Fields, London, to Emmanuel Church, Tunbridge Wells.

Baptist.

At the Long Preston Church eight believers were recently immersed by the pastor, Rev. F. T. Wildgoose.

Mrs. Holman Bentley, from the Congo, has returned to this country for a brief visit. She is in fairly good health.

The missionaries at Serampore have recently baptized thirteen young people, eight being elder scholars in the high school, and five normal class students. There is evidence of a revival in the school and college.

The scheme for reorganising the Welsh Baptist Union with the view of endowing it with some legislative powers, has now been published, and will be fully discussed at future meetings of the associations throughout Wales. It is proposed that under the new rules every resolution passed by the Union shall be binding upon the churches.

Calls.—Mr. Edward Smith, of Rawdon College, to Morecambe.

Resignations.—Rev. E. H. Brown, Twickenham; Rev. W. A. Barker, Brixham.

Methodist.

It is understood that Dr. R. N. Young, Governor of Handsworth College, will not seek reappointment.

Rev. Charles Garrett is in indifferent health. The membership of the district is 21,783, an increase of seventy-nine.

By way of commemorating the centenary of John Wesley's death, the church at Hawley-square, Margate, has been modernised and enlarged, the total cost being £2700.

Rev. A. Baldwin and Mrs. Buckenham (P.M.) have arrived in England after a long and painful journey. It is proposed to make a suitable presentation to the latter lady, in recognition of her heroic toil and sufferings.

The new iron church recently opened at Walthamstow, in connection with London Fifth Circuit (U.M. Free Churches), is gathering a large congregation, and gives promise of proving from every standpoint a success.

Manchester District (N.C.) not only stands at the head of the districts in numbers and in contributions to Connexional funds, but this year has the largest net increase of members. Apart from the three missions at Bury, Crewe, and Blackpool, there is a total of 5000 members, an increase of 219.

Rev. John Innocent, of the New Connexion Chinese Mission, who first sailed for China over thirty-seven years ago, will shortly arrive in this country with Mrs. and Miss Innocent. Rev. John Robinson, the second senior missionary in China, has had a relapse, and is coming back to England to consult a specialist.

Presbyterian.

Rev. W. B. Cooper, of Durham, has accepted the call from Bristol.

Rev. Benjamin Bell, Withington, Manchester, and Mrs. Bell have celebrated their silver wedding.

A Reuter's telegram from Philadelphia says that Dr. Chapman, pastor of the Bethany Presbyterian Church, has received a call to Marylebone Church, London.

Rev. Charles Moinet, D.D, on Sunday closed his pastorate at the Presbyterian Church, Kensington, having accepted the repeated invitation to the pastorate of the recently formed church at Bromley, Kent.

Rev. Alexander Gillies has been appointed to go out as a married missionary to Tanna, there to be a colleague of Mr. Watt, who has surrendered his own salary for the purpose. Mr. Gillies is to sail the day after the Foreign Missions night in the Free Church of Scotland General Assembly.

The memorial-stone of the new church for the Putney congregation (Rev. Donald Matheson) was recently laid. The collections, including children's collecting cards and £100 from Lord Kinnaird, amounted to £466. The proposed church and manse will cost £8000, and £3300 is still needed to open the premises free of debt.

Two vacant congregations in the North of England have recently secured ministers from across the border—viz., West Hartlepool, which has called Rev. James Adamson, assistant minister in a United Presbyterian congregation in Greenock; and Ancroft Moor, over which Rev. Norman Wright, a United Presbyterian probationer, has just been ordained.

Society of Friends.

The committee on Armenian Relief has spent £14,000 already, and wants more funds to meet the distress.

The membership of London yearly meeting has risen 200 during the year. Dublin remains stationary. The First Day-School Association has 43,376 scholars, and 1240 teachers, being an increase on last year.

At the "meeting for sufferings" on the 7th inst., the draft of an address to the Queen was passed for presentation. Though finding expression at times differently from other churches, none are more loyal than Friends.

Frederick Taylor, of Oxford, has been appointed secretary of the Friends' First Day-School Association, in place of the late lamented John T. Dorland, whose early and sudden death occurred over a year ago. Friends will be glad of the appointment.

The secretary of the Foreign Missionary Association has issued an appeal for £3000 to clear off the year's debt. One friend has offered £500 in case the rest is made up by next Monday. Madagascar, India, China, and Syria are being well pushed forward by our missionaries.

London yearly meeting is now in session and many are the hopes that it may be a time of much blessing. American yearly meetings are often thus favoured. Next Monday and Tuesday evenings will be the Foreign and Home Missions annual meetings. The public is most cordially invited.

Fallen Asleep.

At Stewarton, Rev. George Peill, Congregational minister.—At Enfield, Mr. Henry C. Wales, J.P., for several years deacon of the Baptist Church.—At Charlestown, Manchester, Mr. Oswald Brown Dickens, a vigorous temperance worker and helper in religious effort.—At Basingstoke, Rev. John Oswald, an experienced minister in the Wesleyan Methodist Church.—In South Africa, whither he had gone for the benefit of his health, Rev. W. J. Staynes, formerly pastor of Baptist churches at Hinckley and Southsea.—At Armley, Leeds, Mr. George Scarlett, long a deacon, and for nearly fifty years connected with the local Baptist Church.—At Shrewsbury, Rev. H. W. Stafford, for over fifty years a preacher among the Primitive Methodists.—At Nottingham, Mrs. Margaret Goodall, a hearty helper among the New Connexion Methodists.—At York, Rev. R. Smith, a former president of the Primitive Methodist Conference, and governor of Elmfield College.—At Greenock, Rev. Alex. E. Shand, minister of North Parish.—At Ledaig, N.B., Mr. John Campbell, an elder in the Free Church, and for forty years teacher of a Sunday-school held in a cave near his house.—At Devonport, Alderman William Peek, J.P., Mayor of the borough, and a generous supporter of the Congregational Church.—At Port Elizabeth, South Africa, Rev. J. R. Macpherson, minister of the Scotch Presbyterian Church.—At Newtownbarry, co. Wexford, Ven. John Charles Archdall, M.A., Archdeacon of Fierns, and for sixty-one years rector of Newtownbarry.—At Armagh, Mr. Jno. Nixon, a devoted Methodist class leader, aged fifty-seven years.—At Antrim, Mr. William Shannon, an earnest member of the Methodist Church.—At Redrock, Armagh, Alice, wife of Rev. W. J. Brown, Presbyterian minister.—Rev. Llewelyn Thomas, vice-principal of Jesus College, Oxford.—Rev. R. J. L. M'Ghee, at one time rector of High Roding, Essex, and later principal chaplain to the China expedition under Lord Elgin to Pekin.—On May 7, at Leicester, Mrs. James Bass, of Melbourne Hall Church, for many years a prominent worker in the seaside services at Ramsgate.

Livingstone College.

Sir,—I am proceeding on May 29, for a few months, to the Niger, my old sphere of missionary labour, as a special deputation from the Church Missionary Society. This step has been taken in view of the serious needs of the Mission caused by the death of Archdeacon Dobinson. My special object in writing is to ask the continued sympathy of your readers in the work of Livingstone College, which has proved to be of such great value to the forty-two missionaries who have already gone through the course of training, and nearly all of whom are now scattered in all parts of the world. During my absence my colleague, Mr. McAdam Eccles, will act as principal, assisted by Dr. J. H. Cook, of University College.

I hope to be back soon after the new session begins next October, but as I shall not be at home during the next few months, I should like to remind any who are thinking of entering for the new course that now is the time to apply, and I should be pleased to send full particulars of the College course to any who will apply to the Principal, Livingstone College, Stratford, London, E. Letters so directed will be attended to in my absence.

May I also mention the claims of the East London Medical Mission, which is closely identified with the work of Livingstone College. Funds are urgently needed for carrying on this work in one of the poorest and most needy centres of East London, and it would be a special satisfaction to me, on leaving home at this time, if friends would generously contribute to the maintenance of this Mission. I am thankful to say that owing to the number of students who are at Livingstone College this year, the working expenses of the College will be fully met; therefore I may appeal with the greater force on behalf of the Medical Mission, which helps to form a close connection between home and foreign missions.—Yours faithfully,

Charles F. Harford-Battersby.

Argentina.—Mr. George Graham, who for some years past has been engaged in Gospel work at Las Flores, S. America, supporting himself there by school work, is now on a few months' visit to the home country. During his stay he would be pleased to address any gatherings of his fellow-Christians, on invitation, to describe the spiritual needs and claims of Argentina. His address is Gossom's End, Great Berkhampsted, Herts.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

WE commend for thoughtful perusal the careful and discriminating utterance of Dr. Handley Moule, on the authenticity and inspiration of the Bible (page 16). It is, as he says, being more and more demonstrated by Biblical research that it is "not our knowledge but our ignorance" which generates most of our difficulties. Hence his conclusion is :—

Our reasons for accepting the Bible as out and out the Word of God are strengthened; while a mass of obstructions are cleared away which might have made such belief more difficult.

We are sorry to have to hold over, on account of pressure on our space, an important address delivered by Mr. George Müller at the recent Birmingham Convention. We hope to insert it, in whole or part, in our next issue.

Surely the Beatitude of the Peacemaker will be the portion of our Queen. She has been the means of healing many a breach and bridging over many a Ministerial division during her long reign. An instance of this is given in one of the Jubilee presents to Her Majesty. It comes in the form of a silver model of Prince Charles Edward Stuart's monument at Glenfinnan. The model was presented by Mr. Charles Stewart, of Fasnacloich, and bears the inscription that it is presented "in the sixtieth year of her glorious and beneficent reign to Queen Victoria, the representative, by the grace of God, of the unfortunate Prince." The inscription also states that it is presented by "a member of the clan, who now yields to none in loyalty to the Queen."

A sense of relief has come with the announcement of an armistice between Turkey and Greece; for the present there is a cessation of shedding of blood, and if the Powers will only exercise the influence they possess they will see that the struggle is not renewed, and that the vanquished is not reduced to helplessness. When Lord Salisbury says that no Christian population shall be allowed to pass under Mohammedan rule, the statement is very satisfactory, and we only hope it will be acted upon. Now that Turkey has been so successful, and has received such open sympathy from certain of the Great Powers, it is to be feared that her terms of peace will not be made over easy. We look to Great Britain to hold the scales fairly as between Turk and Greek.

Professor Ramsay, who has lived in the East, says in an article in The British Weekly on "The Situation in Asiatic Turkey" that at the present day the central movement in Asia Minor is, what it always has been, a conflict between the Eastern and the Western spirit. Orientalism revenged the conquests of Alexander by sweeping far into Europe, and for eight centuries reigning supreme in Asia Minor. Now Asia is being driven back from Europe. This would seem to be a see-saw of victory and defeat, now for this side, now for that, an interminable carnal struggle between two creeds. The sooner the conditions of the conflict can be changed, by the introduction of the healing influence of the Gospel, the better for all concerned. At present the struggle too much resembles the ancient battles between the crescent and the cross. We fear that a great many of the so-called Christians are in as great need of a living religion as the Mohammedans with whom they fight.

By the death of Mr. J. H. Raper the temperance cause in this country has suffered a very severe blow. For nearly forty years he has devoted his great abilities both as speaker and administrator to the work of the United Kingdom Alliance. Among temperance workers his name is a household word, but few know with what self-sacrificing zeal he followed out the path to which he believed God had called him. The bearers of the ark fall by the way, but the ark is still with us to be borne. May other hands be made strong to carry it into the battles of the future!

Child corruption of a most dangerous kind is practised by publicans in some parts of London. In order to attract children, sent by their parents for beer, to his own particular liquor shop, the publican offers packets of sweets, and even a small tot-glass of beer. Thus right under our eyes the little ones are being trained in the way of drunkenness. We may well blush for shame that such abominable practices should be permitted in connection with a licensed trade. What is the use of granting a licence unless some control is exercised? The children offered to Moloch suffered and died, and there was an end of it; but in this case the seeds of sin are planted in the fertile soil of the youthful physique, to bear evil fruit a hundredfold and even in unborn generations.

The veracity of Welshmen has been impugned more than once by so reliable an authority as an English Judge. We have always believed that this arose to a large extent not from the Welshman's propensity to economise the truth, but from his ignorance of the English language, or at any rate such language as he would be likely to hear from learned counsel. A remarkable instance comes to us from South Wales. A Welshman at Merthyr was charged with drunkenness, which charge he indignantly denied, but on examination he admitted to the lawyer that he was "intoxicated." His indignation was all the more vigorously expressed when he learned the meaning of the latter word.

One of the questions which is most strongly pressing itself upon the minds of Friends just now relates to their ministry, which hitherto has been weakest on the intellectual side. The problem is: "How to combine the freedom of the operation of the Spirit upon the preacher's heart at the time, with the intellectual fulness and preparedness which are secured by preachers of the sister churches." One Friend pleaded for going to meeting saturated in heart and mind with spiritual grace and Biblical or intellectual material. He was as near the truth, we think, as can be; instances such as Spurgeon show it. Empty men are not the best organs for the Spirit of wisdom.

It seems to us a great pity that Mr. Horatio Bottomley should mar the effect of his princely gift to the shareholders of the ill-fated Hansard Union, by tempting them to speculate with it in certain ventures in which he is interested. Far better for them to "let well alone," and keep what they have got, than risk further loss. As a "reply" to supposed inquiries, he also sends to persons who have had no connection with the "Union" a touting circular, in which he has "no hesitation in recommending"...etc. There are other "Unions" besides the Hansard that are ever open to receive those that "haste to be rich"—and fail.

We are sometimes told that the Roman Catholics have learned toleration, and that there is no possibility of their attempting to repeat the persecutions of the 14th and 15th centuries. This is certainly belied by the treatment which the Rev. Alexander Rogers received at Holywell. The brutal conduct of the Irishmen shows what the Roman Catholics would do if they could, and should open the eyes of those Protestants who are disposed to think that the Romish priests have outgrown their inquisitorial practices. Unfortunately those who attend Protestant Alliance meetings know only too well what treatment to expect from the guild of roughs told off to defend the Romish faith.

While we deeply deplore the leakage to Rome of Anglican clergy and titled persons, it is only fair that we look at the other side of the question, and we extract the following from a Roman Catholic organ :—

His Eminence Cardinal Vaughan, when Bishop of Salford, calculated the annual loss to the faith in Manchester and Salford, through proselytising agencies and through the workhouse system, as 258; those in danger of apostasy through ragged schools, soup kitchens, city missions, etc., numbered 573, making a total for one year under these two heads of 831.

A Catholic census of Manchester and Salford shows, as the Cardinal says, the following appalling statistics of young persons of both sexes under twenty-one: In extreme danger of loss of faith, or practically lost to the faith, 5420; in great danger, 2341; in danger, 1912; total 9673.—Monitor (R.C.)

These figures are very significant, and below are recorded further instances of "leakage" :—

On the recommendation of the Bishop of Worcester, the Rev. A. B. Crane, who has been for years a priest in the Roman Catholic Church, made a "public renunciation" of the errors of the Church of Rome at St. John's Church, Kidderminster.—Birmingham Argus.

Those who were present at the Mission Church in Dublin on Sunday evening, April 25, must have been impressed by the interest which was manifested when, before a crowded congregation, fifteen persons occupied the two front seats as candidates for admission to the church.

The Church of Ireland has a special service for the purpose of receiving Roman Catholics who desire to join her communion. The clergyman who officiates receives each individual by the right hand, and repeats the formula to each one separately, and each newly-admitted member signs the church register.—Erin's Hope.

The following letter has been sent to various business firms in the city :—

Convent of Our Lady of Mercy,
Kilbeggan, Co. Westmeath.

My dear Sirs,—In honour of St. Joseph and Our Blessed Lady, I ask you to collect on the enclosed card only 2s. 6d., to help us to build our Convent and Schools. Masses, Communions, and Rosaries will be offered for all those who aid us in this pressing necessity, and three special Masses will be offered at "Lourdes" for all your wants, on the 31st May, also three for your deceased relations on the same day. A special Mass will be offered on the 19th of March (Feast of St. Joseph) for all your intentions. —I remain, very respectfully in J. C.,

May, '97. St. M. Columba.

What a marvel that intelligent men and women in this highly-educated century should allow themselves to be hoodwinked with such pretensions as these.

It is not a wholesome sign that so much is being said and written of Augustine of Canterbury, and King Ethelbert. The names carry us back to beginnings that we do well to regret, rather than celebrate with rejoicings. Those who wish to look at the matter in the light of history, and see how the case stands regarding the early spread of the Gospel in our land, are recommended to read the compendious booklet, by Rev. W. Adamson, of Old Ford, "Austin's Arrival in Britain" ("English Churchman" Office). Mr. Adamson concludes his investigation as follows :—

The majority of witness as to the Scriptural apostolic succession of Divine grace and truth establishes beyond gainsaying: (1) That Austin did little or nothing of direct good for English Christianity, and (2) that the British and Keltic evangelists were those whom God the Holy Spirit inspired and blessed. We certainly owe to Austin that "prelatic organisation" in which Rome excels—which Theodore of Canterbury introduced into the British Church—which Becket and Laud attempted to exercise to their cost—and with which we have been more or less plagued ever since.

It will be remembered that Christianity was widely spread in our land before the coming of Austin, and independently of his efforts. It is cause for gratitude, also, that in God's wisdom no single name can with certainty be associated with the great pioneer work, although we are permitted to honour Columba, Aidan, and Chad.

We referred incidentally last week to the Sunday railway labour involved in the conveyance of theatrical companies. The following extracts from a highly eulogistic life-sketch in The Daily Mail of the "initiator of theatrical Sunday trains" deserves the attention of Christian shareholders, especially of the Midland Railway :—

To-day a theatrical rarely thinks of travelling save on Sunday. And very luxurious is the accommodation provided for him and his sister artiste....

It is the favourite amusement of many of the youths of Birmingham, Derby, Sheffield, Leeds, Normanton, and York to watch the arrival and departure of the theatrical specials on Sunday afternoon. Each takes bundles of dainty provisions (and often small bottles of spirits) to the beauty who has enslaved him for six consecutive nights, and often when the old love has gone a new one comes in by the next theatrical train....

A special from Birmingham takes four companies to the north. At Derby there are half-a-dozen other companies waiting. A percentage of them board the same train, others leave it, and are conveyed in another direction. One troupe drops off here, another there, and then, at the next important junction, there is another collection and another diffusion. All this has to be carefully thought out, and Mr. Bosworth was the one man who brought it to the level of a science.

The terrible fate of one of the combatants in the prize fight at Ferndale last Sunday morning will afford the sporting editors of our daily papers some food for reflection. The barbaric heroism which they chronicle and laud is bound to bear fruit like this among the youth of the nation. During the last ten years the type of collier in South Wales has considerably improved in general culture, but it is a sad fact that these encounters are no uncommon occurrence in the Rhondda Valley on Sundays. The coroner and jury took a commendable course in committing the principal, and no less than seven abettors, for manslaughter.

The British and Foreign Anti-Slavery Society is calling attention to the illusory nature of the abolition of slavery in Zanzibar. The fifth article of the decree of abolition, so-called, declares that "concubines should be regarded as inmates of the harem in the same sense as wives, and shall remain in their present relations unless they should demand their dissolution on the ground of cruelty," but the cruelty has to be proved to the satisfaction of the Court. Thus the legal status of slavery has not been abolished in Zanzibar and Pemba. If a woman be degraded by an Arab the fetters of slavery are permanently fixed upon her with the consent of the British Government. Bishop Tucker says that there are thousands of women of this class in Zanzibar. We should like to know what amount of cruelty a native Court would consider a sufficient ground for ordering the release of one of these women of the harem. England is not acting up to her old anti-slavery records, and our Government must do a good deal better than this decree.

The most striking feature in the last election in New Zealand was the preference that was given to the character of the candidates above the statement of their views. A good address according to the party standard was, of course, a good thing, but a good man was better, no matter which party he belonged to. The party vote almost became a character vote. The more this becomes the feature of all social and national government, the safer will the kingdom become in all respects in which true safety lies. "Righteousness exalteth a nation," and in public as well as other matters righteousness is only likely to be done by righteous men. Let it be noted that the change in New Zealand is said to be due to the women's vote, which was "revolutionary" only in placing personal character before political creed.

That the Jews who wrote the Psalms, which are so full of delight in God as the everlasting portion of the soul, should (as some have suggested) have had no belief in a future state of rewards and punishments, has always seemed to us an incredible thing. That this was not the case is ably and conclusively shown by Dr. Roberts, of St. Andrews University, who makes an excellent use of the Epistle to the Hebrews as a book written to expound the spiritual meaning of the Old Testament economy. If any one will read Hebrews xi. 13-16 (R.V.) he will see that

The Hebrew patriarchs were influenced by faith as the great motive power of their lives; that by means of it they subordinated the present to the future, looking forward to heaven as their proper home; that for these reasons their lives possessed a nobility in the sight of God, who would see that their highest aspirations should at last be fulfilled in his own blessed presence.

Verses 24-26 (R.V.) carry the same purport. In his article, which appears in The Expositor for May, Dr. Roberts records his conviction that Moses is the author of the Pentateuch.

Mr. Kilburn's Memory Lessons.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS, ETC.

Q. Is it well to repeat aloud or half aloud phrases and sentences which have been learnt in the way you suggest?

A. It is. By so doing the tongue acquires a sort of automatic power in uttering them. This is most important for all who desire to speak a language with fluency and ease.

Do not some say that it is not well to use the law of association for the purposes of memory?

There are many who object to certain fanciful applications of that law, but that is all as far as I know. As it has well been said, "The attraction of association is in the mental world what the law of gravitation is in the material world." This is taught, not by one philosopher or one school of philosophers, but by all. Mr. Kay does not go one step too far when he says, "All our ideas are associated with other ideas, and by means of these they are recalled. Did an idea exist in the mind unassociated with any other idea, it could not be recalled."

Q. Is a good memory after all so important as many make it appear?

A. Does not your boy's position in his class and in school depend to a great extent upon his memory? When he finishes school and begins his college life, will his position in college not depend to a great extent on the strength of his memory? Does not the start he gets in life depend to a great extent on the position he took at school and at college, and on the way he passed his examinations? If these things are so, then a good memory is of great importance. But these things are not all. Memory is as important in life as it was in preparation for life. It is easy to under-estimate the importance of memory, difficult to over-estimate it.

When memory is preternaturally defective experience and knowledge will be deficient in proportion, and imprudent conduct and absurd opinion are the natural consequence.—Dr. Beattie.

A full and accurate memory for pleasure or for pain is the intellectual basis both of prudence as regards self and sympathy as regards others.—Prof. Bain.

The secret of business success is mainly the retention of perceptions and experiences; in social life memory is the fundamental pre-requisite to brilliancy in conversation and the confidence of our fellows. It is the stepping-stone to responsible and honourable positions, and the indispensable sine qud non of the writer and the public speaker.—G. F. C. Smillie.

A good memory is a matter of the highest importance, and no pains ought to be spared in order to acquire it.—Kay.

Memory is the mother of wisdom; for what is wisdom without memory but a babe that is strangled from its birth?—Bias.

Few will doubt the truth of any of the above statements. They are almost self-evident.

Revival in Kintyre.

THE evangelist who has been so much owned by God at Drumlemble and Campbeltown (Mr. Fraser) began evangelistic meetings at Killean (situated between Campbeltown and Tarbert) on Sabbath, May 16. The Mission Hall, which holds about 150, was crowded that evening, and during the week the attendance kept up and the interest deepened. Every night men and women have come to Christ, and the district has been greatly stirred.

A noticeable feature is that many of those brought in are members of a Bible-class and a Y.W.C.A., both held by Miss Waugh, a devoted Bible woman. "One soweth and another reapeth." The ministers of the district, Mr. Macdonald, E.C., and Mr. Stewart, F.C., have both helped in the ingathering. The meetings will be continued, and prayer is asked that the wave of blessing may sweep over the whole peninsula of Kintyre.

West Norwood.—Meetings were held on Wednesday week at Lansdowne Hall, in connection with the opening of a new lecture hall and rooms and fifth anniversary of the church. Pastor Fuller Gooch said it was necessary to have the new hall and rooms built, as the other hall was too large for some of the meetings. The new hall would be used for social meetings, prayer meetings, work in connection with the associations, and Bible readings, and adjoining, a house had been built for the hall-keeper which would be a valuable acquisition. The new hall, rooms, etc., cost about £1100, and the total collected was about £560. Nearly £600 was still required to clear off the debt. Addresses were given during the day by various brethren.

The Leadings of Providence.

By Dr. BALGARNIE.

When thou hearest the sound of a going in the tops of the mulberry trees, then thou shalt bestir thyself; for then shall Jehovah go out before thee to smite the host of the Philistines (2 Samuel v. 24).

DAVID believed in a special Providence; that a Divine eye was ever over him for good, and around him always were the everlasting arms. He considered his entire history and life-work to have been planned out for him by Jehovah; and he was unwilling to take a single step forward or backward without consulting the "lively oracle" as to its wisdom and issues. He could always have the "everlasting yea" or "nay" from the Urim and Thummim of the Tabernacle, and he made unsparing use of the privilege.

And Jehovah was ever ready to respond to his appeal. On the present occasion, however, when he had asked whether he should attack the army of his enemies or wait for their onset, he had a startling revelation made to him which assured him of victory. There was another army than that which he was leading that had gone forth against the enemies of Israel. The forces of heaven were on the march, and the sound of their goings was like that "of many horses rushing to battle." The Lord of Hosts was at their head. David and his men had only to follow in their wake to find themselves "more than conquerors."

Those who would be divinely led must keep in touch with the "forward movements" of the spiritual kingdom. If the forces of Nature "make for righteousness," much more do the forces of the Kingdom of Grace. "The face of Jehovah is against them that do evil, to cut off the remembrance of them from the earth." Unsparing war against the kingdoms of darkness and every stronghold of sin has been waged from the beginning. The armies of heaven are enlisted in this Divine crusade.

David's danger lay in making his wars political, in seeking his own or his nation's aggrandisement, in provoking or avoiding conflicts from motives of self-interest or worldly policy, in following the example or traditions of "the kings of the earth." He had to be taught to take "the Lord's side" in politics, in war, in conquest, in everything; to identify himself fearlessly with the cause of justice, truth, and righteousness; to take the side, when called upon, of the weak against the strong, of the oppressed against the oppressor, of the persecuted against the persecutor, and of God against the world. In such enterprises he was assured of Divine sanction and leadership and had the promise of ultimate victory. "Them that honour Me I will honour."

They must also keep in touch with the oracles of God. David had the "Urim and Thummim," we have the Bible. There the goings forth of Jehovah and the heavenly armies are revealed in their clearness and fulness; the direction and object of God's spiritual forces are unmistakeably indicated; and the way in which we may follow and co-operate with them is rendered so plain "that a fool cannot err therein." Lord Nelson was wont to say that where his orders might be misunderstood, no captain could go far wrong in laying his ship alongside that of the enemy. Our standing orders are simpler: "Abhor that which is evil; cleave to that which is good."

They must also keep in touch with Christ. "Jehovah shall go out before thee." General Gordon, perhaps, stood nearer to "the man after God's own heart" than any hero of modern times. He waited for God as a watchman for the morning. So let us wait and watch, keeping pace with our Leader, neither lagging behind nor pressing on with reckless haste.

The Crisis in China.

OF all movements in human history there can be no doubt that there have not been many of greater significance to the race than that which is beginning now in China. But the bearing of the movement on the future of other nations is appreciated by only the few who are intimately acquainted with it.

When the Tai Ping rebellion took place in China 1855-65, there was a call from John Angell James for a million New Testaments to enlighten China on the Christian religion, and these were supplied. But the New Testament requires much explanation before it can be understood by the non-Christian Chinese.

When China was afflicted with the severest famine that is recorded in all history, 1876-79, Christendom was appealed to for help, and £50,000 were raised in response to the appeal. But China was not then prepared to learn the meaning of that object lesson in universal charity which Christians alone have learnt.

When the great Chinese Empire fell prostrate before little Japan in 1895, it was paralysed and in perfect despair for a time, as their own religions could not help them. But there was a little Christian Society there which succeeded in inspiring many Chinese leaders with a new hope, and these leaders beg us to continue and extend our efforts. This society, however, had insufficient resources to influence the whole empire. It therefore asked me to come home and appeal for China in its present crisis—the greatest even in her long history.

China has 200 centres of examination scattered pretty evenly throughout the provinces, and we had hoped to have sufficient funds (£20 annually for each centre) to have Christian books distributed periodically at these centres where a million students meet annually, but after many months' efforts we have only raised sufficient funds to provide literature for fifteen fresh centres, and had only funds for about fifteen centres previously.

We therefore now appeal in behalf of the twenty provincial capitals of China, which it is of the utmost importance to influence. The capital of each province is like the capital of a European kingdom, the viceroy or governor being the king. Several hundreds of mandarins are always there waiting for office, and serve as advisers of the viceroys and governors, and some 10,000 students assemble there triennially to compete for a degree equivalent to our M.A., not to mention the many thousands of candidates for a degree equivalent to our B.A. The rulers of China are chosen from among these mandarins and students. By influencing these we influence the whole of the four hundred millions of the empire. Already the very limited efforts of the Christian Literature Society to enlighten the upper classes as to the real aims of Christianity have been blessed to widespread good throughout the Empire. For example, a new toleration of Christianity has been obtained, and the Government has ordered schools to be opened in the provincial capitals for the teaching of English and Western science, while the rulers and gentry in these cities are asking the missionaries to find them teachers!

If a good library and lecture hall, with other accessories similar to those of the best Y.M.C.A., and adapted to the special needs of China, were founded in each provincial capital, where the leading missionaries of all denominations and nationalities could deliver systematic lectures to the mandarins and students on Christianity, and its relation to the progress of nations, then an impetus would be given to enlightened progress that would be difficult to surpass, a profound impression of the goodwill of Christian nations towards China would be produced, and a lasting monument set up that would be worthy of Christendom.

For this end we require, not annually, but once for all, a generous gift of £5000 for each province as a nucleus of new intellectual, moral, and spiritual forces for the regeneration of China. Wealth ymen in Great Britain might raise one half, and those in America might raise the other half. Indeed, ten men from each of the five great denominations—viz., Episcopalians, Presbyterians, Congregationalists, Baptists, and Methodists—could easily do it.

In this way the active leaders of the West would give a substantial proof of their goodwill towards the active leaders of the East, and others who are interested in China's welfare might do more for the distribution of Christian literature among the students at the 200 centres of examination.

It is well for us to bear in mind that God has so bound the interests of all the human race together that no nation can attain to its own highest prosperity unless it takes an active part in the attempt to uplift the whole. By helping China in her present plight we may set in motion influences which will react for good on all the nations of the earth.

I sincerely hope that this modified appeal at least will be readily responded to, and that these twenty libraries and lecture-halls, like so many electric lights, will be set up to shine in this surrounding darkness. To intelligent, earnest, and wealthy Christians who look for a worthy object to which to devote the wealth which God has given them, I say that I know no object more permanent in good, more far-reaching and more urgent to-day than this. To leave this crisis for others to attend to is, in this case, to neglect it altogether, as there are none at home as yet who fully realise its importance; and this will be to neglect the greatest opportunity which God has given the Church for centuries or even for a millennium in China.

Further particulars on this subject will be gladly supplied by the undersigned Honorary General Secretary of the Christian Literature Society for China, c/o Baptist Mission House.

Armenian Sufferers at Marash.

Rev. Krikor Behesnilian has recently received a letter from a Protestant resident at Marash, from which the following is an extract:—

"The survivors at Marash have now begun to feel most keenly the loss of their bread winners, as the relief has been discontinued for some time. Many Armenian widows and orphans from the neighbouring villages come to the towns, and wander about the streets seeking for help. One of them was sent to me, and I could not send the poor thing away, though I have myself been deprived of almost everything, and have my own family to support."

Mr. Behesnilian's limited means do not allow him to receive more children into his orphanage at Marash, but he would be glad to help such Christian families in the town as are willing to give shelter to the Armenian villagers in their impoverished homes. Letters to Mr. Behesnilian should be addressed Exeter Hall, Strand, London, W.C.

Damascus and Arabia.

Acts ix. Gal. i.

By Rev. F. B. Meyer, B.A.

IT is permitted to holy and humble natures greatly to help the spirit which is on the point of emerging from bondage. The little maiden, awaking from her death swoon, needed food; Lazarus, whom Jesus had summoned back to life, needed to be unswathed and loosed. The offices which one can perform for another are beautifully illustrated in that simple-hearted saint, Ananias, whom the Lord at this moment called upon the scene, and to whom He entrusted the keys of the Kingdom, that he might unlock Saul's way into perfect peace.

We know very little of Ananias, except that he was a devout man according to the law and was well reported of by the Jews, but evidently he was on intimate terms with the Lord, even Jesus; and the Lord was willing to enter into explanation and reassurances with him, before sending him forth. A very slender taper, if it has caught the fire, may communicate its glow to the powerful wicks of a lighthouse tower.

He gave him a Brother's Welcome.—Though he was fully acquainted with the object of Saul's visit to the city, he accosted him with the sweet and generous term, Brother, Brother Saul. What a thrill that address sent through the heart of the new convert; Pharisaism had never spoken thus, and as he became conscious of this new brother's presence, standing beside him and laying his hand on his fevered brow, the human love was the symbol of the Divine. Ah! Love of God, what must not thou be, though I have persecuted thee so sorely, if the love of man be so strong and tender!

He communicated Priceless Blessings: for, first, sight came clear to the eyes which had beheld nothing since they beheld the glory of that light; and the touch of this devout man, accompanied as it must have been with the upward glance of prayer and faith, was the signal for the reception of the anointing grace of the Holy Spirit, infilling, anointing, and equipping for blessed service.

He baptized Him. What a baptism must that have been! With what emotions must its subject have been united with Christ's death! In years long after, the memory of that solemn moment was fresh to him, and he refers to it in the repeated we of Rom. vi. "We who were baptised into Christ Jesus." "We were buried with Him." "We have become united with Him by the likeness of his death." That baptism was his with his past life, the Pharisaic party, and his vehement opposition to the adherents of "the Way.' Henceforth he was avowedly one with the followers of the Nazarene. From that moment he took up his cross, and began to follow his Master. The cross and grave of Jesus must now stand between him and all that had been, all his friends, ambitions, and opinions, whilst he must turn his face towards labour and travail, hunger and thirst, perils and persecutions, the daily deliverance unto death for Jesu's sake.

There was even a deeper thought. He knew that the root of sins was sin, the assertion of I, the body of the flesh. Too long had this been the motive-force of his career. His efforts after righteousness, as well as his zeal against the Church, had manifested the intensity and virulence of this evil principle. Henceforth, however, he desired to be dead to it, and to accept the position offered to him in the risen Lord, wherein the body of sin should be done away as the centre and impulse of his being, because replaced by the indwelling Spirit of Life, which is in Christ Jesus.

"Yea, thro' life, death, thro' sorrow and thro' sinning
He shall suffice me, for He hath sufficed;
Christ is the end, for Christ is the beginning,
Christ the beginning, for the end is Christ."
Gell.

It does not appear that Ananias was cognisant of all that baptism meant to his new brother Saul. To him it was an act of obedience, a symbol of the washing away of sins. This simple soul had never trodden the difficult way of the cross. How little do we know what is passing in the thoughts of those next to us in life's strange school. But his honest help must have been very comforting to the new disciple as he united himself with the cross of Jesus, and henceforth began to fill up that which was behind of the sufferings of Christ for his Body's sake. All Ananias knew was that the Lord had said, "I will show him how great things he must suffer for my Name's sake.

The Training of the Desert. "I went away into Arabia." It is not quite clear whether he began to preach before going; probably not. He wanted to be alone, to reflect on all that he had seen, to co-ordinate the various revelations with one uniform system of truth, to review the entire course of Old Testament truth from his new standpoint of vision. For this he must have uninterrupted leisure, and he hungered for the isolation and solitude of the wilderness. Men like Ananias might reassure him; the apostles of the Lord might communicate much of his teaching and wondrous ministry; the holy beauty of the life of the infant Church might calm and elevate his spirit; but, above all things, he wanted to be alone with Jesus, to know Him and the power of his resurrection, the anointing which makes human teaching needless, because it teaches all things. Three years under such tuition would doubtless make him so proficient that when afterwards he met those who were of repute among the apostles they would be able to add nothing unto him.

Arabia probably stands for the Sinaitic peninsula, with its sparse population, its marked physical features, its associations with Moses, and the Exodus, and Elijah.

HOW MUCH IT MUST HAVE MEANT to that eager spirit, who was to interpret to all time the inner meaning of the momentous events of which those gaunt mountain solitudes had been the scene. Here the bush had burned with the fire that now burnt within his heart. Here Moses had seen God face to face, as he had seen Jesus. Here the plan of the tabernacle had been communicated, as to him that of the Church. Here the water flowed from the stricken rock, and that Rock was Christ. Here Elijah stood in the entrance to the cave, and the still small voice stole to his heart; and had he not heard that same voice? Beneath those heavens glowing at noon with sultry heat, and radiant at night with myriads of stars, the cloud had moved, directing the march of the pilgrim hosts—for him, too, it shone. Month after month he wandered to and fro, now wrapped in heavenly fellowship, and again plunged into profound meditation. The chariots of God which are twenty thousand, even thousands upon thousands, were all waiting at his beck and call to bear him aloft into the heavenly places.

In those desert solitudes he thought out the argument of the Epistles to the Romans and Galatians. The solid and graceful structures may have been conceived there, preserved for us in Rom. viii., Eph. iii., Col. ii., Phil. ii. by his inspired and heaven-taught soul. All nature seemed to be one vast temple in which he dwelt who could not be contained in temples made with hands, though the hands were those of a Phidias. Was it not the memory of those days spent at the mount of God, when sandstone rocks were the pillars, the stars the solemn lamps, the winds the music, and the traces of storm and thunder-bolt the inscriptions, which came back to him on Mars Hill, enabling him to look with disdain upon the mighty structures of human genius that stood around?

But deeper than all was God's work with his soul. Drop by drop his proud self-reliance and impetuosity drained away. As it happened to Moses during the forty years of shepherd life, so it befel Saul of Tarsus. No longer confident in himself, he was henceforth content to be the slave of Jesus Christ, going where he was sent, doing as he was bidden serving as an instrument and channel for the Lord, to work through him the entire pattern of his will. We all need to go to Arabia to learn lessons like these. And, in one form or another, every soul which has done great work in the world has been there, in the way of obscurity, suffering, disappointment, or solitude. The Lord Himself was led up into the wilderness.

Southsea Convention.

IN the most lovely weather the sixteenth Southsea Convention took place last week. There was much prayer beforehand about this Convention, and it has been abundantly answered. None of the speakers could remain long, but there was such a succession of the Lord's messengers that ther was never a gap unfilled. The early morning meetings were the best we ever had, and the after-dinner accounts of the work of the Lord by some of his workers, both near at hand and far away, and the after-tea impromptu Bible-readings were most interesting and helpful.

Without mentioning any addresses in particular I will endeavour to recall and to record a few of the points which were specially helpful to many. In the first address the Word of God was used as a search-light to enable us to ascertain our whereabouts spiritually. At the outset we were reminded of two things to be aimed at in conventions—(1) to get into a right attitude towards God; (2) to claim and to receive the fulness of the Holy Ghost. Three words in Rom. vi. were referred to as indicating the steps to full consecration—Knowing, Reckoning, Yielding.

In one most interesting address it was mentioned that as a title of Christ "The Lamb" is found twenty-eight times in the Revelation, and frequently as the Lamb that was slain, and only twice (John i. 29, 36) elsewhere in the whole New Testament. Rom. vi. 11-14 was the subject of another address, verse 11 bringing out Faith's stand; verse 12, the exercise of the will; verse 13, the act of consecration; and verse 14, the encouraging promise. The privilege of yielding ourselves to God was very beautifully illustrated by the case of Moses (Ex. ii. 9, 10). Adopted by Pharaoh's daughter, he became her child, and the actual mother was employed by her to nurse it and bring it up for her. Whatever the child needed—food, clothing, schooling, or anything else—she had to apply to Pharaoh's daughter for. The Christian who is fully surrendered is God's care—the object of his loving thought, and training, and guiding, and keeping. The government left in his hands, we need be careful for nothing.

Perhaps the most solemn and searching of all the words spoken at the Convention were in an address on the last morning. It was upon three words in John xii. 6, "Had the bag." The possession of the bag was the test which, in the case of Judas, showed, in process of time, what he was. There is something in the case of every one of us which, sooner or later, will compel us to show what we are. The speaker remarked, "The law of compulsory manifestation of secret character is upon us all." What a solemn thought! When the test comes to be applied, may our answer be, "Christ, come what may. Loyalty to Christ shall reign here."

A very encouraging praise meeting wound up the meetings. Many and bright were the testimonies to the blessing and help received. One and all unite in saying, "The Lord hath done great things for us, whereof we are glad." Now, the great point is to live it all out in daily life—to give back to the gracious and bountiful Giver his own—to serve Him faithfully, loyally, lovingly, with heart and soul—to present our bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable to God, which is our reasonable service. There will be no difficulty about it if, as we were reminded in a choice communion address, we "abide in Christ" (John xv. 11).

Is My Bible Really True?

WHERE DID WE GET IT?

By Rev. Charles Leach, D.D., Manchester.

VI.—THE APOSTOLIC FATHERS.

FROM the Early Fathers we step back to the Apostolic Fathers. By the Apostolic Fathers I here mean men who were alive before the last of the Apostles had passed away. They were friends of the friends of our Lord; men who had heard the story of our Lord's life from the lips of his own disciples themselves, and from many of the intimate and close friends of these.

CLEMENT OF ROME, POLYCARP, AND PAPIAS.

Here again I select three, Clement of Rome, Polycarp, and Papias. I asked you before to fix on the year 175 A.D. Now I ask you to go a hundred years farther back still, and fix in your mind the year 75 A.D. All these three men were born before this date. Polycarp may have been about five years of age, Papias perhaps fifteen years of age, and Clement a man, but of what age I am unable to say.

In this year, 75 A.D., what is important to remember is that one of the Lord's disciples was still alive, and perhaps others. St. John was bishop of the church at Ephesus. Jerusalem had been destroyed five years before. The Apostle Paul had written his Epistles some years before this date on which we fix, and had now for some years been in the enjoyment of that "crown of life" which he tells us the Lord has laid up for the faithful in heaven. All the New Testament, with the exception of the later writings of John, was in the possession of the churches.

CLEMENT OF ROME.

When the Apostle Paul was a prisoner at Rome he was very poor and in needy circumstances. One of the churches which he had planted—that at Philippi—made a collection for him, and sent it to him with good wishes and prayers. Their kindness to him at such a time touched his heart, and drew from him many kind words. He wrote them an affectionate letter, which has been preserved, and has a place in our New Testament as the Epistle to the Philippians. It stands among his many letters as one of the most tender, gentle, loving, and peaceful of them all. In the fourth chapter and the third verse he mentions a fellow-labourer whose name is Clement. The Epistle was written about the year 62 A.D.

In all probability Clement was a Jewish convert to Christianity, as was Paul, and many of the leaders of the Christian Church in the first century. He was an immediate disciple of the disciples of our Lord. He was the friend of several of them, knew them, was acquainted with their writings, and occupied a most important and influential position in the church.

He was probably the bishop of Rome at the same time that John was bishop at Ephesus. How many of the disciples he knew we cannot say, but it is certain that he was the friend of several. He would thus be in a most favoured position for knowing what was the teaching of the Apostles respecting our Lord's life and death, the account of which we have in our Gospels.

Clement wrote an Epistle to the Corinthians, which fortunately is preserved to us to this day. I have told you about the precious old Bible called the Alexandrian Codex which we have in the British Museum, and which was written about the middle of the fifth century. Bound up with the parchment sheets of that priceless treasure you will find the Epistle to the Corinthians which Clement wrote. It has been translated into English, and can now be had, together with the "Epistle of Barnabas" and the "Shepherd of Hermas," and other old writings.

If you get it and read it through you will find it saturated with the language of the New Testament. In its doctrine, the style in which it is written, and its general thought, it is unquestionably based upon the New Testament. A copy of it lies before me, and I have just been reading it again, and say without hesitation that it could never have been written by any man who did not know the New Testament as it was spoken and written by the disciples and apostles of our Lord. It refers to the words of Peter, James, John, and Luke. It has passages based upon the Epistles to the Romans, Corinthians, Thes., Eph., Tim., Titus, of James, of Peter, to the Heb., and the Acts of the Apostles.

POLYCARP.

Polycarp's name does not occur in the New Testament, but it is better known than some which do. There are but few of us who have been accustomed to attend public worship and hear sermons who have not heard his name quoted with his famous words, spoken when he was offered his freedom if he would dishonour his Lord and Master Jesus Christ: "Eighty and six years have I served Him, and He never did me any wrong; how can I blaspheme my King and my Saviour?"

Polycarp was born about the year 70 A.D. He had the advantage of Christian training, and was instructed in the Christian faith from childhood. He became Bishop of the Church at Smyrna. The Church at Smyrna was one of the seven named in the Book of Revelation, and of which it was foretold that "some should be cast into prison." He was put to death as a martyr about the year 156 A.D., being burned alive for his faithfulness to Jesus Christ.

Polycarp was a disciple of John, and was, some say, made bishop and set over the Church at Smyrna by the Apostle himself. If this be so, he must have early distinguished himself for his piety and devotion to religion. In Polycarp, then, we have another most valuable link in our chain. If the New Testament was in existence he would certainly know of it. And if we find that he did know it, we may accept his testimony as important and undeniable.

It seems that Polycarp wrote several Epistles to neighbouring churches and some to private individuals, but with one exception all these have perished, and we now scarcely know their names. The one exception is a valuable letter which he sent to the church at Philippi, and which opens with the following sentence:—"Polycarp and the presbyters that are with him, to the church of God at Philippi: Mercy unto you and peace, from God Almighty, and the Lord Jesus Christ, our Saviour, be multiplied."

We are very thankful that this letter has escaped and exists to-day as standing evidence that when Polycarp lived our New Testament was in existence and was known to him. His letter to the Philippians is shaped in the language of our Scriptures, and it is evident to a careless reader even that it could not have been written at all except by a man who knew his New Testament.

It is a very short epistle, covering only a few pages, as it is printed in an English translation. You will better understand its length when I say that I have just read it through, timing myself, that I might give you an idea of its size. I find that I read it in ten minutes. Yet, short as this epistle is, it is long enough for our purpose.

In it he refers to the following important facts:—(1) Our Lord's resurrection and ascension to glory. (2) The teaching of our Lord and his Apostles. (3) The oracles of our Lord, which was the word for the written Gospels. (4) The language of Peter, of Paul, of Matthew, and of John. In the whole Epistle you will find the language of Matthew, Luke, John, and the Acts of the Apostles; of the Epistle of Peter; and of Paul's Epistles to the Romans, Corinthians, Galatians, Thessalonians, Ephesians, Philippians, Colossians, Timothy, and Titus.

[In our next article we shall outline the story of Papias.]

Fruit in Italy.

THE May issue of "A Voice from Italy," the organ of Waldensian Church Missions in Italy (offices, 118, Pall Mall, S.W.), gives some deeply interesting particulars of fruit of faithful labour. Rev. G. Luzzi, of Florence, writes:—

"A Roman Catholic priest in a country town twelve miles distant from Florence, one of those priests of whom there are many in Italy, who know the Bible, who know that in Christ alone is the truth, but who have not the courage to give up error, by doing which they would lose their means of livelihood—said one day to Giovanni, 'Here is a precious book for you; take it, read it carefully, study it, and you will see that it will do you good.' That precious book was the Bible, in the Diodati version, printed in Florence at our Claudian Press.

"Some years later, Giovanni found employment in Florence as caretaker in an Evangelical Institute. He remained there for many years, and became a well-known character to all who had to do with the Institute, for his piety, his honesty, and scrupulous fulfilment of his duties. He was thought by all to be a Roman Catholic, and indeed he had never gone near an Evangelical church; but it was well known that every evening he read to himself and to his family the priest's 'book.' Suddenly Giovanni lost his fine colour; his shoulders got bent, and sometimes his face twitched as if in extreme pain. He had cancer in the stomach, and the disease made rapid progress. I advised him to come to our medical dispensary for treatment, and he came. One winter night my door-bell rang violently. A man was there with the message:—'Oh, Mr. Luzzi, come quickly; Giovanni is dying, and wants to see you.'

"I hastened to the sick bed. Giovanni was indeed dying, but he was in full possession of his faculties. In presence of the matron, his wife and family, other relatives, and myself, he testified resolutely his faith in Jesus. He declared he wanted but only the comfort of the name of Jesus and his promises in the solemn hour of departure. I repeated passage after passage about the name of Jesus, and quoted his promises, and we prayed several times together. About four o'clock in the morning he expired in my arms, while his immortal spirit took its flight to Him who had redeemed him." Signor Luzzi adds that the priest's "book" was afterwards discovered in the possession of one of Giovanni's daughters, who has openly confessed Christ, declaring that she received this faith through the study of that book which had been so blessed to her father. Giovanni's widow and brother-in-law have since become catechumens.

Rev. Giovanni Santucci relates another touching incident. Pietro Orsini, of Pettorano, had a desire, while on his deathbed, to confess to the minister, and also a craving for his absolution. The pastor directed the confession to God, and assured the penitent that Christ had done all possible penance for the sinner. In his doubt and distress Pietro said, "Certainly; Jesus Christ has done penance for me; but it lies with you to give me absolution." "No, dear Pietro; I cannot absolve you from your sins; I can only lead you to Him who alone has power to pardon the sins of the whole world. He has said, 'Him that cometh unto Me, I will in no wise cast out.' Repeat with me these words, addressed to Him who absolves you, and you will be comforted."

He assented heartily. The pastor prayed briefly, repeated the 51st Psalm, and closed with the fifth verse of the 32nd: "I acknowledged my sin unto thee, and mine iniquity have I not hid: I said, I will confess my transgressions unto the Lord; and thou forgavest the iniquity of my sin." He added various passages from the New Testament, which give an assurance of pardon to the truly converted heart. The Lord's Supper having been observed, the dying man lifted his hands, and in a voice broken with emotion, exclaimed, "My Jesus, my Lord, I thank Thee for having thus consoled me! And now, if it please Thee, take my soul unto Thyself, and console in the same way all my family." After humming the hymn "Jesus, my heart's dear Refuge," and listening to John xiv., he quietly gave up his soul to God.

My Friend's Bible Class.

BEFORE introducing to the reader's notice the members of the class, my friend the teacher must needs be made acquaintance with. To know her is of necessity to learn a lesson of patience and perseverance—not the least, if not the greatest and most powerful, of the lessons which she seeks to impart.

"Most gladly will I therefore rather glory in my infirmities that the power of Christ may rest upon me," would be no unfitting motto for her crest, though she would be the last to appropriate the language of such a text as in any measure realised in her own experience. Yet what a rebuke to many in the enjoyment of every faculty is the sight of my dear deaf friend, in spite of her severe physical drawback, earnestly and lovingly following up one and another in the village in which she has lived for over thirty years, never giving a soul up, enduring many rebuffs, meeting much discouragement, but at last, by dint of coaxing and entreaty, capturing the shy, reluctant, if not godless object of her solicitude, to be added to the number of those who have been in the past or are at the present time under her influence and instruction. Lad after lad has she taken in hand, baiting her spiritual hook with the attraction of knowledge to be gained, dinning into the undeveloped brain the rudiments of general learning till the dormant faculties have been awakened and and intense, gaining in usefulness and intelligence, so that in one case the gardener's tools were exchanged for the missionary college, and later the pastor's pulpit.

But let us turn specially to the Sunday Bible-class. The class has borne many characters; at one time its predominant feature was that of rough lads, with a sprinkling of elder men, but the two elements did not combine, and one by one the men dropped off. In their early days there were no Board schools; they had not had the modern advantage of education, and they shrank from the scarcely-concealed amusement of their young companions at some unfortunate slip or reluctant admission of inability to read, "being no scholar."

By degrees the boys became masters of the situation, save for the presence of one faithful old friend, who, liking the advent of the boys no better than his compeers, yet determined to "stand by his teacher and pray for these lads," whose appearance he hailed as at least hopeful of blessing. Dear old K——! How greatly his faith and patience were tried perhaps only he and his Master know. We could hear the irreverent remarks and see the inattention and trifling of which the dear aged teacher was often happily oblivious, but together they can now rejoice over some of those to the Lord Jesus Christ, and giving bright testimony for Him.

After a while a newcomer appeared upon the scenes in the village, one who had been accustomed to a class of lads, and to him my friend gladly transferred her boys. The question then arose, to whom should she now devote her attention? Already past her three-score years and ten, she might well be excused from seeking fresh fields of service. Not so did my friend argue, but thinking of the many like herself on the downhill of life, but without the joy and comfort which she found in Christ, she longed to gather in the aged sons of toil, most of whose days for labour were nearly ended; and so it came to pass that to-day my friend's Bible-class is one almost unique, and with an interest all its own.

Imagine a cosy dining-room, with choice works of art illustrating the kindly deeds of charity, feeding the hungry, clothing the naked, visiting the sick, most aptly decorating its walls, a sweet view from the window of the village green, with the church beyond, and the comfortable looking trees inviting travellers to pause upon their way. Then turn the eyes upon the dining table, round which are ranged some dozen chairs of all sorts and shapes, and you get an idea of the cheery surroundings, amongst which, week by week, each Sabbath afternoon, my friend dispenses the bread of life to these quaint but interesting scholars.

One by one the chairs are occupied, as a rule each one retaining his particular seat, the average attendance varying only by two or three, and nearly all being assembled in time for the opening hymn, read aloud by the teacher as a tender way of veiling the fact that books are useless to some. A sprinkling of younger men is a helpful provision for the choir of quavering feeble voices, and with right goodwill do these musical members rise to their responsibility, whilst my friend's niece leads the singing with the harmonium conveniently placed.

Had we but a "snap-shot" how pleasant it would be to photograph the group; as it is, the pen must do duty for the camera. Here on the teacher's left sits K——, the pillar of the class during the troublous days when the youthful element predominated. Long years of toil and exposure as an agricultural labourer have left their mark, as his bent figure shows, but his interest in the truth is real, and an occasional remark shows a keen power of practical application and an honest willingness to submit to its searching light. By his side is seated S——, a tall, well-built, intelligent man, a gardener. Always ready with some quaint remembrance of whether of his mother's bonnet, capable of holding "more than a gallon," or of the county, or of farming in the good old time.

Others there are, each with some distinguishing features. B——, who in his time was a capital workman, now nearly double with infirmity, but finding a quiet home in the ancient almshouses from whence each Lord's Day he may be seen crossing the green in solitary gentility clad in sombre broadcloth. But we must not overlook L——, one of the most difficult fish to catch, but once landed most steady and regular in his attendance. Then we have a dear old asthmatic friend, whose physical weakness does not permit of his attending in the winter. His bright mischievous black eyes sparkle yet, as he wilfully misapplies the titles of Mrs. or Miss and then saucily asks, "Have not I said right?" and it is impossible to be angry with the childlike, simple soul.

At the close of the study of the subject, there is a short interval left open for any to take part in prayer, and much may be gleaned of the experience and needs of those who pour out their hearts in homely phraseology, but sweet, we may be sure, to the great Father's heart. Thus the brief, bright hour closes, bringing, who can tell how much of help and cheer into these humble hearts and lives. To one it is a comfort in sorrow, to another fighting hard against temptation as the rope to which he clings amidst the winds and water, to the untaught in things pertaining to God, as the infant class where first he learnt the alphabet of Divine knowledge, and where, it may be, the first breath of the New Life is drawn. And to all a season of happy intercourse and fellowship, and enjoyment of the pretty artistic surroundings thus opened to their appreciative gaze. That the poor do appreciate the beautiful none can doubt—one dear old child of God after spending the evening and being hospitably entertained as a church member in the brightly lighted drawing-room, saying to his aged wife, "Oh, M——, will heaven be like this?"

How small is the cost of thus helping our poorer neighbours! A little prayerful preparation, some trifling inconvenience in thus using the room, a cup of tea once or twice a year, and an ever-ready word of kindly sympathy spoken from a loving heart—these are all that are required to open to many a house-bound saint a sphere of service which angels might envy, and which would brighten winter days with thoughts of helpfulness and usefulness, dispelling the fear and shrinking from old age so largely due to the dread of being "of no use." "They shall still bring forth fruit in old age."—Amen.

Among European Jews.

WRITING from Lemberg, Galicia, on May 13, Rev. David Baron sends some notes of his present tour among Jews on the Continent:—

After brief visits to Berne, Zurich, Strassburg, Worms, Frankfort-on-Main, Berlin and Breslau, in all of which places I found open doors to make known our Lord Jesus Christ to many Jews, I arrived in Cracow on May 5. There I was joined by Mr. Philip Gordon, of the Swedish Mission to Israel, who is stationed in Budapest, and who by the kindness of his committee has been given to me a second time as my companion in the itinerant work. In Cracow, the ancient capital of Poland, may be found one of the largest and most fanatical of Jewish communities in the world. Of an entire population of about 80,000, the Jews, according to official statistics, form one third, but most probably the proportion is much larger, for the place swarms with them, and everything seems Jewish. The condition of many of the wandering people in East London is miserable enough, but I do not know when I have seen such dire poverty and wretchedness as in the Jewish quarters of Cracow, Tarnow, and Przemysl. Nor have I ever been more impressed with the terrible reality of the evils which have come upon my poor people in consequence of their unbelief and apostasy from God.

But here is a change coming over even these Galician Chassidim. There is a spirit of restlessness and inquiry beginning to manifest itself—a thirst for knowledge of good, and alas! also of evil, so that some are turning from the Talmud to the still less pure cisterns of rationalism. Oh, that at this, to many a transition period, mighty voices may be raised amongst them for Christ and his Gospel!

In Cracow we paid a visit to the Beth Hammedrash ("House of Learning"), where Jews, old and young, may be seen doing nothing else day or night but occupying themselves with the mysteries of Kaballah and the study of Talmud. We asked one if they had a Bible in the place, and after a time he brought us one of the volumes of the Jewish Bible, which is bound together with thirty-two Rabbinic commentaries. It happened to be the volume containing Ezekiel and the twelve Minor Prophets; and we opened it at Zech. xii., and read from the twelfth verse to the end. At that point we asked whom it could be whom Israel pierced and for whom they will mourn so bitterly. Meanwhile quite a group had gathered round us, all in their long kaftans. After disputing a good while among themselves they all came to the conclusion that it refers to "Messiah Ben Joseph." Most Talmudic Jews believe in two Messiahs, Messiah Ben Joseph, who shall be killed, and Messiah Ben David, who will reign. We pointed out to them the fact that the One who is "pierced" is none other than He who will pour out his Spirit of grace and supplication on the house of David and on the inhabitants of Jerusalem, and must, therefore, be God. On coming out, one Jew, who first led us to the place, said to us, "Gentlemen, this hour is worth to me more than 1000 florins, for I can see now that your faith in Christ is grounded on the Bible, and that all these learned Rabbis with all their commentaries could not answer you." The next day the same man came to us saying that he was determined with all his family to become Christian. We commended him to Mr. Joseph Pick, the London Society's missionary in Cracow.

From Cracow we went to Tarnow, one of the greatest strongholds of Chassidism in the world. Out of the entire population of 33,000, the Jews number about 20,000. Here, too, the Beth Hammedrash was one of the first places which we visited, and we can thankfully say that even in such surroundings we found a few souls thirsting for something better than they can find in the polluted stream of the Talmud and Rabbinism. Again and again as many as thirty men would be gathered in my room at one time, listening with eager attention while Mrs. Gordon and myself unfolded to them the Scriptures concerning Christ and proclaimed Him to them as the only Saviour.

OUR DAILY HOMILY.

SUNDAY, May 30.

"I AM MY BELOVED'S, AND HIS DESIRE IS TOWARD ME."—Canticles vii. 10.

THIS is the thankful recognition of the Bride. She knows that she belongs to, that she is loved by, the Bridegroom, that his desire is turned towards her with ineffable longing.

Dear soul, do you realise the desire of your Beloved towards you? You love Him, but He loves you ever so much more. You desire Him, but his desire towards you is as much greater than yours towards Him as sunlight is more brilliant than moonlight. Know ye not, says St. James, that the Spirit which He has caused to dwell in us longeth even to envy? Jesus desires all our love, all our energy, all our possessions, that we should be only, always, all for Him. How have we responded to his great desire? Alas, our response has been very uncertain and unsatisfactory. Sometimes we have felt a pure flame of answering affection; but it has soon been obscured with clouds of smoke, or has died down for want of oil.

The Lord desires more of our time, that we should withdraw ourselves from the busy rush of the world, and the absorbing interests of life, in order to allow Him to commune with us. He desires more of our affection that He may teach us how to respond to his love. He desires to teach us how to share his riches, as his joint-heirs, how to sit with Him in heavenly places, how to work in the energy of his Spirit. Let us yield ourselves to his desires, and allow Him to effect in us and for us all He desires for us, so that we may give Him delight. "As the bridegroom rejoiceth over the bride, so shall thy God rejoice over thee."

MONDAY, May 31.

'WHO IS THIS THAT COMETH UP FROM THE WILDERNESS, LEANING UPON HER BELOVED?"—Cant. viii. 5.

Standing on the mountainous plateau with which Judea passes into the desert, the daughters of Jerusalem behold the Spouse, coming slowly up from the wilderness, leaning hard upon her beloved; and in this we have an emblem of the Church, and of each faithful soul. The wilderness can well be taken as an emblem of the experience of believers, who are suffered to hunger and thirst, exposed to be smitten by the sun of temptation, and pacing wearily over the lowlands of a somewhat arduous and monotonous existence. God leads us in the wilderness as He did Israel of old.

But the wilderness life is not destined to be our perpetual experience. We are bidden to come up from it. Life is meant to be an unceasing ascent from strength to strength until we stand in Zion before God. Is your path trying and perilous? Does it seem as though you will never gain the heights that rear themselves before your gaze? Do you feel prepared, like Hagar, to yield to despair and death? See, there is One that goes beside. You had not seen Him till now. Turn to regard Him. His hands are as though they had been pierced. He is your Beloved; lean on Him. He gives you his arm to rest upon, and He will sustain you when heart and flesh fail. The wilderness is intended to bring out a tenderness, an all-sufficiency, a readiness of resource, which you would never have guessed unless your exigencies had become imperative. Be sure of this, that if need be He will carry you to the celestial heights to which you aspire.

TUESDAY, June 1.

"I WILL TURN MY HAND UPON THEE, AND THOROUGHLY PURGE AWAY THY DROSS, AND WILL TAKE AWAY ALL THINE ALLOY."—Isa. i. 25. (R.V. marg.)

The silver had become dross, and Jerusalem, the faithful city, replete with infidelity and evil. She had been full of judgment, righteousness had lodged in her, but now—murderers. All had gone amiss, the whole land was desolate; cities burned with fire; only a very small remnant of the people left. Ordinary chastisement had failed to produce any effect, "the whole head was sick, and the whole heart faint" with the result of the blows received from the Divine rod.

Now, however, her Almighty Lover resolved that He would bring his hand upon her and thoroughly purge her. It is a great matter for the soul when God ceases from chastisement, and begins to refine; when we are aware that we are no longer suffering the results of certain specific misdeeds, but that we are in the hand of God being prepared for high and holy service. There is an immeasurable distance between chastening and refining; the one has to do with sins that lie behind us, the other with graces and gifts that beckon us from before.

Is this the time of your refining? Do not consider the process, but look steadfastly into the face of the Refiner. Do not think of the "dross" or "tin" you are losing, but of the grace, to receive which you are being made meet. Do not dwell upon the methods of God's providence, but see that your soul is bathed in his nature, which is destructive of all that is not of the Father.

WEDNESDAY, June 2.

"O HOUSE OF JACOB, COME YE, AND LET US WALK IN THE LIGHT OF THE LORD."—Isa. ii. 5.

This invitation is primarily addressed to the house of Jacob. Sometimes the elect people are spoken of as Israel; but when Jacob is used, they are reminded of the vein of duplicity and chicanery which lies imbedded in their nature. Such people need specially to "walk in the light of the Lord" until the brooding darkness of their nature is dispelled. You will never succeed in ridding yourself of the self-life with its jealousies and impurities until you have learnt to walk in the light of the Lord. They cannot abide the blessed touch of that light which is fairer than day. The ghosts of mediæval stories disappear at dawn. Nothing is so hostile to disease and corruption as light and air; believe me, the one way by which we can become sound and strong is to abide in Christ, that He may abide in us.

Notice that word walk. We cannot enjoy the presence of God as a whole unless it governs and illumines every step. We must walk with God, perpetually looking into his face and asking where to place the next step. To walk with God means fellowship. We must have fellowship with Him in all things; then we, who have been darkness, will be light in the Lord, and as we walk in the light we shall become children of light. Does that light reveal stains and sins? Never forget that the precious blood cleanseth from all such.

THURSDAY, June 3.

"IN THAT DAY SHALL HE LIFT UP HIS VOICE, SAYING, I WILL NOT BE AN HEALER, MAKE ME NOT A RULER OF THE PEOPLE."—Isa. iii. 7.

Generally men aspire to be rulers; the emolument and honour of the position are infinitely attractive. But the prophet supposes a case in which the people gather round one, who has saved a little more than the others from the general wreck, and entreat him to assume the responsibility of directing public affairs. But he refuses, not wishing to be involved in the disasters that have swept the fatherland. Isaiah cites this as the most complete evidence of the desperate situation brought about by wrong-doing.

It is the mark of great deterioration in a religious community when none are forthcoming to take responsibility, none who have power to lead. It is a grave sentence, "I will give children to be their princes, and babes shall rule over them." Never shrink from assuming any responsibility to which God and the Church evidently call you. It is an easier life to remain among the stunted undergrowth, but if God calls you to be a forest tree, with fast-spreading branches, humbly accept the opportunity, and fill up its full measure. His grace is sufficient. Better to fail in a great endeavour than to live safely having evaded the Divine call. If you have bread and clothing in your house, account yourself the steward of God's gifts for others.

FRIDAY, June 4.

"THE LORD WILL CREATE OVER EVERY DWELLING-PLACE OF MOUNT ZION A CLOUD AND SMOKE BY DAY, AND THE SHINING OF A FLAMING FIRE BY NIGHT, AND OVER ALL THE GLORY A CANOPY."—Isa. iv. 5.

These twain, the pillar of cloud by day, and the flaming fire by night, were reserved in the wanderings for the tabernacle only, but this promise predicts that they shall be the heritage of each individual home. Each family will have its own cloudy pillar to guide, its own illumination through the dark hours, its own canopy from storm and rain and heat. Let this be your comfort: if your family is scattered afar, all the members are dwelling in the same pavilion, directed by the movements of the same pillar-cloud, and are enlightened by the glow of the same fire. In God there is no distance, and they who abide in Him live in a dwelling-place which is wide enough to include the world, but narrow enough to draw our hearts into a small circle where God and we and our loved ones touch.

Each soul may have its own cloud, fire light, and protection. Each may say of the Lord, "Thou art my dwelling-place;" each may dwell with God in one of the many mansions, and share his gracious help. Note how God suits Himself: a cloud by day, but by night a fire; a shadow from the heat, but a refuge from rain. Always the same God, but always an infinite variety of adaptation.

SATURDAY, June 5.

"WHAT COULD HAVE BEEN DONE MORE TO MY VINEYARD, THAT I HAVE NOT DONE IN IT?"—Isa. v. 4.

This is what the Owner of all souls will say of his dealings with each when the discipline and husbandry of time are over. Each of us is God's vineyard, and for each God has done the best possible. At the end of all things God will have no reason to feel that had He adopted some other method, the barren waste of some heart would have brought forth fruit. It will be seen then, Omniscience itself being witness, that every soul of man had the chance of becoming a fruitful vineyard, and if he became the reverse it was due to no failure in either the wisdom or grace of God.

It is hard to believe this, hard to think that you would not have done better in some other circumstances; but it is nevertheless true that God could not have done better or more. He has trenched for water, gathered out stones which had hindered your fruitfulness, and planted you with slips from the true vine. There has been the tower of his protection, and the wine-press of suffering! Ah, how eagerly He has looked that you should bring forth grapes! The pity of it that there has been nothing but the wild growth of nature! But God cannot take the blame for this. Seek to be the plant of his delight. Try to give Him pleasure; ask Him to work in you to will and to work of his good pleasure. F. B. M.

Orphans in Tangley Park.—The annual meeting of the friends and subscribers of the Female Orphan Home at Tangley Park, near Hampton Hill, was held on Saturday week. Rev. W. R. Fitzpatrick presided over a good attendance. The children, who looked thoroughly happy, gave a smart exhibition of musical drill, and sang several songs with much feeling. The report, read by Mr. J. D. COOPER, the secretary, stated that the Home, which had completed the first year of its fifth decade, looked forward to a continuance of the prosperity which had attended it since the opening. The financial statement showed that the expenses of the year had been fully met, and that the Home was entirely without debt.

The Bible Confirmed.

IMPRESSIONS IN THE HOLY LAND.*

By Rev. Dr. HANDLEY C. G. MOULE.

THE subject of lessons learned about the Bible, from impressions formed in the Holy Land, is so large a one, in its many-sidedness, that all I can hope to do is to take a specimen or two, and to treat even those very briefly. I deliberately gave up, before going to Palestine, all ambitious plans of anything like a sight of the main and central district of Palestine. My hope was to take two lines from the coast, inland and back again, and those two lines only. But they were lines of surpassing interest; the first was drawn by leaving Haifa at the foot of Mount Carmel, going to Nazareth and down to Tiberias, and back again; the second line was that which is formed by landing at Jaffa, going from Jaffa to Jerusalem, from Jerusalem to Jericho, the Jordan and the Dead Sea, and back again. Between those two lines, broadly speaking, I had neither time nor opportunity to see anything, but you may well imagine that we struck some spots of supreme importance and interest.

To come to the main point on which I have undertaken to say a few words—impressions about the Bible experienced during this short visit—let me say first that an impression is left of the photographic and life-likeness of the Bible picture of life and of circumstance. I can scarcely now open my Bible, not only in its historic pages, but in the Psalms, in the Prophets, or any part of Scripture which in the least degree touches the scenery or surroundings of earth, in which I do not feel that my short visit to the Holy Land has lighted up the page with a new vividness of reality, has made me feel that I am dealing, not with an artist's picture, but with a photographer's facsimile of circumstance and event. In God's providence, through the permanence of the general conditions of life in the East, we are able to bring face to face what is seen by the traveller to-day and what is said upon the sacred page 2500 years old, or much older still. Changes, no doubt, are taking place in Palestine; but relatively to the unchanged, they are very few. It seems astonishing to have gone in a train from Jaffa to Jerusalem; but, after all, the train has astonishingly little altered its surroundings. I went from the station outside the walls of Jerusalem, to the friend's house where I was to stay, a native house outside the walls, along a road bordered on every side with names of surpassing interest. Here was the Valley of Hinnom; then the Tower of David, frowning over the city wall; there the great Jaffa Gate, marking an entrance which must have existed for ages. Now we were driving upon Mount Zion; then, a little higher up, the road was open enough to give us full sight of the Mount of Olives; beyond it, looking strangely near, the dark hills of Moab; further beyond, a corner of the Dead Sea. A little to the left was Scopus, where the Romans built their camp for the great siege; then we looked northward to Nebo, or Gibeah, or Mizpah as they were of old. We felt that we were indeed on ground which patriarchs and prophets, the Lord and his apostles, had trodden before us.

Both in the south and in the north of Palestine, the feeling was strong that the sameness of the general conditions of life corresponded almost as much to the Bible as the buildings of Jerusalem corresponded to the many photographs or engravings of them which we had seen. We could see as we made excursions into Galilee or into Judea, the tent life of the patriarchs still going on. We need only go down into the Jordan valley to find wild tribes of the desert still putting themselves in evidence there. The long strings of camels traversing the country looked, of course, exactly the same as when Abraham's servant left Palestine for Haran on his errand. The men were ploughing fields, and the animals which ploughed did so in Scriptural fashion, the dress and bearing of the men corresponding; while the ox, the ass, and sometimes the camel, toiled in the furrow. A strange feeling came over me again and again that here was the very platform on which the Scripture characters moved and lived, and that if the actors in those scenes had appeared upon such a platform, they would have been altogether in place. I felt exactly what a learned friend of mine, some years ago in Cambridge, told me was his feeling when he spent a few weeks in Palestine; one, I should say, to whose mind would occur with great force many of the modern speculations which seem intended to undermine the solidity of Scripture. He told me that he came back from that residence in Jerusalem more than ever impressed and filled with the conviction that solid fact forms the base of the Bible narratives.

We must, of course, carefully remember that no amount of ascertained agreement between Scripture geography and Scripture narrative, or modern Oriental customs in the Holy Land and those depicted in Scripture, will, logically and mathematically, prove the inspired veracity and Divine authority of the Holy Scriptures. A scene may be accurately described, while a narrative put into that scene may be, in a measure, the poet's imagination. Sir Walter Scott presented us with many an example of that kind. While that is the case, we have also to remember that a narrative as well as the scenery may be absolutely accurate in regard to facts, and yet it may not prove that the book in which it is embodied is therefore a revelation from heaven. Still, the fact remains that, the Bible, being put impartially face to face with the ascertained conditions of Eastern life and with the ever-growing discoveries of the archæologist in the lands of the Levant, is found to square with such tests more and more; so that difficulty upon difficulty disappears which not our knowledge, but our ignorance, had generated. Thus, our reasons for accepting the Bible as, out and out, the Word of God, are strengthened; while a mass of obstructions are cleared away which might have made more difficult such belief. Ultimately, I accept the Old Testament as the Word of God who liveth and abideth for ever, because of the witness of Jesus Christ to it. It is because, both before and after his resurrection, He dealt with it as veracious and as Divine, and it is the part of faith, with deep and reverent humility, to accept his ruling on the subject. It is not, however, other than a great and providential benefit when faith is continually encouraged and quickened by the progressive discovery of the trustworthy quality of that which I have taken, on my knees, from his hands as trustworthy for my soul. There is such an overwhelming mass of correspondence between what the Bible says and the present, that faith is, on every hand, encouraged in going with renewed simplicity to the Book which our Lord has put into our hands and said, "Take it, it is my Father's Word."

West Marylebone Mission.—The fourteenth anniversary of this Mission was celebrated on Tuesday last week at Dauntless Hall, Lisson grove, N.W., when meetings were held afternoon and evening. Addresses were delivered by Dr. R. W. T. Brooks, Col. Barnes, C.B., Messrs. Barry Wake, W. Holmes, and James Sprunt.

Rev. Dr. C. A. Berry.

THE chairman of the Congregational Union of England and Wales for the present year is a young man, but he is amply dowered with gifts, and is rich in experience. From the nursery upward he has been attended with favouring circumstances and sanctifying influences. Like Samuel, he was consecrated to God and to the ministry by his mother before he was born. His "very first sermon," he says, "was preached before he had made the epoch-marking transition from frocks to trousers." His mother and sister, some friends, and a row of dolls on chairs, formed his congregation. His subject was "Christ in the Storm," and the service concluded with a collection for the John Williams missionary ship. He began the sermon in play and ended it in earnest. His mother clasped him to her breast, told him how she had prayed to God to give her a son to be a minister, and that she believed her prayer was answered. Nevertheless, up to his sixteenth birthday, he never seriously recalled the circumstance.

At sixteen he became a member of the church, and at seventeen he told his mother he felt he must give his life to preaching, when "she simply said she knew it would be so, and that he need not be nervous about his college application, for she was certain he would be accepted." At seventeen, therefore, he applied for admission to Airedale College, Bradford, and although it was a rule that candidates should have preached before offering themselves, and also that they should prepare a special sermon to read before the College Committee, he was received without either. On the ground of his assurance that he was called of God to preach the Gospel of his Son Jesus Christ, and called of Him to prepare for this great work, he was admitted. The sense of that call has been with him all through his life, in spite of numerous and strong inducements to turn to other work, and he has been devoted to the one thing.

His purpose from the first was to win men to Christ, and both the purpose and the method of fulfilling it were approved of God and of his servants. Dr. Berry tells with intense and tender emotion how he went to preach to a Yorkshire village congregation, and how the "dear old Samuel Rogers as chairman, and the impressively philosophic Binx Lee as judicial summer-up," agreed that "You's a lad wi' a bit o' grit." To the counsels and encouragement of these humble folk he owes much. This first sermon was prepared, as Dr. Berry's sermons are prepared now, "with more effort to make the message a living one, than to make its terms so ornate as to fix attention upon them rather than upon it." From this wise rule he once departed, with the result that his fellow students poured upon his grandiloquent style such a stream of ridicule as deterred him from ever after trying to write a fine sentence. He is now thankful for "a saving dispensation of castigation." His testimony is of great importance to all speakers for Christ, but especially to young ones: "If I am to do any work for Christ, I feel I can only do it by making my speech as clear, as simple, as musical, as a natural use of language admits."

From college he was called to the pastoral charge of a church at Bolton, in Lancashire, where he had some years of happy and useful service. His true and suitable sphere of labour has proved to be at Queen-street Church, Wolverhampton, to which he went fourteen years ago. Besides a large congregation and a large body of communicants there, he has the oversight of nine other "branch churches with separate officers." These places have accommodation for 2680 worshippers; his own seats 1250. For the doing of all the work Dr. Berry has the aid of two assistants and several laymen. The place is the centre of great activity and usefulness, "the driving power" being faith in the great verities of the Gospel. Along with much power as a preacher and a platform speaker, Dr. Berry possesses the art of the organiser and manager of men. In this work his geniality and brotherliness, which are among his most distinguishing qualities, stand him in good stead.

The incident which has perhaps marked Dr. Berry's career more than any other is, we think, one of the least important of them all. He was nominated by the late Henry Ward Beecher to be his successor in the pastorate of Plymouth Church, Brooklyn, and to that post the church enthusiastically called him. He, however, declined the call, and wisely remained among a people who know and love him. That this event—the call—brought him prominently before the churches and the world is true, but it does not account for his influence, which grows year by year. Happily that is drawn from higher sources than a popularity based only on human gifts. His sermons, as has been well said of them, "apply to the sins and sorrows, the trials and experiences of life, that supreme truth which is at once historical and spiritual, the truth of God's redeeming love for man which was consummated in Jesus the Christ...His popularity has in no degree depended upon eccentricity of manner in the pulpit, nor extravagance of language, nor flirtation with the Higher Criticism. He has never set himself the problem how to preach essential Christianity from myths and legends and fictitious history."

When he was chosen to preach before the Congregational Union at its meetings at Swansea in 1890, he made many hearts glad by a sermon on the necessity of the gift of the Holy Spirit in the Church if there was to be life and fruitfulness. This evangelical sympathy rules and reveals itself in all his utterances, and is the real secret of his power. He speaks of the things he has tasted and handled and felt of the good Word of Life. To some brother ministers he said lately, "Preach only what you know."

Only two small books have come from Dr. Berry's pen, one a volume of sermons in the series "Preachers of the Age," and the other a collection of short papers entitled "Mischievous Goodness." We give a quotation from his latest utterance, his address to the Congregational Union, which shows how keenly alive he is to the supreme necessity of a pure, spiritual life in the Church:—

> The quietest room in a Lancashire cotton mill is the engine-room. It is significantly called the "power-room" of the mill. But from that quietest room emerges all the force which speeds the busy looms in their process of production. Let the engine be neglected, let countless looms be added without proportional increase of power, and the mill breaks down. We have been neglecting our quietest room, our power-room; we have been adding to the strain without multiplying the force, and the effects are seen in weariness, joylessness, and ineffectiveness. Brethren, we must not work less, but we must pray more. We cannot minimise our activities; but we must sustain them with those more adequate supplies of grace that come in answer to common prayer... Eloquent preaching, beautiful music, fashionable congregations, may keep up the semblance of life and prosperity. They may keep a place going, but they cannot fill and crown a church with omnipotence of conquering grace. I have seen a small tugboat drawing the Teutonic from the wharf into the broader reaches of the river, and, though limited in capacity, it was capable for the task. But to face and conquer the western sea the Teutonic must feel the throb and obey the impulse of a mightier power. Our churches may be tugged round narrow circles in placid waters by little outside agencies, and may, as in the case of the steamer, be attended with more noise and bustle than when far out at sea. But if they would sweep the ocean, and brave the storm, and speed their precious freight to the other shore, they must possess within themselves capacity to receive, to translate, and to apply the mighty power of God.

For the great physical strain which many duties impose upon him Dr. Berry will require much strength, for his spiritual tasks abundant grace, and we heartily pray that both may be given by Him who "can supply all our need."

Betting.—It is stated that the Government have decided to enforce the recent judgment. The Home Secretary has assured Sir John Kennaway, in the House of Commons, that he is fully alive to the gravity of the opinions expressed by the judges concerning the amount of crime traceable to professional starting-price betting, and the assistance it receives by the use of the postal and telegraphic services, and has promised that the subject shall not escape his attention.

Women's Help Society.—The annual meeting of the Church of England Women's Help Society was held in the Church House, the Bishop of Stepney presiding. The annual report showed that there were now 175 branches. Stress was laid upon the careful way in which women and girls were followed up when they moved from one district to another, and on the prominent place given in the Society's "Rule of Life" to the duties of each member towards her family. The Bishop of Stepney said that in East London he found the men went out so early and came home so late that the guidance of the house was left almost entirely to the women. On the way in which these women were inspired and helped to bring up their children well one must look for that improvement of society which was certainly coming.

The Open-Air Mission.

THE publication of the forty-fourth annual report of this association reminds us that the season for active service in the work of field and street preaching has once more come round. The members of the Mission now number 1099; and they are certainly a band of men whom the working church could ill afford to do without. They may be said to be preachers who have made their own sphere, the general result which comes of their labours being no less striking than encouraging.

Whatever the attendance at ordinary places of public worship may be, these preachers beneath the blue sky never lack congregations. In quiet villages and needy provincial towns they collect their own hearers; at races, at piers, and at London Sunday-morning markets, they find congregations already awaiting them, a due proportion of whom are not only willing to welcome them, but actually receive the Gospel and become changed characters. Horse-racing with its betting has become one of the most demoralising things of the age; and while the "bookmaking" fraternity are too often utterly degraded and disgusting, the plague of sporting papers is greater than it ever was before. To take the Gospel to the racecourse, therefore, is to offer the good news to those who otherwise would never hear it at all. It is not casting pearls before swine; it is applying the divinely-appointed cure to a deep-seated disease. The novelty of the surroundings or attendant circumstances must certainly give zest to the service. On the one hand, an enraged tipster will attempt to thwart a preacher's plans because patrons are being attracted away; but a few yards off will be seen one whose heart has been pierced by the arrow of conviction.

The preaching is not quite all, however; for "tens of thousands of choice books and tracts" are accepted by the throngs who frequent the racecourses. Beyond all this, the racecourse offers an opportunity of preaching the Gospel to congregations of gipsies, who so very rarely can be got together that they are a kind of unique audience. That such services are valued we learn from themselves. Said a gipsy woman to an objector who suggested that bread-and-cheese would be more acceptable—"You can go away if you don't want to listen; but we do want to hear." The season at Epsom last year is said to have been marked by the manifestation of the power of God.

While the work on the racecourses of the country has thus so many encouraging features, it is necessary that Christian people should realise how vast and widespread is the evil—productive of temporal, moral, and spiritual ruin—which is developing in our midst. The late Mr. Gawin Kirkham was wont to say that "the Derby" never came without "a conversion and a suicide," and the 1100 open-air preachers who form the association bear witness that betting and gambling are on the increase.

AN AWFUL RECORD.

The results are such as might be expected, for "fifteen suicides, thirty-eight cases of embezzlement, eleven bankruptcies, and twenty-eight other cases of crime were the known results of gambling in six months." The need of the open-air services to the multitudes who thus crowd the broad road to destruction could not be more forcibly shown.

The services carried on at such fairs as survive present a somewhat different aspect, but they are quite as necessary, and no less fruitful in good results. At fairs, markets, and shows, the preachers do not come in contact with one class alone, but with all classes. In some instances very remarkable characters indeed are met with—it may be a quondam clergyman or gentleman, who has come down to herd with the common throng through some baneful habit or false step. Not a few unhappy backsliders also come under the notice of the preachers. Common workmen and young persons, as well as some who are older, have often something to tell respecting mistakes and false steps in life; and a right word spoken at the right time is not seldom the very thing needed. When amendment of life really takes place, or a lost joy in religion is restored, nothing can exceed the gratitude of those whom the preachers thus arrested in their course.

In London the great throngs which assemble at the Sunday-morning markets offer the open-air preachers congregations ready to their hand, of those by whom public worship is habitually neglected. There is no other way by which the Gospel can reach these people.

The extension of open-air preaching is a necessity of the times, and this is being perceived more and more by Christian people. We find from the report of the Mission that a notable sign of the times is the revival of open-air preaching in the Church of England. Whitechapel parish church and Holy Trinity Church, Marylebone, have each an outside pulpit, and from these, during the summer, four or five sermons a week are given. Then, we hear of the Archdeacon of London preaching to 10,000 persons on the summit of Douglas Head, Isle of Man, similar services on the same spot being conducted by others under the Bishop's sanction.

Mr. Frank Cockrem (11, Adam-street, Strand, W.C.), secretary of the Society, will gladly answer all inquiries and receive the gifts of friends.

G. HOLDEN PIKE.

The Prisons of Italy.—I.

SOME fifteen years ago, accompanied by my friend Mr. Clarke, I first visited the above, and was then able to distribute the Word of God in many of the gaols of the large cities, and noted with sorrow the insanitary conditions under which the prisoners lived. Since then I have been again to some of these places, and particularly Genoa, where five years ago I called the attention of the authorities to the filthy condition of the old prison. They promised reform, and about five weeks later I heard from a friend that it was resolved to pull down the old building, and erect a new one. I am glad to report that on reaching that city recently, I found a splendid new model prison had been opened a month before.

Running down to Pisa I was glad to see the good work carried on by Miss Carruthers, who in 1869 began a small school for boys. Now she has four schools, with an attendance of over 400 daily scholars, who are instructed in the Gospel, and educated in such a manner that the Government have voted her entitled to both the gold and silver medals. This was not accomplished without persecution. A colony of the Grey-friar monks built a magnificent school adjoining that of our good friend, and offered every inducement to her scholars and others to come to them, but I cannot but say I had the extreme pleasure of looking upon their building completely shut up and unused.

NOT A SCHOLAR CAN THEY GET.

Some nuns, who, being jealous of the success, also opened a school for the girls, have fared but little better. The people are learning that the English people love them.

We reached Rome midst all the glamour of an Easter festival, and had to wait with patience till it was over before I could get my credentials renewed by the Government authorities. M. Beltrani Scaglia, the Director-General of the prisons, is a good man, who has the welfare of prisoners at heart, and who is willing to co-operate with any who desire to benefit and reform them. He gladly gave me a fresh order, and also a special permit concerning depositing certain books at the prisons.

In Rome I found a large new prison, the Regina Coeli (a strange name for a gaol), containing 1300 men, and thus the smaller and dirty prisons have been done away with.

The above gentleman has furnished me with the following statistics: There are in Italy to-day

3371 MEN IMPRISONED FOR LIFE.

At one time there was no ticket-of-leave system; now they must serve thirty years of a life sentence, and even then can only be released if they are sixty-five years of age. If they are not that age they have to wait till they are.

In England, I suppose, we have not more than about 120 sentenced for life.

There are, in all, 62,000 criminals in the prisons of this country, many of them being in chains, and, I believe, little or nothing being done for their moral or spiritual welfare.

In Naples I find there are six large gaols, containing about 2000 men and women and youths, but am glad to see they are not in the filthy condition that I last found them in. They are far from being clean, for I think it is almost impossible to keep old prisons sweet and clean. The construction of them is wrong, obliging scores, at times hundreds, of men to live and sleep in one large corridor or room under one roof.

The air is always more or less foul, and the atmosphere vitiated. In the Franciscan Gaol I was told it is sometimes customary to keep a man nearly two years awaiting trial.

The Governor of the Neapolitan prisons we found to be a liberally minded man, who assisted me in every way he could, and as his wife read English, accepted at my hands a copy of "The Prisons of the World," and thus we left Naples, thankful for what we had been able to accomplish in the way of bringing the written Gospel of our Lord before the prisoners of Naples. While in Rome I received an acknowledgment from King Humbert thanking me for a copy of the above book, which he had received with pleasure.

I was indebted to the Rev. R. Walker, the Pastor of the Italian Baptist Church in Naples, who greatly assisted me in my work there. He is engaged in an arduous work among this superstitious people, and in the surrounding country has many stations which he visits, necessitating his absence from home for a week at a time. He is badly needing a lantern and some slides, to attract the people to pictorial lectures and addresses, that he may then preach Christ to them. Convinced of the need, I have made myself responsible for the lantern, and if others will supply him with a few dozen slides, I will gladly forward him the parcel. A few pounds thus laid out would cheer this lonely worker surrounded by hostile forces and with much to discourage.

Three important incidents happened in one week during our stay in Rome. The since it became the capital was witnessed; it had been attempted before, I was told, but the people had driven the priests back into the church from which they had emerged.

The house of the King has been blessed by the priests for the first time.

During the same week the attempt was made on the King's life.

The following day he drove down the Corso bareheaded, amidst the plaudits of the populace, who gave him a grand demonstration the same night outside the Palace of the Quirinale.

To Non-Abstainers.

"We will not give it up. Our feasts it brightens.
Why should we self deny for other men?
And they the weak and sin-stained! We despise them.
You cannot move us by your voice or pen.

"Freedom we claim! In vain ye try to harrow
Our hearts with all your tales of sin and woe.
Because some men are weak, shall we be fettered?
Our liberty, we will not let it go."

And are ye Christian men! and will not hearken
To childhood's wailing, or to woman's tears?
Will ye despise the cry that, mounting, ringeth
With piteous pleading in the Saviour's ears?

Oh for a tongue of fire to tell the story
Of blighted homes and ruined, sinful lives;
Of little children maimed and starved and tortured;
Of slowly-murdered, silent, suffering wives!

Of mothers whom the "drink" has turned to demons,
From whom all womanhood has passed away;
Of lads whose bright young eyes its curse has blighted,
Of maidens whom its power has led astray.

Oh, Christian men and women, Christ is pleading
For lives of self-surrender, by his grace,
Will you not leave the sin-polluted pathway,
And help those sin-bound souls to seek his face?

Then shall ye taste the freedom that He giveth
To those who Him as King and Master own;
And prove how blessed is his bondage holy
When He as King shall rule your heart alone.

TEXT TO LEARN.—Hebrews iv. 16.
HYMN.—"Cling to the Bible" (Songs and Solos 465).

Among the Stars.

BY REV. R. W. ROCK.

I WAS riding home one night, and as I "breathed" my horse I did a little star-gazing, I could not help it. The stars were shining so beautifully in the clear midsummer sky. And there were so many of them. "The floor of heaven was thick inlaid with patines of bright gold." I thought of some of the things I had read about the stars—of the little boy who said he thought the stars were holes bored in the sky to let the glory through, and of the little girl who, when asked what she was looking so earnestly up at the stars for, said, "I was thinking if the wrong side of heaven is so beautiful, what must the right side be?" Then I thought of some of the texts in the Bible that speak about the stars. I remembered that we are told of a time when "the morning stars sang together," that it is written, "They that be wise shall shine as the brightness of the firmament, and they that turn many to righteousness as the stars for ever and ever." I did not forget either that Jesus is called "the bright and morning star."

Then, as quick as light, there came these thoughts to me—two things in which the stars are like boys and girls, and two things in which boys and girls are like the stars:—

I. THE STARS DIFFER FROM EACH OTHER.

The Bible says so. "One star differs from another star in glory." They have different names and different qualities. Some are "fixed stars," and shine by their own light. Others are "planets," and reflect the light of the sun. The moon is a planet. Some are "comets," others are "meteors." Some are called "nebulæ," others are called "constellations." And there is a great difference between boys and girls. Some have clever brains, others are dull. Some are quick, others are slow. Some are good at history, others at arithmetic. Some can hold the plough, others can hold the pen. Some are good with the paint brush, others are good with the scrubbing brush. Some have pretty features, others have rather plain. That was the first thought. This was the second:—

II. THE STARS ARE WHERE GOD PLACED THEM.

And you boys and girls are largely as God made you. You wonder why this girl is pretty, and you are plain? why this boy does his sums so quickly, and you find sums so hard? why this boy has plenty of money, and you can't raise enough money to buy a cricket bat? Well, remember each of us is where God placed us, and as God made us. And God is very wise; He has never yet made a mistake. There is a bit of the Pilgrim's Progress, that beautiful book, which I often think of. The interpreter took Christiana into his garden and said, "Do you see those flowers?" Christiana said "Yes." Then, said he, "Behold, the flowers are diverse in stature, in quality, in colour, and smell and virtue; and some are better than others; also where the gardener hath set them, there they stand and quarrel not with one another."

Then there are two things in which you should be like the stars.

III. THE STARS DO THE WORK GOD HAS GIVEN THEM TO DO.

They shine, and by shining they glorify God. You can't look up at them without thinking about God. A French infidel said to a peasant, "We will pull down your churches, destroy your pictures, and take away everything that will remind you of God." And the peasant answered quietly, "But you will leave the stars." Was not this splendid? All that God asks of us is that we give as much light as we can. I noticed that night, that though the moon was giving a hundred times as much light as some of the stars, they did not seem to mind, but just went on shining as well as they could. Each of us can shine,

You in your small corner, and I in mine.

II. THE STARS BELONG TO ANOTHER WORLD, BUT THEY LIGHT UP THIS ONE.

That is just our position. We belong to another world, God is our Father, Heaven is our home; but God has sent us into this world to light it up and make it brighter and sweeter. Let me tell you in closing about a man who remembered that God had sent him into this world to light it up. In the year 1880, a building called the Hippodrome fell in New York. Many persons were killed. When they dug out the bodies, they found the body of a man, and in his pocket-book he had written these words: "I shall only pass through this world once. If therefore there be any good that I can do, or any kindness that I can show to my fellow-men, let me do it now, let me not defer it or neglect it, for I shall not pass this way again." That was a man who remembered what I want you to remember, namely, that you belong to another world, but that God has sent you into this world to light it up and to do all the good you can in it.

Nathalia, Victoria, N.S.W.

The Garden of the Lord.

Isa. li. 3.

"AND He will make her wilderness like Eden, and her desert like the Garden of the Lord." This was a real, definite, precious promise to Israel, to those who sought, followed, and obeyed the Lord, and such is the Lord's promise to all, who in like manner trust Him. He will make our hearts and lives, "The Garden of the Lord." If this is to be our experience whether we are adults or children, five things must be done.

1. There are weeds to be removed. Nature.

Sin, selfishness, falsehood, and disobedience are all weeds. But Jesus can take them all away. Ask Him?—1 John i. 7.

2. There is life to be nourished. Grace.

Life must first be put into the garden and then nourished. The seed sown, watered, and cared for. Life must first be put in the heart by the Holy Spirit and then nourished by the Word. Jesus is the Life.—1 John v. 11, 12.

3. There are flowers to be cultivated. Beauty.

Flowers are earth's ornaments of brightness and joy. So are the virtues of the Christian life—humility, meekness, kindness, and charity.—Isa. xxxv. 1, 2.

4. There are fruits to be gathered. Blessing.

Fruit is the evidence of life, and the end of toil and labour. So the fruit of grace in the heart is love, joy, peace, etc.—Gal. v. 22.

5. There are blessings to be enjoyed. Reward.

The joy of possession, the interests of life and growth, fellowship in work, and the gladness of fruit and reward. An earnest, happy Christian life gives joy to God.—Zeph. iii. 17. God is the Owner, the Planter, the Gardener, and will enjoy the fruits of his own love for ever, and we are allowed to share the joy and glory with Him. C. EDWARDS.

To My Contributors.

JUST a word of thanks to the many adult readers who send me on approval articles for this page. To use the whole of them would require three pages instead of one, but I am none the less grateful for the kind thought which prompts my friends to send them. Please, therefore, do not misunderstand me if I have to "cut down" many and leave out more.

"Fear Not, I am with thee!"

SOME time ago there was a terrible explosion in a colliery in South Wales, which resulted in the death of more than two hundred men. Search parties were formed to explore the mine and look for the bodies. I was talking with one of the searchers the other day, and he told me that in one part of the mine were seven dead men, and close by a little boy very much injured, but with both his arms extended upwards in the attitude of prayer. He was put to bed and tenderly cared for, and when a little better my friend asked him—

"Johnny, were you not terribly frightened to be in that dark place all alone with those dead men?"

But he replied, "Oh, no, for I was talking to Jesus all the time."

THE MAY MEETINGS.

Mission to Deep Sea Fishermen.

At the crowded annual festival of this Society in Exeter Hall on Thursday afternoon, 20th inst., its secretary had to report, amid details of this extensive and flourishing work, a falling off under the head of donations to the extent of £500 less than in the corresponding period last year. The financial statement was very fully set out by a sheet in the hands of everyone attending the meeting. No less than 12,591 members had been treated medically and surgically, while nearly 11,000 missionary visits had been paid, supplemented by 3075 religious services. The growing use of steam trawlers, superseding sailing vessels, is giving a wonderful impetus to the fishing trade of the North Sea, and this calls for a corresponding increase of activity in the varied religious and benevolent operations of the Mission.

The risk which exists of allowing mere Jubilee sentiment to interfere with intelligent gifts and thought for this solid work, was touched upon in Lord Kinnaird's speech from the chair. He trusted that a full measure of means would continue to be contributed for maintaining the thirteen vessels which move with such good results among the 20,000 fishers in Northern waters, not only furnishing loving ministry for the bodily needs of men who endure many hardships, but carrying those who watch for the best interests of immortal souls. A telegraphic message of congratulation to the Queen on the extension of her glorious reign was submitted by the chairman and enthusiastically adopted.

Mr. Wilson, M.P. (Hull), chairman of one of the largest fishing companies in the North Sea, claimed considerable interest in the Mission. The saving of life from the perils of the sea through the devoted agents of the organisation had been enormous.

Fresh from the field of actual work came Dr. Wilfrid T. Grenfell, whose vivid word pictures, full of detail regarding life among the fishermen on board the steam trawlers, formed a splendid setting for his hearty commendation of the work. Shore work is very necessary to secure permanent spiritual results among the men through combined and united Christian effort. Men are being brought to Christ by the Mission, while homes, quarters, and towns are being changed, as mayors of various ports testify. Visitors who will go out to do God's work during the next three months will find ample opportunities for doing good.

Taking the initials of the Mission's title as a text for his address, Rev. W. R. Mowll offered some earnest thoughts to the "grand fellows" at his back on the platform, and to the supporters of this excellent work. Let them turn the letters M.D.S.F. into manliness, decision, sobriety, and faith. This Mission fights the great evil of drink (in order, be it ever remembered, to bring in the grand story of the Cross. This work must succeed, its activities being founded upon principles of evangelical truth.

Rev. W. Hardy Harwood joined in the expressions of thanksgiving and hope that gather about the work of this most deserving society. Robust, simple, and brotherly Christianity is a marked characteristic of godly seamen; and he heartily commended such goodly fruit in the work of the Mission.

Introduced by Mr. Frederick Treves, F.R.C.S., some skippers and members of crews from the Mission's vessels were presented with good conduct stripes by Lady Archibald; and then the smacksmen present sang one of their stirring choruses, while the collection was being taken.

Mr. Frank Wilson, Deputation Secretary, announced that representatives from eleven ports were present, some of whom would speak. Skipper Jones was one, and he told something of the good use made of his vessel at spiritually dark Ostend. Testimonies to personal benefits received through the Mission were given by other men, varied by solos simply and heartily sung.

An addition to the title was indicated by Mr. T. B. Miller, Her Majesty the Queen having authorised the use of the words Royal National Mission to Deep Sea Fishermen. Dr. Gilbart-Smith added a few complimentary words to Lady Archibald and the Chairman.

Flower Girls' Christian Mission.

Having now existed through thirty-one years, the annual meeting of this Mission was held at Woodbridge Chapel, Clerkenwell, Mr. W. J. Orsman being in the chair. Mr. John A. Groom, superintendent, showed in his report that the work was progressing surely, if slowly. A chief feature of the work continued to be the aid rendered to cripple and deformed girls—who, being unfit for service, are still capable of learning the art of artificial flower-making, etc.—and the rescue and training of other girls. The providing of a Holiday Home for blind and helpless children connected with street hawkers was also a new feature. The new schoolroom, for which a fund of £550 is being raised, was said to be greatly needed by those who carried on their work among the young people in London. A large number of women and girls received help and encouragement in the way of loans, clothing, food, help in sickness or distress, etc. The winter meals for poorly-fed Board School children, the country holidays for the sickly and those recovering from illness, etc., were continued as in other years.

In addition to the chairman, the meeting was addressed by Mr. E. G. Robinson, Rev. H. Thomas, and Rev. G. Curtis. The meeting was felt to be of a very helpful kind, and much gratitude was felt and expressed on account of the continued success of the Mission in all its branches among one of the very poorest classes of bread-winners to be found in London.

Field Lane Refuges.

An "Industrial Village" in connection with this merciful work was opened by Mr. F. A. Bevan, in St. Martin's Town-hall, on Tuesday last week. In this it was possible to see some of the results of the teaching which rescued boys and girls turn to good account in the useful and profitable work of sewing, knitting, tailoring, shoemaking, etc. Some of the little artificers were engaged upon actual work in the Saloon; and for quality of workmanship, as well as of material, some of the products of their labours which were on exhibition must be accorded a high place. Choral singing and musical drill enlivened the afternoon very pleasantly, testifying of happy accompaniments to the religious, physical, and industrial training in the schools and institutes under the committee.

Earl Compton presided over the evening annual meeting in the same building. The secretary, Mr. Peregrine Platt, stated that the review of the year's work called for deep gratitude, the varied operations having not only been well sustained, but being also attended by Divine blessing. The work had been carried on upon the old lines—the same great evangelical truths which had ever formed the ground-work of the Institution. During the year 824 persons had been admitted to the Refuges, and 304 helped back again to employment. At the Ragged Church, between 500 and 600 homeless and destitute persons had attended every Sunday morning to a simple, faithful Gospel service.

From half a century's recollection of the Institution, Mr. Walter Hazell, M.P., earnestly advocated the claims of this old-established organisation for moral, social, and religious uplifting of the poor and degraded, especially in the aspect of caring for children whose sufferings arise from parental misfortune, in spite of industry and integrity. If the compassionate spirit of Jesus Christ obtained more general recognition, there would be very little pauperism or vice among us.

Rev. A. J. Poynder sought to stimulate the boys and girls to do full credit to the Christian solicitude which had befriended them. Then he reminded men and women listening to him that this solid work not only seeks to feed famished bodies, but also neglected minds and undying souls. The subject of pitiable city poverty formed the basis of some remarks by Rev. W. H. Harwood (Union Chapel, Islington), who declared that all who follow Christ must, in his name and spirit, do their utmost to effectually touch the misery of mankind in its causes and results. Some more good counsel for the children was contained in this speaker's very good story concerning three boys named Think It, Say It, and Do It.

On this occasion the Chairman's address came at the close of the meeting, he reminding friends that much more remains to be done in Christianising England. Sin, vice, and ignorance are intimately connected with the selfishness of men, the antidote of which is only found in Christ's teaching. The noble and God-like character of all useful labour formed a point for the children in the Earl's speech; but he declared that the chief and prime object at the root of all industrial schools and kindred institutions is to bring the children to God and make them understand the love of the Saviour. If we are to carry on such work so that no child in our land is left outside religious influence of some kind, let those who have time and means come forward and help.

Women's Protestant Union.

The annual conference of the Women's Protestant Union was held on Thursday and Friday in Exeter Hall, On Thursday morning Mr. W. H. Seagram presided, and the principal speakers were Pastor Désiré Joye, formerly a Roman Catholic priest, but now a Protestant missionary in the South of France, and Miss Bayley, from Syria. Mrs. W. R. Arbuthnot (president) made a statement as to the position of the Union. It appears that 1439 new members have been enrolled during the year, making a total of 8000 or 9000, there being 128 branches.

The annual report described the working people of the country as still to a large extent Protestant; but "children and young people are being proselytized wholesale by so-called bright services, and the hundred and one sensuous attractions to be found in many churches of the Establishment." One feature of the work is the assistance given to patients to go to convalescent homes not under Ritualistic control. The revenue of the Union last year was £1006.

On Thursday afternoon Mr. H. Forbes Witherby presided, and the speakers included the Rev. F. A. Jefferd, of Madeira, and Miss Brockway, from Madagascar, who described the operations of the Jesuits in that island. In the evening Rev. Dr. Gritton took the chair, and addresses were given by the Rev. F. J. Peters, from Peru, and Miss Emily Fosbery, from China.

On Friday morning and afternoon, Surgeon-General Partridge and Rev. Dr. F. J. Hamilton successively occupied the chair. The other speakers included Pastor L. Hoyois, from Belgium, Mr. J. G. Wheatcroft Brown, of Barcelona, and Pastor Tienda, of Santander. The proceedings were closed by a conversazione in the evening.

Tract Society Breakfast.

At the public breakfast in Cannon-street Hotel last week, there was a very large attendance of friends and supporters of the Society. The chairman (Colonel Williams, M.P.) was supported by a large number of workers engaged in evangelistic work. At the conclusion of the repast, the chairman referred to the wide influence of the work of the Religious Tract Society, maintaining that it was a work absolutely necessary in furthering the work of God.

Canon Taylor Smith, speaking of work in Africa, strongly emphasised the enormous assistance received through the publications of the Religious Tract Society, particularly in their endeavours in the direction of technical education. Dr. MacGowan, of China, testified to the usefulness of the Society in his work. The Chinese were only to be approached through the scholar, who was considered as the highest man in society, and to whom the more ignorant carried all their difficulties. Rev. Frank Swainson, a missionary from the Rocky Mountains, gave an interesting account of work among the Indians. Miss Brockley, of the London Missionary Society's mission in Madagascar, especially referred to that part of the Society's work which enabled them to print hymns in the Malagasy tongue. The Society sent out suitable paper for printing purposes, which was impossible to obtain without their aid. Rev. George Whelpton, of Paris; Rev. Robert Spurgeon, of Bengal, and Rev. J. Redmond Bacon also spoke in appreciation of the assistance rendered to missionaries by the Religious Tract Society.

It was stated during breakfast that the Society proclaims the Gospel in 213 languages, and circulated over sixty millions of publications last year, of which nearly eighteen millions were tracts granted free or at greatly reduced prices. The Society does not spend one shilling of its subscriptions or donations on management or other expenses, all of which are met by the profits from its publishing business. On its missionary work nearly £104 8s. 5d. per day was spent last year.

Evangelical Continental Society.

The annual meeting of the Society was held in Stamford Hill Congregational Church last Thursday. The chairman, Mr. F. Paterson, in an excellent speech, commended the claims of Continental Europe to the sympathy and support of our Churches.

The Secretary submitted a résumé of the annual report, bringing up to date the operations of the Society in France, Italy, Belgium, Bohemia, and Spain. Rev. W. Garrett Horder claimed for the Society a more distinct and hearty recognition on the part of the Congregational Union of England and Wales, suggesting a place in the programme of its annual gatherings, and a more general inclusion in the annual collections of the larger churches. Pasteur Hoyois spoke upon the work of evangelisation in Belgium; Pasteur Cordey upon that in France; and Pastor de Tienda upon the needs of Spain. Pastor Keusseff detailed some of the difficulties in the spread of the Gospel in Bulgaria, in consequence of the persecution by the priesthood and members of the Greek Orthodox Church, but expressed satisfaction with the progress being made. Pasteur Châtelain also addressed the meeting.

Friends' Yearly Meeting.

As usual, the Yearly Meeting was preceded this year by the Meeting on Ministry and Oversight, and the chief event of that gathering was the report of a visit paid to all the meetings of Friends in Great Britain during the year. If the honest and outspoken advice rendered by the visiting committee is only followed, better and brighter days for the Church are at hand.

On Wednesday, May 19, the Yearly Meeting assembled—not as usual, but very unusually, for instead of the men and women meeting separately, as heretofore, both sexes were united as one body of believers, and thus, in the capacity of a church, was illustrated the teaching of Gal. iii. 28, "There can be no male and female: for ye are one man in Christ Jesus." Both the Yearly Meeting and the "Meeting for Sufferings," which is its standing committee, are now equally open to, and composed of, men and women Friends. In addition to appointed representatives from all the quarterly meetings, the ministers and elders will be ex-officio members. This constitutional change has been effected without friction or heartburning, though there was not perfect unity of opinion on the subject.

Another very unusual event that was brought before the Yearly Meeting was the increase of members and "attenders" (or adherents) of 1000 persons. No such increase has been heretofore reported, and there was naturally much satisfaction expressed and hope felt. The debt that burdened the Home Mission Committee last year has been removed, and the increase of sixteen schools and 1600 scholars gladdened the hearts of the numerous friends of this great movement.

Relief funds for India exceed £5000, and Friends were urged to send more for months to come.

Correspondence with Dublin and American Yearly Meetings, as well as with our Australasian Friends and those on the European Continent, form an interesting feature, and the memorials of deceased Friends solemnise and soften many hearts. A great step forward was taken when the Yearly Meeting assumed the responsibility of the important Industrial Mission to Pemba. The meeting on Monday last, when two young women offered themselves to follow the husband and brother gone before was a moving time, and reminded some Friends of the old anti-slavery days.

The Foreign Mission work is in a healthy and advancing condition, and needing and receiving increased support. It would be tedious to enumerate the various annual gatherings that fill in the spare minutes between the sittings of the Yearly Meeting, but they reach out their influence to China, India, Bulgaria, Armenia, France, Japan, and, indeed, to almost the whole world.

Inspiration and hope are more and more taking possession of the Society of Friends, and growth beyond anything since early days is anticipated by not a few. Wm. Hodson.

Willesden, May 25.

The Strangers' Friend Society.

On Thursday afternoon, May 20, the annual business meeting of the members of this London charity took place at 52, Finsbury-pavement. On the evening of that day another meeting was held in the lecture hall of the Y.M.C.A., Aldersgate-street. The report states that there are 165 visitors of both sexes engaged in the work, their services being entirely gratuitous. The visitors perform another important duty in verifying for subscribers the statements contained in personal appeals for help.

At the evening meeting several stirring incidents were given by the Society's visitors, from all parts of London, showing the importance of the work being accomplished, and how an entrance is often gained into the hearts of the lowest.

Anti-Vivisection.

The annual meeting of the Victoria-street and International Society for the Protection of Animals from Vivisection was held at the Queen's Hall, Langham Place. Lord Coleridge, who presided, congratulated the society upon the evidences of public sympathy and support which they had received from every side. Publicity was what vivisectionists feared, and in that fear of publicity he saw the proof that the public conscience was aroused. The friends of the suffering animals asked for publicity in order that all might be made acquainted with the enormities perpetrated in the vivisectionists' laboratories. If these were known there would be no need for legislation on the subject; vivisection would die on the spot.

Hon. Stephen Coleridge, secretary, read letters received from sympathisers, including Father Ignatius, Sir H. Hawkins, and Sir Henry Irving. A resolution was carried unanimously, "affirming the impossibility of any adequate protection from torture being afforded to animals under the present law, and declaring in favour of the total suppression of vivisection by Act of Parliament."

The Peace Society.

Sir J. W. Pease presided over the eighty-first annual meeting of the Peace Society, which was held last week at Devonshire House, Bishopsgate. The report, read by Dr. Evans Darby, referred to the many instances of arbitration resorted to in recent years.

The report pleaded for arbitration in South African affairs, and condemned the war in the Soudan and elsewhere. As usual, the Society had organised lectures and public meetings in all parts of the country, its agents having been continuously active, and have given upwards of 400 addresses, and its auxiliaries and affiliated societies have supplemented these to a very large extent. The Peace Sunday movement was very encouraging, about 3000 promises of participation having reached the central office alone.

Mr. Arthur Pease, M.P., rejoiced in the remarkable growth of the movement in favour of peace and arbitration, and of the principles represented by the Society. He detailed the causes of the rejection of the United States Arbitration Treaty; one, he said, was Irish. One member of our Parliament had done his best to prevent arbitration, so that, at some future time, the United States might help Ireland to fight England. Another cause he found in the ambition of some Americans to own all North America.

Sir Walter Phillimore expressed satisfaction at the arbitration on the Venezuelan boundary, and, while regretting the refusal of the Senate to ratify the Arbitration Treaty with the United States, expressed the belief that public opinion in favour thereof will survive.

Addresses were also delivered by Messrs. W. R. Cremer, H. J. Wilson, and Herbert Burrows, and Mrs. Bonwick. Reformers were urged to renewed and strenuous efforts in the promotion of international goodwill and concord.

Temperance in the Queen's Reign.

A demonstration was held in the Queen's Hall on Friday night, under the auspices of the National Temperance League, to commemorate the temperance triumphs of the Victorian era.

The Archbishop of Canterbury, who presided, said that the completion of the sixtieth year of Her Majesty's reign was nearly the completion of sixty years of united temperance work. After we had said all that was worth saying about the progress of science, we could turn to the far more valuable and permanent progress in the moral or spiritual scale. Slow as this progress might be, we had seen a great spread of kindly feeling, all classes coming to care for each other. Men were far less ready now to condemn others for conscientious differences than they were sixty years ago. During Her Majesty's reign we had seen men unite in waging a steady battle with the evils disgracing our country, lowering character, and inflicting untold misery on our people. By joining hands we had learnt the possibility of stemming evils which otherwise never could be reached. Temperance societies unquestionably furnished one of the main instances, if not the greatest, of this kind of united action; and the hope was growing every day that they would triumph over the dreadful evil of intemperance. They had already succeeded in defeating the doctors, having forced them to study the subject with real care, and to confess that for all practical purposes intoxicating liquor was totally unnecessary, though there were always special cases and emergencies in which some use for it might be found. At the opening of the Temperance Hospital they were told by the leading medical journals that if patients died the governors ought to be prosecuted. That hospital now effected as many cures as any other; and, though the physicians there were allowed to use alcohol when they considered it really necessary, they had steadily drifted to the conclusion that on the whole there was no need for it.

Dr. Marshall Randles, President of the Wesleyan Conference, gave an address describing the various steps of the temperance reform during the reign, and especially the way in which the suspicions of the Churches had been turned into the warmest support. A resolution was unanimously carried congratulating the Queen on her long and beneficent reign, and acknowledging with gratitude to God the remarkable development of the temperance reformation. Mrs. Temple received a number of purses on behalf of a fund for the League's "Twentieth Century Crusade" of aggressive work. Earlier in the day a reception was given to about thirty "Diamond Jubilee teetotallers," headed by Mr. Thomas Whittaker, all of these ladies and gentlemen having joined in the movement before Her Majesty's accession.

Home of Industry.

The bright cheery faces of the merry party of little ones from the Training Home made every one attending the workers' meeting last week glad at heart and grateful to our heavenly Father that He had enabled Miss Macpherson to rescue another family. Many an earnest prayer went up that the good seed of the kingdom received in daily instruction might bear fruit in their young lives, and they be gathered in by the Good Shepherd Himself before leaving in a few weeks for Canada.

Our last rescue is a bright intelligent boy of thirteen, whose father died ten weeks ago. The sudden death was such a shock to the mother that she survived but a short time. The furniture of their room was seized for rent and the poor orphan lad turned into the street, where he was found by the police. Such sad histories are best enlivened by the good news we have received of our March party of young emigrants. Mr. Merry writes:—"We have only good news to give you, for almost all the children have gone to their farm-homes, and we have not received a single complaint."

Mr. A. Milne Kyd gave a practical and heart-searching address on the words, "Servants for Jesus' sake." W. H. Merry.

The Scottish Assemblies.

LAST Thursday the General Assemblies of the Established and Free Churches began their sessions for this year. The city looked its best, as the people were keeping holiday in honour of the Queen's birthday, and the sun shone from a cloudless sky. The usual procession of the Lord High Commissioner (the Marquis of Tweeddale) attracted much attention as it wound its way from the ancient palace of Holyrood to St. Giles' Cathedral in the High-street. A sermon was preached by the retiring Moderator, Dr. Scott, from Heb. vi. 1, "Leaving the principles of the doctrine of Christ, let us go on unto perfection." The congregation was large, and the discourse eloquent and impressive. The church, however, is not well adapted for hearing, although it lends itself readily to an imposing function like the one it witnessed on Thursday.

After service, which lasted about an hour, the members of Assembly went to their own hall, whose galleries were already thronged with the general public. The Assembly being constituted, Rev. Dr. William Mair, of Earlston, was chosen Moderator. He has for many years taken a prominent place in church courts, and is a great authority on ecclesiastical law.

In the Free Assembly Hall the opening proceedings were marked by quiet solemnity and enthusiasm. Principal Miller, of Madras, the retiring Moderator, furnished a very able and suggestive sermon from Isa. lx. 22, "A little one shall become a thousand, and a small one a strong nation: I the Lord will hasten it in his time." It was a powerful discourse. In closing he said they needed to remember that every church is but a temporary instrument towards the attainment of a Divine end, and that any church which makes much of place or power, or of wealth or numbers or social standing, is in danger of separation from Him who never pleased Himself. If they found it hopeless as yet to get Christians in the mass to take the lowest room, at least let them so patiently submit to the guidance of the Spirit of all grace that, like Jeremiah, they might bring something of the temper of the nobler days to come into the epoch in which our lot was cast.

Rev. Dr. Hugh Macmillan, of Greenock, the new Moderator, happily chose as his theme the advances made during the sixty years of the Queen's reign. This he treated with much ability and wealth of illustration. Towards the close of the address he said:—

"There are drawbacks which diminish our self complacency, and occasion much concern. Labour is at constant strife with capital, and capital with labour. Owing to the severe depression of agriculture, and the consequent diminution of the cultivation of the land, our country districts have been greatly depopulated, and our large towns have grown immensely larger. The population massed in the slums of the great cities offer, by their chronic want and degradation, a most perplexing problem to the social reformer and the Christian worker. All these failures and disappointments in our triumphant progress show that we have been endeavouring too much to solve our social, political, and moral problems in ways of our own, and that we need to rely more upon the regenerating power of the Gospel of Jesus Christ. There never was a greater necessity than in these last successful days for the saving work of the Christian church. The history of our own Church, as I have said, has been contemporaneous with the Victorian age. It has participated in all the influences of that age, and it has been a potent factor in helping on the social and religious progress of our country. What a glorious field for missions has been opened up for our Church and for all the Christian Churches! Things have greatly changed since the first mission to heathen Scotland took place. The experimental age of missions has passed away. We go on to assured success, trusting in Him who shall not fail nor be discouraged, till He have set judgment in the earth, and the isles still wait for his law."

There is nothing very exciting in the programme of business to be got through by the Established Assembly, but the debate in the Free Assembly on union with the United Presbyterian Church is being anticipated with great interest.

The Canadian Government is to introduce a bill for taking a plebiscite on the question of prohibiting the liquor traffic throughout the Dominion.

Christian Succour to India.

DEAR SIR,—Next month thousands of orphans will be offered to the missionaries. One magistrate said he could collect 8000 in his district alone. To take these and to prepare accommodation and necessaries for these would require £40,000, or nearly the total of all the missionary funds and Christian funds. Yet, by a recent mail I have received six or seven letters from missionaries in the Bombay Presidency alone (which is by no means the worst), speaking of their deep need.

One writer says: "The children were all naked under twelve years. The families to whom I gave money had not had a good meal for a fortnight. The condition of the people all round here is getting alarmingly worse. Thousands are living on a frugal meal once a day, and some passing days without what we call a meal. The worst is not yet. The rainy season will be coming in a month; exposure and reduced bodies are favourable for cholera and epidemics. My field has 130,000; the fives and tens are helped, but hundreds and thousands are left."

Others speak of the masses who have lost their cattle, and have no money to buy seed or cattle, and consequently cannot prepare for this year's crop; another expects to be offered 500 orphans, which will cost at least £2000. Is he to receive them or turn them away because he has no money?

I am sure people do not understand that the famine is two or three times as great as in 1877: yet little more has been subscribed than in that year. Do we realise that there are millions suffering, whose condition must get worse till the autumn crop brings more grain? Do we realise that these helpless people will rapidly succumb to fever and dysentery brought on by long-continued lack of an adequate meal a day, or for several days? Have Christians forgotten that the Government of India says there are thirty millions in districts where there is not food enough to maintain life, and forty millions where there is not food enough to maintain health? Is it not time for us to look at these facts in the light of the judgment-seat of Christ? Is it not alarming that many who enjoy spiritual teaching seem to be utterly unmoved by what the greatest authority on Indian statistics calls "one of the greatest calamities that ever came on this world"? No one can say, "We knew it not" when souls are being drawn to death by hundreds of thousands. Have we forgotten our Lord's words in Matt. xxv., that those who will go into eternal punishment are those to whom He says, "I was an hungered and ye gave me no meat"? While celebrating the Queen's Diamond Jubilee, and remembering the marvellous extent of empire given to England, have we forgotten that these perishing millions were committed to our care? Are we saying, "Am I my brother's keeper?"

Through the loving help of fellow-Christians, we have been able to send about £560 a week lately, but this has been quite insufficient to meet known needs. Last week the funds at our disposal would not admit of our sending so much. I ought to add that there are tokens of God blessing the dear orphan children who have been taken in. Hundreds of them have come in so enfeebled by hunger that they have soon passed away, and a stream of suffering little ones are waiting to be received in Christ's name, to be led to Him and saved for ever. Who will have a part in the work?—Yours for Christ's sake, Radstock.

Dr. Barnardo's Homes.—The annual meeting of these institutions is arranged this year to be held in Queen's Hall on the afternoon of Wednesday, June 2, at 3.30 p.m.; "Founder's Day" will be at the Girls' Village of Ilford, on July 7; while the annual street collection in London and other centres throughout the country will take place on Saturday, June 26. Full details of these events are given in the May issue of Night and Day.

Stockton-on-Tees.—Amid many tokens of the Divine approval and benediction, a series of meetings for the Deepening of Spiritual Life has been held here. The conference extended over five days, during which Bible-readings were given by Pastor F. E. Marsh, of Sunderland, and Mr. Chas. H. Judd, of the China Inland Mission. Various ministers of the town and neighbourhood, were present, and took part in the proceedings, and it is believed that the conference will leave its mark on the spiritual life of the town.

The Army in India.

IN a letter too long for publication, an officer's wife describes her experiences in India, and the earnest efforts put forth for the spiritual and intellectual improvement of the soldiers. In influences such as these lies the solution of the problems which are perplexing our officers and statesmen to-day. Interest the men in what is good. This is to a large extent the key to the situation. Occupy well the "idle hands," and they will have less time and inclination to do Satan's mischief. The writer says:—

"What delight it was to keep open house for our soldiers, and welcome any who liked, when off duty, to attend family prayers with us. It was a bit of home life, and sometimes a score or two would sit round the room.

> At once they sing,
> At once they pray.
> They hear of heaven,
> And learn the way.

Nor did we send them away empty-handed if flowers were in season, and little books and papers were always plentiful, with a hearty 'Good-bye; God bless you!'—and He did.

"On Communion Sunday it was good to see a troop of reverent soldiers kneeling at the Lord's Table. I have counted as many as thirty-eight, and we know these men are no hypocrites, and only those who were leading consistent lives would ever attend. I generally spent two hours or so in hospital five days in the week, two evenings being devoted to Gospel meetings. Very many believed the Gospel message, and found it 'the power of God unto salvation' from present sin as well as future punishment.

"I would appeal to wives and mothers still there, and ask if they can do nothing to help these brave men who are ready to hazard their lives for us."

The British Committee of the Federation founded by Mrs. Josephine Butler held an important and representative meeting at St. Martin's Town Hall on Friday last, to protest against the proposed recrudescence of the C.D. Acts in India. Mrs. Josephine Butler wrote a stirring pronouncement to the meeting, calling upon all who love justice and moral purity to join the new crusade. The veteran Sir J. Stansfeld was also present, and delivered a decisive and stirring address. Mr. Walter S. B. McLaren presided, and both he and his wife addressed the meeting. Mr. James Stuart, M.P., who took up the Parliamentary conduct of this abolitionist cause when Sir James Stansfeld could no longer undertake it, traced the history of the latest developments. Mr. Stuart showed that the very carefully worded despatch from Lord George Hamilton to the Government of India was not so important as were the declarations and demands made during the debate in the House of Lords on May 14 and 17, when peer after peer openly demanded a restoration of the Acts for India and for England, and in one case for the whole Empire. That debate really showed what is meant and aimed at by the army and medical authorities, and it is against this renewed provision for immorality that the Christian community must agitate.

The same tone indicated above was also the tone of a very earnest and interesting meeting convened at Devonshire House, Bishopsgate-street, E.C., by the Friends' Society for Abolition of all State Regulation of Vice, on May 20. Similar meetings will be convened all over the country, and every means of agitation which can be adopted to prevent further development of this system of making terms with vice will be used. Sympathisers are asked to apply for literature, etc., to the Secretary (Miss Forsaith), 17, Tothill-street, Westminster, S.W.

Irish Evangelical Society.—Dr. A. T. Pierson made a powerful appeal on behalf of Mission work in Ireland at the annual meeting of this society at Clapton Park on May 20. The report told of many confessing Christ during the year, and a new measure of enthusiasm throughout the Society. Again it has been proved that tent work reaches many districts that can be reached in no other way so effectually. Great blessing rested upon this branch of effort during last summer and autumn. Mr. W. T. Boyce, evangelist at Galway, spoke of the kind hearing now given in the open air to Gospel preachers. Rev. James Lyon, of Carrickfergus, gave pointed testimony to the aggressive work of the Society.

Mission of Love.

THE annual meetings of this society of Christian workers, who are banded together in carrying on work in some of the darkest places of Liverpool, were recently held at the Y.M.C.A., Mount Pleasant. There were large and sympathetic audiences. This mission (says The Protestant Standard) was instituted in 1885 by Pastor Herbert J. S. Wood. The work is now of such a widespread character that it has to be carried on by an extensive band of believers, who act in harmony under the title of "The Mission of Love Company."

The afternoon meeting was presided over by Mr. T. A. Leigh. The intensely-interesting annual report was read by Pastor Wood. There are numerous departments of work connected with the mission, all of which are being successfully carried on. Pastor Wood, in the course of his remarks, referred to several interesting cases of conversion; many rescued from the lowest depths of sin and shame are now leading holy and useful lives.

Councillor HENDERSON (hon. treasurer) having spoken in the highest terms of the work, the CHAIRMAN said he had known the mission from the time of its starting — twelve years ago, and it was doing excellent work. The only way to get at the masses with the Gospel is to go to them, and this is what the Mission of Love is doing.

Mrs. WOOD mentioned that the workers in connection with the Mission pay 300 visits a week, chiefly amongst the most degraded and the outcasts of society. Many of these have been won over by the influence of love and kindness. With the exception of Saturday they held nine meetings a day. Mr. EVAN MCINTOSH gave pleasing testimony concerning the good the Mission had been the means of accomplishing for him. He was brought under the influence of the Mission of Love about six years ago, after a hard life of sin and drunkenness. Others bore like testimony, either to what they had seen or personally experienced.

Friends of Armenia.

A CONFERENCE on Armenian relief, convened by the International Association of the Friends of Armenia, was held last week at St. Martin's Town Hall. Papers were read on relief work in the United Kingdom, Switzerland, Belgium, France, Bulgaria, and the United States.

The Bishop of ROCHESTER, who presided over the afternoon session, said it was to be deplored that civilised Europe appeared to be unable to do anything to check the abuses in Armenia. What, he thought, was even more to be regretted, was the coldness and apathy of the nation at the present time with regard to the conduct of the Turk.

A public meeting in the evening under the presidency of the Bishop of HEREFORD, who said there was nothing they viewed with more satisfaction than the rising tide of genuine sympathy among the people on the Continent for the Armenian people. Their philanthropic work in this pathetic cause bade fair to be not only a work of charity to the suffering Armenians, but a bond of union and friendship between England and France and other countries on the Continent. Sir J. H. KENNAWAY, M.P., moved a resolution expressing thankfulness at the international character which the movement for the relief of the Armenian people had taken.

Mr. BRYCE, M.P., in moving a resolution pledging the meeting to support the various organisations engaged in assisting the Armenians, said they met at a sad and disheartening moment, for the execrable Government of the Turk had, apparently, been given a new lease of power, and started with increased pride on a fresh career of fanaticism and cruelty. He did not suppose that five years ago they would have believed in the possibility of their having cause in so short a time to feel ashamed of Christian Europe and of Christian England. They could only live in hope that, despite the dark prospect, brighter days were in store for the long-suffering and down-trodden Christians in the East.

Requests for Prayer.—For a Gospel mission in St. Mary Magdalen Church, Colchester, June 4 to 13, by Rev. T. H. Sparshott.—For blessing on meetings by Lord Radstock in Conference Hall, Eccleston-street, S.W. Praise.—For much blessing at "The Foresters' Hall" services, Margate, since the opening on April 25th ult.

Evangelistic Notes.

REV. DR. W. USHER, from the Pastors' College, has conducted a six days' mission at Major-road Baptist Chapel, Stratford, E. The attendances were excellent, and many souls confessed Christ for the first time. Those who heard will long remember Dr. Usher's visit.

Rev. John McNeill has been attracting large congregations in Carnegie Hall and Chickering Hall, New York, and other places of concourse. He has had services specially for business men, and his graphic presentations of the truth have proved most effective. Mr. J. H. Burke, his former singing companion, has conducted the praise, and Mr. Sankey has also assisted.

Mr. Powers, of Hull, has finished a month's evangelistic work in Paisley. The various missions in connection with which he has laboured held a social testimony meeting last week in the Free High Church, Hull. Rev. J. B. Sturrock spoke of the good that had been done by Mr. Powers, especially among the young. Similar testimony was given by various missionaries and other Christian workers. During the month there has been not a few professed decisions for Christ, and Christians have been stirred up to take a livelier interest in aggressive work.

Most helpful and interesting meetings were held in Swansea by Rev. W. Hay Aitken from May 17 to 19. The subjects of "Gambling," "Intemperance," and "Social Purity" (the latter for men only) were ably dealt with at the evening meetings, while the two afternoon meetings for Christians proved profitable and inspiring. It was interesting to notice how many persons remembered the previous meetings addressed by Mr. Aitken over twenty years ago, and better still, to know that some are to-day leading consistent Christian lives who came to a decision then. W. NICHOLS, Sec.

Messrs. Bewley and Frank Weaver have conducted a fortnight's mission in Salem Church, Nelson, Lancashire, from May 9 to 21. It rejoiced our hearts to hear the Word of God so faithfully preached and effectively sung, and to find our brothers getting hold of the hearts of the people. Their visit amongst us will not soon be forgotten. Many sinners came to the penitent form and were led to decision. Among those reached by the mission were some of our Sunday-school scholars, as well as members of the congregation.

JOHN WELLOCK, Secretary.

Mr. J. Albinson has recently held mission services at Peckham Y.M.C.A., Miss Macpherson's Home of Industry, "The Welcome," Jewin-street, and the Navvy Mission, Walthamstow.

Students' Summer Conference.

THE Students' Summer Conference will not be at Keswick this year. After long deliberation and much prayer, the executive of the B.C.C.U. decided to hold the Conference at Curbar, Desbysuire, July 24-August 2.

We have special cause this year (says the summer number of The Student Volunteer) to expect God's blessing on the Conference. As we gathered at Keswick a year ago, letters came telling of a spiritual revival in the Australian colleges. Since then we have heard of God's mighty deeds among the students of South Africa, China, and Japan. We hope that at the Conference Mr. Mott will be able to tell of his tour round the world.

There will be, as in previous years, Bible-readings and addresses on the Christian life by well-known leaders in the Church at home and abroad. There will also be meetings for considering methods of carrying on work in colleges. Among the subjects to which meetings will be devoted will be:—"The Morning Watch," "The Use of Time," "Personal Work," "Systematic Giving," "Choice of a Life Work," "Work among Schoolboys," and "The Memorial of the S.V.M.U." There will be special meetings for presidents and secretaries of Christian unions and missionary bands, and a training class for leaders of Bible circles.

The Conference lasts for a greater number of days than in previous years. This makes it possible to have fewer meetings on each day. The afternoons will be left entirely free for recreation, and on the Thursday the ordinary morning meetings will not be held.

Letters to the Editor.

READING IN THE TRAIN.

DEAR SIR,—A little consideration shows that good books are better mental foodstuff than newspapers, and a little further consideration shows that if we would have spiritual food we must go to the Bible. Now for this, the daily train ride gives the best opportunity that many of us have for individual reading. I have read many useful and charming books in this way, satisfying myself with the contents posters of the newspapers for my contemporaneous history.

For a number of years I have made it a regular habit to read and consider a passage of Scripture as soon as I am seated in the train. Few of us can count upon a period of quiet so regular day by day, and so free from possibility of interruption. My mother used to get up early and lock herself in a room every day for the same purpose, and truly we are unfitted for the day without it. There is no need to be ashamed of getting out one's Bible, for before long one gets ashamed for those that can identify themselves with the illustrated productions of another character that are now the fashion. Moreover, the example is good and encouraging, and should in time lead to those who practise it speaking now and again one to another.

A SEASON TICKET HOLDER.

[This correspondence may now cease.—ED.]

SABBATH OBSERVANCE.

DEAR SIR,—In reply to "An Old Independent," I would say that, search the Bible as we will, we shall find that there is no authority whatever for setting aside the Fourth Commandment. The one day in seven was given, as stated in Genesis, as a holy Rest Day. The summary of God's moral law, as drawn up in the Decalogue, and given to God's people in the wilderness, contained nothing that was to be discarded or ignored in the Christian Era.

Our Divine Lord Himself said "The Sabbath was made for man"—not especially the Jew, but mankind; and these words from his lips seem to me the greatest proof of the obligation to observe it always.—Yours faithfully, E. L. CONNOR.

[Another correspondent, with equal conviction, classes the Sabbath among the ancient ceremonial injunctions which passed away, and derives an argument against Sabbath-keeping from the attitude of the Reformers and some later divines. As a fact, the Sabbath was instituted before the ceremonial law; and whereas the Levitical institutions vanished away because they were fulfilled in Christ, the weekly Sabbath remained, because it was not for Israel merely, but for the human race. Indeed, the Sabbath lived on, enfranchised from Rabbinism, and invested with a new significance: it is no longer a seventh day commemorating the completion of God's creative work, but a first day, in memory of Christ's resurrection, and ever looking forward and anticipating the "rest which remaineth for the people of God."—ED.]

Epsom Races.

DEAR SIR,—May I appeal for help in this blessed though difficult work? but one that has been owned by God and crowned with success? During the four days at Epsom—Monday, May 31, to Friday, June 4—we have the opportunity of giving away tracts Gospels, and Testaments, or of speaking to about two millions of people.

We need 100 men, good and true, filled with power and the Holy Ghost. We also require £60 in money, 200,000 tracts, any number of Gospels and Testaments. The British and Foreign Bible Society has always made us a grant of Gospels, and much good has been done by them.

All cash, books, and tracts should be sent to Mr. W. Hodson, North Tadsworth, Epsom. For full particulars for workers, write to Mr. Heatley, Royal-road, Kennington. As I am now working in different parts of the country, this arrangement will simplify matters.—Yours truly, JOSIAH NIX.

The Gospel in Camp.—About one thousand militiamen from various parts of the United Kingdom will be assembled at Brecon, South Wales, for their annual month's training under canvas, in the course of a week or two. Every year the camp is visited repeatedly and systematically by some Christian workers with tracts and religious papers. Christian periodicals, tracts (illustrated preferred), and Gospel booklets are earnestly solicited by D. Devalt Thomas, Castle-street, Brecon.

The Y.M.C.A.

The Athens Association, which is just over two years old, has now thirty active members.

The Ballymena Association in Ireland has raised £40 for the relief of the distress caused by the famine in India.

The membership of the Adelaide Association now stands at 715. The Association has benefited to the extent of £2000 from a bequest under the will of the ate Sir Thomas Elder.

The three sons of the President of the King's Lynn Association (all boys at school) have by their own exertions raised a sum of over £150 towards the reduction of the debt upon the building.

The annual public meeting of the Folkestone Association was held on May 19, under the presidency of Dr. Murray. A report of excellent work was presented. The Association is taking a forward step in the interests of young men in neighbouring towns by the formation of a sub-district union.

The Spring Conference of the South Midland District Union was held at Oxford on May 20. A paper was read by Mr. W. Hind Smith on "The Value of District Organisation," followed by an interesting and practical discussion. The Reading Association, which is in the centre of the district, is entering handsome new buildings in Friar-street.

The Trowbridge Association held its annual meeting on May 18. The report showed a year of much progress, the work undertaken being far in excess of any previous year. The total membership stood at 217, an increase of seventy-five on the year. Many had been transferred to other associations at home and abroad, and ten from associates to members.

The Camden Road Y.M.C.A. Foreign Missionary Union recently held their annual meeting. The chairman, Mr. Alfred C. Furse, urged that the greatest motive for the evangelisation of the world should come from personal love to Christ rather than from a mere sense of duty. Rev. John MacInnes gave his impressions of the work of the various missionary bodies which he had seen in the Holy Land.

Mr. Christian Phildius, one of the secretaries of the International Committee, Geneva, has completed a tour among the associations in German Switzerland, Germany, Holland, and Belgium. In his report he says he has met many most efficient associations, and had encouragements of every kind, thus giving him, "on his return home a new enthusiasm for our great and deserving cause." During fifty-seven days he was able to hold in all fifty-eight meetings, in which from 10,000 to 11,000 persons took part.

The recent International Y.M.C.A. Convention at Mobile was followed by the Conference of Secretaries and Directors at Selma, Ala. Taking both gatherings into view (says the N.Y. Independent), two or three facts of great interest appear. One was the very courteous treatment accorded to the coloured delegates. Another was the fact that, notwithstanding the attendance was less than half that at other conventions, on account of the distance, the sum pledged for the committee's work exceeded that at any other convention, North or South. Among other items of special interest was the opening of the first Railroad Association in the South at Selma.

The Y.W.C.A.

The Association in Cape Town are purposing to make alterations and additions to their building, in order to cope with the growing necessities of the work. It is reckoned that £8000 will be needed to secure adequate premises, including the additional furniture.

In connection with the new headquarters at George-street, Hanover-square, and the new hall and gymnasium about to be erected, a meeting for prayer and praise was held on Thursday last. Mr. W. T. Paton presided, and gave a helpful address on "Prayerfulness Better than Carefulness." On the same afternoon a meeting for prayer was held by the workers of the Factory Helpers' Union. Both meetings were well attended. These were followed by an "At Home" given by Mrs. J. H. Tritton as president of the World's Y.W.C.A. Earnest addresses on work in India were delivered.

Young Christians' Missionary Union.—A missionary meeting was held at the Stockwell Orphanage on Saturday last in connection with this Union. Rev. F. B. Meyer presided Mr. J. H. Oldham (of the S.V.M.A.), Rev. J. W. Ewing, and Miss Lucy E. Guinness (who has lately returned from India) gave very earnest addresses, and at the close many rose to dedicate themselves to the Lord for the foreign field.

Irish Notes.

The late Mr. G. Thompson has bequeathed £500 to the Johnston Memorial Home of the Presbyterian Orphan Society.

During the past fortnight Rev. Gilbert G. Warren, of Hankow, China, has been addressing missionary meetings in Ireland with the view of raising means to support a missionary as a special agent of the Irish Christian Endeavour societies in the foreign field.

Regret is felt by a wide circle of friends at the death of Rev. Wm. Rogers, Presbyterian minister, Whiteabbey, who has passed away in his 51st year. He was the author of several publications of an evangelistic nature, and was a most devoted minister and pastor.

The half-yearly convention of the Portadown District Local Preachers' Association was held last week in the Methodist church, Armagh, Rev. R. Cole presiding. The subjects considered were, "Local Preachers as Mission Preachers," and "The Best Methods and most useful Books for a Local Preacher's Study of the Bible." The proceedings were very interesting and instructive.

Obituary.

MR. EVERED POOLE.

Just as we go to press we learn, with much regret, of the death of this well-known Christian worker and writer for the young. We hope to give details in our next issue.

MR. JAMES STIFF.

The death is announced, at Swanage, of Mr. James Stiff, of the London Pottery, Lambeth, in his eighty-ninth year. For many years Mr. Stiff was widely known as a supporter of Christian effort and philanthropic enterprise. Of late years he has lived in retirement, but, nevertheless, his interest in good things has been keen and sympathetic. Mr. Stiff had for a long time been associated with the Metropolitan Tabernacle and its institutions.

REV. E. WARBRECK.

This clergyman, vicar of Stapenhill, near Burton-on-Trent, fell asleep in Jesus on Sunday morning, May 9. By his bedside were his Bible, pencil, and unfinished notes for the morning sermon on the words "In Him was life." Mr. Warbreck was a sufferer from angina pectoris, but went to bed on the Saturday evening after a prayer-meeting no worse than usual. It was a great surprise to all his friends to hear that the Lord had taken him in his sleep, but it was an answered prayer. Mr. Warbreck was more than a Protestant and Evangelical clergyman: he was a soul-winner. He will live in the hearts of many of his parishioners for years to come.

MR. J. H. RAPER.

Temperance people throughout the land will learn with deep regret of the death of Mr. James H. Raper, who died in London last week, having taken a chill. Born in Carlisle in 1820, Mr. Raper became at twenty-three years of age a schoolmaster at Bolton. In a short time he had established a reputation as an eloquent speaker. In 1860 he became Parliamentary agent of the United Kingdom Alliance, which position he held for thirteen years. After this he became a member of the executive committee of that organisation. He travelled in Sweden, the United States, Canada, and on the Continent, always with an eye open to the requirements of the prohibition movement, in whose interest he has also addressed large audiences in almost every town and village in the United Kingdom. He was an earnest, religious man, and his geniality, magnificent voice, accurate knowledge, dramatic faculty, and fine physique conspired to make him a general favourite among all classes of temperance reformers.

REV. E. P. HATHAWAY.

In the person of Rev. Edward Penrose Hathaway, a well-known Evangelical clergyman has been taken from the ranks of the church militant here on earth. He died from suffocation and shock to the system, occasioned through a fire in his house at Tunbridge Wells. Born in 1819, Mr. Hathaway graduated at Oxford, and entered the legal profession in 1846. All through his career, he took a deep interest in religious and philanthropic work. Retiring from the bar in 1864, he was ordained to a curacy in the Seven Dials district. The condition of the neighbourhood at that time was far worse than it is to-day, and Mr. Hathaway worked amongst the poorest and most degraded of the people with an energy and zeal beyond all praise. He afterwards held a curacy at Camberwell, but in 1868 he was appointed to the rectory of St. Ebbe's, Oxford, in which city he did a great work. After five years he resigned St. Ebbe's through ill-health, and removed to Clifton to recruit. In 1882 he was able to undertake work at Clifton, and three years later he accepted the charge of Holbrook, Suffolk, where he ministered with much acceptance until 1892.

REV. JOHN PULSFORD, D.D.

On Tuesday night, May 18, Rev. Dr. John Pulsford "passed from Love to Love" (as the inscription on his last narrow tenement characteristically said), aged 82, at Huntly, Bishopsteignton, near Teignmouth, at which lovely retreat he had often taken rest before.

Dr. Pulsford was a native of Devon, having been born at Torrington. He was trained for the ministry at the Old Baptist College at Stepney, and his first charge was at Southampton. His next sphere was Hull, and while labouring in that town he allied himself with the Congregationalists. In 1863 he removed to London, and for three years presided over Offord-road Chapel, Camden Town. After a pastorate of three years he went North again, and undertook work in which his brother William had formerly been engaged, at Albany-street, Edinburgh. He was there for twenty years; and in 1886, when in his seventieth year, retired to Hampstead to pass the evening of a laborious life. As an author Dr. Pulsford was widely known. He was a mystic of a most refined type, and his most celebrated books were "Quiet Hours," "Supremacy of Man," and "Loyalty to Christ."

On the Saturday previous to his death, at morning worship, his prayer was such that all present, although none of them could remember two consecutive sentences, said they had never heard such words. Afterwards he leaned his hands on the shoulders of his friend and host, Mr. C. F. Carpenter, and said, "I am overcome by the power of the Spirit," or words to that effect. In two hours afterwards he was on a bed of pain, from which he was only released by the call to come up higher.

Personalia.

Mrs. Bramwell Booth has been rather seriously ill. She has now sufficiently recovered to be able to go to the country for change of air.

Rev. Donald Fraser, of the Students' Volunteer Mission, has reached Nyasaland. His permanent address is Ekivendeni, West Nyasa, British Central Africa, viâ Chinde.

Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Cook have left for their summer home at Cliff Seat, Ticonderoga. Mr. Cook's health is somewhat improved. He is, as of yore, an omnivorous reader.

Mr. Josiah Nix, who is now working in different parts of the country as a Connexional Evangelist of the Wesleyan Church, has moved his permanent address from London to 28, Beechcroft-road, Oxford.

Pastor Frank White.—Many readers will feel deep sympathy with this esteemed Christian pastor and his wife in the death last Saturday at Bournemouth of their eldest son, Frank H. T. White, aged thirty-one, after a prolonged time of weakness.

Mr. Emilio Olsson recently returned to America from England, and has left New York with a party of seven missionaries for South America. This will make in all a dozen workers sent forth this year by the Christian Alliance, under whose auspices these labourers are to work.

The late Prof. H. Drummond.—Professor George Adam Smith has undertaken the biography of the late Professor Drummond. Any person having letters written by him, or other matters of interest connected with his work, are invited to send the same to Professor Smith, 22, Sardinia-terrace, Glasgow. Letters will be returned after perusal.

Waifs and Strays.—The annual meeting of the Church of England Incorporated Society for providing Homes for Waifs and Strays was held in the Chapter House of St. Paul's Cathedral. Rev. J. W. Horsley moved the adoption of the report, which showed that six new homes had been added during the year, making a total of seventy, besides Miss Rye's emigration homes in London and Canada, for the transference of which the Charity Commissioners' consent would be shortly obtained. At the end of 1896 there were 1,601 children in the homes, 661 boarded out, and 190 maintained in other Church homes.

Gospel Tent Mission.—During the past winter we have had encouraging seasons in the halls of the Mission, and a number have professed faith in Christ. But on these summer evenings we find tents the best way to gather in the sailors, colliers, and non church-goers. We are starting a tent in Barry Dock this week, Mr. Wm. Dunn taking the opening Mission, for which we would ask the prayers of your readers. A tent has also been pitched at Abertillery. The work at Brynmawr and district has given cause for much joy; week by week, reports reach us of sinners being saved. Tracts, booklets, and funds are needed in carrying on this pioneer Gospel work, and will be thankfully received.

Gerald R. Coultas, Supt.

Barry Dock, Glamorgan.

Temperance Notes.

MR. E. TENNYSON SMITH has held a successful twelve days' temperance campaign in Swansea.

The Legislative Council of Cape Colony has again thrown out Mr. Rose-Innes's Liquor Bill, which, inter alia, gives power to licensing boards to prohibit the sale of liquor to natives. The Bill had been read a second and third time in the House of Assembly without a division.

There are 677 adult congregational societies and Bands of Hope in connection with the Free Church of Scotland Temperance Society, with a membership of 72,156. There were 342 societies formed during the past year. Abstaining ministers number 799, being an increase of 17, besides 96 abstaining missionaries and colonial ministers.

In the Temple Magazine Mrs. Crawford, the Paris correspondent of the Daily News, bears testimony in favour of the sobriety of the women of France. They may drink a very light wine or wine-and-water at déjeûner and dinner, but they do not drink between times, as they do in England, and would indeed be quite shocked to be offered wine when making a call.

The first annual meeting of the National Temperance Council, in which about 500 temperance societies are already federated, was held at the Memorial Hall, Farringdon-street. Resolutions were passed calling on the Government to give facilities for the passing of the Irish Sunday Closing Bill; demanding that liquor-sellers and manufacturers should be disqualified from sitting on licensing benches; and declaring that the solicitors of licensed victuallers' associations should not be allowed to act as clerks to the licensing justices.

At the annual meeting last week of the Army Temperance Association, it was reported that twenty-five new branches had been added during the year, and the membership increased to 13,119. Dr. Edghill, chaplain-general, said that drunkenness was no longer regarded in the Army as a sign of manliness and freedom. Major-General Sir Charles Warren said that commanding officers spoke enthusiastically of the effect of the association's work on discipline. The exercise of self-control in regard to liquor enabled men to exercise self-control in other matters.

At a recent sitting of the Royal Commission on Licensing Law, Mr. Lascelles Carr, editor of the Western Mail, declared that in spite of Sunday-closing drinking goes on to a great extent in Cardiff. Mr. William George, solicitor, Criccieth, North Wales, stated that in his opinion Wales is quite ripe for separate legislation in the direction of local veto. Mr. D. Owen, solicitor, of Bangor, advocated the appointment of special licensing boards by town and county councils as a substitute for the existing licensing authorities. He also suggested the licensing and police supervision of clubs, and the abolition of occasional and grocers' licences.

Working Lads in Whitechapel.

THE many friends of the Whitechapel Working Lads' Institute will be pleased to hear that under the superintendence of Rev. Thomas Jackson cheering evidences of prosperity are manifest. The premises have been renovated and refurnished at a cost of £1000, and constitute one of the finest Lads' Institutes in London or the country. The reading-room, library, gymnasium, swimming-bath, class-rooms, work-rooms, dormitories, and offices, are admirably adapted for meeting the moral and social needs of the working lads of the East-end of London. An interesting gathering of friends of the Institute was recently held in connection with the reopening, when Mr. W. P. Hartley, of Liverpool, who presided, gave a donation of £100, and liberal promises of help were made by other friends.

The evangelistic services are held on Sunday evenings, a Sunday-school has been commenced, a Bible-class for Germans formed, and a praise meeting for Christian workers is held each Monday.

Operative Jewish Converts' Institution. Palestine House, near Hackney Downs, bids fair to become as well known to the friends of Missions to Jews as old Palestine-place, Cambridge Heath. It is situated in a hitherto little known thoroughfare called Bodney-road, but all who have visited it agree in the opinion that the site has been admirably chosen. Archdeacon Sinclair presided over the annual meeting, in the absence through illness of the Earl of Roden. The report showed that there had been twenty-three converts in residence, and that they had been fully employed at painting and other useful occupations. The speakers included Revs. Dr. Barlow, G. H. Händler, Sydenham L. Dixon and C. F. W. Flad.

THE BOOK WORLD.

"A Man's a Man for a' That": And How We Made a Match of It. A lively and wholesome story by Rev. T. S. Millington, M.A. (1s. "Home Words" Office.)

The "Summer Number" of The Boy's Own Paper is rich in stories of travel and adventure, with other pieces of entertainment thrown in. (6d. Religious Tract Society.)

"Hallel": Lessons on the Psalms. By A Sunday School Teacher. (1s. 6d. Nisbet.) Prepared for Sunday-schools and Bible-classes, this little work deals in a simple manner with nearly forty psalms.

Handfuls of Purpose is the title of a new serial for teachers, preachers, and Bible students, edited by James Smith, of Coalsnaughton. It is replete with seed-thoughts, outlines, and illustrations. (3d. monthly. Bagster & Sons.)

Reformation Martyrs. The Religious Tract Society has issued in compact form short biographies of John Huss, William Tyndale, Hugh Latimer, Patrick Hamilton, George Wishart, and Bishop Hooper. A portrait accompanies each sketch. (6d.)

Wee Dorothy's True Valentine, by Laura Updegraff, is a pretty American story, one of the "Bairnie" series. (1s. 6d. Jarrold & Sons.) This book has achieved some success in America, and deserves to be equally well received by English readers.

Bishop Ellicott's Bible Commentary for English Readers is one of Messrs Cassell's most useful re-issues. This part (week 14) finishes the New Testament and begins the Old. Thirty-six parts, at 6d. each, will complete the work, the great value of which is universally allowed.

Three additions have been made to Messrs. Isbister & Co.'s admirable Cathedral series—viz., Canterbury, Salisbury and Gloucester. The letter-press of the first is by the Dean of Ripon, and the other two by the resident Deans respectively. The little books are of great historic and artistic interest.

True Stories for the Little Ones. By L. I. Tonge and E. M. Tonge. (1s. Religious Tract Society.) Here are ten narratives, printed in bold type, with many bright pictures. The book will cause delight in the nursery; with its clear religious teaching, it is a worthy addition to the "Good Shepherd" series.

Saved and Kept is the title of Rev. F. B. Meyer's latest volume—a collection of loving and faithful "counsels to young believers and Christian Endeavourers." The expositions are necessarily simple, but none the less valuable and full of charm in their presentation and enforcement. (Morgan & Scott. 1s. and 1s. 6d.)

Glimpses of Our Empire. By Robinson Souttar, M.P. (1s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton.) A simple and unpretentious little work, describing in outline the rise and marvellous growth of the Empire "on which the sun never sets," and the responsibilities attaching to its government. Several coloured maps show vividly the different stages of the Empire's growth.

The Story of Keswick. By A. T. Pierson, D.D. (Marshall Bros. 1s.) The substance of this compact little work has already appeared in the "Missionary Review of the World." As the view of one who has been merely an onlooker, this narrative and exposition of the Keswick holiness movement and its leading principles is well worthy of study. The attitude taken is altogether sympathetic.

Sunday Hours for Boys and Girls is a bright and useful serial, of which the first half-yearly volume has just appeared. (4s. Religious Tract Society.) There is great variety in the contents, which include stories and talks, Scripture exercises, and biographical sketches. Dr. R. McCheyne Edgar contributes a series of papers entitled "Christian Evidences for Boys and Girls." The volume will be a favourite in Sunday School libraries.

Assurance of Life, and other sermons, by Rev. E. A. Stuart, M.A., is a volume of six vigorous discourses, the first of a series entitled, "The Preachers of To-day." (1s. Nisbet.) Another of the series is Statutes and Songs, by Rev. F. B. Meyer. As the title indicates, there is in these sermonettes a due admixture of doctrinal and ethical truth, all of it suffused in that spirit of childlike teachableness and wholeheartedness in service that distinguish Mr. Meyer's utterances.

Some Records of the Life of Stevenson Arthur Blackwood, K.C.B., compiled by a Friend, and edited by his Widow. Popular edition. (7s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton.) When this deeply-interesting life was published, we called attention to its substantial interest and literary excellence. The charming personality of Sir Arthur Blackwood and his great influence for good, afford grounds for the belief that in this cheaper form the story of his life and work will penetrate new circles of readers. The excellent portrait appears also in this edition.

Under the title of The Culture of the Spiritual Life, there are published five addresses delivered in Birmingham in connection with the Free Evangelical Church Council of the district. The speakers were Rev. Thos. Cook (Wesleyan), Prof. Rendel Harris (Society of Friends), Rev. A. Connell (Presbyterian), Rev. Dr. Fairbairn (Congregational), and Rev. J. G. Greenhough (Baptist). All the addresses are eminently practical, and are worthy utterances on varied aspects of one great theme. (Taylor, Caxton House, Old-square, Birmingham. 1s.)

Pardon and Assurance. By the late Rev. W. J. Patton. With biographical sketch by Rev. J. McIlveen. (3s. 6d. Oliphant, Anderson, & Ferrier.) Mr. Patton was a faithful and successful Irish pastor. After his death in January, 1895, our columns contained a brief account of his useful life. In this volume, besides the appreciative biographical sketch, there are fifteen of Mr. Patton's sermons. They are very direct, and strongly evangelistic in form, intensely earnest in tone, and well calculated to carry blessing to all who read them. Such plain and heartfelt preaching is by no means common, we fear, in many pulpits of to-day.

Relics of Primeval Life. By Sir J. William Dawson, LL.D., F.R.S. (6s. Hodder & Stoughton.) A fascinating inquiry into the dawn of life, up-to-date as science, and lucid as a narrative of discovery. For in this department of inquiry Sir William Dawson has taken a leading part, and he tells the story in that sober and God-conscious spirit that is apparent in all his writings. He has found Eozoon in the Laurentian limestones; he leaves others to suggest a connection with some antecedent form of vegetable life, or to link Eozoon with any of the molluska, radiates, or crustaceans of the succeeding Palæozoic age. He cautiously says:—"What may be discovered in the future we cannot conjecture; but at present these stand before us as distinct creations."

The Incarnation: A Study of Philippians ii. 5-11. By E. H. Gifford, D.D., formerly Archdeacon of London and Canon of St. Paul's. (3s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton.) Without discussing the various dogmatic theories that have been deduced from or founded on the passage studied, this volume seeks to ascertain and establish the true interpretation. In a word, the author maintains that Christ did not empty himself of "the form of God"; but, in the manner expressed in the clauses of verses 7 and 8, gave up "being equal with God." Hence, "at least the moral attributes of the Godhead are faithfully represented in the one perfect image of the Father, his Incarnate Word." Those who have thought to solve the mystery of the Incarnation by adopting Kenotic theories, as generally set forth, will here learn the untenableness of such theories, and find a view at once exegetically sound and theologically consistent. This is a study of great value; and, as a second part, the book gives a succinct, historical account of various interpretations of the crucial passage.

Another of Emily Headland's "Brief Sketches of C.M.S. Workers" has been issued, outlining the deeply interesting story of the late Dr. SAMUEL ADJAI CROWTHER, Bishop of the Niger. (2d. Nisbet & Co.)

Sir Isaac Pitman and Sons, Limited, have decided to arrange for a serial issue of a VICTORIAN DIAMOND JUBILEE PRAYER-BOOK in shorthand, in penny weekly parts. The publication will begin on June 10.

Messrs. Cassell & Co. have issued a neat, handy, and yet comprehensive GUIDE TO LONDON (6d.) with map and many excellent illustrations. It will be found very serviceable by visitors to the metropolis during these coming weeks.

THE NONCONFORMIST MINISTER'S ORDINAL (H. R. Allenson, 1s. net) contains comprehensive and appropriate forms of service for use at baptism, the Lord's Supper, marriage, and burial, for officiating ministers who prefer stereotyped channels of expression.

The "Errors of Rome" booklets, by "H. B.," are a very useful series. No. 3, now issued, deals with THE MASS, and shows from the writings of Bellarmine, Bona, and Rock, that the modern doctrines and practices of Rome are totally opposed to those of the Early Church. (Hastings: Apel's Library, Robertson-street.)

PROBABLE SONS and TEDDY'S BUTTON have been issued by the Religious Tract Society in the form of Services of Song. (6d.) Mr. J. P. Attwater, F.R.C.O., is responsible for the selection of the music illustrating the first narrative, and has included many of his own tuneful pieces. The military service is adapted by Rev. L. M. White, M.A., and contains some original numbers, of which "Rest, Little Soldier," is particularly good. Either of the services will provide an attractive and profitable evening, and the narratives lose none of their charm in their musical dress.

Madagascar.—The Paris correspondent of The Times says:—The Madagascar mail brings news of the surrender by England of consular jurisdiction in that island. British subjects will henceforth be amenable to French tribunals. Germany and America had previously agreed to abolish their consular jurisdiction. "The Madagascar question," says a semi-official note, "is thus definitely settled as regards the diplomatic standpoint, and the island henceforth forms part, without possible dispute, of the colonial domain of France." General Gallieni has extended to Madagascar a French decree which prohibits outdoor religious ceremonies in places where several religious denominations exist.

International S.S. Lessons.

Sins of the Tongue.—James iii. 1-13.

Golden Text.—Psa. xxxiv. 13.

THE title well suggests the subject of this chapter. It is practical enough and may be easily applied to the young as well as to the old. To follow the course of these verses and apply the lessons as we proceed, will be the best way to deal with the subject.

1. James reproves the desire to usurp the office of teachers (1). Do not misapply the word. There are many who refuse the office when they ought to accept it. They have gift and opportunity, and their service is needed. But there is in some a desire for prominence (see Matt. xxiii. 6-10), a readiness to pass judgment upon others—to criticise and correct rather than to learn; it is this spirit which James condemns. The best learner is always the best teacher (Isa. l. 4). The warning is enforced by the fact that increased responsibility means greater condemnation in case of failure. The higher a man climbs, the deeper he may fall. If you set yourself up as a teacher and should mislead others—or as a judge and should misjudge others, you not only injure them but yourself also. The first lesson is, "Be swift to hear, slow to speak." "Receive with meekness the ingrafted word."

2. James shows the importance of restraining the tongue (2-4). He does not believe, either in his own, or in any other man's, perfection. The certainty includes himself in the word "all" (2). He uses two illustrations:—First, that of a bit in horses' mouths (3). What a little thing it is! Yet by it the whole body is turned about as we will. Lose control of the reins and we lose control of the horse. He who cannot "hold his tongue" cannot manage himself. Secondly, that of the helm (4). The illustration is much more striking in these days, when ships are so much greater, and yet are so perfectly controlled by the man at the wheel. If the rudder breaks, or becomes useless, the ship is at the mercy of the winds and waves. Just so important is the tongue to the whole man. By one unguarded speech a man loses command of himself. The lesson here may be suggested by the words of Jesus (Matt. xii. 37).

3. James shows what a desperate evil is an unrestrained tongue (5-10). It is a fire (6). I have seen the heather and the gorse burning over an area of moorland above a square mile in extent, and looking like an angry sea of fire. A lighted match thrown by a careless traveller was the probable origin of it. The City of Chicago was burned by a lamp being kicked over by a cow. It is to be feared that an attempt to light a pipe has been the occasion of more than one disastrous colliery explosion. These are comparisons of the evil that may result from a thoughtless, or angry, or unkind, or slanderous, or backbiting, or false word. But the tongue is also as a wild beast that cannot be tamed (7, 8). Examples of taming all sorts of creatures may be easily given. But no man can, by his own effort, tame his tongue. From the tongue also comes the most glaring contradictions (9, 10). It is our "glory" wherewith we bless God (Psa. xvi. 9); yet when unrestrained it becomes the weapon by which we inflict the most cruel wound upon men.

4. Now what is the remedy? James reminds us that we are to deal not with the tongue itself, but with the heart out of which the words proceed. The tongue is not the fountain (11, 12), but only the outlet. If the streams are bitter the cure must be applied to the source. Marah could only yield bitter waters until the well itself was sweetened by the divinely-appointed tree. Our heart is such a well; and Christ is the Tree who alone can correct the bitterness. In order to receive the remedy what is necessary? (1) Ask Him to show wherein we sin with our tongue. Let all our words be brought to the searching light of his Word—not only false, deceitful, passionate, unclean words, but our ordinary conversation—our remarks about others, and about ourselves. How often we offend against law of love by careless words!

(2) Recognise our own helplessness in the matter. If we think we can control our tongues by our own effort and watchfulness we shall fail. We need Him as much to keep us from evil speaking, and to make all our words to be wise and gracious, as we need Him to forgive our sins.

(3) Commit our speech to Him, and trust. Not trust without committal, for how can we trust Him to keep what we have not first given into his keeping? Was not this the one thing Moses would not commit to God? He said, "I am not eloquent," and believed he could not do what God required, so would not leave his mouth at God's disposal. And what was the sin that kept him from the promised land (see Psa. cvi. 33). Are we willing to let Him have our tongues for his own use?

AMONG THE CHURCHES.

Church of England.

The thankoffering services at St. James's, Hatcham, realised £210, not £150, as reported a fortnight ago.

Dr. J. F. Peacocke, Bishop of Meath, has been elected Archbishop of Dublin, in succession to the late Lord Plunket.

Mr. H. C. Richards, M.P., has presented upwards of fifty handsome Bibles as a Jubilee gift to St. Paul's Cathedral for the use of the members of the Chapter.

A tablet has just been erected in Canterbury Cathedral bearing the names of all the archbishops of the Southern Province from Augustin in 597 to Frederick Temple in 1896.

It is understood that the aged Bishop of Limerick, Dr. Graves, who is suffering from great physical weakness, will shortly place his resignation in the hands of the Archbishop of Dublin.

The Church Association memorial to the Queen, signed by 36,876 women, and asking her to take steps for the repression of Ritualism, has been referred by Her Majesty to the Prime Minister.

The Bishop of Llandaff has withdrawn his consent to receive a cope which certain clergy proposed to present to him. The Bishop bases his action on protests made by other clergy, who object to the cope as being a sacerdotal vestment.

In an illustrated interview with Bishop Tucker, of Uganda, in The Young Man for June, it is shown that there are no "fat livings" in Uganda, but sheer hard work for all. Even the Bishop has to tramp his vast diocese, and to share the hardships of the least of his converts.

At St. Bartholomew's, Smithfield, the oldest church in London, Bishop Creighton preached on the occasion of the reopening and "reconciliation" of the Lady Chapel, which for 350 years had been put to secular uses. The church has recently been restored. For many years one transept had been let to a blacksmith, and the Lady Chapel to a fringe manufacturer.

The foundation-stone of a Jubilee church for Weston, in the parish of Runcorn, has been laid by the Dean of Chester. The building is estimated to cost nearly £4000. A special feature in connection with the movement is the earnest effort made by the choir boys to raise funds, which has resulted in 2000 small subscriptions being received from choristers throughout the country.

Bishops of all nations of the Protestant faith continue to arrive in England for the Pan-Anglican Conference at Lambeth Palace on June 30, when altogether about 200 are expected to be present. Some of the visitors are not quite pleased with the programme. Several of the topics suggest a fear that Canterbury may put forward a claim to be an appellate tribunal from the Transatlantic sees, and against the suggestion of such an arrangement the American bishops are said to be prepared to make a vigorous protest.

At a meeting of the Bishop of London's Fund, at Grosvenor House, Rev. A. T. Winnington-Ingram, speaking as to the East End, declared that not only is there much absence of religious belief, but there is an active propaganda of unbelief. Still, the problem is not insoluble; the Church must welcome every agency which counteracts the public-house and the gambling hell. He had found open-air preaching a great means of winning people to the faith, and he felt sanguine that the masses of the people might be brought to God and the Church.

Congregational.

A new chapel has been opened at Nebo, Carmarthenshire—free from debt at the start.

The Committee of the Nottingham Congregational Institute have invited Rev. J. A. Mitchell, of St. Helens, to succeed Rev. Dr. Paton, who is about to retire from the post of Principal.

Cheshunt College anniversary is placed a week earlier than usual, viz., Thursday, June 17. Mr. Augustine Birrell, Q.C., M.P., will preside, and the sermon will be preached by Rev. P. T. Forsyth, D.D.

Dr. C. A. Berry, Chairman of the Congregational Union, has received a pressing invitation from Plymouth Church, Brooklyn, the church of the late Henry Ward Beecher, to visit America and preach the Jubilee sermon at Plymouth Church next autumn. He is likely to comply with the request.

The ordination of Rev. Bertram J. Morday, who entered upon the pastorate of the church at Henfield, Sussex, on first Sunday in January, took place a few days ago. Rev. R. Partner, of Plaistow, delivered the charge to the minister: and Rev. A. Norris, of Brighton, presided over a meeting in the evening.

Mr. and Mrs. J. H. E. Hemans, London Missionary Society's native missionaries of Lake Tanganyika, have been received by the Queen at Buckingham Palace. As children of emancipated slaves, they were anxious to see the Queen personally, and make her a present of a grey parrot. They had been disappointed of obtaining an audience on a previous visit to this country.

Calls.—T. Colledge Booth, of Hackney College, to Loftus-in-Cleveland; Rev. J. Sellicks, of Leamington, to Johannesburg; Rev. H. Coley, of Park Chapel, Camden Town, to Ryde, Isle of Wight.

Baptist.

A conference of the Leeds district of the Yorkshire Baptist Association was held last week in the Temperance Hall, Northallerton. The hon. secretary, Rev. C. Payne, of Dewsbury, read an encouraging report.

Rev. Chas. L. Gordon will close his ministry at Hatherleigh, North Devon, on Sunday, June 20, having accepted the pastorate of the Baptist Church, Wantage, Berks, and will enter upon his new sphere of work, Sunday, July 4.

Rev. Thomas Spurgeon writes that the amount contributed at the annual supper in connection with the Pastors' College Conference was larger than in any year since 1892, when the death of Rev. C. H. Spurgeon was so recent.

Rev. Chas. Pittman, late of S. Africa, has assumed the travelling secretaryship of the Nyassa Industrial Mission. He will be pleased to hear of opportunities to explain the work of the Mission in the evangelisation of the African tribes.

Rev. F. G. Benskin, late of Regent's Park College, has been recognised as pastor of West End Chapel, Hammersmith. In the course of the service the pastor announced his intention of preaching Jesus as the antidote of sin and sorrow.

College-street Church, Northampton (Rev. P. H. Smith) reports a membership of 657. The scholars in the Home and five branch schools total 1560, with 114 teachers. Miss Hearn's ("Marianne Farningham") Sunday afternoon class numbers 150. In connection with this class thirteen girls have left during the year to become teachers, four have married, two died, and nine recently joined the church.

Rev. Dr. James Spurgeon has consented to become vice-president of the Pastors' College.

The Baptist Board has arranged to hold the closing meeting of the present session at Stockwell Orphanage. Rev. Wm. Woods, of Brixton, will read a paper on "The Christ of the Gospels."

Professor Green, of Regent's Park College, advocates a better observance of the Lord's Supper. He would not have the ordinance "relegated to the close of the day, when brain and body are tired, and the very atmosphere jaded and vitiated," but he recommends the devotion of a complete morning or afternoon every month to the breaking of bread. There is doubtless a widespread sympathy with this recommendation.

Calls.—Rev. W. H. Griffith, of Greenock, to Westgate-road, Newcastle; Mr. W. Crispin, of Brighton Grove College, Manchester, to Zion Church, Bolton.

Methodist.

Rev. W. L. Watkinson is regarded by many as likely to be appointed next month to the presidency of the Wesleyan Conference.

Revs. J. W. Barnes, G. Welbourne, and G. Willis have been conditionally accepted for the African Primitive Methodist mission work.

New Wesleyan Sunday-schools, with lecture-hall and gymnasium, were opened on Monday, in Bristol-road and Benacre-street, Birmingham.

Rev. William Gibson, of Budleigh Salterton, superintendent of the Devon and Dorset Wesleyan Mission, owing to feeble health, will leave at Conference.

Hull district will in July give a hearty invitation to the Wesleyan Conference to hold its sessions there next year. On four previous occasions the Conference has met in Hull.

With reference to his tenure of the governorship of Handsworth College, Dr. R. N. Young writes that he will not seek re-appointment on the expiration of his term in 1898.

Rev. W. J. Ward (P.M.) is lying ill at Old Calabar. His illness is mainly attributed to the insanitary condition of Jamestown. When he gets better, he will remove to Archibongville.

The jubilee of Whitby-street Sunday-school, West Hartlepool, has been celebrated. The first Primitive Methodist preachers in the town were Revs. Moses Lupton and Joseph Spoor.

Not for many years has there been so much uncertainty as to the election of Methodist New Connexion president. The election of Rev. John Innocent, the Chinese missionary, would be widely popular.

Mr. Thomas Walker, of Bolton, proposes to erect a new mission hall to accommodate 2000 people, in connection with the Ridgway Gates Wesleyan Chapel, Bolton, together with a smaller hall to accommodate from 600 to 700 people.

The arrangements for the forthcoming United Methodist Assembly at Nottingham are pretty well advanced. It is anticipated that more than two hundred representatives will be located in the town, besides a few in adjacent places. Although figures are not yet officially published, it is anticipated that the returns of the district meetings will show a Connexional increase.

In regard to the proposed extension of the term of ministerial residence among the Wesleyans, six synods approved the statement of Conference as submitted, eight amended it without expressing approval of the principle, and sixteen either declined to consider or else disapproved the proposal. Six synods agreed to the return of ministers to circuits after one year's absence, and twenty-three rejected the proposal.

Presbyterian.

The Presbyterian is again about to undergo a change of editorship, through the resignation of Mr. Jesse Quail.

The foundation-stone of a new church was recently laid at Walton, Liverpool. The outlay will be about £6500, of which most has been raised.

Rev. Andrew Scobie, of Rochdale, has been elected moderator of the Manchester Presbytery, and Rev. W. E. Crothers, of Leeds, moderator of the Presbytery of Yorkshire.

The statement, cabled from America, that Dr. Chapman, of Philadelphia, had been called to Marylebone Church, is declared to be entirely without foundation. The name of Rev. John Smith, of Edinburgh, is now mentioned in connection with the vacancy.

Fallen Asleep.

At Herne Hill, Rev. D. G. Watt, formerly L.M.S. missionary at Benares, but for the past thirty years holding Congregational pastorates in England—at Northwich, Little Hulton (near Bolton), Moss-lane, Manchester, Maidstone, Stoke Newington, and Pembury.—At Chesham, Mr. Chas. Hawkes, senior deacon and superintendent of the Sunday-school.—At Kettering, Mr. William Meadows, senior deacon of Fuller Church (Baptist), and for many years a devoted Christian worker.—At Tredegar, Mr. William Davids, J.P., formerly chairman of the Monmouthshire Baptist Association.—At Shrewsbury, Mr. John Brown, a useful local preacher among the Primitive Methodists.—At Sheffield, Mr. D. Taylor Ingham, for forty years a local preacher among the Baptists.—On May 15, at Narborough, Leicestershire, Edward Cochrane, M.D., an earnest Christian and beloved physician.—At Wimbledon, Rev. Peter Jones, late of Emsworth, Hants, and some time vicar of Hindley, Lancashire.—At Randalstown, co. Antrim, Mr. Alexander Cathcart, for some time missionary in High-street Presbyterian Church, Lurgan.

R.S.U. Holiday Homes.

Sir,—May I venture to ask for the kindly help of your readers towards the support of the Holiday Homes, opened by the Ragged School Union, in order that some of the pale little prisoners of the slums may enjoy the unspeakable advantages of a fortnight of freedom and fresh air? Care is taken that only the most needy cases are dealt with in these Homes, and preference is given to those who are sick or crippled. Both the local schools and the parents cheerfully contribute towards the cost, whenever possible, and the whole work is carried through with remarkable economy. Last year over 6000 little ones were transported from the hot pavements of the city, to the green meadows, or the seaside, and in this "Record" year we are extremely anxious to secure wider sympathy and larger help.—

Yours faithfully,

John Kirk, Secretary.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

A CORRESPONDENT sends the suggestion that gatherings of Christians should be arranged in the larger meeting places in London and elsewhere for earnest thanksgiving to God in connection with the Queen's Diamond Jubilee. In view of the fact that Sunday, June 20, has been specially appointed for thanksgiving services in the churches of all denominations, there does not seem to be any call for convening special meetings. We hope it is unnecessary to impress on our readers that far more important to the Christian heart than any national outward display in the shape of processions, celebrations, etc., is the rendering of grateful thanks to the King of kings for all the blessings He has vouchsafed to this Empire during Her Majesty's long reign. This can as well be done in private where public opportunity is wanting.

Another correspondent writes on the present political crisis, and asks :—

How is it there are not gatherings for united prayer among God's children? Greece struggling in the cause of freedom, humanity, and justice, has been crushed; Turkey, with hands reeking with blood, is apparently triumphant!

There are golden streaks athwart the black horizon of our world's near future, telling of the rising of the Sun of Righteousness. But why do not God's children arise, and call upon Him in his own appointed way?

We never need be in doubt as to the right time to pray. "Always" and "without ceasing" are the notes of time; seasons of distress or perplexity, of course, give urgency to the call. We believe that many have of late been ordering their prayers daily on the lines suggested by our correspondent.

The excellent example set by the Dean of Norwich, in inviting one of the Nonconformist ministers of the city to take part in the cathedral service of June 20, may well be followed in many other cathedral towns. We have advanced only a little since the time when Dean Stanley nervously invited a few Nonconformists to lecture in the nave of Westminster Abbey. There were only seven lectures given. They were dropped after the seventh because "The Liberal papers very slightly sympathised" and "the Nonconformist organs were studiously cold." Would that this Queen's year might mark the interchange of Christian intercourse, so that, as Stanley says, "The heathen world shall not be scandalised by the echoes of a disunited Christendom." But the interchange should be reciprocal.

A preface to the new edition of "Letters Written to Her Majesty the Queen" by Princess Christian, who says :—

I cannot but think that at this moment, when all our hearts are filled with thankfulness at the life of my dear mother having been spared to us and her people for so long, many may like to have recalled to their memories the daughter whose beautiful life was cut so short.

Of the many traits in Her Majesty's character and career which have endeared her to the nation, none is so conspicuous as the domestic affection which she has always cherished and inspired. The word "Home," so sacred to every Briton, has always been dear to the heart of our Queen. The undertone of the simple passage quoted above is eloquent of the fireside spirit which has ever permeated our Royal Family.

One of the wisest and most timely utterances on the present situation in the East is a short article in War or Brotherhood? on "Two Present Dangers," by Mr. Joshua Rowntree. One danger is that of condoning war because of the undeniable horrors of Turkish misrule, the other is the identification of the cause of peace with the present Concert of the six great military Powers of Europe. The war, which we hope is over, but which may break out again in some unexpected way, is another illustration of the truth of Milton's words :—

What can war but endless wars still breed?

The Concert is not the ideal for which the friends of peace are working.

The picture they give of themselves in their dispatches has no resemblance to a Court of Justice about it, but rather suggests a wealthy syndicate of mistrustful persons, little mindful of the sufferings of others, but anxious to maintain the status quo for themselves.

Mr. Rowntree thinks that the friends of peace should appeal to a real council of Europe, in which the smaller Powers should be represented, and by which the oppressed peoples should be heard. But who is to get such a council together? and what is to be its authority?

The movement for a "Concert of Prayer" and "Quiet Days for Ministers," initiated some years ago by prominent Congregational ministers, is being advocated by The Methodist Times on a wider scale. Rev. Hugh Price Hughes, at a recent largely-attended meeting of the General Committee of the National Free Church Council, urged that all communions associated with this Council be invited to join in it. It is suggested that this should be done locally, and that care be taken to avoid making the gathering too large, lest they lose something of their directness, intensity, and distinctive usefulness. This is an excellent suggestion, and ought to deepen beyond measure the spiritual solidarity of the Free Churches. It will forestall the peril of making the Federation too political in tone, and turn the awakened spirit of brotherhood into the highest channels. We hope the idea will be taken up with ardour in all parts of the country.

A great deal depends on the way in which such gatherings are organised, and the plan recently adopted at one or two assemblies of North London Congregational ministers is one well worth imitation. The whole day was given up to fraternal intercourse on a spiritual basis. The morning and afternoon sessions were limited to the attendance of local ministers only. In the morning there was a free interchange of brotherly confidence on personal experiences, difficulties, and problems, interspersed with short prayers. The afternoon was devoted to devotion, and the discussion of more public methods of work. The evening gathering included the chief workers of the various churches represented, and a free and open conference was held on various aspects of Christian work and life, followed by the celebration of the Communion. The possibilities of this movement are great, and if it were widely followed out it would soon have a profound influence in deepening the spiritual life of both ministers and people.

The defeat of the "reforming party" in the Wesleyan body, which aimed at the modification of the three years' system of itineracy, has been loyally received by the minority, and the matter is for the present to be allowed to drop. Those who were most strenuous in their endeavours to realise this change of method feel that it is now the duty of all true Wesleyans to turn their whole energies into the direction of making the present system more efficient. That there has been a great deal of unrest for years, owing to this question, is undeniable. It argues a healthy loyalty in this great and active church that a keen controversy of this kind should be so amicably settled. The desire all round now is "full steam ahead," even with the old machinery. If all ecclesiastical disputes had been carried out in such a spirit the present aspect of Christian church life would be very different. In whatever directions our forefathers surpassed us, we may thankfully affirm that in this direction a new and better spirit is abroad.

The words of Dr. Maclaren, of Manchester, in an address to students, are worthy to be inscribed on the study walls of every student for Christ's ministry :—

A bastard originality and that abomination which maketh desolate, the so-called "intellectual preaching," of which one does not know whether the name or the thing is more offensive, are too often the ideal of students, while the earnest proclamation of God's Gospel is pooh-poohed in their thoughts as commonplace.

Whitefield used to advise students to enter their studies to become "great saints rather than great preachers." These men know the root of ministerial power and usefulness. Know the Gospel, live on the Gospel, preach the Gospel.

After abstaining for over twenty years from the performance of any gorgeous ceremonies in St. Peter's, on the plea that he was a prisoner, and could not do as he wished, the Pope has just celebrated the canonisation of two saints. So there was no reality in the alleged bondage; he was as free as ever to do his religious work, but his temporal power was gone, and the State would not allow him to meddle with politics. As the correspondent of The Daily News at Rome says, these religious functions used formerly to remind "the faithful" of a Government who persecuted, exiled, imprisoned, and inflicted capital punishment, but now they are carried out in a land free for the weak as well as for the powerful. And they were carried out, in this instance, with all the old worldly accompaniments. "The traffic in tickets was a thing to denounce." "The people fought for entrance as at a place of amusement." The correspondent remarks that the crowd was not only composed of all nationalities, but also of all religions. And the chief thing about it that struck him, was its curiosity and want of reverence and religious feeling. That must be the effect of a religion which is external. Lack of true love and godly fear within, destroys the outer beauty of a service, spite of splendour and show.

"My children went to a Roman Catholic school, and of course they became Roman Catholics." So say some Protestant parents. But surely it was very reprehensible on their part to send them there. Both in this and in other countries there are many good schools, good so far as the education goes, conducted by Roman Catholics, where the charge is very nominal. The system is a portion, and a very efficient portion, of the Romish propaganda. Mr. W. G. Aldridge, of Ealing, writing in the Methodist Recorder, says that many cases have come under his immediate notice of perversion to Rome by this agency, one being the daughter of an old and much-respected Methodist family well-known to himself. Better let the child have a poorer education than these risks for the sake of saving a few pounds a year; possibly the saving might be effected upon other things that could be easily dispensed with.

The opening of the Oxygen Home for the healing of wounds is a welcome addition to the humane appliances of the surgeon for the lessening of pain and the promotion of recovery. It seems to be one more illustration of the wisdom of keeping as near as may be to the ways of nature, to her pure and simple methods, or, in other words, of following the thoughts of God. He who made the body surely has the best understanding of its nature and parts, and of its relation to surrounding elements. Pure air seems to be the secret of rapid healing, as it is of good health, better for the body than food or clothing. If so, the condition of our city population is not enviable, for do what we will the air cannot be kept as pure as it is on the Cheviot Hills. And even where it is pure, people poison themselves in stuffy houses. Consumption may, as we know, prevail in a village on the edge of a moor, because the people as a rule paste over every crack and crevice by which fresh air can get into their homes. There is work for the schoolmaster.

Everyone should endorse the remarks made by the Prince of Wales at Guy's Hospital on May 26 :—

> One thing I would venture to impress upon the students...that they should cultivate that gentle and humane spirit which, not confined to any one school, is the best possession of the medical faculty.

It would not do for doctors and nurses to be too sympathetic, otherwise they could never perform the operations which their calling demands; but there is a danger of running to the other extreme of insensibility to the pains of their patients; and the words of the Prince are very wise and timely. His declaration is very welcome, too, made after careful inquiries, that animals are in a complete state of anæsthesia when operated upon for experimental purposes; or, if they are not in this state, the experiment is then merely a hypodermic injection. If it be in the interests of humanity that experiments like this should be made, it is none the less in the interests of a higher humanity that they should be performed with a minimum of pain to the dumb subjects.

Mr. Chas. Booth tells how he met in the East of London an old man who sold canes. The vendor complained that his trade had departed from him since Board Schools came into existence. He may hope again, if he is still living, for the National Union of Elementary Teachers, in council assembled, has passed a resolution in favour of corporal punishment. Their argument seems to be :—

> Certain ill-disposed children, knowing that the assistant teachers cannot administer corporal punishment, are rendered defiant, and make it needful in the end for the head teacher to give a severe thrashing. Whereas, if the assistant had been allowed to administer a homœopathic dose in the early stages of misconduct, the progress of the disease would have been checked.

It would seem that "a stick in time saves nine"! Be it observed, however, the desire of the N.U.E.T. is for less corporal punishment, not more.

The latest news from Madagascar is of a decidedly more favourable kind than has been received for a long time. Thanks no doubt to the earnest exertions of French Protestants, the Minister for the Colonies has given such instructions as have resulted in the restoration of more than ninety places of worship to the native Christians from whom the Jesuits had wrongfully taken them. This action has caused great joy to the congregations, which have thus entered once more into their own heritage; it will also do not a little to bind the Christians to French rule, and to give abiding peace. The French Minister of the Colonies has given a signal proof of the desire of his Government for religious equality to be a reality wherever the French flag flies; and he has also rebuked that false patriotism which doubts all patriotism that is not identical with subservience to the Church of Rome. Even French Protestant members of the Peace Society and of the British and Foreign Bible Society sometimes find it impossible to act without incurring the stigma of being unpatriotic. It ought to be possible to be a Frenchman, and to belong to any church, without suffering any political, social, or religious disability.

The plea urged in the House of Lords by so high an authority as the Duke of Cambridge for the renewal of State Regulation of Vice in the Indian Army, that "we cannot change human nature," is one that is often put forward, and accounts for the half-heartedness of many well-meaning people on this question. Such a plea is a denial of the fundamental principle of the Gospel. Its whole appeal is based on the premise that human nature is capable of a radical change of heart and life. "Ye must be born again" means, "Ye can and may be born again." If this be not true, then all our faith and our preaching are vain. The question comes to this, Are we to base our legislation on a pagan notion of the unchangeably corrupt nature of man, or on the Christian basis of its universal responsibility to deny its own lawless and sinful tendencies? On the former assumption it would be illogical to deal with any form of crime as penal; we should only be justified in regulating it. To put the matter thus is to reduce the whole theory to an absurdity.

There can be no doubt that the way of viewing the question of the health of the army now advocated by the Government not only overlooks the thoughts and feelings of the people of India, but is more departmental and military than moral. According to the Indian Witness, several of the native papers are treating it from a higher point of view than are the authorities with whom rests the settlement, subject, of course, to the decision of Parliament. They distinctly recognise the moral issues which are involved. Thus the Indian Social Reformer insists that not only should the soldier be considered, but also the helpless women.

> It is a sorry spectacle to see a number of estimable Englishmen, the boast of whose nation lies in the respect shown by them to the weaker sex, perpetually engaged in concerting measures to accommodate man, the natural aggressor, at the expense of the woman, alien though she be in caste or creed.

The Christian ruler is here rebuked by the heathen subject! Pity but a number of high-born English ladies who have signed a memorial in favour of safeguarding the English soldier by re-enacting the C.D. Acts could have seen the plea for safeguarding the poor down-trodden native woman put forward by the native press. These moral considerations will prevail in the long run.

One of the speakers at the recent missionary meetings at Bristol said :—

> Some time ago a bazaar was held in South Wales on behalf of the Church Missionary Society. In the hall was a map showing the location of the various workers in India. Immense districts were marked, "No missionary." A lady, who was well acquainted with the efforts of the Baptist Missionary Society, pointed out to a cleric that there were several Baptist missionaries in these districts. "Yes," said he, "but we do not recognise them."

Happily, this gentleman does not represent the spirit of the Church of England generally, and certainly not of the C.M.S. But there is far too much denominationalism even in missionary work. The devil's strength lies in our divisions. What would have been the result, we wonder, if at the Battle of Waterloo one battalion of Her Majesty's army did not "recognise" another? The aim of missionary work must be to make Christians, not denominationalists.

Rev. Hugh Price Hughes pointed out the other Sunday that it is a remarkable thing that nobody sings in Hyde Park except the Christians. He might truly add, that some speak on such dismal subjects, that one could hardly imagine them singing even a dirge. This singing side of religion ought to give it a great hold over the multitude. It is a pleasant way of calling attention: it has a message and a meaning in its joy. A line of a hymn, or a chorus, may be remembered when the sermon is forgotten. We want the consecration of all kinds of gifts to the service of Christ, and one of the brightest and most acceptable is that of singing. A singing Christian is always a praise to the Gospel.

A series of articles in one of the society journals on "The Modern Road to Ruin" commences in the following significant strain. The writer starts out with "unhedged epicurean theories," and says it is his sole aim and object in life to "procure the most acute and continued happiness" for himself. With these principles his testimony is not likely to be coloured with undue Puritanic austerity, and yet this is what he says :—

> A "gay woman" has long been proverbial for a very sorry subject, but there are many men who still picture the "broad road which leadeth to destruction" as a very pleasant one, so long as it lasts. This delusion being solely due to ignorance, I feel I shall be doing more good than many sermons if I set forth soberly and truthfully the experiences which have led me to the conclusion that vice is but a dull pursuit, the sowing of wild oats but an ungrateful form of agriculture.

This is a significant commentary on the old text, "There is a way which seemeth right unto a man, but the end thereof are the ways of death" (Prov. xiv. 12).

"Follow Holiness."—I.

Heb. xii. 14.

By Mr. GEORGE MÜLLER.*

I.—WHAT IS TO BE UNDERSTOOD BY HOLINESS?

IT is far more than keeping from open wickedness, as lying, theft, drunkenness, &c. It is a Christ-like state of heart. It is not natural to us to care about holiness. And if it is aimed at it is impossible to accomplish it in our natural condition, for our whole tendency is to go our own way and follow the fallen proclivities of our corrupt nature. The first thing therefore is to be regenerated by faith in our Lord Jesus Christ. But no one cares about regeneration who has not been led to see himself a sinner needing a Saviour. Therefore we should ask God to show us our state by nature; and He is willing to show it to us. Our natural state is most clearly described in Rom. i., ii., iii., and in Eph. ii., and if we humbly seek to be instructed by these portions God is willing therein to show us our true condition. It is then for us to own to Him that we are great sinners deserving punishment, and to trust in the atoning work of Christ, asking God to help us, for He is most willing to do so. The blessed result will be that thus we become new creatures in Christ Jesus, standing no longer in sin before God, but in the righteousness of Christ, for through faith in Him we obtain a Substitute who has borne all our sins; and if we know we are accepted by God and our sins are put away, then we have peace and joy in the Holy Ghost. It will be but in measure at first, but it will increase to habitual peace and joy in the Holy Ghost, and then we shall aim after holiness.

What is to be understood by following after holiness? The word in the original means following with earnestness and perseverance, e.g., as a greyhound follows a hare, with an earnestness and perseverance that is only satisfied with the capture of the hare. Following, in this passage, does not mean pursuing in a half-hearted way, but with persistent earnestness.

II. Are there very many who have attained to the mind of Christ in such a way as was manifest when He was on earth? All his actions were according to the mind of God from the manger to the cross, and all his words, as well as his acts, were to please the Father. But more than this, his thoughts, his desires, his wishes, were all according to the mind of God: "I do always those things which please Him."

Now, this important question arises: How many Christians have attained to this? Have you seen many in this or in any other place, who have attained perfectly to the mind of Christ? I have seen many Christians during the seventy-one-and-a-half years since my conversion, in travelling through forty-two countries where I have preached the Gospel, but I have not met one who had perfectly attained to perfect likeness to Christ.

I have made the acquaintance of tens of thousands of Christians, but never one who had fully attained to be like Christ. In my whole life, though I have met millions of people, I have never found one single person perfectly like Christ in act and word and thought.

I have met many who have aimed at it, as all should do, and should continue doing. But if any should come before us and tell us that they have absolutely attained it, we must tell them that they are entirely mistaken. They may be honest, but they do not form a true conception of either sin or holiness. They may have abstained from outward sins and improprieties; but holiness means much more than that we are not liars, or thieves, or frivolous persons, or pleasure-seekers, or anything of that sort. It means conformity to the mind of Christ in everything which concerns our outward and inward life. It means to be without sin.

For instruction here let us turn to the Word of God. In 1 John i. 8 the apostle says: "If we say that we have no sin we deceive ourselves, and the truth is not in us." That settles the matter. If anyone says, "I have lived one year, five years, seven years, without sin," we must reply, "You deceive yourself; the truth is not in you. You are mistaken. We grant that you do not habitually dishonour God by outward inconsistencies, but if you say you are like the Lord Jesus Christ, and have no sin, you are in the darkness and not in the light." No human being the wide world over is to be found without sin. Not one out of the fourteen hundred millions of the earth's inhabitants is warranted to say he is without sin. You may say, I am not a thief, a drunkard, a liar; but if you say, I am entirely without sin, I am perfectly like Christ, you deceive yourself.

In Phil. iii. 8 the apostle counts all things loss for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus, his Lord, that he may know Him more completely, more accurately, if by any means he may attain unto the resurrection from the dead. This does not mean to imply any question as to his partaking in the resurrection of the just; but he desired that by any means, already in this life, he might be spiritually what he would be after his resurrection.

Not as though he had already attained, or were already perfect, but he followed after, if so be he might apprehend that for which he was apprehended of God in Christ Jesus. We are apprehended to be perfectly like Christ at last in body and soul. But Paul, who was perhaps the holiest man living in his time, says, Not as though I had already attained; I seek, I follow, I pray, but I have not attained the goal. If he had not attained what are we to say? Surely, we are not to elevate ourselves above the apostle, and claim to have already attained where he declares that he has not. But we are doing this if we say we have no sin, and that we are already perfect.

Here comes in a sort of contradiction. The apostle goes on to exhort, "Let us therefore, as many as be perfect, be thus minded; and if in anything ye be otherwise minded, God will reveal even this unto you." Here he speaks of himself as being perfect, while he had just before disclaimed being made perfect. The difference is this: He speaks of himself and others as those who are mature, grown up, perfect, as distinct from babes in Christ; but he disclaims the attainment of perfection. He belongs to a class of mature or perfect ones; but he does not claim to have been perfected, nay, he disclaims it—"not as though I had already attained, or were already perfected."

* The substance of an address at the recent Convention at Birmingham.

Opposition in Spain.—Writing from Marin on May 22nd, a correspondent says:—"The fight for permission to build the Marin Gospel Hall still goes on. All the Roman Catholic powers of Spain seem roused to oppose a few scores of Spanish Evangelical Christians having a building of their own to worship God in. The Archbishop of Santiago has personally visited the Queen Regent, enlisting her aid against the Protestants of Marin. In the meantime, the persecuted Christians continue praying."

St. Giles' Christian Mission.

THOUGH one of the best-known of London philanthropic agencies, the St. Giles' Christian Mission has of late borne a considerable burden of financial anxiety. The work of the Mission is varied, and of such a character as to appeal with special strength to earnest Christians; but with the ever-growing charitable demands, even the best known and most highly esteemed missions are likely to be overlooked and come short in material support. In order to help the Mission by bringing its work before the public, the Lord Mayor of London convened a meeting of citizens and others at the Mansion House on Monday afternoon last. There was a goodly muster; and it is to be hoped that results helpful to the work will accrue.

The report, as read by Mr. F. A. Bevan, treasurer, surveyed the various operations of the Mission, special emphasis being laid upon the work among criminals—a class in whose aid the superintendent, Mr. Wm. Wheatley, has been personally engaged for many years. It would be difficult to estimate the importance of the fact that as many as 500 friendless juvenile offenders are annually taken under the care of the Mission, and while in the Boys' Homes, which are five in number, brought under influences which have for their object the eradication of evil principles, and the implanting of noble tendencies. As prisoners are discharged they are met by the workers and invited to a free breakfast, after which they are encouraged to follow honest courses. The Mission lays itself out to help such as are in real need, as is obvious from the fact that out of 320,000 men who have partaken of the free meal as many as 80,000 have been assisted with tools, clothing, or employment. During last year employment was found for more ex-prisoners than had been the case in any previous year. The circumstances of misery and want in which the wives and children of prisoners are placed also engage merciful attention, wives being helped and children being placed in homes. Mr. Bevan concluded with an appeal for prompt and generous support.

The Lord Mayor remarked upon the many charity dinners and meetings in which he had recently taken part, and said that if asked to which individual charity he would give first place he would without hesitation select the St. Giles' Christian Mission. No man can rightly appreciate the work of Mr. Wheatley except he has sat on the Bench; and what the magistrates would do without the Mission he was at a loss to say. In fact, without this agency, the magistrates would often, in very trying circumstances, do harm, where now, by the instrumentality of the Mission, they are in a position to do a great deal of good. Taking in hand children who would become permanent thieves, and a pest to society, Mr. Wheatley leads them to a better life. When such cases come before the magistrates, the answer to the problem is—"Mr. Wheatley." To allow this Mission to go to the wall would be to incur fearful results, not only to the unfortunate, but also to society at large.

Mr. Wheatley having spoken briefly on the work, Mr. M. H. Crackanthorpe, Q.C., an old friend of the Mission, said he was glad of another opportunity to speak in high terms of the work. If prisons are, as they have been called, "moral hospitals," then such missions as this are "moral convalescent homes." The learned gentleman spoke strongly in favour of reformatory methods in dealing with juvenile offenders. In this direction, however, the State can do little as compared with the opportunities and abilities of the St. Giles' Christian Mission and other such undertakings. Mr. W. R. McConnell, Q.C., followed with a few cordial words. He spoke of the great importance of dealing with first offenders.

Mr. A. De Rutzen, J.P., held that Mr. Wheatley has prevented more convictions than any man in England. The plan of the Mission in finding work for discharged prisoners was of great value; whereas the practice followed by societies in aid of discharged prisoners, of giving money to ex-prisoners, was a delusion and a snare. Sir John Bridge, J.P., thought that there was no society in the world in which so little of the money contributed goes to those who do the work. Words of cordial sympathy were also spoken by Mr. R. Scott and Sir Howard Vincent, M.P.

The Emergence of the Life-Purpose.

Acts xxii.

By Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A.

OFTEN at the commencement of the new life, we attempt to forecast the work which we hope to accomplish. We take into account our tastes and aptitudes, our faculties and talents, our birth and circumstances. From these we infer that we shall probably succeed best along a certain line of useful activity. But as the moments lengthen into years, it becomes apparent that the door of opportunity is closing in that direction. It is a bitter disappointment. We refuse to believe that the hindrances to the fulfilment of our cherished hopes can be permanent. Patience, we cry, will conquer every difficulty. The entrance may be strait, but surely it is possible, and will conduct into the wide and large place of successful achievement. We cast ourselves against the closing door, as sea birds on the illuminated glass of the lighthouse tower, to fall dazed and bewildered to the ground. And it is only after such a period of disappointment that we come to perceive that God's ways are not as our ways, nor his thoughts as our thoughts, and that He has other work for us to do, for which He has been preparing us, though we knew it not. When we are young we gird ourselves, and attempt to walk whither we will; but in after years we are guided by Another, and taken whither we would not.

I. Paul's Cherished Hope.—During his sojourn in the Sinaitic peninsula we may well believe that his soul turned towards his people with ardent desire. Was he not an Israelite, of the seed of Abraham, of the tribe of Benjamin, and could he be indifferent to the needs of his brethren according to the flesh? It seemed to him that it would not be difficult to unfold the meaning of the sacred symbolism with which their forefathers had become familiar in those very wastes. That the rock was Christ; that the water which flowed over the sands foreshadowed his mission to the world; that the law given from Sinai had been fulfilled and re-edited in the holy life of Jesus of Nazareth; that the fire which burnt in the bush had also shone on his face—to teach all this, and much more, and to lead his people from to the heavenly places of which Canaan was the type, was the hope and longing of his heart. What work could be more congenial to his tastes and aptitudes than this?

On his return to Damascus he at once commenced his crusade in the synagogues. "Straightway," we are told, "he preached Jesus in the synagogues, that He is the Son of God, and all that heard him were amazed. But Saul increased the more in strength, and confounded the Jews which dwelt at Damascus, proving that this is the Christ." How encouraged he was by these early successes! How evidently God seemed to be setting his seal and imprimatur on his decisions! Visions of national repentance and conversion passed across his eager soul, and he dared to hope that he should live to see the dry bones become a great army for God.

But the vision was soon overcast. So violent was the hatred with which he was regarded by his own countrymen, that he was in imminent danger of his life. They seem to have instigated the governor, who held the city of the Damascenes with a garrison, to assist them with patrols. The gates were watched day and night, that he might be killed if he endeavoured to escape. And finally he was lowered under cover of the night in a basket by the city wall.

Still, however, his purpose was unchanged. He went up to Jerusalem with the intention of seeing Peter; though he might have failed in his object had it not been for the intervention of Barnabas, who, according to an old tradition, had been his fellow-student, educated with himself at the feet of Gamaliel. Through his good offices, he was brought into contact with Peter and James, and was, not improbably, received into the house of Mary, the mother of Mark, and sister to the good Cypriote. (Col. iv. 10.) A blessed fortnight followed. He was with them, "coming in and going out at Jerusalem," and especially engaged in holy and loving fellowship with Peter, the acknowledged leader of the Church.

It is surely an innocent use of the imagination to think of these two sitting or walking together on the house-top, when the sun was westering, conversing of the great past. On one occasion the early ministry of the Lord in Galilee, so closely associated with Peter's opening manhood; on another, the discourses and scenes of the last hours before his crucifixion; on another, the precious death and burial, the glorious resurrection and ascension, would pass in review. Tell me all you can remember of the Master, would be the frequent inquiry of the new disciple, of him who had been so specially privileged as a witness of that mystery of love. And it must often have come to pass, that as they communed together of all those things that had happened, Jesus himself drew near, and their hearts burned within them.

But Saul had other business in those happy days. He seems to have avoided the churches of Judea which were in Christ, and to have again sought the synagogues. "He spake and disputed against the Grecian Jews." On many a spot where he had contended against Stephen he stood now to contend for the truths which he had first heard from the martyr's lips. How well he could understand the passion with which his statements were received: but how skilfully would he drive home the goad, which had at last compelled his own surrender! But here also his efforts were met by rebuffs:

"THEY WENT ABOUT TO SLAY HIM."

Yet, in spite of coldness and antipathy, he clung tenaciously to his cherished purpose. He had great sorrow and unceasing pain in his heart; he could have wished himself anathema from Christ for his brethren's sake, his kinsmen according to the flesh. And when he knelt quietly in the temple and heard authoritatively from the Master's lips that Jerusalem would not receive his testimony, he could hardly believe it, and clung still to his hope, and pleaded against the idea that the door was closing in his face. "Surely," he cried, "it cannot be that Jerusalem will refuse my words! She has such ample proof of my sincerity, she must be willing at least to listen to the arguments which I have found so imperative; surely my marvellous change must arrest and impress her. Let me stay. To transfer me elsewhere would be a serious waste of power. I shall do better work here among people who know me so well, and conditions I can understand, than would be possible anywhere else in the world."

In a similar manner we have all cherished our life-purposes. We have anticipated our future, as liable to lie in a certain direction, and have dearly desired that it should do so. When hindrances have been put in our way, and when we have met with strong opposition and rebuff, we have still clung to our hope. Only very slowly have we yielded and accepted the inevitable. To renounce it has been like tearing out our heart. We have not realised that the Lord's plan was so much wiser and grander than our own, till long years have passed. Then suddenly we have awoke to discover that while we were desiring to do one thing, God was leading us to do another, and what we had counted secondary was primary, for his glory, and the lasting satisfaction of our own heart.

II.—The Closing Door.—It began to close at Damascus; it closed still further when persecution arose at Jerusalem; but the final act was as Saul was praying in the temple.

It would appear that he had gone there to be alone, away from the many voices that were endeavouring to counsel him. For though he had been but a few days in the city, antipathy against him had already risen to such a height that his life was in danger, and it was necessary to consider seriously what to do—should he stay, or go—should he brave the storm, or flee before it? Some advised one course, and some another. The babble of voices confused him, deafening the whisper of the still small voice; his attention was too distracted by human suggestions, to be perfectly open to the directing finger of God. So he betook himself to the temple, where his Master had so often been; where so many symbols spoke of Him; where many holy associations gathered like troops of white-robed angels. And, as he knelt in prayer in some quiet spot, he saw Him, whom his soul loved and sought. How many visit the temple without seeing Him; but if we see Him, we are oblivious to all beside. There is One who is greater than the temple. And the risen Lord gave clear and unmistakable directions: "I saw Him saying unto me, Make haste, and get thee quickly out of Jerusalem; because they will not receive of thee testimony concerning Me."

It is easy to explain why they would not accept his testimony. There was in it. He had discovered aspects of the death of Jesus, which were in keen antagonism to all that savoured of Pharisaism. It was sufficiently mortifying to their pride to learn that the son of the carpenter was the long-anticipated Messiah; but to be told further that the true life could only be entered by union with that supreme act of self-renunciation was intolerable. This side of Christianity is too little appreciated among ourselves, and so the offence of the Cross has largely ceased. But wherever it is consistently advocated and practised, it is certain to arouse the sharpest controversy.

Saul, as we have seen, did not willingly accept this as the ultimatum, and still argued that Jerusalem would afford the most suitable sphere for his ministry. It is a mistake to argue with God, as though to bend Him to our will. But all debate was at last summarily closed by the words, "Depart, for I will send thee far hence to the Gentiles."

Ah Saul! thou hast argued, and striven, and tried to carry thy way; thou hast almost demanded that the Lord should adopt thy views. Thou hast knocked vehemently against the closed doors; but it is of no avail. Some day thou wilt come to see that He was doing better for thee than thou knewest, and was prepared to send thee into a yet wider and more productive sphere of service.

II.—The Opened Door. So the disciples brought the hunted preacher down to Cæsarea, and sent him forth to Tarsus; and not improbably he resumed his tent-making there, content to await the Lord's will and bidding. But the years passed slowly. Possibly four or five were spent in comparative obscurity and apparent neglect. Probably he wrought for Christ in the immediate vicinity of his home, as we shall see; but the word of the Lord awaited fulfilment.

Then one day, as he waited, he heard a voice saying in the doorway, "Does Saul live here?" And, in another moment, the familiar face of his old college-friend was peering in on him, with a glad smile of recognition. Then the story was told of the marvellous outbreak of God's work in Antioch, of the overflowing blessing and the breaking nets, and Barnabas pleaded with him to return to help him gather in the whitening harvest of the first great Gentile city which the Gospel had moved. "And he brought him to Antioch, and it came to pass that a whole year they assembled themselves with the church and taught much people."

Be not afraid to trust God utterly. As you go down the long corridor, you may find that He has preceded you, and locked many doors which you would fain have entered; but be sure that beyond these there is one which He has left unlocked. Open it and enter, and you will find yourself, to change the metaphor, face to face with a sweep of the river of opportunity, broader and deeper than anything in the past. Launch forth on it, it conducts to the open sea.

The Bible Confirmed.

IMPRESSIONS IN THE HOLY LAND.*

BY REV. DR. HANDLEY C. G. MOULE.

II.

AS I have said, you cannot set foot upon the Holy Land without finding, at well-nigh every mile, either topographical, climatic, or, so to speak, industrial and social illustrations and confirmations of the Scripture picture. We landed at Haifa, and began to ride towards Nazareth. Soon we had to cross the Kishon, and to realise, from the position and the condition of the stream, its liability to instantaneous floods. As we returned, in very bad weather, from Nazareth over the Kishon to the coast, that ancient river did not exactly threaten to sweep us away, but, through the overflow of water round its banks, it threatened very nearly to swallow up the vehicle in which we were travelling. We passed on and over the Kishon, and began gradually to ascend the lower slopes of the hill of Galilee. Then was pointed out to us at every corner of the landscape some place now scientifically ascertained, through the Palestine Exploration, by its ineffaceable name, perhaps by its unmistakable geographical traces or the like, to represent this, that, or the other scene of Old Testament history. In every such case, modern discoveries show that the narratives in which those places occur, the scenes into which Gilboa, Nain, Tabor enter, and the view in which Tabor stands in the foreground and Hermon in the far distance, are so many illustrations of the fact that the Bible was written by the men who lived where they professed to live, saw what they professed to describe, and were absolutely familiar, I say again, with the platform on which they placed their narratives.

Then the question supervenes: Are not the narratives of a kind which indicate, by their very artlessness and simplicity, that they are not the works of mere human genius, of men developing a romance, but that they are the writings of those who are

PHOTOGRAPHING FACTS?

We might illustrate, almost ad libitum, this aspect of the matter. Both in Galilee to the north and Judæa in the south, without a solitary exception, every really ascertained site that we had the least means of observing, is so much proof by the way that Scripture topography is accurate all along and all over. When you consider the characters of the narratives into which that topography is interlaced, you are reduced, in the miraculous parts not least, to the alternative of supposing that we have either a simply, honestly, well written record of events, or that you have narratives composed by men whose genius for the reconstruction of the past, for putting before us imaginatively what ought to have happened, is much greater than, for instance, a Scott in modern times. My firm belief is, that the art of historical reproduction or presentation as matter of fact of the past in the form of a narrative which may look as if it were contemporary, is an art of the most modern times of modern literature. I believe it was scarcely at all practised with success until Sir Walter Scott arose to show us what could be done. If we look to Scripture for narratives which have been able now for twenty generations to bear inspection by topographers and chronologers, as they have done, we are reduced to the impossible alternative that these works are either the works of geniuses who lived ten or twenty centuries before the time, or that such writings are photographs of fact.

The most conspicuous illustration of that principle in Scripture is one which I have no right to speak of at length from my own tour. It is the narrative of the Exodus. You know, probably, that no part of Scripture has more emphatically borne inspection, as to all the modern tests which can be applied to it, than has the narrative of the Exodus. For this, I must refer you to a chapter in Sir J. W. Dawson's remarkable book published some years ago, "Modern Science in Bible Lands." The geography of the Exodus is there shown to correspond in every detail with the way in which the land lies, and as regards watercourses and geological obstructions. There is a correspondence between the Bible account and every detail which scientific investigation has furnished from the Sinaitic peninsula to-day. Modern research confirms every step in the direct revelation of God concerning the normal and miraculous action of the Exodus.

There is another aspect of such impression which is left very vividly upon my mind. I feel that the land is absolutely correspondent to the Book as regards the conditions under which it was produced. The life described in the narratives of Scripture was there. The life undergone in prophetic times one could still see going on, allowing for the deplorable decline of the country in population and prosperity. At its basis and in its essentials that life was still being lived. I felt accordingly that, as regards the conditions, the BIBLE WAS ACCOUNTED FOR BY THE LAND.

When we go deeper (or higher, as you may please to put it) and ask, Did that land and its conditions generate the Bible—was it cause enough for the work?—I dare to say, absolutely, No. The same question has been raised concerning the Living Word as about the written Word. In saying so I claim no originality for a thought which I heard expressed in an address given by an able friend on board our steamer during the tour. We read the narrative of the Gospels, we go to Galilee, and we see that the land precisely corresponds, as to conditions, with the narrative. It is strange to see how thing falls in with thing when you once traverse the land of our Lord Jesus Christ. You have but to go from Nazareth to Tiberias to see at a glance why there should be such a friendly rapport between the family at Nazareth and the bridal party at Cana. The two places are so much in one neighbourhood, and, as roads go in that part of the world, so much upon one road. You have but to realise how accessible the lake is from Nazareth, how natural and open is the way down, to realise what is implied everywhere in the Gospel narrative, namely, that our blessed Lord had already, long before his entrance upon his public ministry, been used to the Lake neighbourhood, and made acquaintance there in his youth with the disciples whom He was afterwards to call his own. Hence Philip could say, as of a familiar place and family, "We have found Him, of whom Moses in the law and the prophets did write, Jesus of Nazareth, the son of Joseph." There everything is found fitting in as to topography and condition. We may go to the almost certain spot of the Sermon on the Mount and see, as the most conspicuous feature in the scenery, the little town which is as "a city that is set on a hill."

Zanzibar.—The work at "The Strangers' Rest" has prospered much under the care of our friends Mr. and Mrs. Knapman, who went out a year and a half ago. The success which, through the Divine blessing, has attended their efforts has made it necessary to increase the staff of workers. What is wanted is a worker of some experience, one who could make way among the English residents, as well as labour among the sailors and native population. For a lady or gentleman, or a married couple, able partially or entirely to maintain themselves, a really wide and blessed sphere for service presents itself. I should be thankful to hear from any who are prepared to volunteer for the work, and to give further information.

Letter from Oxford.

[BY OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.]

OXFORD is full of visitors, and opportunities for usefulness by the Churches are thus extended. Provision has been made for the distribution of Christian literature during the "race week." A silent appeal is thus being made to hundreds, and we trust not in vain. The warm weather has also brought the mission-bands from some of the Churches into the open air, so that, besides the meetings in St. Giles', held regularly by the undergraduates, and by members of the Y.M.C.A., groups of workers are proclaiming "in the broad places" the good news of the Gospel.

On May 25, Rev. C. J. Casher gave a very stimulating lecture in St. Aldate's Rectory room, on "The Trials and Triumphs of Open-air Preaching," Canon Christopher presiding. As the lecturer traced the history of open-air preaching from the "Lollards" to the revival of last century, dwelling indeed upon the difficulties of the work, but recounting its triumphs, it was felt how much can be done in this way, and in our own city, to bring the Gospel to the hearts of many who would not otherwise hear it.

Very regrettable have been the disturbances in connection with the meetings held at the Martyrs' Memorial by the Socialists. Doubtless there were faults on both sides. Unguarded statements by some of the speakers, and a lack of self-control by the undergraduates, have led to some unhappy scenes.

In connection with evangelistic effort here, the work of the Church Army, and especially its Labour Home, is both interesting and important. Diligence order, and cleanliness are features which strike the visitor at once on entering the "Home"; and above all, an earnest effort is made to reach the souls of the men. As "visitor," I have had several interesting and helpful conversations with them. "Captain" and Mrs. Parham are leaving the parish of St. Ebbe's, where they have been working, and will be succeeded by "½ Captain" Easton.

At the spring half-yearly conference in connection with the South Midland District Union of the Y.M.C.A., favourable reports of the progress and condition of the various branches throughout the district were given by Mr. Hunt, the hon. district secretary, and followed by a devotional address by Rev. Dr. Weir. At luncheon, the Rector of Exeter, who presided, welcomed the representatives in a few helpful words. He showed how good it was to meet together for mutual encouragement and to exchange experience. Referring to the work at Oxford, he remarked that there was a development in all its branches. Mr. Hind Smith, who came from London specially to read a paper on "The Value of Y.M.C.A. District Organisations, and how their Usefulness may be Increased," urged the members to forget the definite and distinctive work, and to adhere strictly to the principles which they had in view when they first started. He warned them, too, against trying experiments for the purpose of popularising their association and thus jeopardising their well-being. A timely and a much needed warning.

The University has been thrown into mourning by the sudden deaths of Rev. Dr. Wilson, Warden of Keble, and Rev. Llewellyn Thomas, Vice-principal of Jesus College. Both will be missed, not only in University circles, but in other quarters. The Warden of Keble was an earnest advocate of temperance, and has done much for the furtherance of the cause.

After some rumours that the undergraduates would be sent down for the Jubilee, it has been decided that they remain. It is to be earnestly hoped that there will be no repetition of the painful scenes which were witnessed on the recent visit of the Prince of Wales. At a meeting held this week to decide what form the celebration of the Jubilee should take, it was decided among other things to open a fund for the Radcliffe Infirmary, the Eye Hospital, and the Sarah Acland Home. A tea will also be given to the 7000 children attending the Elementary Schools.

The Outlook in Ireland.

OUR national characteristics display themselves quite as strongly in our religion as in our political movements. Fancy a priest convicted in open court of misappropriating several thousand pounds, then pulling the wires so that the public might show its gratitude by subscribing the deficit. Another priest uses a shepherd's crook with such energy upon the head of a member of his flock that congestion of the brain was narrowly averted. He was taken into court and mulcted by a Roman Catholic judge, and a jury mainly of the same persuasion, to the tune of £75 and costs.

Then our resourceful priest appeals to his flock to make good his loss. The saddest feature of the case remains to be told. The young man who was assaulted, and who appealed to English law for redress, has been compelled to leave the locality. The secret machinery of Romanism has been set working, so that not only the chief victim, but all who have showed him sympathy, have been made to feel the modern substitute for the torture. Some innocent people in England, who are deceived into handling the trinkets of Rome, might come here for a holiday, and see for themselves the fruits of such a system.

Evangelistic meetings were recently held by a converted Roman Catholic in an Irish provincial town. Much blessing seems to have resulted, and a young girl was savingly converted. Her family, of course, strongly objected to her attendance at Protestant meetings, and the parish priest waited on her and strongly remonstrated. It was all in vain, she attended the weekly prayer and evangelistic meetings, and seemed to glory in tribulation. One night, as she came away from a meeting, a mob of men (her father and brothers among the number) seized her, and amid a scene of great excitement carried her through three streets to her father's house, where she was locked up. A lady who was present describes the scene as terrible; the crowd yelled like maniacs, declaring that she must renounce her false religion. Then, whenever the noise ceased a little, was heard the voice of the girl declaring that they might kill her, but she should never go back to Rome. None of God's people in the place slept that night. There was continual and lo! next day an opportunity for escape having presented itself, she walked out with a smiling face, and has since gone about her business as if nothing had happened.

Here is another case from the Metropolis. A girl educated in a convent has been attracted by the preaching of the "old, old story," and has become a regular attendant at a certain mission for Roman Catholics. One Sunday night, as she walked home, accompanied by a Christian lady, her mother meets her, and says:—

"Is it a fact that you have been down at the devil's workshop in D—— street?"

"Yes, mother, and I wish you had been there too; you would have heard much about the love of Christ for sinners."

The mother raises her umbrella, and strikes her daughter across the face with it, tears the hat from the girl's head, dashes it upon the ground, and dances upon it, tears her own mantle as a Jew would rend his garment. Mother and daughter are conveyed into the house of the Christian lady already referred to, and there the former becomes unconscious, and for many minutes is most tenderly nursed by the daughter. As the poor woman recovers consciousness, she appeals to the daughter.

"Maggie, you won't disgrace us all, and the good nuns. You are a child of Mary, you know."

"I am a child of Jesus now, mother, and that is better."

As her family continued to annoy her and used every effort to keep her from the meetings where she was converted, she waited on them to say that unless she was permitted freedom of conscience, she must decline to have any further intercourse with them. Her father, a Protestant in his youth, beat her about the head with his fists and locked her into a back room. After a long and terrible struggle, she managed to open the window. Even there a very high wall barred her progress, but she scaled it, walked round to the front door and said to the person who answered her summons, "Good-bye, you shall see me no more."

Ireland and Southern Canada seem marching upon identical lines to religious freedom. There are saddening sights of intemperance, and Sabbath desecration, and superstition. But side by side the seed of the Word is being sown broadcast, sometimes in the teeth of persecution, and with no small suffering on the part of the worker. But God's promise standeth sure:

"He that goeth forth and weepeth, bearing precious seed, shall doubtless come again with rejoicing, bringing his sheaves with him."

The Opium Trade.

A GOODLY number of friends of the cause of national righteousness assembled in the Board Room at the Memorial Hall on Thursday evening last, when Sir Joseph W. Pease, Bart., M.P., presided over the annual meeting of the Society for the Suppression of the Opium Trade. Among the many who sent letters in explanation of absence was Mrs. Isa Bird Bishop, who regretted her inability to attend and bear testimony to the wreck and ruin wrought by opium among the Chinese people.

Mr. J. G. ALEXANDER read extracts from the report, which vindicated the existence of the society, described its effective work, and set forth interesting facts in connection with the movement. Among encouraging statements were the following:—The opium dens have been closed almost all over India; this means the suppression of opium smoking, so far as the great mass of the population is concerned, for very few of the people have the skill or facilities for preparing opium for their own smoking. The use of opium has recently been prohibited among the Chins of Upper Burma. The habit is also recognised as injurious among Burmese and Karens in Burma, and Malays in the Straits Settlements. In Ceylon, however, another rule obtains. The Malay from the Straits, and the Tamil from Southern India are still freely admitted to the opium dens, which have been closed to them in their respective homes; and the Burman Buddhist, when he performs a pilgrimage to the shrine of Buddh-Gaya in Bengal, finds himself in like manner exempt from the law of prohibition.

Some interesting statistics were given, from which it appeared that the net opium revenue for 1895-6 yielded 3,881,000 tens of rupees; and it was estimated that the revenue for the current year would amount to 3,161,000 tens of rupees, which, if the rupee remains at the same average value as last year, would be equivalent to £1,905,000 sterling. These figures to those of twenty or, indeed, fifteen years ago. The report also summarised Parliamentary action and the progress of feeling in Great Britain in favour of suppression. At length it was reported that meetings had been held during the year in twenty-five towns in which such gatherings were previously unknown.

In the course of a brief address, the CHAIRMAN expressed himself as by no means discouraged with the progress achieved. In all the campaign there had been a Hand above that extended by the anti-opium societies.

Sir WILLIAM WEDDERBURN, Bart., followed, maintaining that the practical suppression of opium-smoking in India was a considerable victory for the agitation. The ways of official departments were very wonderful; when told a thing ought to be done, they refused to see it, but at length followed the course advised. So, the Indian Government had at length adopted the recommendation of Mr. H. J. Wilson, M.P., as set out in his minority report. By reasonable economies of administration, the revenue derived from the traffic could easily be dispensed with.

Mr. H. J. WILSON, M.P., remarked that notwithstanding the statement, more than once made in Parliament, to the effect that the area of poppy cultivation should be diminished, there had lately been an increase, which had been growing ever since the character of the majority report was made known. Yet, although there was an increase of twenty per cent. in that direction, the amount paid to the cultivators had fallen. From these facts it would seem that the traffic was getting more and more unprofitable. There is also a reduced manufacture and a smaller export. The business is sinking away; and it was deplorable that the Government had not suppressed it in a manly way, while yet actually in existence.

After a brief address by Mr. J. WILSON, M.P., Mr. B. BROOMHALL showed from figures that during the sixty years of the Queen's reign the export of opium from India to China had been at a rate of half a ton for every hour of the day and night. The total revenue arising had been £253,975,382; but the traffic was not only demoralising in itself, but highly injurious to legitimate trade.

Rev. J. MACGOWAN, of Amoy, for thirty-eight years missionary in China in connection with the L.M.S., spoke of the great importance of the subject, and the ignorance that prevails regarding it among Christian people. In China to-day the supreme question is opium; it touches every class of society, and is the vice which overtops all others. Among rich and poor it is the same; the former in circumstances of luxury, the latter in conditions of misery, and ever with tragic consequences. Having described a visit to an opium palace, in which were a thousand or so of the choicest young men of Shanghai, enslaved by the awful vice, the speaker pointed out that, while there is a diminution of production in India, in China, where we have fostered the habit, the traffic is growing rapidly. Whereas a few years ago there was here and there a field devoted to the poppy crop, now whole districts are covered with the flower. The farmers at the present time make 500 per cent. over what they could realise for rice crops; but they do not know that in a few years there will be failure and distress. Such is the influence of the traffic, its victims are practically outside the range of missionary effort. Of course the Gospel can save them, but gamblers and other most degraded sinners enter the kingdom of God before them. Every time the vice is mentioned, the people associate it with England. Shackles have been laid upon China which threaten to hold the people for ever.

Miss LUCY GUINNESS, recently returned from India, described the opium shops in southern and northern cities; also the dens in which smokers hide away. Never until she came home from India had she so appreciated the work of the agencies for the suppression of the traffic, so fruitful of misery and sin.

Dr. WILSON, from China, gave the view of the average Chinaman regarding the traffic. Apart from Christianity, the Chinaman has the conviction that opium-smoking is a great evil, as is shown by the bills announcing remedies for the crave, and the refuges that have been established for the treatment of those who have become its victims. Hundreds of times he had listened to the bitter taunt, "Where does the opium come from?" The Chinaman classes together four evils—drink, impurity, gambling, and opium-smoking.

The Christian Community.

THIS Association held its annual meeting on May 25, Mr. W. H. Seagram presiding. Rev. Marmaduke Hare, rector of Stratford-le-Bow, said the work was thoroughly done, and in a catholic spirit. A great deal was done with a small income. The chairman specially commended the common lodging-house work, and showed the extreme need of the varied service carried on. Other addresses followed.

The report was read by Mr. JAMES ATKINSON, the secretary, from which it appeared that the income had been £3520 and the expenditure £3203. In past years opposition was common, and sometimes violent, but it is now the exception. This plainly shows the civilising influence of the Gospel upon the people, while cases of conversion are continually being met with. Bible-classes, temperance work, Sunday-schools are carried on, there being seven mission halls, in addition to the Memorial Building at Bethnal Green. The Association has 450 voluntary helpers. There is a Home for Working Girls, in which they are trained for situations. Sewing is also provided for poor women, and industrial classes for those who are younger. Various classes and lectures are held at the Memorial Hall.

The president, Sir George Williams, each year presents every worker with a volume.

OUR DAILY HOMILY.

SUNDAY, June 6.

"Each one had six wings."—Isa. vi. 2.

Seraphim signifies "burning ones" to designate their essence, their dazzling appearance, or their intense devotion. But whatever it stands for, they needed the six wings. With twain each seraph covered his face—there was his reverence, he dare not look upon God. With twain he covered his feet—there was his humility, he recognised that he was unworthy. With twain he did fly—there was his activity, his obedience to the Divine commands.

It has been suggested that we are taught that a third part only of our time and energy should be expended in activity, whilst two-thirds are given to reverent fellowship and communion. Probably with most of us the proportion is in the other direction, and we give two-thirds to flight for God, and one-third only for fellowship with God. Might we not adopt the seraph's habit in preference to our own?

The service that springs from such communion is in deep sympathy with the mind of God. The seraph did not wait for the Lord to direct him to fly to Isaiah with a live coal from the altar, but spontaneously the son of flame sped to do the required office, as though instinctively he realised that there was nothing else to be done for a man who had confessed himself to be vile. The seraphim have heard that confession made so often, and have so often administered the same restorative to fainting hearts, that they do not need to be directed what to do. They know God's thought before He speaks a word. A notable emblem this of service.

MONDAY, June 7.

"Take heed, and be quiet; fear not, neither let thine heart be faint."—Isa. vii. 4.

Serious trouble seemed imminent. Two strong peoples were bearing down on Jerusalem, and the heart of the house of David was moved as the trees of the forest are moved with the wind. Fear like this demoralises men and nations. It unfits them for wise and strong action. Hence the necessity of the Lord bidding Isaiah reassure Ahaz in the words quoted above.

They were not sent to him because of his righteousness or virtue, for he was one of the weakest and most idolatrous of the kings of David's line; but because his foes were acting in direct collision with the determined counsel and purpose of God. Such a coalition may be threatening you today, but it is in vain for the breakers of human pride and hate to attempt to intrude within limits which God has set around his chosen. Be quiet. God will fight for you. Fear not, God's purpose cannot be overthrown. Let not thine heart be faint. Lo, a virgin has borne a Son, whose name is Immanuel—God with us. "Fear not, I bring you glad tidings of good news. To you is born a Saviour."

God incarnate is the end of fear, and the heart that realises that He is in the midst, that takes heed to the assurance of his loving presence may well be quiet in the midst of alarm. No weapon that is formed against thee shall prosper, and every tongue that shall rise in judgment against thee thou shalt condemn. God can restrain the wrath of man.

TUESDAY, June 8.

"Neither fear ye their fear, nor be in dread thereof...Let Him be your fear, and let Him be your dread."—Isa. viii. 12, 13.

On the prairies they often fight fire with fire. Against the career of the wall of flame there is but one resource: before it reaches the terrified fugitives they light a fire that sweeps the ground bare, so that when the advancing horror reaches the spot there is no fuel left for it to feed on. So with the heart of man, the only true preservation from fear of our fellows is an overmastering fear of our God. Sanctify Him in your hearts. Let Him be your fear and dread.

It is remarkable that Jacob sware by the Fear of his father Isaac. And this appears to have quieted his heart in the presence of Laban. Oh that the fear of God were more prevalent, and that the thought of grieving Him, or incurring his just wrath and indignation, were more cogent in warning us from sin. The fear of God will come to us most certainly with his love. They who love Him most fear Him most. They say with Joseph, "How can we do this great wickedness and sin against God?" Like Paul, they know the terror of the Lord, and so persuade men. One of the greatest sentences a man can utter when tempted to sin or threatened with pains and penalties for the uprightness of his life or the correctness of his creed, is to say simply, quietly, and strongly: "I fear God and have no other fear." Fear Him, so shall ye be established so shall ye prosper.

WEDNESDAY, June 9.

"Of the increase of his government and of peace there shall be no end."—Isa. ix. 7.

Is the government of your life upon his shoulder? In olden times the badge of office was worn there, in some cases a key (xxii. 22). It was on his shoulder that Aaron bore the names of the tribes. The shoulder is the symbol of strength. It is well when the government of our lives rests on the strong Son of God. It is a blessed day in our experience that witnesses the transference of the rule of life to the Wonderful, the Counsellor, the Mighty God, because all these wonderful altitudes of his nature well qualify Him to become the King and Guide of men.

The moment of definitely imposing the government upon the Lord Jesus is generally a marked one in our lives. It stands out as the first of a long series. It is the staple for a chain of successive links, because we are always increasing that government in proportion as we become more familiar with our nature and opportunities, and as new departments of our life open up before us. You are consecrated before marriage, but after you have a home of your own there is a widening of Christ's government.

But just in proportion to the increase of his government will be the increase of your peace. As the one extends, so does the other. And he who has extended the dominion of Jesus to the furthest limits of his being, will know more of the peace that passeth understanding. Solomon reigned from the river to the sea, and was the king of peace.

THURSDAY, June 10.

"Shall the axe boast itself against him that heweth therewith?"—Isa. x. 15.

The Assyrian thought that he was acting on his own impulse, and in his pride congratulated himself on his exploits. The prophet reminded him that it is not so. He was only an axe, a saw, a rod, in the hand of the Eternal God, whose supremacy he was inclined to challenge and set at nought.

This thought underlay the Apostle's reply to those who magnified him against Apollos or Cephas. What are we, he cries, but ministers through whom ye believed, even as God granted to each of us? We are only instruments of God's husbandry, implements through which He fulfils his plans.

Thoughts like these correct alike pride and despondency. Pride, because whatever is the result of our work, we can no more take the credit of it than the pen that wrote the "Paradise Lost" could take to itself the credit of its production. At the best, it is not you, but the grace of God that was with you. You are only a pipe in the organ, but the breath that educed your music was divine. And then, in despondency, it is very helpful to remember that if we are nothing, God is all-sufficiency; if we have failed, it is the more needful for Him to exert more power. Throw back the responsibility of all results on God. Only see to it that you are a polished shaft, an unblunted saw, and leave Him to do through you what He will.

FRIDAY, June 11.

"And he shall be of quick scent in the fear of the Lord."—Isa. xi. 3 (R.V. marg.).

Quick of scent! This is the prerogative of all who have received the fulness of the Holy Spirit. We all know the great advantage of having a keen scent. Those who can instantly detect an ill-odour are saved from going into where pestilence and fever lurk in ambush for life. The whiff of ill-odour startles the unwary passer-by, and warns him that influences inimical to health are brooding nigh. Thus he is arrested and saved.

So it is a blessed thing when a man's spiritual senses are exercised to discriminate between the good and bad, the healthy and unhealthy, in literature, amusements, fellowship, and many of the questionable or doubtful things which professing Christians permit. There are many of these which appear innocent enough, as some deadly spot of a jungle where miasma and fever breed; but the deadly scent of corruption will instantly be detected by the Spirit-taught spirit, and the child of God, whose senses are exercised to distinguish between good and evil.

The sense of smell is greatly quickened by inhaling pure air, full of ozone and health, such as breathes about the mountain-brow or the ocean wave. If we return from such scenes, we are more sensitive than ever to foul odours. Live with God in the holy fellowship of the mountains of fellowship, so will you become spiritually quick of scent.

SATURDAY, June 12.

"With joy shall ye draw water out of the wells of salvation."—xii. 3.

Why do people resort to wells? Is it not because they are thirsty? And do they not expect that thirst shall disappear when they have drunk deep draughts of sparkling ice-cold water? So in Jesus there are many wells, each of which is brimming with a sufficiency for the thirsty soul; all we have to do is to draw and drink. "Let him that is athirst come, and take of the water of life freely."

We draw by faith; we draw by letting down the empty bucket of our need into the fulness of God's supply. We draw by our yearning desire and prayer. Do you want purity? There is a well of it in Jesus; draw it up. Do you want meekness? It is there in plenty; draw it up. Do you want courage? It resides in the Lion of the tribe of Judah; take it. And when you have done this by faith, do not look into the dripping bucket of your soul to see if you have received; believe that you have received, and that there is within you, in answer to your appeal to Jesus, a sufficiency for all things, that you, having an abundance for all your necessities, may abound to every good work.

Oh, the joy of such an appropriating faith, that comes to Jesus again and again, and is led by Him ever further into the midst of the springing wells of life. Need itself becomes transformed to delight when it drives the soul to ascertain and use all that God has shred for us in the Son of his love.

British Home for Incurables.—Earl Amherst presided at the annual meeting of this charity. Mr. R. G. Salmond, secretary, stated that the past year had been one of continued prosperity, as regarded both the financial position of the Institution and the number of inmates and pensioners relieved. The number of pensioners on the books receiving £20 a year each was 300, and there were sixty-five patients in the Home at Streatham. The seaside home at Margate was filled, principally by pensioners, during the summer months, and to those poor sufferers the change was most beneficial. The chairman said the Board had decided not to make any special appeal this year, but he trusted that the funds of the charity would not suffer thereby.

China Inland Mission.

On behalf of a very full meeting assembled in the Mildmay Conference Hall on Wednesday afternoon last week, Sir George Williams, who presided, extended a warm welcome to Rev. J. Hudson Taylor, director of this Mission, on his return after four years' visitation of its stations in the flowery land. In his usual genial and happy way, the Chairman expressed gratitude to God for the blessing which has attended the work which is supported by Christians of all sections of the Church.

Mr. Walter B. Sloan, general secretary, made the financial statement, which showed the total receipts for 1896 to be £43,000, a small increase as compared with the previous year. As the number of workers has been largely augmented, it became obvious that a greater degree of self-denial on their part is involved in the financial position of the Mission. The total number of missionaries to date is 343.

In a brief prefatory prayer, Rev. J. Hudson Taylor linked himself and the meeting in sympathy with missionary workers and converts the world over. Then came details of his travels through a great many of the inland stations of the Mission. The towards missionaries, he said, is most marked, and many minds have been considerably opened to the truth. Despite the opium incubus, the suspicions of the people are being dispelled. The efforts of the Bible Society have done much to alter the mental position of the Chinese, and have produced an eagerness to hear the Gospel. Joy at this is tempered with much sorrow, on account of the short time available for the working in each place. Cases have been heard of which justify the conviction that even under this disadvantage not a few have turned from idols to serve the living God. It is cheering to know that the Mission has now obtained some standing in every one of the great provinces once totally unevangelised. God's care of workers in Kan-su during the seven months of the Mohammedan rebellion was a marked instance of providential care, which has issued in spiritual benefit to the natives. Indeed, good results from the work generally have been greater than ever before, 1260 Chinese having been baptized during the year.

Mr. F. W. Baller, one of the Mission's workers, detailed experiences of extension in and around Ho-nan (Shan-si), largely through converted native agency. In ten years, raw curiosity had given place to a native Christian church; while in nine neighbouring centres a work was being carried on by the natives themselves without fee or reward.

The four questions of Rom. x. 14, 15, were brought forward by Mrs. Stott as something which God designs his Church on earth to answer. In proof that the Chinese are staunch friends when their confidence is gained by Christian love, Mrs. Stott referred to the fine banner hanging behind her on the platform, presented at a large gathering of native Christians, to commemorate twenty-five years spent by her in ministry among them. It was worth while going through two lives to see what she had seen of God's work there. Wherever a church in our own favoured land is full of missionary zeal, it is bound to be a useful one in its home sphere.

Rev. E. D. Williams said he had stood on that platform nine years ago to tell why he was going to China. God's goodness and power had been wonderfully seen in the interval, in regard to parental anxieties, the acquisition of the language, and riotous troubles in the neighbourhood of the work in Si-ch'uen. Statistics were given of decided growth in the eleven stations of this province. Some touching instances of native zeal were also mentioned. Itinerary work shows that the Lord is preparing hearts in China for Himself.

Motives for zealous prosecution of missionary work found an eloquent exponent in Rev. G. H. C. Macgregor. Pity for degraded races living in superstition and misery might drive us to activity in this way, but gratitude for personal deliverance from spiritual guilt, bondage, and want should be a stronger lever to devotion in such a cause. In the ever ascending scale of motive, we come upon duty in regard to a plain Divine command. To hold himself or herself at the beck and call of Christ is the true position of the believer. Moreover, hope is another element entering into the subject; and in this connection, surely one great hindrance to our Lord's return is the neglect by his Church of her great commission. The supreme motive, however, must ever be Christ's life in the soul. Shall we not, each one, allow that life to exercise its full power within us?

There was an increased attendance at the evening meeting, when Mr. Hudson Taylor occupied the chair. He said that taking all missions working in China, the number of communicants has doubled within the last seven years.

Glorious work in physical healing had fallen to the lot of Dr. Douthwaite, and therein he had discovered attraction of the people, removal of their prejudices, and the presentation to them of an object lesson as to the true spirit of Christianity. Through such agency large numbers of Chinese had been reached throughout an extensive field of travel, the Doctor having 24,000 dispensary attendances last year, including some Chinese soldiers, with 200 patients in hospital, many of those treated professing faith in Christ. It is as true in China as elsewhere that love never faileth, and Chinese gratitude is a real quantity.

Mr. John Darroch has been working in Nganhwu Province, which has 48,000 square miles of territory very inadequately served in its missionary stations. Many cities in the north of the province are yet without any witnesses for Christ. There is plenty of opportunity to live as well as preach the Gospel in China. "That's a foreign devil, but what he says is true," was the remarkable exclamation of one upon whose heart God laid conviction. Even in a place of 30,000 inhabitants, with no other workers than two ladies, the feeling arises, "I must preach the Gospel in other cities also."

During three years' absence from England, that

SPLENDID MISSIONARY WITNESS,

Mrs. Bishop, spent some months in the province of Si-chuen. One cannot help feeling strongly that her sound common-sense testimony is of a nature to commend itself to every unbiassed mind. She spoke of the devotion and tact exhibited by several workers—native and British—with whom she had come in contact. One could not find a more devout or a better behaved audience in England than in the native church at Paoning Fu; but such spots only make the surrounding spiritual darkness all the blacker. The spirit of unity between the China Island Mission workers and those of the Church Missionary Society is so manifest that it would be difficult to say where one agency begins and the other ends. Cut off as the missionaries are from what we consider religious helps, they throw themselves the more upon prayer and study of the Bible, and these things seem to be the very elements of their life in the midst of the down-dragging influences of heathenism. The number of converts may be comparatively small, but the quality is good, and church-life is pure. Medicine in Corea is intimately connected with devil-worship; while in China, and even in enlightened Japan, it is concerned with charms and sorceries. These facts afford obvious reasons for the maintenance of Christian medical missions.

A letter written from Flushing, and signed by "A Blue-jacket," was read by Rev. Hudson Taylor. During the stay of H.M.S. Spartan in Chinese waters the writer had extensive opportunities of intercourse with missionaries and native Christians. Some of his shipmates told him they dared not go to C.I.M. meetings, or they were bound to be converted; but other dear comrades, like-minded with himself, joined in saying, God bless the Mission and all connected with it; for wherever they went were found proofs of the Christ-like lives of its workers. Mr. Taylor said that God had been hearing the prayers of workers and friends at home by providing labourers. With regard to the financial resources of the Mission, taxation in China is increased through the late war, and the once favourable value of silver there, and consequently the Mission's available income, has been, he said, seriously affected; but in all such matters recourse has been had to the great Divine Treasurer, whose resources are found to be undiminished. Our business is to seek first his kingdom, and all things needful shall be added unto us.

The Church Army.

The Executive Committee are very anxious to celebrate the Diamond Jubilee of the Queen by raising £10,000 to build a central headquarters, where all the offices could be united with the two chief Training Homes. The present centre is cramped and congested, the work being carried on under and over several shops in the Edgware-road. It is hoped further to augment the Benevolent Fund by £5000. From this grants will be made from time to time for cases of urgent need, old age, incapacity among the officers, and for their orphans and widows.

In no branch of the work has God's blessing been more manifest during the past year than in the van work. Rev. C. Lane says:—

I bless God from my heart for the Church Army. I have been here (Wheelock, Sandbach, Cheshire) for twenty-three years; nothing has moved the people previous to our recent Mission of the Van.

"God knows what will become of him if you can't take him." So wrote one of the Charity Organisation Society's officials not long ago, concerning a man who had gone down. "God knows," indeed! And yet this poor fellow's life was once as fair and as promising as that of many others. How many men, and women too, thank God on their knees for the fresh start in life given them by the Church Army. Help such as this is help indeed. It is not a hasty push, a "move-on-there" sort of assistance, but a hearty, encouraging sympathy, and a certain home for three months, if needful, and rest and comfort for the weary soul and body. Idleness is not permitted. If a man will not work he must go. "To labour is to pray," might well be the motto of the Church Army. Everyone is busy, everyone is bright and cheerful, the services are hearty, the system thorough, and the outcast is welcome. "Nobody wants the outcasts," said a bishop lately, "but the Church Army. God bless the Church Army"; and many will echo his prayer.

"We never have any time to laugh at home," said a poor, overworked mother one day to Miss Storey, while enjoying a Church Army tea at the Old Clo' Depôt. "We like to come here once a week; it makes us feel young again."

The idle class cannot realise the burden of hard-grinding poverty, how it deadens the mind, and makes a woman old before her time. "No time to laugh at home," and perhaps no time to pray.

There is an open luncheon every Monday and Thursday at 1.30 p.m., and visitors who would like to see something of the work of the Church Army, and to make the acquaintance of Mr. Carlile and the officers, are welcome. Here is no elaborate menu, only plain, wholesome food, well cooked and neatly served. The dining "hall" is in the basement at 130, Edgware road, and was formerly a kitchen, but many pleasant gatherings take place there, and when luncheon is over a chapter from the Bible is read, a few kindly words are spoken by Mr. Carlile, and then all adjourn and assist at the short service which is conducted by the cadets.

Every information and assistance concerning the work will be gladly given by the hon. social sec., Mr. Colin F. Campbell, or by Miss Prentice, the hon. sec. of the women's social work. £5 will help up one poor outcast; £100 will start a home; £200 will cover its cost for one year; £5000 will found and endow a home. Many more homes are needed. May God raise up many more in this coming year who will help "to hold up the weak, heal the sick, bind up the broken, bring again the outcasts, and seek the lost."

Last year the Social Department of the Church Army investigated and dealt with some 9000 cases of "all sorts and conditions of men," as well as women and youths; and out of all those received into the Labour Homes throughout London and the provinces over 50 per cent. obtained a genuinely fresh start in life. In these homes, as the Dean of Windsor said the other day, the "Church Army turns soot into diamonds."

THE LATE

Rev. William Ashton,

MISSIONARY TO SOUTH AFRICA.

THE death of the senior missionary upon the roll of active workers in the London Missionary Society recalls many of the triumphs and much of the success achieved in one of its hardest fields of labour.

William Ashton was for twenty-seven years the coadjutor of the venerable Dr. Moffat at Kuruman, and for some time the neighbour of David Livingstone. He was one of those keen, eager, self-reliant, untiring spirits which the Master usually sends to young missions. A man who can turn his hand to anything, and is capable as a linguist, translator, preacher, printer, bookbinder, carpenter, mason, and other building crafts, as well as a book-keeper, store-keeper, financial agent, and at all kinds of desk work. All these duties, and others, fell to the lot of Mr. Ashton, and the testimony of a succession of colleagues for fifty-five years is unanimous as to the adaptability, energy, and success of this faithful worker.

His first serious thoughts about mission work were produced by a sermon from Rev. Richard Knill, from the text, "When it pleased God to reveal his Son in me," etc., and while at Airedale College, Bradford, he became acquainted with Dr. Moffat, through whose request the directors of the London Missionary Society appointed him to Kuruman.

Dr. Moffat being delayed in England, Mr. Ashton employed his time in learning printing and bookbinding. At length, having married Miss Sarah Dixon, of Morley, near Leeds, the party of four missionaries sailed with Captain Buckham in The Fortitude for the Cape.

At Kuruman, besides general mission work, he had the superintendence of the printing press. The present skilled superintendent of that mission press says of Mr. Ashton's work: "Though not a trained printer, the books that were printed during his supervision—mainly the work of his own hands—testify to the thoroughness and precision that characterised everything he undertook. In addition to books for educational purposes which he printed, was the first Sechwana Bible, translated by Dr. Moffat, in which he rendered Dr. Moffat very efficient help, the proofs always being submitted to Mr. Ashton for comment, and revision when necessary, before going to press." In 1857 he commenced a monthly periodical in Sechwana, "The Instructor and News Teller of the Bechuanas."

In 1864 he took charge of the station at Likhatlong, and engaged in the revision of the Sechwana New Testament. During the whole of this fifty-five years of service Mr. Ashton only spent nine months in England—during 1870-71, when he returned to occupy Kuruman in the absence of Mr. J. S. Moffat.

In 1876 he removed to Barkly, his final sphere of labour, and for twenty-one years worked in a very extensive district occupied by English, Boers, Bechwanas, Korannas, and other tribes. Hence on Sunday his services were of a polyglot character, and people present heard "every man in his own language wherein he was born . . . the mighty works of God." Twice a day did this septuagenarian delight to proclaim the Gospel, and in the afternoon to conduct the Sunday-school. He had also a Blue Ribbon Army and a day-school to look after in the week.

But this final sphere of work had a wider range. It was the financial centre and store for all the Mission. As the secretary and treasurer of the Bechuana district committee the business of the Mission was focussed in his hands, and if at any time a brother missionary needed some business transacted he always attended to his requests.

It will be readily seen, even from these hasty words, that the active old man at Barkly was the "hub" of the Mission, and kept things running. He will be much missed by all the missionaries, who looked up to him as a friend, so capable and helpful, that only the unselfish solicitude of a real father can convey an idea of his loving attention to their wants with his characteristic accuracy and promptitude. He was always a very affectionate man, and observers were surprised that so stern a man could be so tender to children. In old age he grew very mild and lovable.

Amongst the natives he was widely known, venerated, and loved. Though he was a strict disciplinarian in church matters, and many have vivid recollections of his treatment, yet for this he was none the less loved by them. They also showed keen appreciation of his faithfulness. One man said, in reference to Mr. Ashton as a preacher, "The teacher Ashton did not cross the sea in vain."

In 1892, his jubilee year of service, Mr. Ashton was the recipient of many kindly attentions and valuable mementoes of the affection and esteem in which he was held by the directors of the Society, his fellow missionaries, and the people among whom he laboured. But still the simple, humble missionary laboured on; his one desire seemed to be expressed in Wesley's words—

> My body with my charge lay down,
> And cease at once to work and live.

Though he has gone from us, Mr. Ashton will always be remembered for the noble and active part he has taken in Christianising and civilising this portion of the "Dark Continent."

Native Races and the Liquor Traffic.

ONE of the Duke of Westminster's spacious rooms in Grosvenor House was filled on Monday afternoon for the annual meeting of the Native Races and the Liquor Traffic United Committee. The hon. sec., Dr. C. F. Harford-Battersby, made touching reference to the lamented decease of his predecessor, Rev. J. Grant Mills, and stated that the present time was a crisis in the history of the movement. There was an immediate danger of the extension of the liquor traffic amongst native races, especially on the West Coast of Africa, owing to the opening up of new tracts of country by railways and other means. On the other hand, the Brussels General Act should come under revision in 1898, and it is very important speedily to secure an agreement amongst the Powers as to further restrictive measures being imposed. Pastor Gustav Müller had organised during the past year a German United Committee, consisting of representatives of fifteen missionary and temperance societies, and this committee had elicited from the German Government the information that they are prepared to act in co-operation with other European Powers in placing restrictions upon the liquor traffic with native races. During the year the committee have reduced their debt from £77 to £22, on an income of £378, but there is a consequent necessity of diminished activity, and a sum of £1000 is needed in order to deal adequately with the present crisis. Reference was made to Her Majesty's expressed sympathy with the object the Committee have at heart, and it is believed that nothing would give greater joy to our Sovereign than the emancipation of Africa from this great curse.

Speaking from the chair, the Archbishop of Canterbury expressed satisfaction that the progress of this movement, if not great, was, at any rate, very real. It is a terrible blot upon our commerce that, while it increases the material comforts of the human race, yet it carries to it such a deadly curse as strong drink. Africa stands pre-eminent for the harm which is done by this mischievous import. Would that British commerce generally might realise how it is besmirched by an evil than which nothing tends more to increase human misery.

The enormous growth of Africa in the seven years which have elapsed since the adoption of the Brussels Act was urged by Mr. Sydney Buxton, M.P., as one strong reason for revision on the lines of increased restriction. Mr. Alfred Jones (Liverpool) pointed out some of the difficulties under which traders labour, in regard to this question, from the low rate of French and German spirit duties where Africa is concerned.

Growing public opinion at home and abroad with reference to the admitted evils of the traffic was spoken to by Bishop Tugwell (Lagos), who quoted a mass of Governmental official opinion in favour of restriction. His own experience showed that gin had almost become the currency of the African coast. He believed that, if necessary, England might successfully stand alone in guarding her African frontiers against this curse. Rev. Denis Kemp, from the Gold Coast, showed that successful missioning there has demanded uncompromising opposition to the evil.

A worthy representative of Africa now stood forward in the person of Bishop Oluwole, who said that his people are not going to wait until the interior of the country is overrun and devastated by a traffic no more legitimate than the slave trade, and quite as contrary to the morale of treaty rights.

Colonel Cardew, Governor of Sierra Leone, reported decisive measures of repression taken by his Government, and warmly thanked this society for the ameliorative work it has, to his knowledge, accomplished on the West Coast of Africa. Mr. Joseph Malins and Mr. T. A. Denny also added a few words of testimony and encouragement.

Temperance Workers.—At a social gathering of temperance workers in the Cockburn Hotel, Henrietta-street, Covent Garden, a welcome was extended to Mrs. Stevens, of Maine, and farewell was said to Mrs. Harrison Lee, of Australia.

A Woman in Your Stead.

IN your place and in mine, an Indian woman, filled with the love of Christ, whom, after years of seeking, she has fully come to know, has gone from her pleasant home at Poona among the western Ghauts, into the famine country of Central India, to help save some of the thousands of suffering women and girls.

Five months ago we were in that Poona Home, and met her for the first time. The name of Pundita Ramabai, so long familiar, became a sweet reality to us as we watched the brave, quiet little woman in her white widow's sari, with her bare, sandled feet, and short dark hair, moving through the halls, school-rooms, and dormitories of her beautiful home for young Hindu high-caste widows.

Her prayer, faith, love, and effort have built that Sharada Sadan, and maintained its forty to fifty girl inmates, twelve of whom were brought to Christ and openly baptized last year.*

She has gone to the worst famine districts, faced heart-breaking scenes and suffering, has come back with a number of young women snatched from death, and worse than death. She hopes to gather in three hundred such, but cannot without help. Here are some of her "Famine Experiences":—

"The poor people seem to have lost all humar feeling. They do not care even for their own children. Some parents eat all the food they get for themselves and for their little ones, and become quite fat, while their children are like skeletons; and some are even in a dying state, and yet their fathers and mothers feel no affection for them.

"Parents can be seen taking their girl-children around the country and selling them for a rupee or a few annas, or even a few seers of grain. The food given to the children is snatched from their hands, and eaten by their stronger neighbours. In some places, the Government officials give two pice or more to each child, or old and sick person, unable to work, but what can a baby of two or three years of age do with two copper pieces in its hand? The pice are soon stolen and the little ones

"The Government officials are kind, and are doing what they can to help. But the means at their disposal make it impossible to meet the demands. What are a few thousand rupees among so many thousands, to be supported for months? Perhaps about eight or ten annas or, at the most, a rupee per month is allowed for each person; and how much and what kind of grain will that sum bring? In many cases parents have fallen a prey to the famine, and left their young girls to the tender mercies of their neighbours. Such girls easily fall into the hands of wicked people.

"It has been my sad lot to see many little girls ruined for life. Even the children seemed to have lost all their innocence and were acting like little devils. What lies, what thefts, what language! 'Oh God!' I prayed when I saw them, 'save us, save our nation from utter destruction.' It seemed as if nothing short of a great flood would be able to wash away all this sin from the face of our country. I wonder at the mercifulness and long-suffering of our Father, who is still bearing with us.

"It is impossible for the Government officers alone to look after the little children, and to protect the virtue of young women and girls. There is a large field of work for you and for me, if only we undertake to do it. Old people and middle-aged persons and delicate women who are unable to break twelve baskets of stone, and carry them to the appointed place, and who cannot get their wages at the Relief Camps unless they do so much work every day, need our help. The sad sight of aged men and delicate women stretching forth their sore hands and begging you to help them, pouring out their sorrow into your ears, and lamenting over their hard fate, while their tearful eyes look straight into yours to find out if there were a particle of sympathy for them, is altogether too much to bear, for a person having a heart of flesh.

"The Father, who is a very present help in trouble, has enabled me to get one hundred widows, forty-seven of whom will go to school to study, and others will work. Over 1000 rupees were spent in fetching them here. To go to work to get these widows, to fetch them here from Central India, and to feed and clothe them, is an expensive business. Harder still is the work of civilising them and teaching them the habits of cleanliness. Some are little better than brute animals. The filthy habits they have acquired during this period of famine have become second nature with them. It will take a long time to civilise and teach them. The Lord has put it into my mind out of the famine districts, and I shall go to work in his name. The funds sent to me by my friends in America are barely enough to feed and educate fifty girls, and people are asking me how I am going to support all these girls from Central India. Besides their food and clothing, new dormitories and dining-rooms must be built. Our present schoolhouse is not large enough to hold more than one hundred girls at the most.

"How are these emergencies to be met? The Lord knows what I need. My girls and I are quite ready to forego all our comforts, give up luxuries, and live as plainly as we can. We shall be quite contented to have only one meal of common coarse food daily if necessary, and so long as we have a little room or a seer of grain left in this house, we shall try and help our sisters who are starving. It seems a sin to live in this good house, with plenty of food and clothing, while thousands are dying of hunger, and are without shelter."

How many of us here at home are guilty of that sin! May the Lord transform our indifference into Christ-like activity and self-denial. Communications for Pundita Ramabai will be forwarded, if addressed, c.o. Messrs. Dyer Brothers, Rose-street Corner, Paternoster-square, E.C., who have published her pamphlet, Famine Experiences, at 9d. a dozen.

May all who read these lines take, by their practical sympathy, the hand of this woman, our sister, who is doing this work in our stead.

LUCY E. GUINNESS.

* "Three or four of Ramabai's elder students are nearing matriculation, several are already out as assistant missionaries, two or three married to Christian men. Others are occupying posts of usefulness in the Sadan itself. Considering that all these were Hindus, most of them from the most exclusive castes, it is not too much to say that God has granted Ramabai a success given to few purely missionary institutions."—Mrs. Dyer.

Christian Instruction Society.

At the annual meeting of this society, held at Highbury Quadrant Church, Sir George Williams occupied the chair. The annual report presented by Rev. Robert Mackay, secretary, showed that considerable progress had been made during the year. On behalf of the committee he earnestly appealed to the Free Churches of suburban London to give practical expression to their sympathy, by helping to maintain a deaconess in some needy district. The success which had attended the employment of deaconesses afforded special grounds for thankfulness. There is now a staff of thirty deaconesses, who visit the homes of the poor with the message of the Gospel, and convey practical sympathy to many of the darkest homes in London. The society circulates the sacred Scriptures, and conducts services in churches, chapels, mission-halls, tents, and in the open-air. Casual wards, hospitals, infirmaries, and workhouses were also systematically visited by volunteer workers.

Rev. W. J. Dawson, Prof. Barakat, Rev. Thos. Grear, and Mr. Geo. Nokes spoke in support of the work of the society.

Notwithstanding that Mr. Mackay was re-elected as secretary, we understand he has tendered his resignation, feeling that the Society is not in a position at present to pay a secretary.

Caring for Destitute Children.

EXCEPTIONALLY attractive and interesting was the annual festival of the National Refuges for Homeless and Destitute Children, held in Exeter Hall on Tuesday evening, 25th ult. Hundreds of little singers and instrumentalists crowded the platform, and the hall was packed from an early hour with expectant friends and supporters of this excellent rescue agency, with its wide and varied ramifications. The "Admiral's Salute" was played by the band of the Arethusa as chairman and speakers ascended the platform.

The Earl of Jersey, President of the institution, was in the chair, and submitted to the meeting a telegraphic message of Jubilee congratulation to the Queen from 800 children of the Refuges, including the sailor boys of the training ships, in conjunction with president, committee, and subscribers. This message, duly and loyally adopted, recognised with profound thankfulness to God the fact that during fifty-four years of "the glorious reign" the society has been enabled to rescue from destitution over 14,000 boys and girls. Some of these were born in Ireland, some in Wales, others in Scotland, Italy, France, East and West Indies, Belgium, United States, Canada, Ceylon, and the remainder in various parts of London and the English counties.

After some very sweet singing, always an abundant and very acceptable feature of these gatherings, the secretary, Mr. H. Bristow Wallen, briefly reviewed the work of the year in training the children on sound

RELIGIOUS AND INDUSTRIAL PRINCIPLES.

The boys in the Homes on shore are trained in tailoring, shoemaking, carpentering, gardening, farming, baking, housework, and each Home has its instrumental band. The girls have to do all the household work in connection with their Homes, such as scrubbing and cleaning, washing clothes, making and mending their own garments, and knitting and darning. In addition to all these duties, both boys and girls are taught in the three R's, under Government inspection. The total receipts for the year 1896 amounted to £23,978, and the total payments to £22,026 6s. 7d. Although the balance-sheet is a little more favourable than last year, there is still cause for anxiety on the part of the committee, and an urgent call upon all friends to continue and, if possible, increase their aid, especially as a mortgage debt remains upon the London Home. The noble chairman briefly but warmly commended the good work, Rev. A. J. Poynder seconding adoption of a report marked by signs of decided and growing usefulness.

Moral development in missionary enterprise at home and abroad, in this Victorian era, formed a congenial topic for treatment by Rev. Dr. Lefroy, Dean of Norwich; and his thankful survey of Christian progress in its childward aspect was combined with eloquent expressions of much hopefulness for days to come in connection with such work as this, which he declared to be eminently calculated to diminish vagrancy and crime, and to raise the condition of the children until they become godly and honourable members of society.

A "surprise visit" to one of the homes was made by Rev. R. Calder Gillie, who found the youngsters glad and bright under the operation of the Society's work.

The boys of the Farm School went through a clever exhibition of vigorous musical drill, on a dais fronting the platform and extending far into the midst of the audience. Then came more songs by the choir—amusing, pathetic, and stirring—and a Shaftesbury School bugler gave the signal to lower the lights for a novel item in ten minutes' limelight illustration of refuge work, upon a screen dropped in front of the organ. Mr. H. G. Copeland, finance and deputation secretary, in describing the pictures, mentioned that some little progress has been made in a "Young England" scheme to collect a hundred thousand sixpences this year in aid of the good work. The proceedings throughout were most gladsome and inspiriting, and must have cheered every Christian heart present, in the prospect of what the institution is accomplishing for the cause of Christ and humanity.

About Whitsuntide.

TEXT.—St. Luke xi. 13.

HYMN.—Our blest Redeemer, ere He breathed
His tender last farewell,
A Guide, a Comforter bequeathed
With us to dwell.

THIS is our "Christian Endeavour" week, in which our thoughts are directed more particularly to Home Missions, and various ways in which we can help them. But then, next Sunday is Whit Sunday, and we ought to think a little about that too. So let us begin with that first, and you will see that the two ideas are not so very far apart after all.

Whitsuntide, as you know, is a time set apart to remind us of the gift of God's Holy Spirit, just as Christmas commemorates our Lord's birth, and Easter his resurrection. But I fancy I hear one of you saying, "The Holy Spirit? That is too difficult a subject for us to understand about; it is a subject more fit for grown-up people!" Now, if you will read the text referred to at the top of the page, you find that our Lord said to his disciples, "If ye, being evil, know how to give good gifts unto your children, how much more shall your heavenly Father give the Holy Spirit to them that ask Him."

Jesus, then, regards the love which prompts the giving of good gifts to the children as an illustration of the love of God in giving us the Holy Spirit

Then in the hymn given you for this week, the Holy Spirit is spoken of as "a Comforter." This is taken from St. John xiv. 16-18, where Jesus says:—"I will pray the Father, and He shall give you another Comforter...I will not leave you comfortless." The margin gives the word "comfortless" as "orphans." It seemed to the disciples as if when Jesus left them they would be left quite alone in the world, like orphan children, and so the Holy Spirit was to take his place and be to them both Parent and Comforter. But not only so. Whenever your heart is touched and you feel sorry for an orphan boy or girl, or feel a desire to give some good gift to poor children, it is because the Holy Spirit is inclining you to do so; and is not that one form of "Christian Endeavour"—to try and do a Christ-like act to those that are not so happy or well off as yourself? There are so many ways of doing good if only you will listen to the "still, small voice" of the Holy Spirit in your heart. So I want you to celebrate this Whitsuntide by thinking of those who are less fortunate than you are. First of all pray for them, and then do what you can, for Jesus' sake, to help them. This is true "Christian Endeavour." Let this verse be your prayer:—

Give me a faithful heart—likeness to Thee,
That each departing day henceforth may see
Some work of love begun, some deed of kindness done,
Some wanderer sought and won—something for Thee.

Little Edgar.

HERE is a pretty story written by a lady who signs herself, M. T. R.:—

Poor wee man! He had had a hard life the five short years he was on earth, and he was such a pretty boy too, with fair hair, and big eyes that looked at you so wistfully.

How could anyone ill-treat him? Ah! yes, his mother did, and perhaps one day she will know it was her cruel treatment of him that hastened his death. His was a little life soon ended, one more weary lamb rescued by the Good Shepherd, and safely carried out of the storm into the quiet fold.

One morning there was a ring at the out-patients' door of the Children's Hospital in N——, and a woman and boy presented themselves to see the doctor. After a short examination, he gave the boy a letter of admission, and half an hour after little Edgar was carried upstairs, washed, and put into a clean, cosy bed, with his poor bad leg resting on a pillow. He came in grimed with dirt from head to foot, and it was quite a new feeling for him to find it all washed off; and then his bed—the soft mattress and pillow, the clean sheets, and pretty red-and-white quilt, so different from his miserable home. He had known very little love in that home, for he had no father, and his mother drank. All she loved and cared for was the drink, and day after day little Edgar's food was scanty and bad, his cheeks got whiter and thinner, and he began to limp about and cry with pain in his leg, but yet his mother did not care. At last a neighbour, pitying him, carried him off to the hospital, and begged he might be taken in.

For some days the poor little fellow would not be comforted, but lay moaning with pain and crying for his mother. The little, ill-used, starved, neglected child still loved and wanted his mother! "Mummy, mummy, oh, I want my mummy!" Visiting days came and went, when parents and friends brought the other children toys, flowers, sponge cakes, and eggs, but no one came to see Edgar. Soon there was a change for the worse, abscesses formed, he grew weaker and weaker, and the doctors said he would not live long. His mother was told her child was dying, but she sent word that she did not care to come and see him. One of the nurses received a hamper of primroses one morning, looking and smelling as only country primroses can, and she fastened some in her dress, saying laughingly, "I am going to be grand to-day!" She went to Edgar's bed, where he was lying apparently unconscious, unable to speak, with wide-open eyes. While trying to give him a few drops of milk, she noticed his eyes fixed on the primroses.

"Would Teddy like these pretty flowers? See, Teddy, smell them," and she held them to his face, and then put them in his hand, but he was not conscious enough to grasp them, so she closed his fingers round the bunch and kissed him. A few minutes after, she saw him slowly trying to move his hand so as to see them better, and to put them by his cheek. He laid with them there for hours, and then they were put in a cup close by him.

That little bunch of primroses was the last thing he looked at and touched. In the evening, convulsive fits came on, and in the early morning, when the sun was rising, and a bright fresh day beginning, a loving angel messenger was sent to carry him to God's beautiful Home, where the little weary child will rest for ever, "safe in the arms of Jesus."

Were not those flowers worth picking and sending even for the pleasure they gave to that one dying child?

The Ministry of Flowers.

LAST year my young readers did splendidly in the boxes of flowers they sent me for distribution among poor children. But since then so many more have joined our ranks that I am hoping great things this year too. I have before me a report of the Bible Flower Mission, which receives flowers for the sick people in our hospitals, a text of Scripture being attached to each bunch. Here is part of a letter from one of the hospital visitors:—

"I thought you would be interested in a case I had to-day in the hospital, and also unite with me in prayer that the poor woman may be brought into full peace. She was very ill; and the text I read to her was, 'Now in Christ Jesus ye who sometimes were far off are made nigh by the blood of Christ' (Eph. ii. 13). She said, 'Do you think I am going to die?' 'I don't know,' I replied. 'Because I thought, perhaps, you had brought me a message,' she said. 'And so I have, from God; this is it,' and I read the verse again, asking her if she were ready to die. 'I am not sure,' she answered; and then I told her God was willing to forgive her sins if she trusted in the shed blood of the Lord Jesus Christ, etc. She said, 'Please read the verse again'; after which she asked me to pray with her, and gave a hearty 'Amen.' I asked her if she also had prayed. 'Yes, I did, and I believe God has heard, and I can now trust myself to Christ.'"

I think you will see from that what great good may be done by these little gifts of flowers. I shall be glad to receive a supply every week to pass on to those who work among the sick poor, young and old.

"Uncle Tom's Cabin."

I NEED hardly say how willingly I let our good friend, Mr. Kirk, have his say in the following letter:—

DEAR LITTLE FRIENDS,—I do not wonder that Uncle Tom's delightful scheme for providing a bathing machine for the cripples at Southend has not gone quite so well—swimmingly (is that the word?) as it might have done. Of course many of you thought, didn't you? that everybody else would send in a small gift, and there would be no need for your mite.

Then, again, the cold winds were enough to make one shudder at the bare thought of paddling, much less of bathing. But surely now there will be no delay. Your mite, you see, is needed, and the genial sunshine has come at last, making many of the little suffering holiday-makers at the Ragged School Union Cripples' Home quite long to try a "dip."

So please hurry up, and let us secure this bit of real pleasure for the cripples before we begin to think of our own holidays.

It is now suggested that our (for you know it is a joint enterprise) cripples' bathing machine shall be known as "Uncle Tom's Cabin." Isn't that a charming idea?—Your friend, on behalf of the crippled children,

JOHN KIRK.

UNCLE TOM.

With an Emigrant Party.

EMIGRATION, we are told, has been falling off during the past few years, but there is still a good deal going on, especially under the auspices of the Self-Help Emigration Society, the secretary of which, Mr. E. Wilson Gates, is also the moving spirit in the philanthropic work carried on by the London Congregational Union. Thus, the one Society works through the channel of the other in a very admirable manner. Every year hundreds of men are sent out to Canada and other colonies; and a large proportion of those who are helped across the seas by this agency are drawn from the crowds of waifs and strays who find a refuge, when at their lowest ebb of fortune, at Medland Hall. Here is provided a free shelter for penniless wanderers, who, but for this timely help, would have to roam the streets of London all night in a half-starving condition. Destitution is the only qualification; they have free supper and lodging, if only they apply for it, but when once they are there an endeavour is made to ascertain the cause of their misfortune, and to help them to a better life. Those who are capable of a new start, and are otherwise fit, are encouraged to emigrate to Canada; and then comes the opportunity of the Self-Help Society, which sends them out well-equipped for their new career, and sees them placed in suitable situations on the other side.

It was my lot recently to escort one of these parties of emigrants as chaplain, chaperon, and friend. Numbering about sixty all told, they appeared a motley company to the outward eye; but closer acquaintance opened out some very interesting and impressive facts, and before reaching Halifax many of them had told me the story of their life.

Broadly speaking, there were three classes represented. First, those who paid their own passage money in full or in part, and who were indebted to the Society only for friendly oversight. It was a great benefit to these young fellows to go out to their new home under such auspices; for instead of voyaging at a venture, not knowing what was to become of them, they were sure of definite and suitable employment. Some of these men came from good families, two were sons of a country clergyman with a large family; all of them were sure of success if only they fulfilled their promises of good behaviour.

Secondly—and here I come to the Medland Hall men—there were those who had been simply unfortunate in life; victims of over-competition, through no particular fault of their own, they had come to the verge of starvation, and many of them had wandered to London in search of work, but had failed to get it. Among these were several discharged soldiers and sailors, whom a benevolent country had cast on the world, in some cases after loyal service, at an age when the channels of ordinary employment were practically closed to them. And thirdly, there were many who had come to a bad pass through their own fault, and were, to use their own words,

"ON THEIR LAST LEGS."

In almost every instance the cause of their downfall was drink. One pitiful case was that of a man, well educated, and greatly gifted, who at one time was a student at a Theological College, with the intention of becoming a missionary. He had been expelled for habits of insobriety, after which he sank, by degrees, deeper into shame and misery. For a time, being possessed of considerable dramatic gifts, he found precarious employment as a music-hall artist, but at last even that door was closed against him, and he sank so low that he found himself without a penny and without a friend. By God's mercy, he got to know of Medland Hall; he was taken in hand by Mr. Gates and his devoted staff, and soon responded to their kind treatment and elevating influence. In the new country he has an opening for a new life, for which his heart is full of gratitude.

Other cases I might mention, did space allow. I saw so many proofs of the ravages of drink, that I felt impelled to begin a little temperance crusade; and I had the happiness before parting with the company at Montreal, of getting fifteen of the worst cases solemnly to sign the pledge. Fortunately the temptations to drink are but few in the country districts of Canada; and it is to be hoped that, by God's grace, they will all be able to stand firm against such temptations as may still assail them.

The experience of the Medland Hall workers in bygone days has been most encouraging as to the capacity for renewal of character shown by these waifs and strays of the London streets. A large proportion of those who go out from under its roof, turn out quite useful members of society. In the mood in which I found them, they seemed peculiarly susceptible to religious influences, and some of the meetings we held were full of warmth and responsiveness. Many had been brought up under Christian influences; and after years of hardening and indifference, the early training still showed up under the outward crust. Diviner work could not be done than by those who are at work in the dark places of the city, searching for and helping to redeem the lost; and they deserve all the practical help and encouragement that Christian men and women can give.

Poems for Whitsuntide.

Breathe on our spirits, Lord Jesus,
Even the breath of thy love,
E'en the Shekinah that hovered
O'er thine head as a dove:
Love that is constant and tender,
Love that is patient and strong,
Love that endureth for ever,
Vanquishing evil and wrong.

Breathe on our spirits, Lord Jesus,
Even the breath of thy life,
Give us to die unto evil,
Sinfulness, selfishness, strife.
E'en as the fount by the well-spring,
Branches and fruit by the vine;
So may our lives, O our Saviour,
Ever be nurtured by thine.

Breathe on our spirits, Lord Jesus,
Even the breath of thy peace,
Calm that abideth for ever,
Restfulness never to cease;
Come and make each human bosom,
Sacred, thine ark's holy place,
May we be beams of thy glory,
Lakelets, reflecting thy face.

Breathe on our spirits, Christ Jesus,
Even the breath of thy light;
Grant us to walk in thy presence,
Ever to dwell in thy sight;
All through our life's checkered journey,
Give us thy footprints to see,
Take Thou our hands in thine own, Lord,
Guide us in paths marked by Thee.

Harriet Julia Evans.

"What! know ye not" your body is God's dwelling,
The hallowed temple of the Holy Ghost?
For ye are Christ's, e'er since ye proved your selling
By yielding to his claims, Who loved us most.

"What! know ye not" that living streams are flowing
Within Immanuel's kingdom in your breast?
Glad waters which unchecked in their outgoing,
Shall make your life, your influence grandly blest.

"What! know ye not" within his own dominions,
With all authority the Spirit speaks?
Except ye quench Him with your poor opinions
He shall produce the holiness He seeks.

"What! know ye not" ye are of Him anointed
With fresh supplies of precious holy oil?
And heeding not save that the One appointed
Should teach you ye may rise and take the spoil.

A Correction.—A correspondent writes that the poem quoted in a recent issue, beginning, "I live for those who love me," and attributed to Mrs. Banks, was really written by her husband. On looking up a copy of "Daisies in the Grass," we find that this poem is initialed G.L.B., which further goes to show that our correspondent is right. We gladly place this corrected information before our readers.

Howard-street Mission.—On Tuesday evening last the annual meeting took place at Bedford Hall, Clapham. Mr. Henry Northcroft presided, and gave an instructive address. The secretary, Mr. N. A. Soames, gave an encouraging account of the operations of the year. Cases of conversion were related from the efforts put forth in the open air and inside the Mission Hall. Mrs. Northcroft distributed prizes to sixty successful scholars, and addresses were given by various friends.

Shaftesbury Institute Mission.

THE work in West London, which has for several years past been associated with the name of Miss Meredith Brown, is highly appreciated by all who know it. Many-sided in character, it aims particularly at influencing the young and neglected, who otherwise would grow up without Christian direction or help. The work is educational, evangelistic, and industrial, and deserves to be more widely known than it is. The anniversary meeting, held on Wednesday last at Grosvenor House, W., by kind invitation of the Duke of Westminster, should do something to attract new friends, and assist the Mission in its excellent schemes for further development.

The meeting was presided over by Sir Richard Temple, Bart., who, after preliminaries which included the singing of the National Anthem, spoke a few words of cordial endorsement. The need was, he held, unquestioned; and his testimony, from personal investigation, was that the work deserved the most liberal support.

Miss Brown followed with a brief account of the Mission, which has considerably extended since its inauguration nine years ago. Beginning with efforts among girls, it proceeded to take poor women under its care. Then, passing on to benefit men out of work, it combined quite a round of benevolent institutions. The esteemed founder justified the women's shelter on the ground of urgent need, and reported that it had proved an unspeakable boon to many who otherwise would have been ruined for life. The religious character of the work was explained, and the lodging-house meetings described; and although there is difficulty and discouragement, the exertions put forth have met with abundant reward.

Among other sad features mentioned by Miss Brown, was the disposition of some parents to withdraw their children from the Mission classes in order to place them out as drudges. For every girl trained in the Home there are at least two applications, and the present inmates are already bespoken for situations. Among other cheering items, Miss Brown recognised the help of the police and magistrates, who had directed children to be placed under the care of the Institute. In conclusion, an appeal was made for help in securing adjacent property, which would secure a third side of the square for the Institute, and provide much-needed accommodation for the deaconesses.

The Chairman emphasised the urgency of the work, and pressed it upon Christian support. He was followed by Archdeacon Sinclair, whose words were few and hearty. He remarked upon Miss Brown's devotion, and the admirable way in which the work is carried on by that lady and her staff of helpers. The pitifulness and helplessness of the poverty which is found side by side with wealth and comfort were the subject of kind remarks highly sympathetic with Miss Brown's enterprise; and it was shown that while great things may result from the operations of large societies, there is also room for small and independent institutions, conducted by persons filled with love to Christ and concern for the weak and erring.

Miss Brown referred to her recent visit to America, where much interest was excited in the accounts which she gave of work in West London slums. Excellent reports of her story were given in the American newspapers, and on all hands she was treated with peculiar regard when it became known that she was the daughter of Principal Brown, of Aberdeen, whose fame as a theologian is high in the new world as well as in the old. Financial straitness in America prevented Miss Brown from raising much money in aid of her work, but still she was encouraged by receiving a substantial amount, and making many friends who may assist in days to come.

Protestant Pastors.—The annual meeting of the Society for the Relief of Aged and Infirm Protestant Dissenting Ministers was recently held at the Sunday-School Union House, Old Bailey, Mr. J. J. Smith, J.P., presiding. The report shows an income of £966 6s 1d. for the past year, and an expenditure of £1023 6s. 3d., £997 of which were distributed between seventy-six beneficiaries, the number relieved and the sum disbursed being in advance of any previous totals.—Treasurer, P. THE LONDON CENTRAL ASSOCIATION.

THIS institution has now a settled place among the annual guests at the Mansion House. In welcoming it to the Mayoral residence, year by year, the chief magistrate and the Corporation certainly do honour to themselves, while they advance the interests of one of the grandest products of the Queen's reign. A goodly and, as one might say in such connection, "brilliant" company assembled in the great Pillar Room on Thursday afternoon, for the first part of the anniversary proceedings. The Lord Mayor had previously entertained the friends to a social cup of tea. Sir George Williams, of course, presided, looking somewhat frail in body, but as youthful as ever in spirit.

In the opening prayer, Rev. E. H. Pearce made touching supplication to God on behalf, not only of the Association and its President, Sir George Williams, but of the Lord Mayor, in his laborious and responsible work, and of the Queen, at this interesting commemorative season.

Mr. J. H. Putterill's short secretarial statement was severely condensed, but he managed to crowd into it the leading points and features of the Association's work during the past year. That work, as our readers well know, is the promotion of the spiritual, intellectual, social, and physical welfare of London's young men. These objects are sought to be attained, and they are attained, by many and varied agencies, which we need not stay to specify. The secretary referred to several special Gospel missions held during 1896, with an outcome of some 200 professed young men converts. More than five thousand young men were registered in the books of the Central Association, with its three branches at Exeter Hall, Aldersgate-street, and Cornhill. These figures include the members of the various educational classes, social and athletic clubs, situation and apartment bureaus, etc. A very warm tribute of esteem towards Mr. Robert Burn, the late secretary at Aldersgate-street, and appreciation of his valued services in the work of the Association, was rendered by Mr. Putterill, who also spoke some words of welcome to Mr. Burn's successor, Mr. Basil Hewer. As to finance, the secretary had the pleasing and somewhat novel task of reporting a balance on the right side of the ledger—a very small balance it, is true (£9 7s. 7d.). Mr. Putterill reminded the company, however, that the normal income of the Association is about £1000 short of its needs. In this year of unusual calls on the purse of the community, there is special need to see to it that the Association suffers no lack.

The later part of the afternoon's proceedings resolved itself largely into a loyal demonstration, in the shape of an address to Her Majesty the Queen on the occasion of the Diamond Jubilee. This address, beautifully illuminated and prepared, is couched in fitting terms; it was read by the Secretary, while its presentation was moved in happy phrase and spirit by the Chairman, and seconded by Lord Kinnaird in an earnest address, during which he put in a warm plea for the maintenance of the work of the Y.M.C.A. The National Anthem having been duly sung, the motion was supported in an address from Mr. H. Bemrose, M.P., who emphasised the advances during the Queen's reign of all that fosters family religious life. An interesting statement followed from Mr. W. R. Arbuthnot, of Madras, as to the wonderful progress of Y.M.C.A. work in that city during the seven years of its existence, and the hold it is taking on the educated natives. Two expected speakers, Mr. Emerson Bainbridge, M.P., and Sir John Kennaway, M.P., were unavoidably absent, but the loyal address needed no further support, and was cordially voted.

Some of those afflicted but gifted sons of song from the Norwood Normal College for the Blind, were present to charm the ear and move the heart. Hearty thanks were accorded to the Lord Mayor and to the Chairman before the assembly broke up, many of them to meet again at Exeter Hall in the evening.

EVENING MEETING.

This concourse at Exeter Hall was one of the largest of the past season of great anniversaries. As in the earlier part of the day, the coming Jubilee celebration ran like a golden thread through the proceedings. Mr. Putterill's statement was more detailed than that of the afternoon; he referred to some of the efforts special to the year—meetings for soldiers, for Irishmen, for waiters, for Japanese sailors, etc., etc. There was a much-applauded reference to the valued service rendered to the Association by Rev. F. B. Meyer in his Saturday afternoon Bible-classes at Aldersgate-street, which had been attended by some 300 young men—"a circumstance probably without parallel in the history of Christian work." Some idea of the opportunities at the disposal of the Association can be formed from the fact stated in the report, that the average attendances at the three city centres every week, for one purpose and another, run up to 12,000.

The genial Sir George Williams, as Chairman, gave a sort of supplementary report, mentioning the fact that London has seventy-three associations. In all England there are 377 associations, with an aggregate membership of nearly 74,000. Fine premises have been acquired, or are being acquired, at Belfast, Dublin, Newcastle, Leicester, Sunderland, Nottingham, Reading, etc. The total of Associations for the world is now 6466, an increase of 234 during the year, with a membership of over half a million. During the year 111 members have left the English ranks either for the home ministry or the foreign field. The student volunteer movement, affiliated with the Y.M.C.A., was spoken of by the Chairman as a very blessed instrument in God's hands. Then he referred to the loyal address to the Queen passed in the afternoon, which address was again read, this time by Mr. W. H. Mills. It was agreed that a telegram of congratulation should also be forwarded to Her Majesty in the name of the assembly. The singing of the National Anthem was the proper corollary to all this.

The way was thus paved for an address by Canon Fleming, one of the Queen's chaplains, and, as the Chairman facetiously added, "almost the chaplain of the Y.M.C.A." His speech was in every way most admirable. He gained a well-deserved cheer by a kindly reference to "our dear friend Spurgeon." The Y.M.C.A., said the Canon, has not been formed to blame the careless and the tempted, but to help and bless and lift them up. Sympathy is the sister to love. The hand may give the gold, but the heart is needed to produce the sympathy. Broadly defined, the Y.M.C.A. is "the embodiment of Christian sympathy for and with young men." The special perils to young men of city life were well and delicately set forth by the eloquent Canon. What England wants to-day is not money but Christian manhood. It has been the curse of many a young man that he was born rich. The speaker, in closing a most effective utterance, fairly brought down the house by reciting in capital fashion Bishop Bickersteth's ringing poem, "Give us Men!"

After a jubilee hymn and the collection, Rev. G. H. C. Macgregor followed up the Canon's address by a plain and practical unfolding of the necessary elements of "Christian manhood." These he specified as—(1) implicit faith in Jesus Christ as Saviour and Keeper; (2) intrepid courage in the confession of Christ and in obedience to his commands; (3) stedfastness in purpose and action; and (4) unbroken communion with God.

Then came, last of all, a simple, homely, but altogether delightful, little address from the newly-consecrated Bishop of Sierra Leone (once a member of the National Council of the Y.M.C.A.), and better known as Canon Taylor Smith. His main theme was mission work in West Africa, and he asked his hearers ever to remember when they saw the initials W.A. that it must mean to them, "Wanted, Apostles." Quoting the recent saying of a young man that "Africa is a terribly thirsty land for water, blood, and money," the Bishop made a very telling plea for meeting the special needs of the African West Coast, with its drink traffic and its contempt for human life. As his first public utterance since his formal elevation to the bishopric, his words were a welcome index to the whole-hearted, single-minded service of the coming years if the Lord should spare him.

During the evening the blind singing brethren from Norwood, reinforced by a contingent of the other sex, gave some musical selections that were much enjoyed.

BRIEF NOTES.

Mr. F. A. Bevan presided over a meeting at 44, Brompton-road, S.W., to inaugurate the work of the Chelsea, Brompton, and Belgrave Association in its new premises.

The new building of the Reading Association, in Friar-street, was opened on Monday by Sir George Williams. The premises are excellent in appearance and situation, and are admirably adapted to the Association's work.

The twenty-eighth annual report of the Anglo-American Association at Paris is on many grounds very encouraging. Never during its history has the Association been more alive to its responsibilities, nor more active in meeting them.

The new premises of the Nottingham Association, "Morley House," were formally opened on Tuesday, May 25. "The membership," writes a correspondent, "has gone up from 250 to 750 in a few weeks. A membership campaign is in full swing, and it seems as if the young manhood of Nottingham is being drawn into the current of sympathy with the aims and objects of the Association."

The Y.W.C.A.

The winter session of the Torquay Association was lately brought to a close by a successful social gathering.

Miss Hull, of Eastbourne, has recently conducted a successful mission at the Old Church Parish Room in connection with the Shanklin branch.

Meetings were recently held in Dundee Association rooms in connection with the South Africa General Mission. Mrs. Goslin gave an interesting account of the work in Pondoland.

The Bournemouth, Cambridge, and one or two other Y.W.C.A. Institutes had stalls at the annual sale of work in connection with the Society for Promoting Female Welfare, at the Albert Hall.

The annual meeting of the Swanage branch was held on May 27 at Ridley House. The Hon. Miss Portman addressed the meeting, followed by Miss Ardill, who gave a short address on the Association's motto.

Palestine and Lebanon Nurses' Mission.

The annual meeting was held in Exeter Hall Parlour on Friday afternoon. The annual report having been read by Mr. Wm. Southall, the secretary, the chairman, Mr. R. C. Morgan, in referring to the conversion of the Druse doctor, said he believed conversions among the Druses would not be so scarce if there were more societies like this one. He felt sure there must be urgent need for the enlargement of the Cottage Hospital, as out of the 5000 patients treated at the dispensary in 1896 there must of necessity be many needing hospital care. A clergyman to work amongst the men would be a great boon, he knew, and he trusted all would make it a great matter for prayer.

Rev. R. Douglas considered that medical missions were in direct accord with the Word of God, and they were more than ever coming to the front. He, as clerical secretary, had received a letter from the Bishop of Jerusalem, in which he spoke very highly of the Mission and its work. This is very encouraging when we consider that the bishop's views are not entirely in accord with the Evangelical lines on which this Mission is worked.

Rev. H. C. Sturdy testified, as did all the speakers, to the sincerity manifested by Dr. Ali Alamuddeen, the Druse doctor before mentioned, in spite of his persecution. Miss Stewart and Miss Ward, from Baakleen, the village in the Lebanon where the Mission is established, gave some interesting information about the Druses, and the results of the doctor's confessing Christ. One Druse was overheard to say, "The ladies have worked among us for eleven years, and now they have pounced down upon and taken our best man."

Miss Lloyd then made some interesting remarks, as to why Mrs. Meredith had taken up a foreign mission, as well as her work amongst prisoners. She said it was owing to being convinced after refusing once, that the Lord had given her a second call there. Miss Smith, the foundress of the Mission, was present, having come to England on a visit, and we trust this will help to stimulate all to greater effort in the future. It seems now is the time to go forward; increased funds are, therefore, most necessary. Communications may be addressed to Miss Lloyd, 143, Clapham-road, S.W.

Cape Colony.—Mr. A. Welsh, writing from Emgwali, Döhne, on May 6, says:—"At our communion services here lately, we had the pleasure of admitting fourteen candidates to the fellowship of the Church, seven of them by baptism. The people are also doing a little to send the Gospel to the heathen in the dark places of the Transkei; they raised about £22 for this purpose lately."

A Thanksgiving Day.

A series of services on Tuesday last week marked the anniversary of the Homes for Working Girls in London. Mr. John Shrimpton had arranged a notable programme. At Holy Trinity Church, Marylebone, at the early hour of six no fewer than between six and seven hundred of the young women who reside in the several Homes, gathered after a five o'clock breakfast, to inaugurate Thanksgiving Day. Psalm cxvi. formed the basis of a familiar practical talk by Rev. A. J. Robinson, prophet and apostle being requisitioned to confirm the witness of the Psalmist, and to appeal for Christian consecration. Just after seven the congregation dispersed to their several business engagements.

In the afternoon a thanksgiving meeting of subscribers and their friends assembled at Lincoln House, Baker-street, one of the Homes, under the presidency of Canon J. McCormick. Mr. Shrimpton in a brief and unadorned report epitomized the aims and accomplishments of the movement, the spiritual element of which is ever to the front. Cheering indications of blessing have appeared in many ways. That the homes are highly valued by the constituency for which they cater is proved by the fact that every residence is full, while every week it becomes a painful necessity to decline many applicants for want of further room. It was welcome news to learn from Mr. Shrimpton that the direct Christian work in connection with the Homes is more than ever prized. New contingents of girls are constantly leaving quiet country homes to enter the bread-winning conflict in London, and it was a simple task for Mr. Shrimpton to show the value of institutions that not only give material advantages, but constitute harbours of refuge from temptation, and beacon-lights to the haven of eternal safety. There is plenty of scope for the development of the Homes; but just now the want of money forms a hindrance to any advance.

Canon McCormick expressed his warm sympathy with the work, and said he could testify that there were some excellent Christians amongst the young women. It was of untold encouragement to know that these Homes furnished pure social surroundings and spiritual aid for so large a company of otherwise friendless young women away from home.

Colonial Missionary Society.

That there is a deepened interest in our kith-and-kin beyond the sea was clearly seen by the recent successful gatherings of the Colonial Missionary Society. This, in a day of so much colonial expansion, is only what should be. The reports, which Rev. D. B. Hooke submitted to the business meeting, detailed work done for Christ in British Columbia, Quebec, Manitoba, Newfoundland, the West Indies, South Africa, Western Australia, Tasmania, Queensland, and New Zealand. Special reference was made to the Transvaal, and to work in and round Johannesburg. The "Forward Movement," which Rev. Charles Phillips has initiated among the 40,000 natives in Johannesburg, has been crowned by great success, and his influence is felt for good in directions which hitherto were untouched. No less than eight sites for mission churches have been secured in or near Johannesburg.

The more public meetings of the anniversary, in the City Temple, were the most successful held for twenty years. Sir William Dunn, Bart, M.P., presided, and the meeting was addressed by Revs. A. Seys Howell, of Birmingham, Dr. Ll. Bevan, of Melbourne, W. L. Watkinson, and Hon. David Hunter, of Durban, Natal. The chairman referred to his early connection with South Africa, when he attended the ministry of some of the agents of the Society, and taught in their Sunday-school. He pleaded for a closer connection between the Evangelical Free Churches, which have so much in common, especially in the Colonies.

"Is anything too hard for the Lord?" asks Mr. Wintle in his report for 1897 of his Christian mission among the ruined tinplate workers of Pontymoile, Mon., to whom he has devoted his life. "Grapes from Thorns" is the title of the report. It is full of thrilling interest, in its details of the ten different departments of the work. Pray write for it to Mr. Wintle, hon. superintendent, Pontymoile, Pontypool, Mon., with a stamped and addressed envelope. R. C. M.

Work for Young Women.

Ninety years of work in the field of rescue and prevention among young women and girls was the record laid before the annual meeting of the London Female Guardian Society last week at its Training Home, High-street, Stoke Newington. The Earl of Stamford presided.

In regard to the work accomplished during the year, 106 girls have been assisted. Of these 106 no less than seventy-four were domestic servants, showing the peculiar temptations in this calling, while of those living with their parents the figures would indicate that the greatest amount of moral danger is associated with those homes where the wages of the parents are lowest. Only very few cases are known to turn out failures, while, on the other hand, several former inmates have taken the prizes for one, two, or more years of unbroken and faithful service, and very many letters of gratitude and continued friendship have been written to the matron by those benefited. Of the £2380 income, £1834 were earned by the girls themselves by laundry work, the balance being contributions and subscriptions, collections in a few churches, etc. The entire institution is largely self-supporting.

Rev. J. Dixon, Rev. Ernest Goode, and others spoke very approvingly of the Christ-like work carried on, and of the judicious and thrifty methods which long experience have developed in the management. The plan adopted is to give each inmate about a year's residence, so that ample opportunity for development of moral character may be had. When a fresh entrance into social life comes, the girls are provided with clothing and outfit, and with some tangible situation or means of livelihood. All sympathisers are asked to help with funds, and ladies are especially requested to use the laundry of the Home, which at once affords employment for the inmates and revenue to the institution.

London Waitresses.

The interesting and important work carried on by Miss C. M. Gough among young women in bars and restaurants in connection with the Y.W.C.A. continues to progress. Last year several young women were emigrated with the best results; some have been helped to leave the temptations of the bar and get more suitable employment. The affectionate gratitude expressed even after a lapse of years by those who have been helped and strengthened is very touching and gratifying.

The Home at 14, John-street, Bedford-row, is well patronised, and all the accommodation is taken up. Last week a sale of work was held there by Miss Gough for the benefit of her efforts to help her tried, serving sisters. Viscountess Portman attended the opening of the sale, and freely purchased articles, in addition to speaking some very cordial words about the good work that is done. Among the visitors at the sale was Canon Wilberforce, who is a fast friend of the effort.

The social gatherings held from time to time are greatly prized, and they form an excellent reminder of the home life which so many of these young women lack in their daily experience.

Robert Browning Social Settlement.—The second annual meeting in connection with the Browning Hall Social Settlement at Walworth was held at the settlement, York-street, Walworth-road. Dr. R. F. Horton presided. The warden, Mr. F. H. Stead, in the course of an address upon the work of the past year, expressed thankfulness that the settlement had struck its roots deep into the life of the neighbourhood, and, besides keeping all its organisations in active operation, had put forth several new and important agencies. Foremost among these was the Fellowship of Followers, which had enrolled 140 members as followers of Jesus, and had thus given a clear social expression of the distinctively religious basis and aim of the settlement work. The ministry of music on Sundays, as well as on week-days, had proved a great aid to evangelistic effort. The P.S.A. Brotherhood had enrolled over 300 members in 1896, and a similar movement for women had over 400 associated with it; and some 600 children were connected with the various agencies of the settlement, while a great number less closely associated had been served in a variety of ways. The expenditure had been close upon £700, but this did not include the sums privately spent by many of the volunteer workers. Speeches were delivered by the chairman, Mr. D. Ford Goddard, M.P., Captain Cecil Norton, M.P., and Mr. Frederick Rogers.

Evangelistic Notes.

Mr. John Harris, of the Evangelisation Society, has been holding services for three weeks at Polstead, Essex. The meetings have been well attended, and several have professed decision for Christ. The tent is now moved to Shelly.

Most interesting missions have been held in the Pontypool Bible Christian circuit by Mr. George Andrews, who has had a remarkable career, travelling for eight years with caravans, at times having to sleep on the ground. God has wonderfully used this young man; he is gifted as a singer, and is a deeply earnest speaker. A large number professed conversion, mostly young men. Mr. Andrews is now putting up his tent at Abertillery, the money for which came in answer to prayer.

Mr. W. R. Lane has conducted a ten days' united mission at Clacton-on-Sea. It has been the means of great spiritual blessing to very many in the town and district. The presence of the Holy Spirit has been manifest; sinners have been awakened, conversions have followed, backsliders have been reclaimed, and believers strengthened and reconsecrated. One great feature of the mission has been the beautiful spirit of unity which has prevailed. Ministers and members from all the churches and chapels have assisted by their presence and their prayers. The prayer-meetings have been times of great blessing, while the earnestness in prayer and oneness of purpose cheered the missioner. As a result of Mr. Lane's visit, it is proposed that branches of the Y.M.C.A. and Y.W.C.A shall be formed. The addresses were clear and powerful presentations of the Gospel. The Bible talks to Christians were well attended and found very helpful.

Mr. Henry Varley has paid a short visit to Salt Lake, Utah. A local report states that many were quickened, and lasting good was accomplished. The evangelist's labours were well seconded by all the Evangelical pastors in the city.

Rev. John McNeill has concluded his present series of Gospel services in New York. His closing meetings were held in Broadway Tabernacle, various Brooklyn churches, and Carnegie Music Hall. A New York contemporary says:—"Mr. McNeill pays little attention to homiletic rules, but is direct, simple, and earnest. Every blow tells. Best of all, Christ is the goal to which his every line of thought comes at last."

Two quiet days for the quickening of the spiritual life will be held in Penge Tabernacle, Penge, S.E., on Wednesday and Thursday, June 9 and 10, conducted by Rev. F. C. Spurr. Services at 3.15 and 7.30. Subjects:—"Life, and Life Abundantly," "Limiting God," "Love Everything in Religion," "The Filling of the Holy Spirit."

Prayer for the Queen.

In opening the proceedings of the American Senate on Wednesday last week, the blind chaplain prayed for the Queen in these words:—

"O, Thou Who art King of Kings and Lord of Lords, we bless Thee for the long and illustrious reign of thy servant, the gracious sovereign lady Queen Victoria, whose conduct and character as daughter, wife, and mother, as well as illustrious Sovereign, have enshrined her in the hearts and reverence of true-hearted men and women around the world. So endow and guide the councils of that realm, and of our own beloved country, that hand in hand they may tread the path of conservative progress to the goal of Christian civilisation, until the Prince of the kings of the earth, the first begotten from the dead, shall become monarch of all hearts and all lives in our race."

The prayer was ordered to be printed in full in the official journal, a very rare proceeding.

Arbitration Alliance.—The annual meeting of this association, whose object is the promotion of universal peace by means of arbitration between nations whenever disputes may arise, was held at the Presbyterian College, Guilford-street, W.C., Rev. J. P. Gledstone in the chair. The annual report stated that during the past year the programme which the executive had adopted had been steadily carried out, with the result that the presentation of an international petition from the churches to thd rulers of Christendom in favour of arbitration instead of war is now in process of completion.

Letters to the Editor.

RAILWAYS AND CHRISTIAN CONVENTIONS.

SIR,—In reference to the comment on the action of the Great Western Railway Company in refusing to grant cheap tickets for a party who were travelling to a religious meeting, as mentioned in your issue of the 20th, perhaps it will be of interest to you to know that we have had the same difficulty with the Lancashire and Yorkshire Railway Company. They were granted several times under protest, but at last were refused altogether. The secretary, however, promised to bring the matter before the board, and did so, with the result that they were again refused.

Several excursion agents, however, told us that they (the agents) had power to let us have tickets at a fare and a quarter if the number was over ten, and that they were willing to do so without asking for what purpose we required them. This, however, we felt to be rather an underhand method, seeing that the company had forbidden us to have them, so we did not avail ourselves of their offer. Since then, I am glad to say, the company have made fresh bye-laws, granting us leave to travel as a pleasure party, so possibly the Great Western may be induced to do the same if pressure is brought upon them.—Yours truly, AMICUS.

A WORD OF CHEER.

DEAR SIR,—In Eccl. xi. 1 we are advised to cast our bread upon the waters, for we shall find it after many days. Now there is a kind reader of THE CHRISTIAN quite unknown to me who has been sending it to me now for about two years, not even knowing whether it ever reaches its destination, nor how it is received.

I would like to let the sender know that from the first the copies of the paper were welcome guests here on our station, Nyasoso, about four days' journey to the north of Duala, Cameroons. Often, being quite alone, and having no one to converse with, I took to reading it, and it proved itself a real friend to me, enlightening and comforting me; and I always find something in it to feed my soul upon.

It is to me like a beautiful fountain pouring forth love and wisdom, light and joy, into the hearts of those who are trying earnestly to follow the Lord Jesus; and I commend it to friends looking for a paper of sound Christian teaching. Its standpoint is such as that of a real Christian paper should be, not meddling with merely denominational matters, but dealing with those all-important questions about the kingdom of God.

Many thanks therefore to the kind friend who sends it, to whom I would say, Try and cast it upon the waters for a second time, i.e., send it to another address, as I am now willing to subscribe to the paper myself, for I do not like to be without it any more.—Yours truly,

WILLIAM BASEDOW, Basle Missionary.

Nyasoso, Cameroons, W. Africa.

Soldiers at Shoeburyness.

AN interested and sympathetic audience was gathered last week in Mrs. Routh's drawing-room in Manchester-square, to listen to several officers and non-commissioned officers as they told of the need of a Soldiers' Home at Shoeburyness, and how the way is being opened to establish the work there.

Miss SHUBRICK (of the Soldiers' Home, Woolwich) spoke of the 600 troops always in garrison at Shoeburyness, of the batteries succeeding each other for gun practice week by week during the summer months, and of the many men from all parts going through various courses in the school of gunnery, without a single place in the whole village, save the public-houses, where they can spend an evening outside their barrack-room or tent. Dr. and Mrs. Routh had stepped into the gap and provided a small room where the Christian men could meet, and they had also collected about £125 towards General Desborough's fund for building a Home. Another friend has given £150 to start work at once, and a suitable house has been found for a temporary Home.

Mr. MCKENZIE, who is quartered there, spoke of the work from an officer's point of view. Quartermaster-Sergt. Leaney told of the many ways he and his comrades had endeavoured to collect funds for the Home they so earnestly prayed for. Two other sergeants followed with their personal testimony to the value of such a Home. Perhaps the most effectual pleading came from an African gunner, who, in broken English and with a beaming face, told of the blessing the Woolwich Home had been to him, a stranger in a strange land.

Contributions may be sent to Miss Shubrick, The Soldiers' Home, Hill-street, Woolwich.

Ascot Races.—This year we are co-operating with the brethren of the "Open-air Mission." Our days of operation will be Wednesday and Thursday, June 16, 17. I should be glad to receive useful booklets or Illustrated Gospels; these latter are very acceptable to the racing fraternity, and many such messages of life would reach their homes.

In Memoriam—J. H. Raper.

O GRAND grey head now fallen,
O splendid sun now set;
O brain of power, O tongue of fire,
Thy spell is on us yet.

Along life's sin-curst highways,
Thy footprints deep are seen;
And we who work and wrestle still,
Will keep thy memory green.

'Gainst armies of the mighty,
And serried ranks of wrong,
O valiant heart, thou didst thy part
With courage keen and strong.

Our souls are sad to miss thee,
Dear brother, comrade brave;
Above thy head our palms are spread,
Our tears fall on thy grave.

From earth, to heavenly service
Thy feet have swiftly run;
On glad ears fall thy Captain's call,
"Come, higher up, Well done!"

For thee, not death, translation—
Through battle, storm, and strife,
The warfare done, the victory won,
Christ's conquerors enter life!

Temperance Notes.

ON Saturday afternoon a fountain in the Thames Embankment Gardens, presented to the London County Council by Lady H. Somerset in the name of the members of the Loyal Temperance Legion, was formally unveiled.

In connection with the United Presbyterian Church of Scotland there is a Manse Temperance Society, consisting of wives, sisters, and daughters of ministers connected with that Church. The number of members is 925.

More than a third of the whole British army in India are said to be members of its temperance association. The average number last year was 23,711 men. Lord Roberts, who, when Commander-in-Chief, encouraged the movement, declared that it has added three battalions of effective men to the British army in India, saving £600,000 thereby every year.

At a meeting for nurses held at Surrey House, Marble Arch, Lady Battersea expressed the hope that the day was not far distant when no nurse's dress would be complete without the blue ribbon or a temperance badge. She spoke of the immense influence possessed by nurses, many of whom she hoped would join the Nurses' National Total Abstinence League.

The Congregational Union.

THE annual report read at the meeting on Monday last was the most encouraging that has been given for several years. The deficiency of £1000 on the previous year's accounts has been cleared away. The result of the Commission appointed to inquire into the methods of the union has resulted in a strengthening of its hands in many directions, and the secretary has come out of the ordeal with flying colours. Since 1875 the Union has collected and spent for general purposes, church extension, and philanthropic purposes over £269,000. There has been an exaggerated idea of the falling-off of interest in the work on the part of the churches in London; as a matter of fact, the recent loss of revenue has been due to the death of several wealthy supporters. This is a call to the rank and file to rally to the help of the union; and now that so many misconceptions have been cleared away by the work of the Commission there should be no further lack of hearty support.

Aged Christian Society.—The annual meeting of this society was held at Exeter Hall on Friday afternoon, Mr. T. A. Denny presiding. Lieutenant-Colonel Hamilton Northcote presented the report, which showed that 164 pensioners were now on the roll, varying in age from sixty to ninety-five years, seventeen cases having been added during the year. This Society, which began in a humble way eleven years before the Queen's accession, has benefited 1316 of the aged poor, enabling them to spend their declining years with their families and friends instead of dying in the workhouse. The committee appealed very earnestly for increased support. Special acknowledgment was made of large gifts, in money and in kind, from the president, Mr. J. T. Morton.

Scottish Notes.

PERHAPS the most noteworthy event of the past week's ecclesiastical gatherings in Edinburgh was the decision of the Free Assembly by an overwhelming vote to proceed with the negotiations for union with the U.P. Church. The opposition on constitutional grounds has largely died out, and there is every probability that the incorporating act of union between the sister free churches will not long be delayed.

The professorial vacancies in the Free Church colleges were filled by the appointment of Rev. A. Martin, Morningside Church, to the chair of Apologetics and Pastoral Theology at New College; and of Dr. Denney, of Broughty Ferry, to the chair of Systematic Theology in Glasgow.

In the Free Assembly, there were interesting sessions devoted respectively to home and foreign missions, and to temperance reform. As to the last-named topic the Assembly endorsed the adoption of the much-debated "three-fold option" proposals for Scotland.

The most animated sitting of the Established Assembly during the week was that given to the case of Rev. A. Robinson, of Kilmun, who was last year suspended for the publication of a heretical book, relating to the person and work of Jesus Christ. This year Mr. Robinson made a statement in which he defended his book, and declined to repudiate its teachings. After formal consideration the Assembly decided, by a large majority, to give Mr. Robinson the option of resigning his ministry within a month, failing which his presbytery is directed to depose him.

The Established Assembly have adhered to the resolution passed last year, declining to adopt the joint hymnal designed for use in all the Presbyterian churches. There were interesting discussions on various proposals for church reform.

The appeal of Professor Johnston against the sentence removing him from his chair in Aberdeen University has been dismissed, and thus the principle has been affirmed that a professor who has been unsuccessful in the management of the duties of his chair may be removed, even though it is not alleged that he has been negligent or is incapable of rightly discharging the duties of his chair.

Irish Notes.

THE Belfast Prison-gate Mission for Women is doing a good work. Last year nearly a hundred women came under the influence of the Home.

Under the auspices of the Gleaners' Union, the Misses Gollock have been addressing meetings throughout Ireland for the purpose of stirring up greater interest among women on behalf of foreign missions.

The Synod of the Reformed Presbyterian Church of Ireland held its annual meeting in Dublin-road Church, Belfast, Rev. William Russell presiding. It was reported that colportage work had been carried on vigorously during the year, and that the Church was in a healthy condition.

The annual meeting of the Baptist Union of Ireland has been held in Limerick, under the presidency of Rev. C. S. Donald, of Belfast, who delivered an interesting address on "Our Mission, Our Methods, Our Message." A fraternal telegram was received from the Congregational Union of Ireland, then in session in Belfast. About forty delegates attended.

Shipwrecked Mariners' Society.—At the annual meeting of this Institution reference was made to the terrible loss of the Drummond Castle (in connection with which disaster the Society was able to render the first aid to the bereaved relatives). During the year, 10,771 persons, including fishermen and mariners, and widows, orphans and aged parents of seafaring men, received relief.

Princess Louise Home.—The annual meeting of the Princess Louise Home and National Society for the Protection of Young Girls was held in the banqueting-room of St. James's Hall. The Marquis of Lorne, M.P., who presided, read extracts from the annual report, which showed that the laundry had earned £1000 during the year, and a debt of £500 had been paid off; but a fresh debt had been incurred by an extension of that part of the building. The institution had no recreation or play room, and £1500 was now needed to afford this accommodation by building a new schoolroom outside. The schools continued to maintain a high standard of efficiency. Last year there were thirty-four admissions, while eleven girls were sent to situations; and the year ended with 109 girls in the Home. Princess Louise distributed the prizes and certificates won by the girls during the year.

Obituary.

MRS. EVERED POOLE.

Last week we briefly noted the death of this Christian lady worker. For some considerable time she had been in weak health, and a stay in the South of France was prescribed. This visit did not, however, bring so much benefit as was expected, and Mrs. Poole returned to her home in Southampton. There were hopeful symptoms, but it was soon apparent that strength was failing, and in the early part of last week Mrs. Poole passed from suffering and weakness to her eternal rest. Her earnest labours in Gospel temperance, and other good work in conjunction with her husband, Major Evered Poole, will be familiar to many readers. Mrs. Poole also did valued service by her writings for young people; many contributions from her pen have appeared in our columns.

MR. CHARLES JOHN BATTERSBY, J.P.

The Church of Ireland has experienced a heavy loss in the death of Mr. Charles J. Battersby, of Cromlyn, West Meath, Ireland, who "having served his own generation fell on sleep" on May 22. In early life a civil engineer, he bore witness to his Master, Jesus Christ, by a life which was an example to all with whom he came in contact. In 1871 he became secretary for the diocese of Kilmore, Elphin and Ardagh. Failing health compelled him to relinquish his post in April last; his death was probably hastened by his determination to attend the Diocesan Synod in February. Mr. Battersby was universally respected, and looked up to by all who were acquainted with him, both rich and poor. He was carried to the grave by his sorrowing tenants and the members of his daughter's Bible class.

MR. THOS. BUTT.

A great gloom has been thrown over the Emfundisweni Mission Station, writes a correspondent of the Natal Mercury, through the sudden death by drowning of Mr. Thos. Butt, the "Joyful News" Evangelist. For some days the Umzimhlavana River had been considerably flooded, and at times rendered impassable at the drifts. On Tuesday, May 23, when the river had somewhat subsided, Mr. Butt decided to fetch his English letters from the station. Being a fair swimmer, he chose, as he thought, a suitable spot for crossing the river, but unfortunately the impetuous torrent proved too strong for him, and carried him down the stream, his Kaffir boy barely escaping the same fate. The body of the unfortunate evangelist was recovered the next morning about a mile lower down the river. Mr. Butt, whose career has thus so suddenly been cut short, was sent out eighteen months ago by Rev. Thos. Champness, his object being to labour in Pondoland. Mr. Butt was twenty-eight years of age and unmarried, but was arranging for marriage to take place during the present year.

MR. H. CHAMBERLIN.

Many friends on both sides of the Atlantic will have learned with deep regret of the sudden decease of Mr. Chamberlin, well known years ago as a Y.M.C.A. worker, and latterly in more strictly business capacities. He was formerly Secretary of the Brooklyn Association, where his health entirely failed. He went to Denver, Colorado, in search of renewed strength, though it was feared that he would not recover. However, by God's blessing, he was soon fully restored to vigour, and became a successful real estate agent in that city. He was prominently associated with the Wesleyan communion there as a worker and liberal supporter. When at the very height of his worldly prosperity the American monetary crisis intervened, and he was involved in financial ruin.

Since then he has resided in England, engaging in insurance work. He lived at Surbiton, and while on a cycling journey to Windsor for health purposes it seems he fell from the machine after remounting at the top of Egham hill, and immediately expired. The cause of death, as revealed at the inquest, was a clot of blood at the heart. He has left a wife and family to mourn their sore bereavement.

DR. F. R. LEES.

This well-known temperance reformer spoke at the National Temperance League's May meeting of teetotal veterans. He has now followed the eloquent Mr. Raper, whose death was so sincerely lamented at that meeting. Dr. Lees was in his eighty-third year, and his death took place within an hour of the time announced for the meeting to begin at which he was to have been the principal speaker—the annual meeting of the Halifax and District Band of Hope Union, which he had come expressly to Halifax to attend, being apparently in the best of health. Early on Saturday morning he was seized with a heart affection, and expired in the afternoon. The deceased gentleman was born at Meanwood Hall, Leeds, in 1815. Becoming connected with the temperance movement, then in its infancy, through hearing the late Mr. Joseph Livesey deliver his famous "Malt" lecture, he speedily came to the front as a speaker and writer on temperance themes, and was subsequently identified prominently with all the developments and forward movements of that party. In 1857 he won the prize of 100 guineas (given by the U.K. Alliance) for the best essay on the prohibition movement, and in later years was joint author with Dr. Dawson Burns of the "Temperance Bible Commentary."

Personalia.

Rev. T. R. Waltenberg, curate of Leigh, near Manchester, formerly C.M.S. missionary and principal of Harris High School, Triplicane, Madras, has started a mission tour among the Jews in Germany, in connection with the Barbican Mission.

Rev. J. D. Kilburn.—The British and Foreign Sailors' Society being desirous of more fully using the opportunities granted to them by the Emperor of Russia of opening institutes, etc., for British and foreign sailors in the different ports of the empire, Rev. J. D. Kilburn has undertaken to visit Russia on their behalf, to try and help forward the work, especially in the Baltic provinces and in Finland.

Mr. S. E. Bridgman was born in Northampton, Mass., seventy years ago, and his neighbours to the number of several hundred called at his hospitable home recently to celebrate his seventieth birthday. His is the "college bookstore." All the institutions of learning in that region owe much to him. Many a man and woman of literary fame on both sides of the sea knows and loves him, and has enjoyed his hospitality.

Pastor Archibald G. Brown has returned to England after three months' evangelistic work in America, a time which proved full of spiritual blessing to hundreds who came under his ministry. By special request he took the evening service at the East London Tabernacle on Sunday last, on the occasion of the Sunday-school anniversary. During June and July Mr. Brown's address will be Staplehurst, Kent.

Mrs. Richardson, lately resident in Rome, and who has conducted Gospel Missions in Liverpool with many tokens of God's blessing, is open to undertake evangelistic work. Her gifts in this line of service are highly spoken of by friends who have worked with her. From June 14 to 19 she hopes to conduct mission services at Edgware. She may be communicated with at Miss Mason's Home of Rest, 10, Finchley-road, N.W.

Mr. Alderman Evan Spicer, J.P., who is to join Rev. R. Wardlaw Thompson at the end of September, at Tamatave, on a special mission to the L.M.S. stations in Madagascar, will spend en route about six weeks in South Africa. With Rev. D. B. Hooke, of the Colonial Missionary Society, he will visit the leading missions in Cape Colony, Natal, and the Transvaal. They hope to leave England in the Dunvegan Castle, on July 9.

Monks and Nuns in Great Britain.—The Illustrated Church News states that there are in Great Britain to-day fifty different orders and congregations of monks, and double as many orders and congregations of nuns, the latter having charge of over three hundred institutions in England and Wales, and about forty in Scotland. From the official "Catholic Directory" it appears that whereas in 1857 there were not ten members of the regular orders in Scotland, to-day there are eighty-one, the increase having for the most part taken place in Glasgow and district. In all there are about a thousand monks in England and Wales, the Jesuits having increased over fivefold, and Benedictines nearly to the same extent during the past forty years.

London Missionary Society.—A valedictory service was held on Tuesday week in Union Chapel, Islington, to bid farewell to a number of missionaries. Dr. and Mrs. Mackay, formerly of Madagascar, are now being sent to Lake Tanganyika, whither Mr. and Mrs. Hemans, negro Christians, originally from Jamaica, are returning. To the same mission in Central Africa are going Rev. J. May and Mrs. May, Miss Allen, Mr. W. Govan Robertson, formerly of the Free Church Livingstonia Mission, and Miss Sim, who becomes Mrs. Robertson. Miss Annie Ffrench has been appointed to Samoa; while Mrs. Chalmers is returning to New Guinea and Miss Nellie Hargreave to Khama's country in South Africa. This is the first time that missionaries' wives have gone to the Tanganyika mission, which has now outgrown the pioneer stage. At the meeting Rev. W. Hardy Harwood presided, and Rev. George Cousins, acting foreign secretary of the society, introduced the missionaries, several of whom gave short addresses.

Farningham and Swanley Boys.

These Homes for Little Boys held their thirty-third anniversary banquet at the Hotel Cecil, on Saturday last, with Sir W. H. Wills, Bart., M.P., in the chair. The rapid extension of public belief in that method of caring for needy children which the Farningham Home was the first to adopt in England makes its progress a matter for public interest and reflection. The secretary, Mr. W. Robson, was examined at length by the committee appointed by Mr. Asquith, and the emphatic commendation of the family system in their report and the condemnation of the now discredited barrack system, shows that the practical sense of the experts in that inquiry is firmly enlisted in behalf of cottage life for the children under the permanent care of the State.

But how have these Homes fared during the past year? The bright and improved outlook of 1895-6 has been maintained. The chairman, in those interesting remarks which his long experience upon the committee of the Homes made more forceful, showed that their efficiency in bringing up homeless boys in small groups, on the pattern of a Christian family, with a godly foster father and mother at their head, was increasing, while the improvements in details of the work and the retrenchments under the new system of contracts had reduced the expenditure over 20 per cent., thus enabling them to compare favourably in point of cost with barrack orphanages.

The very large debt which had so long burdened the Homes has now been almost cleared, and only a sum of £3000 remained which it was hoped the anniversary donations would clear off.

Mr. John Brinton, of Stourport, referred to the special industrial training and the other principles of the work.

But beside these practical aids to the development of character, there are constant and earnest efforts made to bring the boys to accept the Lord Jesus as their Saviour and friend. In addition to the worship and exposition of Holy Scripture in each household and the efforts of teachers in the Sunday-schools, services are held each Lord's Day by evangelists, clergymen, and ministers, who have special aptitude for pressing upon boys the glorious truths of the redemption to be found in Christ and the happiness and guidance which newness of life in Him will afford. The loving sympathy, efforts, and prayers of a long roll of workers during the past thirty years has borne most satisfactory fruit, and hundreds of young men in this and other lands testify by their consistent Christian lives to the blessings which God has bestowed upon these Homes. The Secretary read the list of donations, amounting to over £1600, sent to the chairman and stewards, including those which the readers of the Christian had kindly sent.

The Right Hon. Walter Long, M.P., Mr. W. H. Willans, the treasurer and surviving founder of the Homes, Mr. Alex. Hubbard, Rev. Dr. Momerie, Rev. J. Reid Howatt, and Dr. Maclure, of Mill Hill, spoke, and Mr. Arthur Wills, Mr. Percy Mull, the Swanley Orphan Choir and the band of the Hotel Cecil gave an entertaining programme of music and singing.

Requests for Prayer.—For Mrs. Sharland and Miss Browne's Orphanage at Chofu, Shimonoseki Straits, Japan, during a severe trial of faith.—For blessing upon a special mission to be conducted by William Hill in Durban, Natal, during June.—Praise for the success of a dangerous operation, and prayer for speedy recovery from extreme prostration.

Indigent Blind Visiting Society.—The annual meeting of the Indigent Blind Visiting Society was held on Friday afternoon at the Royal Normal College and Academy of Music for the Blind, Upper Norwood. The committee stated that all the branches of the Society's work had been going on satisfactorily, with this exception, that the relief given from the general fund remained curtailed owing to want of funds. The Archbishop of Canterbury, who presided, said it was a striking feature that blind men themselves should be used as visitors to deal with the cases of their brethren. Blind men had charge of the work, and earned their living by helping those similarly afflicted.

Famine in India.—In connection with the Society for Promoting Female Education in the East, Miss Bland, of the Agra Zenana Mission, thus writes of the condition of the people among whom she is working:—"Our funds are very low just now. . . I shall feel deeply grateful if you can send me help. . . We are helping a good many very poor women just now. . . On Monday I worked with one of our teachers, going from house to house amongst the distressed families. Some of the women looked very wretched; their clothes are becoming mere rags." Miss Webb, 267, Vauxhall Bridge-road, S.W., will gladly receive and forward any contribution for Miss Bland's interesting and important work.

PAUL'S ADVICE TO TIMOTHY.—2 Tim. i. 1-7; iii. 14-17.

GOLDEN TEXT.—iii. 15.

THE object of this lesson is to introduce Timothy, who will appear as Paul's companion in his second missionary journey (Acts xvi. 1-3). All we can know of Timothy's history is briefly this:—He dwelt in Lystra; his father was a Gentile, who probably died while Timothy was young, his mother was a Jewess; he was a convert of the apostle Paul (1 Tim. i. 2; 2 Tim. i. 2); and appears to have been converted on the occasion of Paul's first visit to Lystra (Acts xiv. 6); his mother and grandmother, who had carefully instructed him in the Jewish faith, were converted at the same time. He was afterwards closely associated with the apostle, and was his companion during his first Roman imprisonment. He was appointed overseer of the Church at Ephesus; and was martyred by being clubbed to death at one of the annual feasts of Artemis, the licentiousness of which he had dared to denounce.

The following three points may be enforced:—

I. In Timothy we have an example of early piety. At the time of Paul's first visit to Lystra he was about fifteen years of age, and though he is not mentioned in connection with that visit, he is spoken of in Acts xvi. 1 as "a disciple," and must therefore have been converted through the apostle's preaching then. His becoming a Christian at such a time shows him to have possessed an independent and courageous spirit; for the Apostle's work was opposed by zealous Jews from Antioch and Iconium (Acts xiv. 19); and in the stoning of the apostle he saw to what a Christian profession might lead. Apply the lesson to young people now. Dare they think for themselves, and take a stand on the side of Christ whatever others may say or do? Many remain unconverted because they have not the courage to do right. Timothy believed while he was but a boy. None need wait to be even his age, for Jesus contemplated having many "little ones that believe" among his disciples. Late conversions are possible, but they cannot give back a wasted life, nor even remove the scars left by former sins.

II. In Timothy we see the value of a godly ancestry (i. 5, iii. 14). Both his mother and his grandmother were devout women, who had made the atmosphere of his early life to be blessed and holy. Before their conversion their faith looked for the coming of the Messiah, but when Paul declared to them the Gospel, their faith unfeigned was fixed on Christ Himself; and all they knew they sought to teach the child. This statement needs emphasis in these days, when parental instruction is apt to be neglected in the multitude of other engagements. The mothers of England determine, to a large extent, what the future men and women will be. The lessons that abide, and that are most potent in influencing the later life, are those learned from a mother's lips. .. .. ..

But what of those cases in which, while a parent seeks to teach, a child refuses to learn or to obey? Alas! there are such. It is a responsibility as well as a privilege to possess godly parents. As there is no joy a parent can know equal to that of seeing his "children walk in the truth" (3 John, 4), so there is no greater anguish than that of seeing children turning into ways of sin. The boy who allows evil companions to shame him out of obeying and honouring his mother is a coward. Press the question, What do your parents desire to teach you? Are you willing to follow their teaching and example? Be thankful for godly parents, and show your gratitude by giving heed to their instructions.

III. In Timothy we see the advantage of a right use of Scripture (iii. 15-17). It must be remembered that Paul used these words in reference to the Old Testament; they are much more applicable to us. The Scripture was, first, useful in Timothy's conversion. Yet note the word "wise." Wisdom is not the same thing as knowledge. If a man does not apply what he knows he is not wise. To know from Scripture the truth as to our need and as to God's provision does not save us until we are wise enough to apply it to ourselves. The best remedy is ineffective until it is taken. Have you been "wise unto salvation" in your use of the Bible? Next, the Scripture fitted Timothy for service. The Apostle claims that the Bible is Divinely inspired, not only in general, but in each part—"every Scripture" (R.V.). "Doctrine" refers to dogmatic teaching; "reproof" to the refutation of error. "Correction" refers to the practical life, and means to put right what is wrong; "instruction" is training or discipline in righteousness. Both these, the doctrinal and the practical, are needed in a completely equipped servant of God (17). Let the teacher give to both their proper position, both in himself and in seeking to train his scholars for the service of Christ.

THE BOOK WORLD.

PREACHING BY CARTOONS.

Eye-Gate; or, Native Art in the Evangelisation of China. By William Wilson, M.B., C.M., medical missionary, Han-chong-fu, China. (2s. Partridge.) This is a remarkable publication, in external appearance like a nursery book, in internal character significant and very suggestive. From a prolonged experience in the Chinese mission field, Dr. Wilson knows the great importance of pictorial representation, and he shows that Divine truth may be delineated in simple cartoons as well as by means of precise letterpress. Other missionaries bear him out in testifying to the great service that may be expected from an extended use of native art; and in these striking pages he lets Western friends of Chinese evangelisation into the secret of how it is to be done. We have in this book thirty coloured reproductions of Chinese paintings setting forth the story of the Prodigal Son, Noah and the Flood, Deliverance from the Horrible Pit and Miry Clay, the story of the Good Samaritan, and the Burden of Sin and its Removal. Dr. Wilson writes with earnestness on the needs of China, and warmly advocates the employment of native art in setting forth Gospel truth. Students of missionary effort will read his pages with hopeful interest, and will share the high expectations expressed in the threefold preface, wherein Dr. A. T. Pierson says that "this unpretending volume may mark an era in missionary methods"; Mr. Eugene Stock declares that "nothing that has been published upon China for a long time is more likely to be helpful in stirring the hearts of Christians"; and Rev. J. Hudson Taylor testifies concerning such native illustrations as Dr. Wilson employs, "their value has been proved in various parts of China, and I have not heard of any who have been disappointed in their use." Dr. Wilson's concluding chapter is an appeal for consecrated witnesses in the "regions beyond," and he addresses solemn words to Christian parents as well as their sons and daughters.

Fridtjof Nansen: His Life and Explorations. By J. Arthur Bain. (1s. 6d. Partridge.) A capital outline of the great explorer's life. The style is vivacious, as befits the stirring subject.

The Story of George Washington: Patriot, Soldier, Statesman. By G. Barnett Smith. (1s. Sunday School Union.) An addition to the "Splendid Lives" series, good for boys, and interesting reading for their elders.

Barbara Heck: A Story of Early Methodism in America. By W. H. Withrow. (2s. 6d. C. H. Kelly.) The planting of Methodism in the West is a subject of more than denominational interest, and this striking story of "A Mother in Israel" makes it live to the mind and heart.

Optimus and other Poems. By M. R. S. (2s. 6d. Swan Sonnenschein & Co.) A glimpse at the candid little preface to these poems will create in the reader a favourable bias, which, we think, will survive a closer examination. The thoughts are fresh, if not profound, and the verbal dress is not uncomely.

Poems of Independence and Liberty. In reprinting these high-souled effusions of the poet Wordsworth, Rev. Stopford A. Brooke supplies an introduction in which he eloquently points the moral of the poet's utterances as they apply to the existing situation in the Mediterranean, and voices the views, as we judge, of many of his fellow-countrymen. (Isbister & Co. 1s. net.)

Which Bible to Read—Revised or "Authorised"? By Frank Ballard, M.A., B.Sc. (1s. net. H. R. Allenson.) A well-conducted inquiry, leading to a strongly-expressed preference for the Revised Version. Without allowing the force of just every reason set forth, or the relevance of some of Mr. Ballard's comparisons and explanations, we readily commend the book as a useful contribution to an important subject.

The Bible-class Primers series (6d. each. T. & T. Clark) has been enriched by three useful additions: The Miracles of Our Lord, by Professor Laidlaw, D.D.; The Exile and the Restoration, by Professor A. B. Davidson, D.D.; and Christian Conduct, a further study in New Testament morality, by Rev. T. B. Kilpatrick, M.A., Aberdeen. The last-named is a sequel to the author's primer on "Christian Character," and it deserves many readers.

The Holy Family. By F. C. Spurr. (Marshall Bros.) In their revolt against the superstitions of Rome, Protestants are apt to give less full and fair consideration to the characters of our Lord's earthly parents, than to other Scripture personages. In this judiciously written brochure Mr. Spurr redresses the balance, and exhibits the old picture with the Popish "Dirt and Scratches" removed. The chapter on "Our Lord's hidden thirty years" is also reverent and helpful.

The Greatest Need of the Age. By B. A. Watchman. (1s. T. Williams, 231, Pentonville-road, N.) This is a spur to world-wide evangelisation, for the advancement of which the author sets forth a four-fold need: A truer conception of salvation, Scriptural holiness, and the Church's responsibility, with a firmer faith in the reality and power of believing prayer. This is an earnest word, sometimes open to criticism as to its terms, but ever true in drift and purpose.

Heroines of the Cross and Heroines of Travel, both by Frank Mundell, are new issues in connection with the "Heroines" Library. (1s. 6d. each. Sunday School Union.) The former tells the story of mission workers and native converts who have witnessed unto blood. The latter is filled with narratives of brave ladies who have adventured far beyond the bounds of civilisation, and had stirring experiences in barbarian lands. Both are fully illustrated.

"Come, Break Your Fast!" A Daily Meditation. By Rev. Mark Guy Pearse. Arranged by R. Vernon. (3s. 6d. Partridge.) These readings are substantial sections of discourses, characterised by all the force and beauty of Mr. Pearse's thought and utterance. The pages supply a daily feast for hungry souls; their delight is in "the homely, brotherly Jesus, interested in the common business of our lives, sitting amongst us at the daily meal which his own bounty provides, and which his own Presence cheers and gladdens." This will be a welcome presentation volume for Christian people. There is a good portrait of the preacher-author.

Facts and Fancies about Flowers. By Margaret Moyes Black. (2s. 6d. Oliphant, Anderson, & Ferrier.) There are charming stories attaching to commonplace flowers; and here we have many of them delightfully related. The blue bell and thistle, the rose and shamrock, the leek and holly are only some of the texts of the well-illustrated chapters; but to name them is a sufficient indication of the scope of the book, with its references to history and heraldry, poetry, legend, and tradition.

Old Testament Criticism and the Rights of the Unlearned, the latest "Present-Day Primer" (1s. Religious Tract Society), is from the pen of Rev. Dr. John Kennedy. It enforces the plea that no special linguistic knowledge is necessary in order to enable the careful Bible reader to form a judgment on the issue raised by the Higher Critics. It does more: it sets forth, with admirable clearness and succinctness, many facts and considerations calculated to discredit Criticism, and show the historicity and integrity of the Old Testament Scriptures.

Inmates of my House and Garden. By Mrs. Brightwen. (Second edition. 5s. T. Fisher Unwin.) A charming volume of sketches, admirably illustrated. Birds and bees, squirrels and doves are among the subjects of study, and the talented author does not overlook tortoises and owls, flies and moths. She tells us how to teach children to be humane, and how country residents may make up bunches of flowers and get them distributed in slum garrets and city hospitals. Mrs. Brightwen is as clever in descriptive writing as she is careful in observing the ways of some of the humblest of God's creatures.

Christian Life in Germany, as Seen in the State and the Church. By Edward F. Williams, D.D. (4s. T. & T. Clark.) A very readable account of the German people in their social and religious circumstances and life, with special reference to the mission work carried on in their midst, and the efforts they promote for the evangelisation of the heathen world. While the entire volume has interested us greatly, we have been particularly struck by the account of the Inner Mission, the origin and developments of which are set forth in welcome detail. Christian workers will find much information, some of it very suggestive, in these pages.

The Origin of Genesis. By Pastor George Stosch. (5s. Elliot Stock.) Though a German, the author of this thoughtful work has no sympathy with destructive criticism. He regards Genesis as from the hand of Moses, and tells us why. To him the book presents the form of a series of memoirs, which he holds to be of the remotest antiquity, for the most part contemporary, or nearly so, with the events recorded. He is convinced that Moses gathered and arranged these records in their present form, and that it is to the Spirit of Truth, who guided the patriarchs, that we must ascribe the wondrous story. Pastor Stosch is a man of insight; and his view, which is consistent with the literary phenomena and Scripture integrity, should receive the attention of cautious scholars.

THE HEART OF QUEEN VICTORIA: True Anecdotes of Her Majesty's Life, by Clare Jerrold, is an illustrated pennyworth, which is sure to have a large sale, as a memento of the Diamond Jubilee year. (Jarrold & Sons.)

The first vol. of the summarised and analysed evidence given before the Royal Commission on Licensing, issued under the direction of the Temperance Central Evidence Board (33, Paternoster-row, 1s.), deals with the evidence given last year. It has been prepared by Mr. Foulkes-Griffiths, and will prove of much value to temperance speakers and writers.

AMONG THE CHURCHES.

Church of England.

Rev. F. H. Holt, having resigned the vicariate of St. James's Church, Scarborough, the charge has been accepted by his curate, Rev. C. R. Bramley.

At the Southport Evangelical Conference, held last week, there were interesting discussions on missions, the growth of Evangelical principles during the Queen's reign, and progress in Universities and schools.

The Bishops of Durham and Newcastle have agreed to recommend their clergy to arrange for the delivery of lectures and addresses by appointed lecturers, with the object of "meeting the prevalent scepticism and strengthening faith."

In reply to an inquiry from several ladies of distinction, Archbishop Temple has now caused it to be known that he "does not recognise the Kilburn Sisters in any way whatever," but that "he does not think it well to take any further steps concerning them."

The Bishop of Liverpool presided last week at an influential meeting, when the purchase of Clarendon Buildings, Lord-street, as a site for a Church House for the diocese, at a cost of £48,480, was endorsed. A committee was appointed to promote the scheme, and a hope was expressed that £25,000 more would be raised.

The chairman of H.M. Prison Commission, Mr. Ruggles Brise, is very anxious that there should be a Church Army Labour Home working in conjunction with every prison in the kingdom. At present there are twenty-four so working, but there are still thirty-two prisons where there is no Labour Home. The committee hope, however, that they may shortly be enabled to open several more Homes.

Canon Taylor Smith, the first student of St. John's Hall, Highbury, to reach the Episcopate, was last week consecrated at St. Paul's, for the diocese of Sierra Leone. A pathetic touch was given to the ceremony by the presence of Princess Henry of Battenberg, to whose husband the bishop ministered in his last hours. Bishops Phillips and Oluwole (native clergy) were amongst the prelates assisting at the consecration.

The Bishop of Caledonia (Dr. Ridley), speaking at Sheffield last week, said his diocese was as large as England and France put together, and there were now very few places in which churches and schools were not established. The natives who learned the Gospel would travel from their homes for hundreds of miles, walking across the frozen rivers and over snowy mountains from tribe to tribe to preach Christ, and they would come back rejoicing because they had had a good hearing. They had now a chain of Missions from the coast almost to the Rocky Mountains.

The Archdeacon of London, on Wednesday last week, delivered his sixth charge to the clergy and churchwardens of the Archdeaconry of London, at the church of St. Sepulchre, Holborn. The subject was the ancient British churches. The present year was not only, he said, the 1300th anniversary of the landing of St. Augustine; it was also the 1300th anniversary of the death of St. Columba, and the facts showed that the conversion of the Anglo-Saxons was more due to the followers of St. Columba than to St. Augustine and his companions. That so little was known about the original British Church in England was due to the destruction of all its records by the heathen Anglo-Saxons. The Archdeacon held that the Celtic Churches had bequeathed a lasting ideal of national independence, zeal, self-devotion, unworldliness, and sincerity.

Congregational.

Rev. Hugh Ross Williamson has been ordained to the pastorate of Abbey Church, Romsey.

The ninety-fifth anniversary of the Congregational Sunday-school, Haslingden, has been celebrated.

Rev. T. Anderson, formerly of the Methodist New Connexion ministry, has accepted the pastorate of Mexborough Church.

Rev. S. Pearson, M.A., Broughton-park Church, Manchester, has returned from a visit to France and the South of Europe.

The new English church at Penarth has been opened for worship under favourable circumstances. It is capable of accommodating 600 adults.

The foundation-stone of a new church has been laid at Crosby, Liverpool. The church will provide seating accommodation for about 600 persons, and will cost nearly £6000.

Rev. Arnold Foster, of the London Missionary Society, who has for so long been associated with Dr. Griffith John in the work at Hankow, Central China, will shortly visit England.

Professor W. Douglas Mackenzie, formerly of Edinburgh, now of the Chicago Theological Seminary, has decided to accept the Chair of Systematic Theology at that seminary as a permanency.

Rev. Thomas Grear, of Bishopsgate, has been elected chairman of the board of directors of the London Missionary Society for the ensuing year, with Mr. George W. Dodds as vice-chairman.

The committee of the Congregational Chapel Building Society for Lancashire and Cheshire have voted a grant of £400 towards the erection of a school chapel in the Fulwood district of Preston; also a grant of £250 and a loan of £150 for the erection of a new chapel at Poulton-le-Fylde.

Mr. W. Crosfield, of Liverpool, has received a hearty welcome in Australia. Next month he proceeds (with Rev. R. Wardlaw Thompson) to the South Sea Islands. From Samoa he is to return to Liverpool, while Mr. Thompson makes for Natal, where he will be joined by Alderman Evan Spicer, en route for Madagascar.

Dr. Guinness Rogers states that the suggestion to prepare a lectionary for use in Congregational churches is in harmony with other proposals favouring the introduction of the liturgical element into the services; but he is satisfied that the preponderance of feeling in the Congregational body would be decidedly against such innovations.

Calls.—Rev. J. G. Henderson, Heckmondwike, to Islington. Mr. John Groat, of Nottingham College, to Melrose E.M. Church.

Resignation.—Rev. Jonathan Calvert, Addison-street, Nottingham.

Baptist.

Rev. Fred H. King, Bow-road, E., baptized ten believers last Lord's Day.

Rev. T. Graham Tarn has been elected first president of the Free Church Council for Harrogate. Arrangements are being made for a course of lectures on Nonconformist principles.

Foundation-stones were laid on Monday last week for the alteration of the chapel at Kirton-in-Lindsey. Mr. E. Bainbridge, M.P., and Alderman Dobson, J.P., took part in the proceedings.

Rev. J. W. Hambly, of Clayton, Bradford, has been recognised as pastor of Portmahon Church, in succession to Rev. H. Trotman.

At the third anniversary of the church at Horsham, £80 was given in aid of the church building fund. Altogether £280 is now in hand, and the new chapel will be built as soon as possible.

Although the pastorate of St. Andrew's Church, Cambridge, is vacant, the sum of £818 was contributed to the Baptist Missionary Society last year, an increase of £200 upon the previous year's offering.

Judge Willis, Q.C., was among the speakers recently at the anniversary of St. Mary's First Day School, Norwich, when the reports showed a membership of 250, with several useful provident organisations, and annual receipts of nearly £300.

Special services have been held in the Motherwell Church in connection with the induction of Rev. John Carson, late of Melbourne, Australia. Rev. Alexander Wylie, M.A., President of the Baptist Union of Scotland, presided at a hearty social meeting.

Bristol-road and Boulevard Churches, Weston-super-Mare, have been amalgamated under the pastoral care of Rev. R. S. Latimer. Rev. Thomas Spurgeon preached a few days ago in Bristol-road Chapel, and a tea and public meeting followed in celebration of the amalgamation.

The church which formerly met in Devonshire-square, but now assembles in Stoke Newington-road, has been recently commemorating its two hundred and fifty-ninth anniversary. Under the ministry of Rev. G. P. McKay, the church is enjoying a large measure of prosperity. A considerable number have lately been baptized. Many others are seeking baptism.

Calls.—Mr. A. S. Langley, of Manchester College, to Newcastle-under-Lyme; Rev. P. Williams (Pedr Hir), of Tredegar, to Brasenose-road Welsh Church, Bootle; Rev. W. G. Myles, late of Morecambe, to Garfield Church, Passaic, N.J.; Mr. D. Carter, of Bristol College, to Beckington; Rev. W. E. Palmer, to Ebenezer Church, Waltham Abbey (all accepted).

Resignations.—Rev. W. A. Barker, Brixham; Rev. W. Chambers, Shoreham.

Methodist.

The congregation at Swymbridge, near Barnstaple, have decided to build a new chapel, a site in the centre of the village having been given by the Duke of Bedford.

Rev. W. T. A. Barber, of the Wesleyan Missionary Society, is organising a lending library of missionary books, for the instruction of Methodist young people's societies. The scheme deserves success and imitation.

The choice for the New Connexion Conference of 1898 is likely to lie between Sheffield and Leeds. The probability of the annual assembly of the United Methodist Free Churches being held in Sheffield in 1899 may influence the Conference in favour of that city for 1898.

Preparations for the coming Wesleyan Conference at Leeds are going on apace. The committee appointed to arrange homes for the 400 ministers invited as guests met at Brunswick Rooms on Friday morning. During the pastoral session there will probably be nearly 1000 ministers in attendance.

The foundation-stones of a new chapel have been laid at Wesley Rock, near Penzance. From the rock on which the pulpit of the old chapel stands, John Wesley preached during his tour in the county. The old chapel is altogether inadequate to the needs of the Connexion in the rapidly-growing suburbs of Penzance.

The annual meetings in connection with the Primitive Methodist Missionary Society were held a few days ago in London. Rev. J. Smith, the general secretary, pointed out that on the general fund there had been receipts amounting to £17,006 11s. 3d., and the expenditure £13,986 12s. 1d., leaving a credit balance of £3019, which included what was known as the Walsall money, viz., £2500, which might be called up at any time.

Presbyterian.

Mr. T. Hughes, of Rhos, has accepted an invitation to the joint pastorate of the Bomere Heath and Newton-on-the-Hill English churches, in the Montgomery and Salop Presbytery.

A new English church has been erected and opened at Saltney Ferry, near Chester, to provide for the religious wants of the numerous colony planted there by the London and North-Western Railway Company.

Rev. J. J. Mackay, M.A., of Hull, points out that not fewer than 3291 members were removed from the church's rolls last year without certificates, and that but for this extraordinary leakage the net gain in membership last year would have been 4298 instead of 1007.

At Cambridge, on Tuesday last week, Mrs. Lewis and Mrs. Gibson, the well-known learned travellers, who reside in the University city, jointly laid the foundation stone of the Westminster Theological College in connection with the Presbyterian Church of England. Dr. Dykes, the Principal of the College, gave an address, in which he declared the aims and objects of the new undertaking. The College is likely to cost about £30,000.

Fallen Asleep.

At Oxford, Rev. Dr. J. Wilson, late vicar of Moxley, Staffs.—At Whitefields, Rev. Matthew Lewis, late pastor of Tideswell Congregational Church.—At Cambridge, Canon Churton, of King's College, well known as a theologian and an ecclesiastical writer.—At Birmingham, Rev. Wm. Agar Wicks, pastor of Christ Church (Baptist), Aston.—At New Mills, Rev. Edward Thompson, for nearly thirty years a minister among the Wesleyan Methodists.—At Sheffield, Mr. James Tasker, who had filled all the offices open to a layman in connection with the Wesleyan Church at Skipton, and whose bereaved family includes Professor J. G. Tasker, of Handsworth College, Birmingham, and Rev. W. Lindley Tasker, of Norwich, both ministers in the Wesleyan communion.—At Canterbury, Rev. Geo. Turner, for over fifty years a Wesleyan Methodist minister.—At Abeokuta, West Africa, Rev. J. B. Wood, for upwards of forty years a worker in connection with the Church Missionary Society.—At Clapham, Mr. J. W. Jepps, a gentleman who will be specially missed in the ranks of London Methodism.—At Harrogate, Mr. William Palliser, Town Councillor, and an influential member of the Methodist Free Church.—At Bratton St. Maur, Somerset, Rev. C. H. Bousfield, rector of the parish, through being thrown from his bicycle, owing to the brake refusing to act.—At Greenbank, Rev. Samuel Irvine, Presbyterian minister, aged sixty-six years.—At Lisbane, Saintfield, co. Down, Mr. John Edgar, a devoted member of the Presbyterian Church.—At Farm Lodge, Ballymena, Mr. Samuel R. Young.—Rev. Walter Muckersie, senior minister of Alexandra Parade U.P. Church, Glasgow.—In her ninetieth year, Mrs. Gilmore, Bute Cottage, Crieff, much beloved because of her deeds of kindness.

DONATIONS

Received by Messrs. Morgan and Scott to Monday, May 31, 1897.

 Donations should be sent by Cheque or Post Office Orders, not by stamps.

 Will donors oblige by stating explicitly and fully the titles of the institutions to which they wish their donations to be applied? Further correspondence will thus be obviated. Will they also bear in mind that the Donation List is made up for the Printers on Monday morning? Any amounts received afterwards will be acknowledged in the subsequent week's number of The Christian.

 Cheques, Money Orders, or Postal Orders should be made payable to Messrs. Morgan & Scott, 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C., and crossed "City Bank"; this will effectually prevent loss.

☞ Donors are particularly requested to fill in "Morgan and Scott" on Postal Orders, in accordance with the Post Office regulations.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

AS the genial weather advances, we are receiving many appeals from workers among the London poor for help to enable them to give the mothers and children "a Day in the Country." So far, we have received but little in aid of this movement, which in the past has afforded joy and gladness to so many who, otherwise, would not see the country with its green, and in bright surroundings be helped to realise the goodness and love of God. We trust that those who are not strangers to rural delights will enable us, in the name of "Readers of THE CHRISTIAN," to respond in some measure to the appeals as they reach us.

All loyal subjects of the Queen will unite in the rejoicing and thanksgiving for the grace and mercy of God shown to Her Majesty and to the Empire during the past sixty years of her unprecedented and beneficent reign. A correspondent remarks that it is already five years beyond that of Manasseh, the longest reign of any of the kings of Judah. During this period the condition of Her Majesty's poorer subjects has been exceedingly improved, while the wealth of the country has indefinitely increased. The influence of Christianity has brought about these results; but while the people have been benefited, God has been less recognised than in earlier days of our history. As in the jubilee ten years ago, so it is probable that now we shall hear much jubilation of this new Age, this great Age, this Age of gold. Some thoughts worthy of consideration will be found in "1837-1897: A Retrospect and a Warning." By John Alexander Lund. (136, Offord-road, Barnsbury. 2d.)

In the Jubilee week, nearly half a million poor people will be feasted in and around London. It is proposed to minister the Bread of Life to the multitudes; and the Scripture Gift Mission has opened a special fund for the purpose. The great staff of the London City Mission will undertake the distribution, and there is no question that the attractive illustrated Gospels will be readily received. Between now and the day of distribution there is time for prayer upon the effort, and help in promoting the enterprise to the utmost of this unique opportunity. The expenditure entailed will be about £1600. The secretary of the Scripture Gift Mission, is Mr. W. Walters, 84, St. Paul's Churchyard, E.C.

There is danger of our forgetting the actual condition of the suffering and endangered millions of India. Notwithstanding the gifts which have been sent to them, and the exertions of the Government on their behalf, the only hope, both of the Government and of the people, of escaping an unparalleled tragedy is in the coming monsoon. Had we any such horror at our very door, as is now stalking abroad in India, we can hardly doubt that a day of humiliation and prayer would be observed. Without waiting for such a season the men of prayer may at once approach the mercy-seat. We draw attention to the pathetic accounts given on p. 21.

The B.W.T.A., in dealing with the intricate subject of the regulation of vice, has passed a resolution to protest against the sanction by Government of any regulations not previously laid before Parliament and discussed by the House of Commons. This is good so far as it goes, but it must not be taken to imply that the regulations would be accepted if only Parliament has discussed them. The objection lies against them whether they have been discussed or not. No method of introducing them, whether secret or open, can make them right. Rather must it be ensured that at such discussion all possible and available opposition must be brought to bear.

A special correspondent of The Daily News tells a frightful story of twenty-five fanatics having been walled up and buried alive by their own desire at the instigation of a woman known as Vitalia, described by the writer as a "triune personality of prophetess, priestess, and preacher." A leading article closes with the following remarks :—

The true moral of the affair is probably that persecution and fanaticism stand in the relation of cause and effect. The only persecuting Church left in the world is the one of which the Czar stands at the head. Hundreds of miserable creatures, in Holy Russia, are constantly visited with fine, imprisonment, and the still sharper rigours of the law, for no worse crime than the desire to worship in their own way. The Protestant Stundists—models of piety and of Christian virtue—are walled up alive, after a fashion, not by their own hands, but by the Procurator of the Holy Synod, who sends them to gaol by battalions to convince them of the superior virtues of his own creed. The fanatics in the high places make the fanatics in the low. This, we are convinced, is the true lesson of the horrors of Tiraspol.

Quite true—except the second sentence. Surely Rome has not ceased to be a persecuting power? She is her own witness that she is semper eadem—always the same.

The poor parents in the neighbourhood of Kingsland-road, London, who object to Ritualistic practices, and yet are obliged to send their children to a school where they are taught to bow to "the altar," etc., have a clear ground of complaint. To say to them that the practices are only "High," is no reply to their complaints, and no redress of their grievances. The thing that offends is essentially Romish. It is a gross outrage, if, as one mother stated, the cane is administered to a child who does not join in "the procession." Hundreds of orders have been made in the court for children to attend this school. If this kind of persecution is persisted in, it will all the sooner bring popular control wherever a school receives aid from public money.

The ideal aimed at in the Prince of Wales's Jubilee Hospital Fund is still far from realisation. The "equivalent of £100,000 in annual subscriptions" seems very far away when we read that of the £125,000 that has been sent in only £20,000 is in the form of annual subscriptions. The occurrence of the famine in India, coincident with the innumerable Jubilee schemes, local and other, that have been launched, will mainly account for this. But the uncertainty as to what is to be done with the money has also something to do with it, and the Prince of Wales's statement on the question at Marlboro' House last Friday will be received with a general feeling of reassurance that ought to give a new impetus to the fund. He said :

It will never do to give money right and left to hospitals which we hear are in need. It will be necessary for us to investigate the state in which these hospitals are, to find out those which are in most pressing need of assistance, and also to form some opinion as to the state of efficiency in which they at present exist, and how the management is carried on. I merely mention this now because it must be a subject which will become one of paramount importance in a very short time.

Apropos of speeches at banquets on behalf of charitable institutions, a gentleman of some experience in these matters writes :—

It has been a frequent trial to me to find so little sympathy or knowledge of the principles or love of Christian work shown by the speakers. I suppose they find it hard or impossible to give a speech with really live Christian feeling after a good dinner. If they spoke fasting, and had their dinner afterwards, we should have much more yearning and solicitude displayed.

An important experiment is about to be tried at Birmingham in the way of reducing the number of licensed houses. The brewers agree with the magistrates that the number is too large, and express their willingness to co-operate in carrying out some scheme of reduction. Probably the first thing at least will be to abolish the lower-class houses, and to allow the building of one large house under what is called "efficient control," in each district affected. We gravely doubt whether this will have any effect upon the drinking and the drunkenness; and nothing is gained unless that is done. Merely to have fewer houses, but perhaps equal accommodation, and more attraction, will do no good. All the same, we wish it might work the other way, and we shall look for the results of the experiment with great interest.

The suicide of a Haileybury schoolboy has caused a painful shock, has roused afresh the anxieties of parents who have sons at public schools, and has again brought under survey the remarkable system of ethics which prevail among schoolboys. Since it is considered the worst of all sins to "sneak"—i.e., to report the injustice and cruelty and cowardly outrage to which a boy is daily subjected at the hands of his fellows, the meanest boys can perpetrate their wrong doings with impunity. The reform wanted is a reform of that false code of "honour" which seals a boy's lips from exposing wrong by whomsoever and to whomsoever done. How this is to be done it is not for us to say, but it ought not to be beyond the power and influence of masters and teachers. They ought to make the boys under their care as safe as the boys who come home every night, and whose troubles are soon found out by vigilant parents.

The late Dr. John Pulsford said in his earlier days: "If there is a place in the world I would not like to go to it is Hull." Yet he went there, and spent twenty happy years. Our personal prejudices and preferences are most unsafe guides; if stubbornly followed they are almost sure to bring us into sorrow. "Choose Thou my lot" is the only safe and right attitude of mind.

The Apostle James teaches us that we should say, "If the Lord will, we will do this or that." In this half-century, however, it has become the habit of many to say, "If the Lord tarry, we will do this or that." Can this substitution for the older and apostolic formula be scripturally explained and justified? Is not the Lord's will the highest of all motives, and as valid in the nineteenth as in the first century? What is gained by the alteration?

Professor Crum Brown, of Edinburgh University, when addressing the Edinburgh Medical Students' Christian Association, contended that almost every disputed doctrine of the age had been taken up by the writers of the Epistles, while not a single direct reference to the doctrine of the divinity of our Lord is to be found in their writings. This would imply either that the churches universally believed the doctrine, and that there was, therefore, no need to treat of it; or that they all disbelieved it. The Professor finds, in 1 Cor. viii. 6, an incidental reference to Christ, which, he thinks, proves the former alternative to be the correct one. "One Lord" could only mean to the believers of that age, "The Lord, the one only Almighty God."

This is true so far, but the deity of our Lord seems to us to be implied in the whole structure and tone of the Epistles. For example, the love of Christ is represented as the equivalent of the love of God—Romans viii. 35-39. The love described in Eph. iii. 14-19, is love which only the infinite and eternal God could possess. Or what could more forcibly refute the argument of those who make much of God the Father, but do not recognise Christ as his Son, than Phil. ii. 9-11, "God hath highly exalted Him, . . that every tongue should confess that Jesus Christ is Lord—to the glory of God the Father"!

It is a very great thing to be a Christian. Between a Christian, and not-a-Christian, there is all the difference between life and death. The instruction and encouragement contained in the following extract from "Gurnall's Christian in complete Armour" (1669) is a word in season to many a young and timid believer of the present day:—

Why, poor hearts, should you despise the day of small things? Do you not see a little grain of mustard seed spread into a tree, and weak grace compared to it for its growth at last, as well as littleness at first? Dareat thou say thou hast no grace at all? If thou hast but any (though the least that ever any had to begin with) I dare tell thee that He hath done more for thee in that than He should in making that which is now so weak as perfect as the saints' grace is now in heaven.

First, He hath done more, considering it as an act of power. There is a greater gulf between no grace and grace than between weak grace and strong, between a chaos and nothing than between a chaos and this beautiful frame of heaven and earth. The first day's work of both creations is the greatest.

Secondly, consider it as an act of grace, it is a greater mercy to give the first grace of conversion than to crown that with glory. It is more grace and condescension in a prince to marry a poor damsel than, having married her, to clothe her like a princess; he was free to do the first or not, but his relation to her pleads strongly for the other. God might have chosen whether He would have given thee grace or no, but having done this, thy relation to Him, and his covenant also, do oblige him to add more and more, till He hath fitted thee as a bride for Himself in glory.

Rom. v. 9, 10, and viii. 32-34 are entirely in accord with these important assurances.

Mr. Morley's Romanes Lecture on Macchiavelli has as its strongest point the assertion of the necessity of morality in states as much as in persons. He even affirms that the "modern conception of a state has long made it a moral person, capable of right and wrong, just as are the individuals composing it." We wish this were the fact; it is the ideal toward which society is slowly moving; but as yet a collective conscience is a very elastic thing, and has a ready way of excusing, for "reasons of state," conduct in bodies of men which it would unhesitatingly condemn in individuals. In this respect Macchiavellism has an enormous power over modern Europe; indeed, we wonder where morality comes in when nations treat with one another. Expediency we see, might we see, but where is the golden rule? Morality is only with difficulty forcing its way into home legislation, as against class interests; but this makes us all the more thankful that such a man as Mr. Morley has reminded the world of its indebtedness to Jesus Christ for its purest moral conceptions, and that by them "societies subsist and governments are strong."

In a Heathen Chief's Kraal.

WHILE conducting services at Bizana, the seat of Major Sprigg's magistracy in Eastern Pondoland, Ndunge, a petty chief and one of Sigcan's councillors, invited me to come and preach at his kraal one day. Accordingly, I started off in company with Mrs. Sprigg, who went to interpret for me. On reaching the kraal we found Ndunge (who is usually attired in his blanket at home) had arrayed himself in boots and European clothing to receive us. After waiting some three hours while he sent out to call the people together in the manner they used to pass the war cry in former days—by calling from kraal to kraal from an adjacent hill—we had a service with from fifty to sixty people, all raw heathen, with the exception of some half-dozen Christians who had come to help us in singing and prayer.

Mrs. Sprigg first exhibited a roll of Bible lesson pictures, and gave a short explanation of each. Then, after the usual exercises of singing and prayer, I pressed home the question, "How shall we escape, if we neglect so great salvation?" The people listened with very great attention. A Christian woman who returned from the service to Bizana some hours later than us informs us that the Chief had been deeply impressed, and said, "he wanted to cry all the time, though he didn't know why." Though a raw heathen he is a man of considerable intelligence. Though, in private conversation, he tried to plead that "God would not hold them responsible for the sins they had committed before the white people brought them the words of God," he admitted that even then he knew many things were wrong, and that as Chief he would have punished a man who stole or killed. He has promised to come into native services I expect to conduct for a few days, and we have reason to believe he may then surrender to God's claims upon him.

In common with all the people around, he has now been for some time under the influence of Major and Mrs. Sprigg, whom I find doing their best for the highest good of both Europeans and natives around them, and through whose Christian work one of Ndunge's wives has lately been converted, along with several other women. The influence of an aggressive Christian in the position of magistrate in this land, from a political as well as a missionary standpoint, simply cannot be estimated. Another official position in which a duly qualified doctor of medicine would find plenty of opportunities for native mission work is that of District Surgeon, with which the Government gives a yearly salary of £200, and private practice. Major Sprigg informs me that this appointment in his magistracy almost goes begging, while a registered practitioner desirous of doing work like this for God could actually be a self-supporting missionary. Further information on this point can be obtained on application to me, at 1, Fairview-terrace, Mowbray, Cape Town.

'Ask of Me.'

AT this season when so many will gather together in conference to speak of "things touching the King," it is well that our thoughts should be directed to the importance of intercession. For there is nothing of greater moment at the present time than the condition of the Church's prayer life. What with the ever-increasing number of meetings, and the multiplication of books and periodicals, unceasing prayer "for all saints" and "for all men" has almost become a lost art. In this nineteenth century we love to hear of some new thing, and to make our voices heard in teaching or conversation, but we have little or no time for meditation and prayer. The one-accord prayer-meeting and the closet open only to the eye of God are well-nigh out of date and out of fashion.

And yet the reverent and repeated study of the life and words of our Lord and his apostles deepens the conviction that prayer is the mainspring of missions, and occupies a larger place in the evangelisation of the world than any of us have yet grasped. Take for instance one great fact. When the Lord Jesus spoke of the abundance of the harvest and the scarcity of labourers, He gave one specific and significant command for the guidance of the Church in every missionary crisis. What was it? "Pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest, that He would send forth labourers into his harvest" (Luke x. 2). Here in this clear injunction—which might well be described as a key to missions—we are not told to apply to men for the Lord, but to the Lord for the men. The Lord, and not the church or the missionary society, is the Lord of the harvest, and as the labourers are all in his hand, application must be made direct to Himself to thrust them out into the unoccupied places of the field. Even as we read in the Epistle to the Ephesians, "When He ascended on high, He led captivity captive, and gave gifts unto men. And He gave some to be apostles; and some, prophets; and some, evangelists; and some, pastors and teachers; for the perfecting of the saints, unto the work of ministering, unto the building up of the body of Christ" (Ep. iv. 8—12. R.V.). And in the Acts of the Apostles where "the executive of the Holy Trinity" and the Divine Administrator of the Church said, "Separate Me Barnabas and Paul for the work whereunto I have called them" (Acts xiii. 2).

The coming conference at Mildmay on "The Evangelisation of our Generation" ought to go far in effecting the accomplishment of God's will upon the earth, but it will not reach the highest point of usefulness, unless by much prayer and fasting it enters fully into fellowship with the yearning of the heart of Christ.

"Ask of Me, and I shall give thee the heathen for thine inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for thy possession." "And when they heard that, they lifted up their voice to God with one accord." "And when they had prayed, the place was shaken where they were assembled together: and they were all filled with the Holy Ghost, and they spake the word of God with boldness."

We have the commission "Go ye," but the ranks of the workers will never close up until the Church shall throw herself upon her face, and cry with united voice, "Thy kingdom come," and pray as we read in his "private devotions" Bishop Andrewes constantly prayed, "O Lord of the harvest, send forth labourers, made sufficient by Thee, into thy harvest."

"Follow Holiness."—2.

Heb. xii. 14.

By Mr. GEORGE MÜLLER.*

III. Now we come to the next and the chief point. How are we more and more to attain this Christ-like life which the apostle describes as holiness—growing daily in likeness to our Lord Jesus Christ, and leading holy and useful lives?

Let us turn to 2 Peter i. 5-11: "Giving all diligence, add to your faith virtue." Observe that in the first verse the apostle is addressing believers who have obtained like precious faith with himself. Now they are exhorted what to do as believers in order that they may grow in holiness.

Add to this faith which you have, virtue. What is meant by virtue may be learned from Phil. iv. 8. It is whatsoever things are true, honest, just, pure, lovely, of good report—that is virtue; everything that tends to glorify God, everything like Christ. Seek diligently to add to your faith virtue.

"And to virtue knowledge." Not secular or scientific knowledge, but spiritual knowledge, is here spoken of—the knowledge of God and of Christ. Thus we learn the vanity of earthly things, the blessedness of heavenly things.

Let me affectionately ask, are you aiming at this spiritual knowledge? Are you habitual readers of the Word of God? Have you ever read through the Bible from Genesis to Revelation? How many times since your conversion? Ask yourself in the presence of God, How is it with me? Do you neglect reading or prayer or meditation on the Word of God?

Bear with a word of personal experience. For the first three years after my conversion I read the Word, but I did not love it; but in July, 1829, God made me a lover of his Word, and since then I have read it through about 150 times. When I begin again it is a new book—a new delight. Four times a year, for many years, I have read through the Bible. To this constant feeding upon the Word of God I owe it that for sixy-eight years I have been a very happy Christian. If any of you have not obtained this blessing already, I entreat you seek it.

"Add to your knowledge temperance." The word means not merely avoiding excesses in eating and drinking, but self-control concerning all our natural inclinations and tendencies—love of money, hasty temper, pride and high-mindedness, love of dress and fashion—all things hateful to the mind of God. Self-control is mastery over self. We have no strength of our own to do this, but we can come confessing our weakness and helplessness to God, and pray Him to give us the victory, that our natural will and appetites may be more and more subdued.

"To self-control patience." This is the grace according to which, meekly submitting ourselves, we bow under the hand of God when trials, losses, bereavements come. One may say, "I am naturally impatient; I shall never get the mastery over myself." That is a mistake. By the grace of God you may. You ought to seek grace to be patient. The want of patience in Christians stumbles the unconverted. They say, "That is just like myself. There is no difference between him and me." By the manifestation of patience we give joy to God, and show the reality of our Christian life, and strengthen the hands of our brethren in Christ.

"And to patience godliness." Undertake nothing without God—to glorify Him, in his strength and in his fear; living, acting, speaking, thinking, in the presence of God, at all times. Thus, in all our actions and deportment, we should set a holy example to the unconverted, and strengthen the hands and hearts of our fellow-believers. We should more and more aim at this, that whether we eat or drink, or whatsoever we do, we may do all to the glory of God.

"To godliness love to the brethren." This does not mean Christians related to us, as uncles and aunts and cousins. We are to love all Christians because they are believers in Christ. Though not in the same position as we are, or not educated as we have been, if they are believers they are to be loved simply because they have been redeemed by the blood of Christ, and they love Him. How deeply important this is. We need especially to guard this. All who hold the foundations of the faith are to be loved as our brethren.

Lastly. "Add to love of the brethren love." Love to all. Though not converted, our fellow-men are to be loved. Though they do not love us, though they hate us, though they injure us, we are to love them, for God is love. The more we have of this universal love the more we are like God, for he that dwelleth in love dwelleth in God, and God in him.

IV. Now what will be the result of all this? He who thus builds himself up on his most holy faith will not be barren (or idle) and unfruitful. He will bear fruit to the praise and honour of God. We are not idle as believers in the Lord Jesus, but if we add grace to grace, as we have been here exhorted, the result will be to make us abound to every good work. This will be its tendency. It will make you not to be idle or unfruitful in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ.

How many Christians there are who say, under various circumstances, they do not know how to act, but if they were habitually adding to their faith virtue, and to virtue knowledge, and to knowledge temperance, and to temperance patience, and to patience godliness, and to godliness brotherly kindness, and to brotherly kindness love, they would have light on their path, and would know how to act.

I receive letters from numbers of places asking me to see the writers to confer with me as to what to do; and again and again I have found it to be because they have not been adding to faith these other graces; for if we are aiming after these things, we shall know how to act in the various circumstances which arise in our lives. When difficulties come I do not go off to a distant place to confer as to what I should do, but I take the matter to the living God. I remind my Lord Jesus that He is the Counsellor of his Church, and I say, Prove Thyself now to be my Counsellor and Guide.

Again, there are thousands who do not know that their sins are forgiven, and yet they are true children of God. How does this come about? Because they have not added to their faith, and followed holiness with earnestness and perseverance. "For he that lacketh these things is blind, and cannot see afar off, and hath forgotten that he was purged from his old sins."

See, then, how important it is to follow holiness with diligence, in order not to be dim-sighted, but to make our calling and election sure. If we do not know we are on the road to heaven, we care about the beggarly things of this world. Before my conversion I delighted in the ball-room, the theatre, the card-table, the billiard-table; I have never had any desire for such things since, but have had the blessed prospect of heaven before me, and joys meanwhile far surpassing anything I sought for, but never obtained in the world's pleasures. Now, I am as sure of going to heaven as if I was there, because I simply trust in Christ for the salvation of my soul. And that is what I desire for everyone here, so that you may be as happy as myself.

The apostle goes on to show the blessing of following holiness with perseverance. "For if ye do these things ye shall never fall. For so an entrance shall be ministered unto you abundantly into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ."

There are two ways of getting into heaven—(1) entering like a vessel going into port full sail, and (2) saved, yet so as by fire, and, alas, many get to heaven in this latter way. It is our privilege to reach heaven as a vessel in full sail. For over seventy years it has been my desire thus to finish my course with joy, and to obtain an abundant entrance, and God is delighted to give the blessing in full. By following holiness with perseverance to the end, we shall not be like Asa, who though he walked so as to glorify God for thirty-nine years, in the last two years of his reign he dishonoured his God. So I pray that we all may finish our course with joy, and obtain an abundant entrance into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ.

Cheer to the Desponding.

In sending you the first instalment of a translation of some religious poems in German which only exist in manuscript, you will bear with a little personal reminiscence which accounts for my possession of them. In my early days I found in a library which then existed in Paternoster-row a book that charmed and captivated my whole heart. It was "Heinrich Stilling." The record of a life to illustrate the doctrine of a particular Providence, written by Johann Heinrich Jung, it gives a lovely view of simple village life, and the warmth and largeness of heart and Christian sympathy of Germans in various stages of society, and the steps by which the author, a village lad, was led into a position of commanding influence.

So much was I taken with this book that I succeeded in getting an introduction to the English translator of it (who was also translator of "Elijah the Tishbite" and "Gerhard Tersteegen)." In his hospitable home every Wednesday evening was devoted to missionary meetings with the German missionary students of the Church Missionary Training Institution at Islington, mostly missionaries from Basle. Oh, those stirring chorales and warm, loving fellowships are a spur to missionary interests. My friend kindly entrusted me with a manuscript translation of his own of German poems, of which the following is a specimen.

Algiers. Geo. Pearse.

Arise, poor spirit, and forsake
The dark abode of gloomy care,
For God a glorious end shall make
Of all that now seems hard to bear.
He knows the path that leads to bliss,
Then all thy useless griefs dismiss.

When secret sorrows on thee frown,
Unknown to all but God alone,
When evil threatens thee to drown,
Still bid thy anxious fears begone:
The clouds of grief shall pass away,
And in the east shall dawn the day.

Soon shall the genial sun appear
And smile on thee in glory bright,
While o'er the face of heaven so dear
No passing cloud obscures the light:
Then shalt thou tread the path of joy,
And care and grief no more annoy.

Liverpool Medical Mission.—One Monday Dr. Bond had 136 patients to attend to single-handed at the Burlington-street Dispensary. Of course, a number of these had been seen before, and the average attendance is not so high. These figures show how large a congregation is secured for the ministry of the Gospel by this Christ-like agency. An assistant medical missionary for the Burlington-street Dispensary will have to be got or the numbers considerably limited. This alternative is sad to contemplate while the people are showing such appreciation of the Mission, and while the Lord is owning the work with his blessing.

Always Led in Triumph.

2 Cor. ii. 14, etc.

By Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A.

So Saul was back again in Tarsus, where he remained for seven or eight years, engaged in quiet, earnest work for the kingdom of God. The direction in which his energies were directed is suggested by two references in Acts xv. In the twenty-second verse, the Apostles and elder brethren address their circular letter expressly to the brethren which are of the Gentiles in Syria and Cilicia. And in the forty-first verse, we learn that Paul, with Silas as his fellow-traveller, went through Syria and Cilicia confirming the churches. Evidently there were infant churches scattered through his native province of Cilicia, and the conclusion is almost irresistible that they were called into existence by the fervid appeals and devoted labours of the young disciple, who, in pursuance of the Lord's injunction, went home to tell his friend how great things the Lord had done for him.

It is probable that his work lay mostly with the synagogues, as in after years, as the point of attack, and that when he was compelled to separate the disciples from their unbelieving associates, he received into church fellowship believers from among the Gentiles. As yet, however, he was only feeling his way in this direction. His main purpose was the salvation of the Jews, and he would have shrunk from standing forth as the designated Apostle of the Gentiles. It has been supposed that many of his deepest experiences of privation and peril must have taken place in the course of his efforts to spread the Gospel in these years. We all remember that marvellous enumeration—labours more abundant, stripes above measure, deaths oft, five times the forty stripes save one; thrice beaten with rods, thrice shipwrecked, a night and day in the deep; in perils, labour, travail, watchings, hunger and thirst, cold and nakedness. There is positively no room in his life, as narrated by the chronicler of the Acts of the Apostles, for many of these, especially when we call to mind that the second epistle to Corinth was written before his expulsion from Ephesus, and therefore before the long series of trials with which the Book of the Acts closes.

It is, therefore, more than probable that we are to conclude that from the very hour that he began to follow the Saviour he became identified with His progress through the world; hated, resisted, despised, and crucified, but pursuing his triumphant progress to his throne.

This conception was closely associated in the Apostle's mind with his unprecedented experiences, as will appear to any thoughtful student of the Second Epistle to Corinthians, and especially of the second chapter and fourteenth verse: "Thanks be unto God, which always leadeth us in triumph in Christ, and maketh manifest through us the savour of his knowledge in every place. For we are a sweet savour of Christ unto God, in them that are being saved, and in them that are perishing."

The Metaphor was gathered from the scene of a Roman Triumph, one of the most notable events in the old world, when some great general, a Cæsar or Marius, returning from distant scenes of triumph, ascended the Capitoline Hill, amid the plaudits of the assembled citizens and the fragrance of sweet odours. Before his chariot were paraded captive kings and princes; after it came long lines of prisoners laden with the spoils of war. About this time Claudius was celebrating his victories in Britain, and among his captive princes marched the brave Caractacus.

To the vivid mind of the Apostle, always more prone to use metaphors borrowed from the life of men in camps and cities, than from scenes of natural beauty, it seemed as though the pageantry of the scene, which so often stirred Rome to its heart, was a meet emblem of the progress of Christ through the world, Hades and death bound to his chariot wheels, his arms filled with spoils, his train composed of the thousands whom He had conquered, and amongst whom Paul was proud to count himself.

Is not this an able picture of every age? Every great crisis in the past has helped to advance the glorious reign of Christ. Was the fall of Babylon a crisis? It gave mankind a universal speech—the language spoken by Alexander and his soldiers—the delicate, subtle Greek in which the New Testament was written. Was the fall of Rome a crisis? It opened the way to the rise of the northern nations, which have ever been the home of Liberty and the Gospel. Was the fall of Feudalism, in the French Revolution, a crisis? It made the splendid achievements of the nineteenth century possible. And we may look without dismay on the events that cast a shadow on all hearts. They also shall serve the cause of the Gospel. In ways we cannot tell, they shall prepare for the triumph of our King. Through the throes of the present travail the new heavens and earth shall be born. The agony is not as the expiring groan of the dying gladiator, but as the sigh of the mother bringing forth her first-born. These things, said our Lord, must needs be; and they are the beginning of travail (Matt. xxiv. 8, R.V.). And amid all Jesus rides in triumph to his destined glory and the crown of all the earth.

The Apostle's Personal Position in his Master's procession was clearly apprehended and perpetually accentuated. He never wearied of describing himself as the slave of Jesus Christ. "Paul, a slave of Jesus Christ, called to be an apostle, separated unto the Gospel of God."

He had been a rebel chieftain. With fire and sword he had ravaged the flock of God. He had measured his strength with Jesus of Nazareth, but had met more than his match. The Stronger One had come upon him, taken away his armour, and bound him with fetters from which he could not get free. He would not, if he could; nor could he, if he would. From that hour, in which he had been smitten to the ground on the road to Damascus, he had been content to be led from city to city, from continent to continent, in the triumphal progress of his Lord, a trophy of his mighty power to bring the most stubborn under his yoke. "Thanks be unto God," he cries, "who always leadeth us in triumph."

Is this your conception of your life? Captured! Apprehended by Jesus Christ! Set apart for Himself! Do you realise that you are bound by the most sacred fetters to your Conqueror and are following his chariot through the earth? Life would assume a new aspect if you realised this, and that all you are in your person and own in your property has become Immanuel's.

Those whom Jesus leads in triumph share his triumph. They may be a spectacle to angels or to men. Sometimes in the stocks; often accounted the off-scouring of all things; yet, in the spiritual realm, they are made to triumph always. Conquered, they conquer; enslaved, they are free; last in this world, but in the front rank of heavenly society. Poor, beaten, vanquished soul, lift up thy head and rejoice, for if thou art conquered by Jesus, thou shalt be always made to triumph!

The Influence of Christ on the Character of those who follow Him is also clearly delineated. The metaphor is changed, and the Apostle deems himself no longer a slave, but a freed servant, a citizen, a friend, bearing a bowl of incense from which redolent vapours steal into the air. God makes manifest through him in every place the sweet savour of the knowledge of Jesus. Wherever he went, men knew Jesus better; the loveliness of the Master's character became more apparent. Men became aware of a subtle fragrance, poured upon the air, which attracted them in the Man of Nazareth. The world became purer, the tone of society healthier, the morals and manners of men more refined.

What an ideal this is for us all, so to live that though we are unable to speak much or occupy a commanding position, yet from our lives a holy savour may be spread abroad, which will not be ours, but Christ's! Let us live so near Him, that we may absorb his fragrance, and then go forth to exhale it again in pureness, in knowledge, in long-suffering, in kindness, in the Holy Spirit, in love unfeigned, in the word of truth, and in the power of God. Just as a piece of clay or sponge may become so impregnated with some aromatic spice, that it will scent the drawer, cupboard, or box in which it lies, so we may become impregnated with the sweetness of Jesus, and spread it by an irresistible influence in every place where we are called to live or work.

Yet once again the Thought changes. The apostle imagines himself to be no longer the hand that swings the incense-bowl, but the incense itself. He says, "We are unto God a sweet savour of Christ." How marvellously scent awakens memory! In a moment it will waft us back through long years to some old country lane, garden, or orange-grove, summoning to mind people and events associated with it in the happy past.

When, therefore, we are told that we may be to God a sweet savour of Christ, it must be meant that we may so live as to recall to the mind of God what Jesus was in his mortal career. It is as though, as God watches us from day to day, He should see Jesus in us, and be reminded (speaking after the manner of men) of that blessed life which was offered as an offering and a sacrifice to God for a sweet-smelling savour.

What a test for daily living! Is my life fragrant of Jesus? Do I remind the Father of the blessed Lord? Does He detect Jesus in my walk and speech? so that in me the sweet savour of that daily burnt-offering, that delight in God's will, that holy joy in suffering for his glory, that absorption in his purposes, which made the life of the Son of Man so well-pleasing to God?

At the foot of the Capitoline Hill the ancient triumph divided. Some of the captives were led off to the dark precincts of the Tullianum, where they were put to death. Others were reserved to live. The same fragrance was associated with the perishing on the one hand and the saved on the other. Thus it is in all Gospel-preaching and holy living. The sun that melts clay hardens wax, the light that bleaches linen tans the hands which expose it; the cloud is light to Israel, and midnight to Egypt. Those who have life are helped to intenser life, and those who lack it are only driven to further excesses of sin. To one we are the savour of life unto life, to the other of death unto death.

And is not this the moral of the whole: that, amid the convulsions and changes around us, in the face of privation and trial in our personal life, we should set ourselves more than ever to shed abroad the sweet savour of the knowledge of Jesus, and to be personally redolent with his love and purity? This is the supreme end and purpose of Christian living. Oh to be broken as alabaster boxes of very precious ointment over the head and feet of Jesus, that the house may be filled with the odour of the ointment, compounded, by the art of the apothecary, from the Rose of Sharon and the Lily of the Valley!

It was in such a mood that Saul of Tarsus spent the years of waiting which preceded the great opportunity of his life. It was in the cultivation of such virtues that he awaited the coming of Barnabas.

Teaching the Blind.—With reference to her work, mentioned on April 29 in an editorial letter from Jerusalem, Miss Lovell writes: "It is quite true that the Braille system is far superior to any other for educational purposes, and has been most valuable for Arabic; but I recognise that the Moon system has its own large sphere of usefulness, and in that sphere is superior to Braille—for those who have become blind late in life, or for such as have hands hardened or numb."

Loyalty to Christ.

THE closing address to the Established Church of Scotland Assembly in Edinburgh by Dr. MAIR, the Moderator, was in many respects most noteworthy and admirable. We give some extracts from the earlier portion, which deals with the first principles of the Gospel of Christ. The whole address is published as a sixpenny pamphlet by Messrs. Blackwood and Sons, of Edinburgh.

"OUR aim must be nothing less than to keep before us the great purpose of God for our world—the reconciling of it in Christ Jesus unto Himself—and to act in harmony with that purpose in true, spiritual, heaven-born loyalty to our King. And who shall tell the effect, if all should live and labour with that view and aim, and dominated by that motive of loyalty?

"We who are of the ministry, when we go back to our people and our studies, would surely, for example, find it a powerful protection against taking up with the views of such as tell us that our Great King and Head has furnished us with no trustworthy account of his life on earth—no reliable statement of what He said or did; that the history which has been provided is not history at all, but only poetry and the product of fancy and excited feelings; that it is impossible He could have said and done the things which are there attributed to Him; that He wrought no miracle, and that no miracle was wrought in connection with Him; that when he stood by the side of the dead and bade them arise, they did not arise, and He only meant that some day their spirits would rise; that He had not power to forgive sins, and when He said 'Thy sins be forgiven thee,' it was no more than a kindly outburst of feeling; and that the authority with which He spoke was none other than is possessed by a man of pronounced ability and influential character—who take upon them to suppose that at a distance of 1900 years we may write a truer history than those who accompanied Him, and saw and heard Him, and whom He loved and taught and led, although we have really no other materials for the purpose so trustworthy as those they have provided for us, and can have no better governance from on high than they had. Placing ourselves in the position of which I speak, it would seem impossible to hold such views. If I should say, 'I will look up to my Lord and King, and will say to his face, "No miracle was done by Thee; no miracle can be done,"' mine own mouth would condemn me, demanding of me, 'Who hath proved this to thee? Thou chargest also the appointed witnesses of thy Lord with unfitness. Who art thou?' Rather—and here, in these times, so trying to some, I would venture a word more especially to my brethren who are young in the ministry—in any time of doubt, or of temptation to doubt, true loyalty would speak in the spirit of Job when in his difficulties he said, 'Though I were righteous, yet would I not answer, but I would make supplication to my Judge.' Even if doubts were free from sin and purely intellectual—which in our present human nature is not possible—even then the best treatment of them is, on our knees to spread them out where the light of heaven may fall on them, and the light and power of heaven may most directly touch our hearts and minds; that is, in the presence of our Lord and communing with Him.

"Doubt has not come in our day for the first time. Nor are we less qualified to deal with our difficulties than our forefathers of all generations to deal with theirs. Take counsel frankly with others than those who are in a similar case to your own—with men of spiritual and intellectual experience who stand fast in the faith and quit them like men. For how can one reed shaken with the wind help another? Or if the doubting lead the doubting, what then? Above all, that was wise counsel of the prophet to such as feared the Lord, but had no light, 'Let him trust in the name of the Lord, and stay upon his God.' And that test of doctrine laid down by our Lord is of perpetual application, 'If any man will do his will, he shall know of the doctrine whether it be of God.' Only let us be sure of this—we cannot expect to be helpful to others unless our own feet are rightly and firmly planted, our own souls securely anchored. Nor, indeed, have we any right as ministers of Christ to lecture our fellow-men on their duties, or any right to expect success in doing it, except in so far as we show those duties to arise from, and to be founded on, and demanded by, the doctrines taught by Christ and his apostles.

"Near of kin to doctrine is devotion. Here also we ought to be helped in questions as to the public expression of it, by endeavouring to see how they appear in the presence of our Head. In that light does worship or devotion appear to be enhanced by proceedings of the nature of mechanical devices? If devotion be its own creator, if its chief end be in itself, or if it be the work of man offered to God as if He needed anything, then truly it may be our duty to clothe it with pomp and circumstance, to magnify even the arrangement of furniture, to call in the art of the decorator, and the aid of lighted candles, and to make broad the phylactery of him that presides and adjust his position by the compass. For there would be no limit to the importance of eking it out, even down to the utmost triviality. But if worship or devotion is of the Holy Spirit, if it is communion with God, if its chief end is to give unto God the worship and glory that is due, and to quicken, enrich, and strengthen, the soul with life from on high, the case is altered. And they who honestly seek to know how it appears under the eye of their Lord, must feel with a force which no argument can equal that such accompaniments as we have referred to are of no account—that they can neither carry the soul within the veil nor commend it to God; and also that, on the other hand, all blessings descending come direct to the worshipper passing by the unsought and unhonoured skill of the mechanist.

"If in the same light we would see the debated question of the validity of what by some is called Holy Orders—that is, the authority by which we are ministers of the Gospel and exercise the functions of that office—let me first recall, not for discussion, but for elucidation of the subject, what has recently been announced with authority for the Church of Rome—viz., that Christ established his religion as a sacramental and sacrificial system absolutely dependent upon a sacerdotal order; that by the sacraments faithful souls have their sins truly forgiven, the friendship of God restored, and the supernatural life of the soul created; that the priests possess miraculous powers whereby they daily offer the true sacrifice of Jesus Christ upon the altar and forgive the sins of men; that the perpetuation and the application to souls of this Divine sacrificial and sacramental economy depends upon a true and valid succession to the priesthood of Christ; and that this succession depends on the use of the proper rite, and especially of the words used in the rite; that any other rite breaks the succession.

"Now, if those doctrines are believed to be true, if that is thought to be the position of the ministry, those who believe such things may well hold that they have something worth possessing; and they may be envied by such as are not content to be only men and ministers, but vainly covet the divine power of working a miracle and the divine prerogative of forgiving sins. If, however, those things are believed to be not true, but contrary to Scripture, contrary to the evidence of facts, repugnant to reason, abhorrent to a spirit of reverence, they create between any Church that upholds them and Churches which repudiate them a gulf so wide and deep that it requires me in my present purpose to keep on this side of it and speak only of the Churches that repudiate them. What, then, is left for the ministry of such Churches? I will tell what is left for us. We have our King—who is our King, because He did once for all give Himself a sacrifice for us—a King who wills not that any other should give Him in sacrifice or crucify Him afresh—who lives not now in order to be sacrificed, but to reign, and who must reign till all things are put under his feet. We have not only his presence and governance, but we have his commission, as his ambassadors, to gather in his people, and as his ministers to minister to them when gathered in—all with the warning that the efficacy of his ordinances is not from any power in themselves or in the person who administers them, but is solely from our King's sovereign power to bless, and the working of his Spirit in them that by faith receive them.

"It is indeed an obvious necessity for the sake of good order that every one of these Churches should have a fixed procedure and form for the setting apart of men to its ministry. But it is quite another question whether any one of them is entitled to say to its neighbour: 'Stand by: you follow different procedure, you use another form, you are no Church of Christ'; or to say to those who have been set apart in a different way: 'You are no minister of the Church of Christ.' This is a kind of question in which discussion of man with man will do no good at all to those whose opinions are formed. It is difficult to conceive how any man having common-sense, and being a Christian, can believe that Christ is pleased with the vain jangling to which some have turned aside about 'Orders,' or with the presumption of such as plume themselves that they are not as other men are.

"That qualification of a minister which has principally suggested itself in these thoughts is authority. But there is at least one other that must be held of equal importance. Besides being vested with authority, he must be endued with power—the energy of spiritual life moved by loyalty to heaven and longing for mankind. Authority without power is but the official uniform on a man of straw. And whatever theory may be held about authority, all may see that it is no guarantee for power; for it is often found without it. And then may be seen also one of the saddest sights in the ministry, the effort to make authority and empty function serve the place of power—an effort foredoomed to failure. None will doubt that this great grace of spiritual power is a gift of our Divine Head, conveyed by the Holy Spirit, a part of that complete power given to Him at his ascension, by which He is subduing all things unto Himself. And surely never by the teaching of God did it enter the mind of any man that this power must travel to us along the line of the departed dead who have gone before us. Thus once more we are brought face to face with the infinite importance, the practical necessity, of living in the conscious acknowledgment of Christ, and waiting upon Him as Head of the Church, Head of our work, Head of ourselves, from whom comes all our power."

Alexandria Institute.—This good work, for the benefit of soldiers and sailors, continues under the superintendence of Rev. T. R. Lawrence, who may be addressed, care of Miss Sheppard, Leggatts, Potter's Bar, near London. During the hot days of last summer, when the cholera was at its height, a mission, which God greatly blessed, was held at the Branch Institute in Mustapha Camp. Not only were many soldiers brought to Christ, and some backsliders restored, but a lasting impression was made throughout the camp The attendance of soldiers, which had for the previous two years been smaller than usual, has much increased. The average attendance of soldiers (reckoning both Institutes) is between seventy and eighty each evening, whilst on Sundays and other special occasions the number is far more. Besides this the town Institute is frequented by sailors of many nationalities, the doors being open to all Englishmen, and amongst those who constantly attend are Italians, Greeks, Jews, Copts, Arabs, Syrians, Armenians, and Abyssinians.

Effort on Board Ship.

Extracts from the Journal of a Young Missionary on his First Outward Voyage.

SEVERAL of us went on shore at Port Said. There were some very interesting types of people walking about. I saw one or two married women with the veils up to their eyes as one sees in pictures, and a Soudanese soldier in full dress; but the whole atmosphere seemed to be one of iniquity. I saw some things going on which saddened and sickened me, and the thought that "Christian" Europeans are the cause of all the evil was not a cheering one.

In the Red Sea it was frightfully hot; several of us slept on deck every night. The great excitement lately was the arranging and performing of an entertainment. All things considered, it was a great success, and you should have heard the sailors join in the chorus of "Sailing," "The Old Folks at Home," etc. I was somewhat nervous about my part in the affair, but "trusted for help in them as in other things," and was carried through. I really think that the presence and influence of Miss S—— in the business prevented a lot of objectionable frivolity; in fact, I know it did from what I saw and heard, and although we both had qualms about taking leading parts in it at first, we have no cause to regret having done so. I find it very difficult to decide how far to go in all these things and where to draw the line, as I suppose is the case with Christians everywhere.

I believe the Captain is really seeking Christ, for Miss S— had a long talk with him the other night, and he said "he wanted to believe, if only he could." I hope his eyes may soon be opened. I had talks one night on the fo'c's'le head with two of the crew. One of them is a young fellow, working for his second mate's examination, but twice he has spent all his money as soon as he got ashore, and had to go to sea again before submitting himself for examination. He is in earnest, I believe, and the other day I saw him reading his Bible with another sailor, who is a bright Christian, and of whom the officers speak very highly.

Yesterday I had a talk with the bo'sun upon many things, including religion. He seemed to realise the advantage of being a Christian, but would not commit himself. It is wonderful how God gives me opportunities on these subjects. They seem to come quite naturally in the course of conversation, and the men seem rather to like it than otherwise; or else they hide their feelings very well. It is wonderful how soon they begin to confide in one, and speak freely of all sorts of things. The other man to whom I spoke on the fo'c's'le head, L——, can neither read nor write. I offered to teach him, but he said "he had tried, and it was no good." He has lately had a very severe illness, and met some very good people, so that he has been sobering down and trying to reform. He says he has been a very bad lot, but is much better now, and I shouldn't wonder if he is really on the right path, although he doesn't understand it all, and has some queer views of things. I have been much surprised at the odd notions of some of the men on board.

Last Sunday I spoke on the story of Nicodemus and "God so loved the world," etc.; the Sunday before upon Isaiah xxxii. 2. Both services were helpful, I am glad to say. God helped me wonderfully, and gave me messages which seemed just right for some of the hearers. We have found out that one of the four second-class Chinese passengers is a young South American (half West Indian, half Chinese), who is going to an institution in Hong Kong to learn English, and then back to South America as a missionary. He is an agreeable, intelligent-looking young fellow.

The other day Dr. S. asked me to go and see one of the Chinese firemen who is ill. In the fo'c's'le I saw one man smoking an opium pipe, and witnessed various other interesting things. I had a talk with H. B. to-night. I think he is trying to follow Christ. He was quite frank with me, and when we had finished, he put his arm through mine, and said he wished I would speak to his younger brother as I had spoken to him. May God give me the opportunity!

The Sunday services seem to have been really helpful to a good many, the attention to what is said is very encouraging. One of the officers confessed, during a walk we had together on Sunday evening last, how wicked he had been, and seemed quite broken-hearted about his sins. I do hope he will soon find his rest and peace in Jesus Christ. I had a long argument with the captain on Sunday night, and I hope it may have been helpful. These talks have made me think more seriously than I have done before about a lot of things. I am such an awful coward when it comes to personal dealing with people, especially when it rests with me to take the initiative. I have often wondered how far I ought to approach people on the subject, and, so to speak, make opportunities, instead of waiting till they come; and am praying for guidance, courage, and wisdom.

The Talent.

The Master gave his servant
A talent of golden pain.
"Use this," He said, "with judgment
Till I return again.
Trade wisely with my money;
Thy work will not be vain."

The talent bore an impress,
Cut deep with clear imprint,
That proved it had been moulded
And stamped in Royal mint—
A cross, with keen, sharp edges,
Made by a signet's dint.

The servant took the talent,
And weighed it in his hand,
Turning it round and over,
Yet could not understand
The meaning of a symbol
That was not of his land.

"If I had fair rose-nobles,*
I could go forth and buy,
From this man and from that one,
And heap my profits high;
My trade would lead to honour
And power by-and-by.

"But with this uncouth talent,
The labour will be great,
My efforts checked and thwarted,
While years may have to wait
Before my Master calls me
The reckoning to state.

"Then He will take the savings,
Wrung out with so much care;
The long, laborious striving
Will be my only share;
The burden is too heavy—
The Master is not fair."

Thus reasoning, he buried
The talent of golden pain,
Heaping the earth upon it
Of hatred and disdain;
And months and years passed onward
Till the King returned to reign.

"Where is my golden talent?"
The Monarch sternly said;
His servant stood before him,
And slowly answered:
"I bound it in a napkin,
And laid it with the dead.

"How could I trade with suffering
Where power and strength are gain?
How could I change to profit
That uncoined bar of pain?
I do not see the justice
Of evil and of bane.

"Had it been golden wisdom,
Or golden health and youth,
I could have laboured gladly,
And praised thy love and ruth;
But pain was hateful to me;
Thou art too hard, in sooth."

"Couldst thou not bank my money?"
The Monarch made reply;
"I gave thee thought and reason,
With time to weigh and try;
Thus could I now have taken
Mine own with usury.

"And more; that cross-marked talent
Had value in excess
Of every rarest treasure
That mortal men possess:
Pain bears My Royal Symbol,
My signet's own impress.

"Hadst thou but traded rightly,
Thy talent would have won
A sweet and noble honour
When all thy work was done;
Pain is my choicest service,
And higher there is none.

"Unprofitable servant!
Thou countest Me austere,
Because thy heart was bitter
With slothful, faithless fear,
Pass into outer darkness;
Pain won the entrance here!

"Draw near, true-hearted servants,
Who wrought my will's behest;
Obedience full and loyal,
Labours of love attest;
Draw near, my well-beloved,
Come ye into My rest."

G. M. Seymour.

* Rose-noble (commonly called also penny of gold), an English gold coin, first struck by King Edward III. in 1334, and current at the value of 6s. 8d. sterling; half-nobles, oboli, or gold halfpence, and quarter-nobles, otherwise called gold farthings and quadrantes, were also coined soon after. The term "rose-noble" was given to the coin because it was of the same value as the "noble," a money of account, and was stamped on one side with the figure of a rose. The rose-noble and its halves and quarters ceased to be coined after Henry V., but the "noble," the money of account, was used till a much more recent period.

The Foreign Aid Society.

The aim and object of the Foreign Aid Society is to assist and strengthen the efforts of the small but noble band of Christ's followers on the Continent of Europe. By the kindness of Mr. and Mrs. Bevan the annual meeting was held at their London house, 60, Princes-gate. Mr. Bevan himself presided. The report was a simple record of the year's work. The statement of receipts and payments during the three years ending April 30, 1897, showed that whilst the average ordinary income for those years was £555 15s. 11d., the average outgoings amounted to £776 4s. The deficiency had had to be met by drafts out of capital. The report also referred to the approaching retirement of Rev. W. Ostle from the post of hon. secretary, and of Miss Burgess from that of association secretary. It was also announced that Rev. J. Gosset Tanner, late vicar of Emmanuel, Maida-hill, had been appointed secretary of the Society.

Rev. G. Ruthven Thornton, Vicar of St. Barnabas', Kensington, showed that the help of the Society was given to those who were carrying the Gospel to the dark places on the Continent, in spite of the greatest difficulties. He pleaded for sympathy and prayer on behalf of evangelists working among bigoted Romanists and infidels, and confronted by difficulties of no common order. Prebendary Borrett White knew much of the need of the work, and of the way that need was being met. There could be no question but that they ought to help their brethren on the Continent, and the more so when they remembered the hindrances with which they had to contend. The assistance of the Foreign Aid Society had always been given to institutions rather than individuals.

Rev. George Whelpton, Superintendent of the Evangelisation Society in the North of France, gave an interesting address upon the state of religion in France. Miss Burgess emphasized the enormous difficulties which Gospel workers have to face on the Continent. Still there was in the hearts of the people a longing for something better than they had ever known, and it seemed to her that the Word of God was really taking hold of them.

OUR DAILY HOMILY.

SUNDAY, June 13.

"And Babylon, the glory of kingdoms, the beauty of the Chaldean's pride, shall be as when God overthrew Sodom and Gomorrah."—Isa. xiii. 19.

These prophecies have been fulfilled with marvellous accuracy. It is a pity that so few of our young people in these days study the evidence of prophecy. "Keith's Evidences" would be a wholesome introduction to this marvellous field of investigation, but every year is adding to the store of proof. Unlike the evidence of miracles, that of prophecy increases with every increase of distance from the hour that the prediction was given.

There is a God that judgeth in the earth. Nations, as well as individuals, must stand before his judgment bar. Indeed, the judgment of the nations is now in progress. But we do not always see the sentence of the Divine Judge put into execution, since the mills of God grind so slowly. Here in the landscape of history, as we view it from the eminence of the years, we can detect the condign vengeance of the Almighty on the cruel, rapacious, bloodthirsty kingdom of Babylon. She had served God's purpose, but she had committed such enormous crimes in the process of serving it, that she must be condemned.

It is not possible that modern Turkey should escape. The blood of 100,000 Armenians cries against her from under the altar. And let our beloved country beware. Her opium traffic, her connivance at the sale of fire-water to native races, her permission of gross impurity in her streets, her drunkenness, must be telling very heavily against her in the scale of Divine justice. "O Jerusalem, Jerusalem!"

MONDAY, June 14.

"The Lord will have compassion on Jacob, and will yet choose Israel, and set them in their own land."—Isa. xiv. 1.

Israel is the pivot around which the history of the world revolves. We cannot understand the trend of events till we know this. As it was in the days of Isaiah, so it is now. Then the rise and fall of Babylon was largely conditioned by the history of the people whom her kings so greatly despised. Israel needed punishment, and Babylon was the rod of God's vengeance; the precious truths entrusted to Israel needed dissemination throughout the world, and the chosen people were carried captive to Babylon and scattered throughout that vast empire; when seventy years were fulfilled, the time was ripe for their restoration to their own land. At that very hour Babylon fell beneath the Medes and Persians, and Cyrus signed the edict for the restoration of Israel.

So, now, it is hardly a matter of doubt that the existing complications of Eastern Europe will never be settled until the chosen people get back to their own land, and establish a free and independent kingdom there.

But the practical lesson is, that God bears his people on his heart, that He is ever engaged in manipulating and governing human affairs for their welfare, and that He may keep his promises made to their fathers. He hates putting away. Oh, backslider, what comfort for thee is here! Israel had surely done her worst to alienate the love of God, and to put herself out of his loving favour. But see how He has compassion and chooses again. Take heart, He will restore thee, as at the first, and bless thee, if only thou shalt repent and turn to Him.

TUESDAY, June 15.

"My heart crieth out for Moab."—Isa. xv. 5.

Moab was once thickly populated, and very fertile. But the country is now strewn with ruins, in which a few broken shafts of columns are alone standing, and a number of deep wells cut in the rock. That such a civilisation should so entirely pass away leaving no trace behind it, must have seemed very unlikely to the prophet's contemporaries, but these words have been literally fulfilled. So shall other words of prophecy be fulfilled, which, indeed, with every morning's dawn are being realised.

It is to be noticed that the man of God takes no pleasure in these desolations, though Israel and Moab had been perpetually at feud. He speaks of the burden of Moab. Is not this the manner in which we should consider and proclaim the doom of the ungodly? Oh to preach of eternal judgment with wet eyes! Oh to tell men, even weeping, that they are the enemies of the cross of Christ! Oh to know the burdened heart, burdened even to breaking!

This is the only preaching which touches the heart of the unsaved. To announce their doom with metallic voice and unperturbed manner will only harden, but to speak with streaming eyes, and the eloquence of a broken heart, will touch the most callous. It is the broken heart that breaks hearts. Tears start tears. May our merciful High Priest impart to us his compassion and mercies, and lay on our hearts some of his burdens for dying men, that as we behold the cities we may weep, and that there may be a trembling in our voices as we proclaim the fearful woe that awaits the godless and impenitent.

WEDNESDAY, June 16.

"And a throne shall be established in mercy."—Isa. xvi. 5.

In those days thrones were not generally established in mercy, but in blood, and cruelty, and savage might. Addressing Moab, the prophet advises that in the hour of her anguish, when her fugitives gather at the fords of the Arnon, in their mad flight before the conqueror, they should make peace with their ancient enemies the Jews, and appease their hatred, so that the outcasts may find shelter in the Land of Promise. And he goes on to say, that when this should come to pass, their piteous appeal for protection will be generously met, because the throne shall at that time be established in mercy. The ancient causes of enmity will be forgotten, the old feuds will be condoned, and the protection of Israel will be to the trembling crowds of refugees like the shadow flung of a high rock across the sand, which is baking in the noon-tide glare.

Who can this be who sits on the throne of David, combining mercy with truth, seeking righteousness in his judgment, and swift to act on the behalf of the oppressed? None other than the Prince of the House of David, of whose kingdom there can be no end. Art thou a fugitive, driven from thy nest, and rushing to and fro as a scared and trembling bird (2)? Is the glare of the sun scorching thee? Do you stand at the fords of Arnon, with enemies behind, and death in front? Send ye lambs to the Mount of Zion; make peace with Jesus Christ, invoke his forgiveness and salvation. Remember that though He is a great King his throne is established in mercy.

THURSDAY, June 17.

"Thou hast forgotten the God of thy salvation, and hast not been mindful of the Rock of thy strength; therefore thou plantest pleasant plants and settest it with strange slips: but the harvest fleeth away in the day of grief and of desperate sorrow."—Isa. xvii. 10, 11.

How many among us might be addressed in these solemn words! Many are planting pleasant plants, which they hope will one day be beautiful in appearance, whilst from the slips they hope to rear fruit trees. One man is planting his schemes for making a fortune, another is setting slips that should bring him success and renown, yet another is busy in creating a political or religious movement that is intended to benefit mankind. The workers in the village allotment gardens in the early spring are an apt illustration of much that is being attempted in other spheres.

But of what avail are all our preparations, so long as we forget the God of our salvation and are unmindful of the Rock of our strength? We shall never garner the harvest without his help and blessing. The day of grief and desperate sorrow will inevitably visit us, and sweep away all the results of our toils. The blessing of God, sought in answer to prayer, cannot be left out of our calculations, if we are to win lasting success.

And is not the reverse also true? Supposing that we remember the God of our salvation, and are ever mindful of the Rock of our strength, may we not infer that our pleasant plants will root themselves, and our slips bear fruit in the coming years to the glory and praise of God, and for the blessing of thirsty wayfarers?

FRIDAY, June 18.

"Thus hath the Lord said unto me, I will be still, and I will behold in my dwelling-place, like clear heat in sunshine, like a cloud of dew in the heat of harvest."—Isa. xviii. 4.

Assyria was marching against Ethiopia, the people of which are described as tall and smooth. And as the armies advance, God makes no effort to arrest them; it would seem as though they will be allowed to work their will. He is still watching them from his dwelling-place, the sun still shines on them, the dews refresh them. But before the harvest, when the flowers are becoming ripening grapes, the whole of the proud array of Assyria is smitten with the ease with which sprigs are cut off by the pruning-hook.

Is not this a marvellous conception of God—being still and watching? His stillness is not acquiescence. His silence is not consent. He is only biding his time, and will arise, in the most opportune moment, and when the designs of the wicked seem on the point of success, to overwhelm them with disaster. As we look out on modern Europe, as we think of the apparent success of wrong-doing, as we wince beneath the oppression of those that hate us, let us remember these marvellous words about God being still and beholding.

These are the things which the Lord says to the favoured obedient servants that wait on Him. It is much to be admitted, as Isaiah was, into his confidences. God will unveil his thoughts and ways to those that fear Him. "Shall I hide from Abraham that thing which I do?"

SATURDAY, June 19.

"In that day shall Israel be the third with Egypt and with Assyria, a blessing in the midst of the earth, for that the Lord of Hosts hath blessed them, saying, Blessed be Egypt my people, and Assyria the work of my hands, and Israel Mine inheritance."—Isa. xix. 24, 25.

It is very wonderful to find such expressions in the mouth of a Jew. It shows what an effect that coal of fire had produced on the lips of Isaiah. It had led him to know something of the love of God which overleaps the barriers of nationality and caste, and gives itself to all who humbly seek after Him.

We have here the foreshadowing of an age, yet to be revealed, when the long discipline of God's dealings with men shall be consummated in their conversion to God. What a radiant prospect is thus suggested to us, when the most inveterate enemie of God's Church shall be received into her borders and regarded with the favour that God shows to his people! Who, standing amid the terrors of the plagues, could ever have supposed that Egypt would be addressed as "my people"? Who could have thought that Assyria, the tyrant persecutor, would ever be called "the work of my hands"? Yet these are the trophies and triumphs of Divine grace. Never despair of any, for God's grace abounds over mountains of human guilt and rebellion.

Amongst the nations, Israel always stands out as God's inheritance. In them He finds his rest and home. The Lord's portion is his people. We may be that also. May we know the riches of the glory of his inheritance in the saints.

Dr. Barnardo's Homes.

THE best arranged and most effective spectacle will pall on the beholder if too often repeated. Dr. Barnardo has recognised that fact, and this year wisely arranged for a change of venue and of programme for his annual demonstration on behalf of the work of the Homes. On Wednesday afternoon of last week he secured the interest of a very large gathering of friends and supporters in Queen's Hall, Langham-place, at a meeting extending to about three hours. The back of the platform and the ends of the first gallery were filled with some hundreds of girls and boys from the Homes, who contributed much by their rich, sweet song to the enjoyment of the afternoon. As one of the speakers remarked, they formed a far more telling plea for the work than could be afforded by the highest human eloquence. Any institution which takes the most needy and neglected of the young sons and daughters of poverty, and manufactures out of them such useful and ornamental members of society, ought to require no other advocacy than the sight of its products. Many reflections, both as to the helpless, hopeless past and the very hopeful future, were awakened by the appearance of the emigrant lads from the Labour Home, who formed part of a band of 200 about to sail for Canada if the needful funds are provided for outfit and passage. It is to be hoped that the £10 or £12 needed in each case for this purpose will soon be forthcoming, so that these vigorous young fellows may be taken across the Atlantic, where work and homes await them.

Dr. Barnardo discreetly regarded his annual report "as read." It makes a bulky pamphlet of over 150 pages, and the most long-suffering audience would scarcely stand that. We trust, however, that many of the friends of the Homes will secure a copy when it is issued, and will find in its wonderful record of a year's work of rescue and training, not only ground for thanksgiving to God, but an irresistible argument for generous support in the days to come. Dr. Barnardo contented himself with some words about the emigrant band, and about a little company of prettily attired girls who went through graceful evolutions in musical drill.

The speeches were on the whole worthy of the occasion. The youthful chairman, the Duke of Marlborough, acquitted himself very creditably in his task of pleading the cause of the institutions, and also in submitting a loyal address to the Queen. The Archbishop of Ontario, who has resided nearly fifty years in the Canadian Dominion, told very candidly how his doubts as to the quality of Dr. Barnardo's boy emigrants had all been dissipated by a more intimate knowledge, and now he declared the work to be greatly appreciated in Canada. That land could provide a home and subsistence for ten thousand times as many as they had sent out; and the advantage of the colonies as an outlet for the surplus population of the mother country should not be overlooked in the coming jubilations. The silver-tongued Canon Fleming was eloquent and hearty, as he always is, in magnifying the splendid and manifold work of the Homes, and in commending it to the sympathy of his fellow-Christians.

The Chairman having presented prizes to a number of young men and women, as representing 500 "old boys and old girls" trained in the Homes, and who had kept their situations with credit, further addresses followed. Mr. A. J. Mundella, M.P., appeared on Dr. Barnardo's platform for the first time, but his invaluable testimony should be made known everywhere. He spoke of a Poor Law Investigation over which he presided some two years ago, when the committee came to the conclusion that most of the reforms that were desired had been already anticipated by Dr. Barnardo and put into execution. He thought the Government ought to have a department for the care of poor children with Dr. Barnardo at the head of it. The next speaker, Rev. Hugh Price Hughes, took up this point, and suggested that the noble Chairman should provide some occupation for the Gilded Chamber by at once introducing a bill for carrying out Mr. Mundella's plan. Mr. Hughes launched out into one of his famous begging speeches, and once more proved himself an adept in that delicate art. He expressed the strong conviction that rich people, as a rule, do not get enjoyment out of their charity because they do not give enough. Both these speakers complimented the Chairman on having associated himself with such a good work; and Mr. Wm. Fowler said ditto, while at the same time he told of the impecunious state of Dr. Barnardo's treasury, and the imperative need for help at this juncture. The Chairman suitably replied to the thanks tendered him, and the company sang the National Anthem before dispersing, to find the British Temperance Women surrounding the doors and awaiting admittance.

British Women and Temperance.

LAST week brought with it the annual rally of the members of the National B.W.T.A. The meetings virtually extended over five days. The cause of temperance reform was advocated in about a hundred pulpits on Sunday, May 30, and in the afternoon there was a great central meeting in Union Chapel, Islington, where Mrs. Harrison Lee, of Australia, was the chief speaker. Monday was "Devotional Day." Two well-attended meetings took place in Westminster Town Hall, when much prayer was made that God would bless the efforts of the Association, and short exhortations were given by various brethren and sisters.

The Council meetings held in Westminster Chapel were spread over Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday. Much routine business was got through, and reports were presented on the work of the different branches during the past year. Each day there was the noontide hour of prayer; while on several occasions there were formal receptions of fraternal delegates and visitors, engaged in the same holy service on behalf of "God and Home and Fatherland." At the first council meeting a loyal resolution congratulating Her Majesty on her long reign was presented by Lady Henry Somerset, the President of the Association, and carried with acclamation.

The president's address, delivered on Tuesday morning, was a lengthy and eloquent review of the year's work, as well as of the marked advances made in connection with woman's status and her opportunities for public service during the Queen's benign reign. Many topics bearing on women's work were ably and earnestly dealt with. Lady Henry expressed the judgment that the total prohibition of the liquor traffic was practically impossible in the present state of public opinion in Great Britain and Ireland. The immediate needs are a strict and consistent enforcement of the law and the enlightenment of the people as to the necessity of securing popular control of the licensing system. After the delivery of her address Lady Henry Somerset was heartily thanked for the effective evidence and testimony she recently gave before the Royal Commission.

ANNUAL PUBLIC MEETING.

Within three-quarters of an hour after Dr. Barnardo's great gathering had dispersed, the Queen's Hall was in possession of the Association for its annual public demonstration. This year the largely-attended meeting took the form of an exposition of, and a plea for, the work of the Duxhurst Industrial Farm Colony. In a very interesting presidential address Lady Battersea said that if that effort were the only outcome of the work of the B.W.T.A. it would have justified its existence. Her ladyship said that in her experience of female prison visitation she had found ample and sad proof that drink leads surely, if in some cases slowly, to crime. More help is greatly needed for the extension of the operations of the Duxhurst Homes.

Extremely eloquent and earnest addresses in support of this experiment were made by Canon Wilberforce and Lady H. Somerset. In the course of her speech, the latter urged most strongly the futility of thinking to cure habitual drunkenness by terms of imprisonment. Such a system is the outcome of a false logic, and is also false economy. We have to recognise that repeated indulgence in alcohol poisons the brain, and makes the drunkard practically insane. Hospital treatment, adapted to the exact condition of the patient, will provide the only cure, and this is effected by the Homes at Duxhurst. Her ladyship's account of the life at that lovely Surrey village was pathetic and beautiful in the extreme, and it was most impressive to hear her description of the blessed results to the women of a stay there, with the interesting and healthful occupation among the flowers and fruit. She quoted the startling fact that in the space of one year there were 3200 applications for admission to Duxhurst. These figures speak more eloquently than any human voice could of what the results must be to the homes of England if something effective is not done to stay the ravages of this evil. Before closing, the speaker referred in moving language to the work of the "Bird's Nest" at Duxhurst, where children from the London slums are entertained in batches during the summer, and of the happy influence which these children exercise on the women of the Farm Home.

Then came the most effective item in the long programme. A detachment of real slum children from Bermondsey were ranged along the front of the platform, and at the back of this unwashed and ragged regiment there filed in a procession of young girls with white dresses and scarlet caps, who came from the same region and similar surroundings, but have been for a period under training and Christian care. The marvellous contrast showed what is possible in such work, and was a more telling argument even than the splendid eloquence of the Canon and his gifted sister speaker.

Enthusiastic gatherings were held during the week in connection with the "Y" branch of the Association, and the "Loyal Temperance Legion."

Once Better Off.

A RECENT article by Miss Frances Low, entitled "How Poor Ladies Live," has directed attention to the operations of the United Kingdom Benefigent Association (7, Arundel-street, Strand, W.C.), which was established in 1863 for the relief of the gentle born who are reduced to poverty and unable from bodily infirmities to earn a livelihood.

Although the Society is comparatively young, and perhaps little known, it has already granted 1412 annuities of £20 or £25, and 805 of the annuitants are still living. So eagerly is even this small income sought after, that the last list of approved applicants issued by the committee contained the names of 391 persons who were the widows or daughters of officers in the navy or army, of clergymen, ministers, barristers, solicitors, physicians, surgeons, professional men, and others, all of whom were medically certified to be unfit for employment, and many to be without any source of income.

The Society has evidently managed to trace and to relieve those silent and unseen human sorrows, which, perhaps, if it were not for such an organisation as this, would be wholly unknown. When ladies, accustomed to a refined home, are left to struggle alone in the world, often with broken health and without technical knowledge, they are worse off than the labouring classes with whom they cannot compete. Besides annuities, temporary relief is given to candidates awaiting election, and a large quantity of warm and suitable clothing is collected and distributed throughout the year to annuitants and candidates alike, and sometimes even food and tempting dainties accompany the gifts. The work is one which has a peculiar charm for ladies with leisure to engage in it, and little working parties are constantly springing up in various parts of the country to provide clothing for the sufferers.

The committee are specially desirous of commemorating the Diamond Jubilee of Her Majesty by augmenting sixty of the annuities held by the senior and aged annuitants from £20 to £25. As many of the recipients of the £20 annuity have no other means of support, it will at once be obvious how great a boon an additional £5 per annum will be to them.

Professor Fredk. Godet, D.D.

BIBLICAL STUDENT AND COMMENTATOR.

IN the region of Biblical scholarship there is no living man to whom the Evangelical world is under greater obligations than Professor Godet. With a learning hardly less copious than any of the German expositors, and a critical talent certainly not inferior, he combines that spiritual insight of which so few of them have even a vestige, with a personal appreciation of the revelation of Divine grace which gives aroma and reality to his expositions of Scripture.

We have, or have had, not a few believing scholars in Germany, who, as critics and expositors, have dealt reverently with Scripture, and have shown a profound regard for Him to whom Moses and the prophets bear witness. But there have appeared, on the other hand, quite a host of destructive critics who have not only treated the Bible ruthlessly as if it had little or no claim to their respect, but have shown a blindness, all but incomprehensible, to its peculiar and characteristic glory as a revelation of divine grace and love. When one wanders over the Gospels, for example, in company with Strauss or Baur, one is positively amazed at their success in reducing a heavenly garden to a barren wilderness, not only by ignoring all that is spiritually glorious in the life of Jesus, but as being likewise blind to the charm of the poetry, the pathos, and the sublimity which the Gospels unfold so freely to believing hearts.

It is one of the strangest phenomena of our time that scholars of the profoundest type should often bestow the hard and unceasing labour of their lives on an old book, just as if it were an ordinary treatise, and, as they proceed, annihilate everything in it that kindles the gratitude, assuages the sorrows, or inspires the hope, of believing men. It is as conserving the old, hallowed, view of Scripture, and as showing that, when read in the light of the most exact and careful exegesis, it is more full than ever of divine beauty and spiritual glory, that Professor Godet appears to us to have done such useful service to the Christian world.

He is an old man now—a veteran of nearly eighty-five. Neuchâtel was the place of his birth, as it has been the scene of the most important labours of his life. His mother was a woman of remarkable gifts and culture, energetic, and eminently Christian. Under the ministry of M. Du Pasquier, who had himself been much influenced by the réveil at Geneva, he was seriously impressed. At Berlin he had for instructors Neander, Hengstenberg, Tholuck, and other leaders of the believing school. While here, the "Life of Zinzendorf," by Spangenberg, produced a profound impression on him. It was not without much struggle and earnest consideration that he now made his choice as a believing man.

Ordained to the ministry in 1836, he spent a couple of years as assistant pastor at Valangin. In 1838 a new and important sphere of usefulness opened to him, as tutor to the Crown Prince of Prussia, the late Emperor Frederick of Germany. For six years he held this position, inspiring such respect and love as to lay the foundation of a friendship which terminated only with the Emperor's death. M. Godet paid many visits to the Prince, who showed him every mark of respect, and continued to acquaint him with all the details of the family history to the very end. Godet held the Emperor to be an upright, earnest, sincerely pious man, understanding well the wants both of the church and of society, and ever desirous that the church should enjoy the fullest possible measure of independence. Probably we shall never know the extent of the loss which both Germany and the world sustained by the death of the Emperor Frederick.

After leaving the royal family of Prussia, M. Godet spent the next six years as pastor in the Val-de-Ruy; from 1851 to 1866, he was pastor at Neuchâtel; from 1850 to 1873, Professor of Exegetical and Critical Theology in the National Church; and from 1873 to 1887, when he retired, professor of the same subjects in the theological school of the Independent Church of Neuchâtel. In 1868 he got the degree of D.D. from the University of Basle, and in 1884 from Edinburgh. The cause of the disruption of the National Church of Neuchâtel, in the words of Prof. Godet himself, "was an audacious attempt, through the government of the State, composed of some freethinkers, to bind the church to a new law, which was to sanction the free preaching of unbelief in the pulpits of the church." More than half the pastors of the Canton, along with three professors, separated from the State, and threw themselves on the free-will offerings of the people, rather than compromise their position as servants of Jesus Christ and guardians of the purity of his Church.

In this movement Professor Godet had a conspicuous share. He was indeed the mainspring of the movement. His apologetical papers, in reply to the attacks of "the liberal Christianity," made a great impression. During its short history the Independent Church of Neuchâtel has maintained a high character for evangelical earnestness and activity, and besides engaging in other evangelistic work, has borne its part in the too little known mission of the "Suisse Romande," in the South of Africa.

The busy life which he led while both pastor and professor at Neuchâtel did not prevent him from engaging in many other labours of a kindred character. He was one of the founders of the old Home Mission of Neuchâtel, the Evangelical Alliance there, the Normal Evangelical School of Pesaux, a great helper in the organisation of Sunday-schools, and of the Society for the Sanctification of the Lord's Day. In 1871 he took part in founding the Society of Neuchâtel for Promoting Evangelisation in France. He was an active promoter likewise of the dispensary, a society for building workmen's houses, a home for convalescents, and other charitable and social institutions. While most friendly to foreign missions, he has not had a conspicuous share in that work.

But beyond all doubt his chief service to Christian objects has been his writings, and especially his New Testament commentaries. It is not necessary in this place to give a complete list of his various works, a mounting to well-nigh twenty volumes. But two of his commentaries deserve special mention—that on the Gospel of St. John, and that on the Epistle to the Romans. For an exposition of St. John's Gospel M. Godet had eminent qualifications. Perhaps many of our readers are hardly aware of what vehement, protracted, and multifarious controversy that Gospel has been the subject during the last hundred years. In Professor Luthardt's work entitled, "John, the Author of the Fourth Gospel," we have a list of 491 works on the subject up to the year 1875, and there must have been many more since that time.

To uphold the orthodox view of the Gospel in the face of an overwhelming amount of opposition was no easy task. But it has been admirably done by M. Godet. A mind like his was well able to discover the special object of the Gospel, not so much as a biography of our Lord, but rather to set forth the true grounds of faith in Jesus Christ; to expound the progress of faith in the writer and his fellow-apostles; to bring out its consummation through the resurrection of Jesus Christ; to show emphatically its complete triumph in the case of the most incredulous of all the apostles—Thomas; and its restoration in the case of Peter. On the other hand, there is a parallel delineation of the progress of unbelief in the case of those who rejected Jesus; first, their rejection of the testimony of John; then, their comparatively feeble opposition to Jesus at the first, growing, however, to stronger and stronger antipathy, till, after the raising of Lazarus, a plot was formed to destroy Him, and, helped by the treachery of Judas, they consummated their wickedness by the tragedy of the Crucifixion.

But M. Godet is as successful in dealing with details as in delineating the great purpose of the book. Nothing can be more interesting than his account of the resurrection of Jesus. There is not an incident which he does not make something of; not only in the way of showing that the narrative is the narrative of an eye-witness, but in weaving the parts into a consistent whole, and in pointing out that statements which rationalists have tried to prove inconsistent with one another, and thus proofs of their unhistorical character, are in point of fact proofs of the very reverse. It is delightful to find such a book handled with all the exactness of the scholar, and at the same time with all the spiritual insight and feeling of the saint.

Professor Godet is not far behind Mr. Gladstone in point of age, and though, compared to what he once was, he is now feeble in bodily strength, still he is so fresh and vigorous in mind as to be able to continue his studies, and prepare fresh works for publication. He lately passed through a very severe illness, and his friends could not but dread that the end was coming; but through his vigorous constitution and the blessing of God he rallied, and has been enabled to resume the labours of his desk. That until the Master calls him he may continue to enjoy a serene and happy old age, amid the affectionate regard of his family circle, on which he has shed so much sunshine, and the grateful reverence of the Christian world, must ever be the warm and earnest desire of innumerable admirers and friends. IMPRESSIONS IN THE HOLY LAND.*

By Rev. Dr. HANDLEY C. G. MOULE.

III.

YOU ask yourself the further question, How comes this wonderful personality, whose biography and circumstances so fully accounted for the land, to be what He is to all kindreds and nations and tongues? How comes it that One who was brought up in that little country town, whose life till middle early manhood was lived just there, is now, and has been for these long centuries, the central figure of European history, the dominating power in the vast new worlds of America? How is it that He is worshipped in the capitals of Europe and on the western slopes of the Rocky Mountains, on the shores of Australia, and in the islands of the Pacific? Galilee is absolutely inadequate to account for Jesus Christ; while it provides precisely the verifying material for the accuracy of the biography we have of Him. And what may be said of the living Word is profoundly true of the written word. Palestine affords precisely fitting conditions for the authenticity, the veracity, the solidity of the Books of the Bible. There it is, giving you abundant materials for testing the geography, and for assuring you that some of the most unlikely incidents in the way of life and custom are what happen there still every day. But Palestine cannot account, as cause, for the Book that is now proving itself true.

Let us take one example in Central Africa, Uganda—the enthralling interest of a nation which, twenty years ago, had never heard of us, and we had barely heard of its people. There the new-found peoples of that absolutely alien land are devouring, as for their lives, the incidents and the truths of the Book; and that Book itself, despite all said against it, is daily winning a larger entrance into every corner and quarter of the earth. The Bible Society's meeting has recently borne witness of that to us.

When you go to Palestine, there is one thing you feel about the sacred country. With all its wonders of interest, it is by nature, so to speak, intensely provincial in the sense of being an isolated corner, from some points of view, of the world. It is not constructed for vast intercommunication. We had painful reason to realise the harbourlessness of Palestine when we tried to disembark at Joppa, and endeavoured to get away again. So bad are the ports upon that shore, so entirely is the place unprovided by nature, in God's providence, with the great harbours that seem to invite the world in and shut you out, that we had to wait twenty-four hours before the wind would permit us to land, and it was the best part of a week ere the wind was favourable for departure. Though things were probably somewhat better when Solomon engineered a port at Joppa, they cannot have been very much improved, for the lie of the coast prohibits a large maritime development. No doubt, during the Roman occupation there were more facilities of this kind than at other times; but the land itself when they disembarked, particularly Judæa, was obviously much more fitted, providentially, in the way of a fortress for isolation than as a centre of diffusion. Yet out of that land came this Book, which is absolutely and uniquely unlike any other book upon earth. It is what no other sacred literature has proved itself to be—the precise supply for the need of man's heart and mind, wherever he is found; the voice which wakens the agonies of conscience, and directs the sinner to a peace with God which no other system and no other literature has ever pretended to offer. It is the Book which tells the mortal sinner about a hope full of immortality, and present peace with the Holy God. It is the Book which is proving itself to be the Book of the soul and the Book of mind over the whole world of mind.

These are impressions left upon me, amongst others: on the one hand, the historic reality of the Bible; on the other hand, the supernatural mystery of the Bible. These are just the points on which, as it seems to me, we are called upon at the present day temperately, reverently, and in all holy charity towards those who cannot yet see with us, firmly to take our stand as regards God's Word. It is supernatural, or it is nothing. It is human on the one side, as the Living Word was truly human. It has come through human hearts, through human minds, through human observation. We have, in the Bible, the poetic description of nature, as the prophets and psalmists saw it; as truly as we have the poetic description of nature, as Wordsworth saw it a century ago. But we have what is absolutely unlike Wordsworth, Shakespeare, Greek and Latin classics, or all other literature rolled up together—we have the supernatural message from heaven, supernaturally given through men, through God-given faculties, but, from another point of view, in a way that lifted them out of themselves and gave them a second sight both of the unseen and of the future, which God has not given us through other literature at all. I believe that an immense amount of Bible vindication may be worked out through that extremely simple and obvious thought, namely, that while, from one point of view, God, in Holy Scripture, worked through man, not normally but abnormally, yet He worked through him as a being whom He had made with mind, heart, soul, and will; and that, as regards the men whom He employed as the channels of his revelation, He did things with them which He did not do for the poets, philosophers, and historians of the nations. This, I think, is felt by all Christians who visit Palestine, more than it can be felt anywhere else on earth. The land does not account for the Book, the nation does not account for the Book; the history, taken on its human side, does not account for the Book. God dealt with prophets, patriarchs, psalmists, apostles, in that land which has such wonderful, multifarious, and unequalled natural advantages, but which in another aspect is so simple, provincial, and unpoetic. He dealt with those men in a way which cannot be accounted for by the features of the land in which they lived nor by their nationality. He took them up from all conditions to use them by an afflatus of his Spirit, which gave them the right to say what no other writers have ever had the right to say since the world began, unless they based themselves upon the Book—"Thus saith the Lord."

I have been able only to touch here and there the lines of the great subject assigned me; but if I may sum it up as a matter of personal experience, I would say that I have come back from Palestine feeling more than ever the inexhaustible human interest of the Bible. It has become to me, more than ever before, the Book of history and of place; a Book in which the human character of its actors and the earthly scenery of its events are lighted up with an extraordinary light of vivid reality. I have come back, more than ever to feel that it is the Word of God, which liveth and abideth for ever. It is supernatural; it claims not merely our respect, which many are willing to give, but our submission, which not so many yield. It asks to be not manipulated but obeyed; it asks to be not patronised but reverenced as in the presence of its Giver. It is absolutely human as a record of true events upon this earth; it is altogether divine as to the guidance of Him who produced, through his saints, the Bible, not anywhere but there; not through India, through Greece, or through Rome; not in the great centres of ancient or modern civilisation or intercourse, but in that corner of the Levant, because there He was pleased to forge the weapon which, constructed there, was meant for everywhere and everyone.

India's Spiritual Famine.

JUST now India needs and deserves the sympathy and help of the whole world. The plague has been doing its direful work. The famine is a ghastly reality. Many of us have spent much time in caring for orphan waifs. During these famine times our greatest help has come from England. We could not have rescued these little ones but for this timely help.

Now we are in sore need of money for workers. There are many needy fields, many calls. Scores of people have been baptized in the surrounding villages of this district, and then left with no further instruction; not a teacher within miles to teach them one word more about Jesus. There are scores more ready to accept Jesus as far as they understand it, but they need more light. The other day forty Christians in a certain village followed the missionary to the outskirts of the village and begged for a teacher to be sent to them. This is but one example. There are scores of other such villages.

When one reflects that a teacher could be sent them at a cost of £5 a year, is it not sad that they should be left in darkness? We need support for twenty such teachers immediately. A few days ago we sent out one with no other bank to draw on except our own private purse. To-day, another was sent out to a needy place. Where are the means to come from, except from our own scanty pockets? Last year, aside from our regular tenth, we had to give three hundred rupees in order that the work might not be closed. This year we shall have to give even more. At the conference in January, almost every missionary devoted a tenth of his yearly salary to make up for the amount cut out by the board at home. This tenth will not come into our hands; it is retained by the treasurer. Then we tithe the remainder. Over and above that, every new worker sent out we must support privately, in addition to several already on the list.

I shrink from making these statements, but feel that you should know the facts. May God touch some hearts! You may not be able to come to India yourselves, but you may have your substitute, who will begin work for the Master as you retire to rest. In this way you can work the whole of the twenty-four hours of the day. You will receive letters from time to time from or concerning your worker.

In this district we have a million people. Draw a circle anywhere with a radius of five miles and you enclose at least twenty villages. Give us these twenty teachers, and then we have only one teacher to about twenty villages.—Yours in his name, (Rev.) J. C. Lawson.

PRAYER.—"Lead us not into temptation."—Matt. vi. 13.

HYMN.

Yield not to temptation, for yielding is sin,
Each victory will help you some other to win;
Be thoughtful and earnest, kind-hearted and true,
Look ever to Jesus, He will carry you through.
Ask the Saviour to help you,
Comfort, strengthen, and keep you;
He is willing to aid you,
He will carry you through.

The Story of a Black-beetle.

A VERY strange thing, I suppose my readers think, to write a story about. Who has not seen a beetle? An ugly, uncomfortable-looking creature, crawling over the floor, with its fat body and its short legs. One can understand the love people have for butterflies and glowworms, and other little creatures of that kind, but I should think the child was never yet born who could make a pet of a black-beetle.

And yet it is about a black-beetle that I am now going to tell you. A certain beetle, which showed so much sagacity as fairly to astonish me, and draw warm commendation even from his enemies. If I had not heard the story on the very best authority, I am not sure that I could have believed it myself, but I can assure my little readers that it is quite true.

A friend of mine had a kitchen and cellar underground which were infested with these troublesome insects. You might have thought that all the beetles in the parish held council there, so numerous were they. Of course he wished very much to get rid of them, but this was no easy matter. However many Hetty, the housemaid, might capture one night, there were sure to be quite as many there the next. Poison was tried; but no, the creatures were far too wide awake to eat that; they were not going to be taken in that way; not they, indeed! My friend, however, being a man of science, was not easily discouraged; and, at length, he devised a plan which seemed likely to succeed. Late one night he went into the kitchen, and scattered on the floor a chemical powder the scent of which he believed would stupefy the insects as they crept along with their noses on the floor, and leave them half dead and senseless, so that they could easily be destroyed.

And, sure enough, the next morning there were a great many victims lying just ready for Hetty to sweep up.

That night the experiment was tried again; but what was my friend's amazement and dismay to discover, the next morning, that his little scheme had been detected. One large beetle, indeed, was walking cautiously along, right through the powder; but how should you think he was walking?—actually on his two hind legs, with his head lifted as far as possible from the floor, so that the powder had not the desired effect. How my friend afterwards managed to get rid of his troublesome tenants I need not say, but I can tell you that it was of no use, after the first night, to put down the powder, not a bit.

Now, do you not think that was a very wise black-beetle? Without at all commending or admiring his character as a whole, I think we must all admit that in this one thing he acted prudently, and in a manner worthy of our imitation. Strange teacher as a black-beetle may seem to be, I really think we might learn a lesson from the conduct of this one; even as great King Solomon learnt a lesson from the tiny ant. My little readers will find, as they pass through life, many a snare laid to entrap them. The world, evil companions, Satan, and their own deceitful hearts, will all form devices for their ruin, and the only way to escape sin is to walk through this world of sin, where evil everywhere abounds, with great watchfulness, and with heart and eyes raised above.

Let the ruin of others warn you against the power and deadening influence of evil. The very nature of sin is to stupefy your conscience, and to injure your sense of right and wrong. Carefully guard, then, against the first approach of temptation: keep as far away from it as possible; do not for a moment tamper with it; let no evil habit, no evil thought, no vain desires, gain the mastery over you.

My steps, I know, are on the plains of danger,
For sin is near;
But, looking up, I pass along, a stranger,
In haste and fear.

Above all, dear children, cultivate this habit of looking up. Yes, look up in prayer and faith, to the Heavenly Father who so tenderly loves you and cares for you, and who will aid your very feeblest effort to please and serve Him. Without Him you will certainly fail, for the strongest of us is weak and helpless, and the best of us is sinful in his holy sight; therefore, day by day, and every day, let us ask Him to direct our steps, and to keep us from every evil way.

Beset with snares on every hand,
In life's uncertain path I stand;
Saviour Divine, send forth thy light,
To guide our doubting, footsteps right.

There is not one of us who does not need to pray this prayer, and perhaps there is not one of us who can afford quite to forget the lesson of the old black-beetle.

What a Blackbird taught Me.

"Behold the fowls of the air."—Matt. vi. 26.

A FEW days ago I was busy in the garden, when fluttering of wings and cries of distress caught my ear, and seemed to ask for help. I ran to find out what was wrong, and there was a young blackbird caught in the meshes of the net spread over our strawberry-bed. He had been tempted to look for some ripe fruit, and paid dearly for his search!

Of course I tried to release him, but the more I untwisted the cords the more he pecked my hands, and struggled, becoming further entangled every moment; the net was round his legs, his wings, even his throat, and he would soon have choked himself in these foolish efforts to wound the hand relieving him, to set him free.

There was no use in trying half-measures. I caught the bird's limbs and body very gently and firmly, so that he was obliged to be still. Then, with my knife, I cut the cords, perhaps hurting him a little in spite of all care, and in a moment he sprang up into the air with a great flutter and loud notes of joy, and was safe!

But he left a lesson behind him, and I thought about it for you. Do we not often behave just as this foolish bird did? God wishes us to be free, yet when temptation comes we yield to it, and then the Devil catches us in his net. Too often we enjoy the forbidden fruit, but soon we feel the cords twisting round us. We cannot rise up in prayer, we cannot utter our song of praise, we cannot even move our limbs in loving service; fear, and sorrow, and suffering are the fruits of sin.

The Saviour hears our cry, and longs to release us, but, instead of welcoming Him, we try to get out of the enslaving net in our own strength, falling deeper and deeper into the snare, and even hurt the tender hand which comes to our aid. Look at Acts ix. 5, Mark v. 17.

Jesus Christ does not leave us to die, but sometimes He is obliged to quiet our struggling by pain or sickness. He says, "Be still, and know that I am God" (Psa. xlvi. 10), and when we can do nothing but lie motionless beneath his restraint He teaches us two lessons—"Not my will, but thine be done" (Acts xxi. 14), and "O, Lord, I have no might" (2 Chron. xx. 12), "but mine eyes are upon Thee." So then the Lord Jesus cuts the cords of sin (we may have to suffer some wound to ourselves or some loss of earthly gain; the net was spoiled, you remember), saying, "I will deliver thee, and thou shalt glorify Me" (Psa. l. 15.)

Oh, how gratefully and gladly we feel our freedom restored! And how careful we should be not to yield again when Satan tempts us, not to trust to our own strength when in danger; nor to wound Him again who was "bruised for our iniquities," but make our whole lives one service of thanksgiving.

1. Whom did Satan first tempt? (Gen.)
2. Of whom is it said, "The tempter came to Him"? (St. Matt.).
3. What text in the 1st Epistle of Peter tells us what Satan does to injure?
4. What text in the 2nd Epistle of Peter speaks about God delivering us out of temptation?
5. Quote a verse in St. James's Epistle which shows that temptation to evildoers does not come from God.

Children under TEN do two; those under THIRTEEN do four. Elder ones must also mention one instance in the Old and one in the New in which temptation was resisted, and one instance in each in which it was yielded to.

UNCLE TOM.

Japanese at Newcastle.—Miss M. McLean writes: "Here, as in London, a wide door and effectual is set before me among the 300 Japanese composing the ship's company in the Armstrong Dock. I have had impressive meetings with them, both on board and on shore. I feel saddened that, through the non-arrival of Japanese Testaments, etc., long since ordered by the Bible Societies, I am not able to meet the need or cast bread upon the tide which offers an enviable opportunity for reaping a harvest in Japan at a future date."

Vigilance Work.

THE need for such an organisation as the National Vigilance Association, and the most unmeasured praise of its aims and methods of work, were eloquently set forth at Sion College last Friday by the Bishop of London, Bishop Barry, and Rev. Hon. E. Lyttelton, as representing the Church, by Mr. Percy W. Bunting on behalf of the legal aspect, and by Mrs. Henry Fawcett, Mr. F. D. Mocatta, and other speakers, from the social point of view.

The Bishop of London pertinently remarked that the work of this Association was to assert (and the assertion could never be made too emphatically) that "Laws are vain without morality." And it was useless for the State to make laws unless the execution of them were maintained and backed by the moral sense of members of the community. He considered it was quite necessary to form associations for almost everything concerning social progress, so that the conclusions reached by the moral sense of the community in one age might be maintained in the next, for mankind was always tempted to think it had done enough by placing a law on the statute-book. The good sense of the public must always see that the laws are actually enforced. In nothing did materialism and spiritualism come into sharper contrast than in the relation of the sexes, and in maintaining a high ideal of purity and nobility such as that advocated by the Vigilance Association they not only supported this particular Society but also those eternal principles without which no society or nation could flourish. Such work might occasionally be mocked at, but it was a work of the highest possible value, for which society, in the long run, would thank the Vigilance workers most heartily.

Bishop Barry moved a resolution which, first, "thankfully recognised the great advance in public opinion towards demanding an equal standard of morality for men and women"; and, secondly, "anticipated legislation which will make solicitation for immoral purposes in our streets equally criminal on the part of men as of women," and then proceeded to mention a bill for this purpose already drafted by the Vigilance Association. Needless to say, Bishop Barry was eloquent on each of these topics, and as he explained that he lived and worked in the very centre of one of the worst districts of London in regard to this special phase of vice, namely, in Piccadilly, his experiences and opinions fell with all the greater weight upon the meeting. He most warmly eulogised the Vigilance Association, its secretary, and its methods, of all which he had had experience.

Mrs. Henry Fawcett's contribution to the speeches was mainly directed to the question of the health of the British troops in India, and the methods proposed by the Government for dealing with it. She argued that the recent debate in the House of Lords really defined the official position, and as a restoration of the C.D. Acts was there demanded, she most unequivocally and forcibly argued that no such immoral measures can be permitted.

Mr. Henry J. Wilson, M.P., followed on the same lines, and on the legal aspect of the Vigilance Association's work he very happily pointed out that the fact of there being now less legal work undertaken was proof positive of the good of the Association's work in the past—it had less legal work because a better state of society, resulting from its efforts, had worked for its own extinction. Much need for the Association and much work for it remained, and as he was to be treasurer he hoped plenty of funds would be forthcoming.

Other speakers and resolutions followed, and constituted as successful a meeting as, perhaps, any of the series of twelve previous annual events.

Miss Mason's House of Rest.

THERE are signs in plenty that Miss Mason is extensively and highly esteemed, not only for her work's sake but on personal grounds. Expectation was fully justified, therefore, in the discovery of a good many friends and supporters assembled for the thirty-first anniversary of the work, celebrated last Friday afternoon in All Saints' Parish Room, adjoining the House of Rest at 10, Finchley-road, St. John's Wood. Various denominations were represented in the company of speakers which filled the platform.

In the chair was Lieut.-Col. Oldham, who briefly expressed his sincere pleasure in thus serving so good a cause. Fervent prayer by Rev. J. Sinclair Moore was followed by an appreciative address from Rev. F. B. Meyer. In this stormy world, he said, the House appears a kind of harbour, formed by very strong masonry, for the sheltering of battered and worn spiritual fisher folk. Surely even to many around, who have no part in its benefits, the work must be a testimony to God's faithfulness in hearing prayer. The permanent provision for aged workers was far from being merely a respectable kind of workhouse, but very properly comprised all the essentials of loving care in a real home.

The sunshine and shadow of another year's experience in her honorary superintendence were spoken of by Miss Mason. She thought it would be encouraging to all God's children if they could fully know how his hand is seen daily in the prayerful conduct of the work. At Finchley-road and in the Eastbourne Branch jointly, a total of 889 workers had enjoyed the benefit of much-needed rest; and eleven rooms are now permanently occupied by aged Christian women once active in their Lord's service. The available accommodation is taxed to the utmost, and there can be little doubt that many would gladly use the House to whom the small partial payment usually made is an impossibility. Concerning a fortnight spent at Eastbourne, an evangelist greatly run down with overwork and illness says: "Those who are favoured to rest awhile here are surrounded with social and spiritual influences well calculated to build up body and soul. My mind is full of blessed memories of my stay. God's wealthy stewards would liberally help such a noble cause if they fully knew what a boon it is to many a weary worker whose means are small."

The need for extension so that there may be an open door for all applicants was the leading point of Rev. Dr. Monro Gibson's genial speech. He hoped the time was coming when every mission should, through the outpourings of the Holy Spirit upon wealthy Christians, realise abundantly more than its financial expectation. The development of self-indulgence and luxury in the present day demands much watchfulness on the part of God's people, especially in view of the needs of his work on earth, in the various departments of which they should all be partners. Modern company promotion shows that there must be a vast deal of money in the country waiting for investment; but our Lord offers us a minimum of three thousand per cent. for our spiritual sowing, and we should do well to remember that we may transmute our gold into love, which is currency of heaven.

Rev. Henry Sharpe declared his affection for the institution, not only as a place of rest, but also as a home of godly fellowship, where the soul may be adjusted—a place where the joy of the Lord, which is our refuge, abides. The aged St. Paul was never old and never cold in spirit, but while living almost in heaven he developed wonderful solicitude for making men of God physically comfortable—a strong precedent for this work. Our blessed Lord, when dying, found time to prepare a home for his mother. Comfort, co-operation, and consolation are workers' needs blessedly supplied through this House of Rest.

The closing word came from Rev. W. Fuller-Gooch. He had received and read the report right through, for it possessed an interest which must appeal to every Christian heart, and was well calculated, by its records of blessed results from simple trust in God, to strengthen wavering faith. While fully recognising the need of physical and spiritual refreshing, Mr. Fuller-Gooch added some useful thoughts by way of necessary limitation. Issachar, in his appreciation of God's inheritancy for him, will gladly subject himself to labour, teaching us that we should not seek the privileges of the Gospel simply that we may lavish them on our own selfishness. It is a glorious thing to labour, resting all the while in Him for Whom we work. Supporters and friends of this work should increasingly bear it before the Lord, in the spirit of praise for what He has done during these many years through his servant, who is so evidently called to exercise loving care for his weary and worn workers.

News from Madagascar.

WE are glad to learn that one, at least, of the missionaries who had been accused of treason against the French authority has been entirely acquitted, and invited by the Governor to return to his station. A letter informs us that only one or two villages have as yet had Papist governors imposed upon them, and only two or three attempts have been made to seize and appropriate Protestant places of worship.

The writer says:—We have been staying the last fortnight in a district where all day long and every day since we have been in the house, people are constantly coming to tell the missionary of the persecutions they are enduring. On Sunday he visited four village churches, each of which has for twenty years past been well attended by a numerous congregation. Three of the four were closed and empty, the people all being afraid to show that they were Protestants. In the fourth, about twenty adults and some children were gathered together to consult about going over in a body to the "Government religion."

"Why do you talk about becoming Catholics?" said the missionary. "You don't want to be Catholics, do you?" "No," they replied, "we want to be Protestants, but life is sweet, and our pastor was shot the other day. We fear we shall be shot too if we continue Protestants." Under the new dispensation every village must have its native governor. In this district it is made a sine quâ non by the authorities that he shall be a Roman Catholic, and this even where the villagers are all Protestants, and have never had a Romanist among them. In one case a man of very bad character was appointed, on condition of his professing Roman Catholicism. His first act was to visit the Jesuit bishop; he then proclaimed that all persons within his jurisdiction must become Catholics. He would have no Protestants in any of the villages under his control.

In promising fealty to the French Republic on his appointment, he assured the colonel in command of the circle that he meant to take effectual measures to compel all the people under him to become Catholics. With a French officer standing beside him in public assembly, he informed the people that Protestantism meant disloyalty to France, and rebellion.

He accused the native pastors, schoolmasters, and other leading Christians of complicity with the rebellion, and had a great many of them bound and imprisoned, and others, including three pastors of village churches, put to death, all of whom were in utter ignorance of the charges laid against them. The Governor in question has been publicly congratulated by the French authorities and promoted from seven honours to eight honours. All these facts have been carefully verified, and places, names, and dates could be supplied.

Five new missionaries of the Paris Society have arrived in the capital. This is a very welcome reinforcement, and we are all delighted to receive these brethren among us. Three are pastors and two educational missionaries.

There is already some spiritual fruit seen from the persecution above described. One evangelist says his imprisonment and bonds (he was kept bound for over two months awaiting trial, but has been acquitted since) have brought him nearer to God than ever before in his Christian life.

Two men, who had professed Romanism to save their lives, have been led by the example of Christian faithfulness in other sufferers to return to the faith they had renounced, with a stronger determination than ever to cleave to it.

The Indian Famine.

MOST heartrending descriptions of the famine in India, and piteous appeals for further help, still come to hand. We give extracts from letters received, and commend the matter to the Christian sympathies of the reader:—

Rev. Rockwell Clancy, of Allahabad, secretary of Bishop Thoburn's fund, says: "The famine continues unabated. I recently visited several Government relief works, and found thousands of people making roads and tanks. The workers receive from 1¾d. to ¾d. per day. Mothers with little children receive a farthing extra for each child. I was told by the overseers that the mortality among the little ones is very great, and I saw hundreds of children who were living skeletons. The helplessness of the little children led us to decide some months ago to do all we could to save them. We have rescued 430, 100 of whom are living in our mission compound; for the rest we have found other homes. This afternoon we sent away fifty-four. The death-rate among these children, with the best medical care we could give them, has been about 25 per cent. You can fancy the fearful death-rate among the uncared-for children in the villages.

"I visited many villages, going into house after house and finding nothing to eat. We distributed all the money we had with us, and wished that we could have done something more for the suffering ones. Thousands of people remain in their villages until everything has been sold for food, and then they are too weak and hopeless to find their way to the relief works, which may be twenty or thirty miles distant. Many of them lie down in their villages and die of starvation. We found people dying under trees along the roads."

Rev. E. M. Gordon, of the Disciples' Christian Mission, Mungelli, Bilaspore District, Central Provinces, India, writes on May 3:—"Just now the distress is very acute. Numbers of people are returning from the jungles where they have been living on the mowha; since that has stopped they have been eating the roasted babul seeds. Not an hour of the day passes without the cry for help being heard. A woman dragging her children along and falling down with her head to my feet, asking for grain, is an every day occurrence. The Government officials are doing all in their power to cope with the need; they are working day and night. But the distress seems to increase. In July the thirty miles of country road which connect us with the railway will be impassable for carts because of the monsoon, and no rice can then be imported. A Government famine officer told me that the price of the rice will then nearly double. I wish to buy enough rice immediately to feed our orphans and others who look to us for aid for four months. If those who read this appeal could send immediately I may get the money before the monsoons burst."

Lord Radstock writes from 42, Eccleston-place, S.W., on behalf of the effort entitled, "Christian Succour to India": "The terrible sufferings revealed by letters that have recently come from India should be made known to the Church of Christ. A missionary writes: 'Pressure more severe; acute distress, not officially called famine.' Another writes: 'Unless we can find more relief now, few labourers will be alive to reap rice harvest in December.' Another missionary writes: 'The position of the Christians is very serious; they have eaten up everything in the house and have no seed for sowing.'

"Yet another writes: 'I have 150 in my compound; they are eating leaves and roots. I could only relieve a few. I was obliged to send most of them away.' Another says: 'Many are here wandering, eating roots and wild plants. The widows in jungle villages are in terrible straits.' Again another: 'On all sides distress is getting more widespread and acute.' Surely each one must say, 'Lord, what wilt Thou have me to do?'"

Mr. G. H. Lord, of Buckhurst Hill, lectured recently on "A Trip to the Holy Land" before the Men's Own meeting at Harley-street Congregational Church, Bow. Founded by the late Rev. W. Evans Hurndall in 1890, this society has a membership of just over 700 members. Mr. Lord's lecture was intensely interesting, and much appreciated by the large audience. Life in the desert was illustrated by various friends dressed in Oriental costumes, and there was an exhibition of curios.

Morocco Medical Mission.

SOME interesting information regarding the difficulties of mission work in Morocco is afforded by a letter received from Dr. Kerr:—

"For the past few months we have had much cause for anxiety. The latter rains having being withheld we were threatened with famine, and then came the locusts in great numbers. While the Europeans were organising and collecting funds for the destruction of locusts' eggs, it was appalling to see the callous indifference of the majority of the people. 'The Lord will provide,' was continually on the lips of the Moors. However, after the grain rose to three times its original value, and still no rain, with continuous swarms of locusts, the Moors began to bestir themselves. Processions were organised, and might be seen going from one saint-house to another imploring God and the saints to send them rain.

"The Jews in Rabat closed their shops and retired to the synagogues, and joined in one continuous cry from morning till evening that God would be merciful to them and send rain. In Salee, the kadi or judge ordered all the Jews to retire to their graveyard, and call on all their salaheen or holy ones to send rain. How sad to see such earnestness with ignorance and superstition!

"I need not say that we were instant in prayer that God would send us rain. Thanks to God, rain came in abundance, and the famine has been averted. Every day after the processions and prayers for rain were over, we were deafened with a continual gun-fire, and sickened by liberal displays of bunting. This rejoicing was over forty-three heads of innocent people, which were nailed up on one of the city gates as trophies of the Sultan's victories down South. Instead of the Government having been humbled, a further iniquitous and diabolical order arrived from the Moorish Court to the effect that thirteen of the Rahamna tribe, now in prison, should have 2000 lashes and their hands cut open. Early on the morning of the 21st April the diabolical work began; none of the men were able to stand more than 1200 lashes, having been left unconscious, and almost dead. Then a native doctor was brought, and their hands cut up between the fingers with a deep crucial incision in the palm of the hand. These wounds were filled with salt and camphor, etc., and the hand then closed and sewn over with wet sheepskin, which, when it dries, contracts, so that, when removed, the hand is a useless, round ball."

We have applications from two workers at present who are admirably suited to go forth to this dark land, and we trust the time has now come when God's children will be moved to help forward this work. Are there no kind friends who would undertake the salary or part thereof of these two workers? £100 yearly would be sufficient to supply their needs.

GRAHAME WILSON, Hon. Treasurer.

13, Royal-terrace, Crosshill, Glasgow.

Welcome Home.—The "Christian Lifeboat Crew" held its last muster in the Old Welcome Home, Ratcliff Highway, on Tuesday, June 1. Miss Child said the necessity had arisen through various causes for removing the work to new quarters at the Welcome Home, Iron Bridge, Canning Town, E. She hoped there would be even more blessing in the new than there had been in the old place. Reluctance to leave was expressed by the various speakers, who testified to the great and many blessings received in the Fo'c's'le, and earnest prayer was offered for increased blessing in the new home. During the meeting a young Newfoundland sailor praised God for saving him at the new Welcome Home a few nights ago. Friends are asked to note the change of address.

Fruit in China.—Mr. Ernest C. Searle, of the China Inland Mission, Bing-Yie, South Wen-chow, writes: "The word of God is reaching the hearts of the people in this district, and bringing forth fruit in the salvation of their souls. Last Sunday we had the joy of receiving four men into the church by baptism. Next month we hope to receive three women. On Friday last, seven other persons were baptized. This makes a total of twenty-two since February, for which we thank God and take courage. Speaking of the district in which we are working, we are glad to observe an earnest spirit of inquiry, which we are hopeful may result in large numbers forsaking their idols and turning unto God. Of course, there is also prejudice and misunderstanding, and lately it has come to our knowledge that the Roman Catholics are seeking to injure us."

From Joseph Rabinowitz.

IN a recent letter this Hebrew Christian says:—"This Eastertime was one of the most happy times I ever had since I was called to work in the vineyard of Jehovah here in Kischeneff. Blessed be our Lord, He still uses me for his Name's sake. Three days, one after another, I have preached the Gospel to multitudes of Jews, old and young. The Somerville Hall was overcrowded with listeners to the Word. On Good Friday I expounded to my hearers the stirring scene of Jesus' trial by Pilate, according to John's Gospel in the proper light of Isaiah liii. I believe the majority became convinced that Jesus the Messiah was prejudged by Caiaphas and his party. In the figures of those bloodthirsty hypocrites, who, under a show of religious scrupulosity, feared to enter the Palace lest they should be defiled, every one of the Jews could perceive the Jewish hypocrites of the present time, who, whilst they abhor flesh touched by a drop of milk as forbidden in the Talmud, are ready to crush their brethren and neighbours, taking from their mouths their daily bread. In the words of the Roman statesman Pilate, 'Am I a Jew?' many could perceive the same mind and judgment of statesmen in some European countries to-day.

"But I am sure not a few of my Jewish brethren did earnestly and reverently proclaim within their hearts the bound and accused Jesus to be the King of the Truth, with a decision to hear his voice and obey his words, and to be led and directed by his Spirit.

"At the time of the Jewish and Christian Easter, our street was enlivened by the Jewish people watching every morning at the gate of the Somerville Hall that they might hear me preach Christ our sacrificed Passover. Judging from the impression produced upon the Jews by my sermons at this recent time, surely there is hope that the hearts of many will soon be turned unto their true Messiah, to worship at his footstool as they become convinced that 'He is holy.' I was glad to receive congratulations at Easter from various places in Russia, Odessa, Simferopol, Rostoff, giving me encouraging news of the spread of the Gospel of Jesus Christ among their brethren the Jews, and asking for tracts and New Testaments."

Zenana Work.

THE members of the Loving Service League in connection with the Zenana Bible and Medical Mission were invited by Viscountess Portman to a drawing-room meeting at 22, Portman-square, on Saturday week, and there was a crowded attendance. Her ladyship spoke some very earnest and appropriate words.

Hon. Emily Kinnaird explained that the L.S.L. was the Foreign Missionary Band of the Y.W.C.A., and that they were struggling hard to entirely support the missionary station at Jaunpur, but were not yet able to do so; the annual cost is £400, of which they subscribed about £200. Then followed Miss Mary Hill (Jaunpur), who is looked upon as their own missionary. Miss Hill touched the hearts of her hearers as she told the sad story of zenanas open to the missionaries, but unvisited; of the women pleading for them to come, who had to be passed by; of the villages still left in darkness; of the few teachers in the schools,—of the vastness of the district with only three missionaries to supply all the need. Miss Hill also drew some graphic pictures of the terrible sufferings from the famine she witnessed. The response from England had awakened in their hearts a very warm feeling, and would, she felt sure, be the means of greatly extending the work.

Miss and Mrs. Wilder, Miss Orlebar (three missionaries from India), and Lord Radstock also addressed the meeting.

The Children of Seven Dials.—For twenty-two years a faithful band of voluntary workers have been trying to influence for good the poor children of "The Dials" and neighbourhood. The hon. sec. of the movement is Mr. Paul Keed, 191, Oxford-street, W. It is astonishing to see what a number of departments are kept going, including summer excursions, holiday homes, and winter entertainments. There is a club for boys and another for girls, most of those attending the latter working at neighbouring factories, and much appreciating the club advantages. The whole work is carried on at an annual cost of under £100—indeed, several branches might be considerably benefited by a little more expenditure were means available.

THE EVANGELIST.

Through the Villages.

MR. NEWTON JONES, Sunday-school Union evangelist, writes:—

Last week it was my joy to visit Eythorne, Eastrey, Barnswell, and Wednesboro, all near Dover. At the last two places the spiritual crop was ready for harvest. Some young men, ranging in age from twenty-two to twenty-five, broke down under conviction of sin, and before the close of the meeting I saw one pointing another to Christ.

These village people, when blessed and stirred up, are not above walking some five or six miles, or even further, to the next night's meeting. There are no penny trams at their disposal, but they form companies and sing along the roads. In some of these places we find the priest holding sway; the children are bought with blankets, etc., at Christmas. I name this only that Christians may see the importance of strengthening efforts, and standing by those who plod with such odds against them. I am fully conscious of the fact that in my tours I have in a large measure entered into the labours of others. Yet I find great joy in speaking the same message and strengthening the hands of those on the spot.

Evangelistic Notes.

During the past fortnight Mr. F. C. Glover, of Weston-super-Mare, has been holding a mission in Burlescombe parish, Westleigh, Somerset. The meetings have been held in "The Gospel Tent." Children assembled in large numbers, and listened attentively to our brother's addresses and object lessons. The meetings for adults were well attended. God's presence has been realised, and many, we believe, have turned from darkness to light. F. B. Spray, Congregational Pastor.

Mr. William Dunn has concluded an encouraging mission at Barry Dock. From the first meeting to the close the interest deepened. On the night when Mr. Dunn gave his life-story, many had to be turned away. Pledges have been taken and souls have professed conversion. We believe the results of the mission have by no means come to an end. Gerald R. Coultas.

Mr. William Groves has been conducting a fortnight's Gospel service at the Baptist Chapel, Dugdale-street, Camberwell New-road. There are many whom we dealt with personally in the inquiry-room who have professed conversion. Our Sunday collections were more than double the usual amount. Our prayers and praise follow the evangelist.

John Waite, Pastor.

Mr. B. H. Angel has closed a fortnight's tent mission at Godstone. There has been blessing alike to saint and sinner. The evangelist is now holding a mission at Blindley Heath.

Mr. Charles Inglis has brought to a close a very successful five weeks' mission in Mr. Charrington's Great Assembly Hall, Mile End-road, E. No other evangelist can look back a quarter of a century and remember the early days of this work. During the whole of this period Mr. Inglis has yearly paid a visit and preached for the Tower Hamlets Mission. There are some still actively engaged in the work that were brought to the Lord during Mr. Inglis's earliest visits. Fresh from his work in Canada and the United States, it was most encouraging to find the old field of work ready for the seed of the Word. The week-night services were well attended, while the Sundays, as usual, found the great hall filled with audiences as anxious as ever for the Gospel. Some deeply interesting cases were dealt with from time to time in the after-meetings. Miss Inglis, who has a sweet voice, sang on the last Sunday evening.

Mr. Hugh C. Wallace, of the Evangelisation Society, London, has lately completed a Gospel Mission at Oare, Pewsey, Wilts, in a barn, it being the fifth conducted by him in this neighbourhood. All the meetings were very well attended, and once again much good was the result.

Five young students of the Bible Institute, Chicago, have purchased a van, have had a team of horses presented to them, and are off to the Black Hills to preach to the miners. The van contains all the arrangements for cooking. They carry tracts and Testaments for distribution. This is not a new departure, as the Bible Institute already controls several "Gospel waggons," as they are called.

The following incident occurred in connection with the evangelistic meetings recently held by Dr. L. W. Munhall, in Ottawa, Canada: One of the most prominent and influential business men in all Canada stood up in one of the meetings, and before 2,500 persons confessed Jesus as Saviour. His two sons, being present, followed their father's example. At the close of the meeting they went home and told the Christian wife and mother what they had done. She was almost overcome with joy, for she had been praying for this very thing for years. A family altar was at once erected. About 1,400 persons made public confession of Jesus as Saviour in the meetings. Hundreds have since united with the churches of Ottawa.

Mrs. Baeyertz at Cardiff.

This lady evangelist conducted a sixteen days' mission at Grangetown, Cardiff, from May 16 to 31. This was her third visit to Cardiff, but her first visit to Grangetown, one of the most neglected divisions of the town. All the meetings were held at the Grangetown Hall—belonging to the South Wales Forward Movement. The hall, which holds 1100, was crowded on the Lord's Day, and the floor was filled during the week. Nearly 200 professed to surrender themselves to Christ, and hundreds more were under deep conviction. The spirit of conviction was so strong in some instances that anxious ones could not sleep, and would get out of bed and call on some of the workers in the early hours of the morning, asking them to pray for them.

Our earnest prayer is that this work of God may spread, until there is a general awakening throughout this great district, which lies so near our great docks. We want our seafaring men to be saved, and become a blessing to this and other lands. Scores of families will bless God for sending his handmaid to our midst, and many a weary pilgrim will praise God for this season of refreshing. The afternoon Bible readings proved invaluable to Christians; while the clear way in which Mrs. Baeyertz set forth God's way of life in the evening meetings removed many a doubt, as well as led scores of poor sinners to trust in the finished work of Christ. All of us who have had the privilege of working in this place of difficulty thank God for the visit of our good sister. John Pugh, General Superintendent.

Colportage Work.

The annual meeting of the Metropolitan Colportage Association took place at the Tabernacle on Monday evening. The general sales of the year included 6393 Bibles, 4438 Testaments, books and packets 154,243, besides a large number of Scripture texts and cards, penny stories, etc. There was also a gratuitous distribution of over 61,000 tracts; nearly 350,000 visits were paid to houses in the district, and about 7500 religious services were held. Several districts have been reluctantly given up on account of inadequate support. The death of Mr. Brooking, the trade manager, was announced with regret, thanks being tendered to friends who had subscribed £50 for the widow, and to the trustees of the Stockwell Orphanage for receiving one of the girls into that institution.

A number of the men came to London recently for the annual gathering. They met in conference at the Tabernacle, and the same afternoon Mr. Thomas Spurgeon gave an address on "Irons in the Fire." His point was that there could not be too many irons in the fire if there was fire enough for them. At the general meeting in the Tabernacle, the report was read by the hon. secretary, Mr. C. P. Carpenter. Mr. Spurgeon said he rejoiced that the Society still flourished. It had lived in his late father's affections, though it had not been supported as he had desired. Difficulties had come, the work had necessarily been curtailed, but it was not less vigorous than of old. God had raised up the men, and had helped them to carry it on. The Lord had set his seal upon it; the Tabernacle Church was interested in the work; and though their hands were full, and they were not so able to support it as of old, there was no falling off in their interest. Other addresses followed.

Basutoland in Joy and Sorrow.

The following is from our aged friend, Rev. H. M. Dyke:—

We have had a blessed season of refreshment. Sabbath day we met to give praise for our glorious risen Saviour, and to commemorate his love in delivering us from condemnation by dying for us. Large congregations assembled to hear the blessed news; it was a beautiful autumn day, and about 2500 Basutos were present. We have no building large enough to hold that number; the meetings were therefore held outside under the shade of large fir-trees. In the afternoon service the Lord's Supper was partaken of by about 1000 of the Christians delivered from heathen darkness. It was a glorious sight to see so many approaching the table to partake of the bread and wine in memory of our dear Lord and Saviour. I am sure your heart would have overflowed with joy and praise had you been with us, and you would have said, "Truly the Lord is answering the prayers of his believing people in thus bringing in the heathen to the liberty of his Gospel." I trust that we shall hear from other stations of similar blessed seasons attending the believers, although upon none is it probable that so many would meet together.

Continue to bear upon your hearts our work in this still heathen land; the remarkable advance and aggression of the Europeans in late years make us tremble for these poor black nations still in the bonds of Satan, never having heard of God and his salvation, and who are being shot down or scattered by the white man. Wait with us on the Lord, that yet a time of mercy, a time for his servants to work, may still be granted. Oh for more earnest zeal and love for souls, love for the benighted heathen!

Next Sabbath my Henry and his wife purpose going to my old station at Hermon to hold service, and have the communion with the Christians in that district (about thirty miles from here), their missionary, Monsieur Christol, being on furlough. I have no doubt that, with God's presence and blessing, it will be a truly joyful season for the numerous believers there.

The terrible cattle plague (rinderpest) has entered Basutoland, and I fear it will cut off most of the cattle, and cause great distress. We can no longer travel with our ox waggons, we must trust to horses for short journeys. May the Lord deal in great mercy in this serious trial!

Morija, Basutoland, April 20.

The Lantern among the Arabs.

Mr. Joseph Cooksey, of the North Africa Mission, writes from Maison Crifo, Rue Gambetta, Sousse, Tunisia:—

We are able to do excellent work among the Arabs and Jews here by means of a magic lantern. There is a wide field of usefulness in this direction, if we had a good lantern, and liberal supply of coloured Scriptural slides. We have borrowed one up to now, but if we had one of our own we could at any time enter an open door and arrange a system of lantern services in the cafés in the evenings. In our village work the doctor has not been able to come with us for some weeks now; and a lantern draws splendid audiences.

The Indian Army.—At the Free Church Assembly, the submission of a report on the State regulation of vice gave rise to a debate on the question of the health of the Indian army, and Lord George Hamilton's dispatch thereanent, and on a proposal declaring it inexpedient to reappoint the Assembly's Committee, for the reason that this matter was not one with which the church, as a church, ought to take anything to do. This proposal was defeated, being only supported by nine members.

Mission Work in Bulgaria.—Pastor Basil S. Keusseff, whose work in Lom-Palanka has more than once been referred to in our columns, has issued a booklet, entitled, "Baptist Mission Work in Bulgaria." (2d. Baptist Tract and Book Depôt, 16, Gray's Inn-road, W.C.) It contains extracts from various articles descriptive of the pastor's work, exhibiting the difficulties that are encountered, also the persecution that has been endured. Nevertheless, encouraging success has attended the mission. Mr. Keusseff is at present in England raising the small amount of money required to alter the miserable building now in use for church purposes. He is fully accredited, and may be addressed to the care of Dr. Grattan Guinness, Harley House, Bow, E.

Christian Endeavour.

NATIONAL CONVENTION AT LIVERPOOL.

THE meetings of the seventh annual Convention of the Christian Endeavour Societies of Great Britain were commenced in Liverpool on Saturday evening. The gatherings have been on a very large scale, several of the most commodious buildings in the city being entirely monopolised in connection with them, and several thousand delegates from all parts of the country have been present.

The Convention was inaugurated by a reception to the visitors, presided over by Mr. Samuel Smith, M.P., who spoke some weighty and suitable words. A very hearty welcome was accorded to Rev. Dr. F. E. Clark and Mrs. Clark.

On Sunday there were special early morning prayer-meetings in the churches of various denominations, and later at the morning services in almost all the churches throughout the city attention was directed to different phases of the Christian Endeavour movement. In the evening a large number of open-air evangelistic services were held, and between eight and nine o'clock it was almost impossible to walk about in any part of the city without hearing the sound of Gospel singing.

Special Convention sermons were preached in the afternoon by Rev. Dr. G. S. BARRETT, in the Music Hall, Birkenhead, and by Dr. F. E. CLARK, in Hengler's Circus. Speaking from the words, "The Lord is able to give much more than this" Dr. Clark referred to the development of Sabbath-schools, the Young Men's and Young Women's Christian Associations, and the Endeavour Society as illustrating the power of God in the spreading of the Gospel. He remarked that when the Christian Endeavour Society was started some sixteen years ago, no one would have been bold enough to prophesy the extent to which it has reached to-day, whilst even seven years ago, when the first British Convention was held at Crewe, would anyone have predicted that such an enormous gathering would be taking place in Liverpool to-day? Similar work to that in England, he said, is being done in connection with the society in America. The young people there are arising on behalf of a better citizenship, a purer political life, and there is gradually springing up a revived civic consciousness. He believed that the English-speaking nations, standing together, would accomplish for the evangelisation of the world what no other nations on the face of the globe could accomplish.

On Monday and Tuesday numerous meetings were held, which we hope to notice in our next issue.

Strangers' Rest, Ratcliff Highway.

AT a special meeting of workers at the Strangers' Rest, Ratcliff Highway, on Friday evening last, helpful addresses were delivered by Mr. A. A. Head and Rev. J. G. Train. Mr. and Mrs. Ridings, who for many years have resided in Chili, pleaded the needs of that country and the other republics that make up the continent of South America. Their facts and figures were impressive; and what they were able to say of work already done among the people was not without significance as promising better things yet in store.

South America represents about one-eighth of the entire surface of the globe. It comprises ten or twelve republics, and has a population getting on for forty millions. There are mighty mountains, and there the greatest rivers of the world. In the matter of evangelisation, little has been done by agencies from the old world; the United States sustains many efforts, but calculating all these there are only about 500 evangelical workers in the entire continent.

Mr. Ridings referred with pleasure to the work of the Christian and Missionary Alliance of New York, which is contemplating great things in Gospel work in South America. Mrs. Ridings spoke earnestly for Chili, asking Christian traders to make their home there, and become centres of light in the midst of dense darkness.

On Whit Monday open-air and indoor meetings were held, the Gospel being preached in English, German, and Swedish. At 5.30 the sailors crowded into the large hall for tea, and a happy social gathering it was. After tea all assembled outside the "Rest" for another open-air service. Afterwards indoor meetings were held in different languages. Not a few were, it is believed, savingly blessed.

Missionary Pence Association.

DURING the financial year just closed upwards of £1000 has been received by this agency, and at least a hundred missions or societies have been aided from its funds. When it is remembered that the fundamental idea is regular weekly contributions of one penny or upwards, and that by far the larger part of the amount has been raised on this method, it will be seen that a widespread interest is represented. The Association insists that all contributions sent should be extra gifts beyond ordinary subscriptions. As the bulk of its income is derived from weekly pence from those not rich enough to be subscribers to societies, there is little doubt that these small gifts are extra income for the various missions. It is a very useful agency to the smaller missions as it supplies the machinery for collecting, and transmits all amounts to the societies nominated by its members, free of deductions.

In addition to aiding the funds of so many societies, and maintaining several lepers and children of lepers, one missionary, Mr. G. Wilkerson, is entirely supported by the Association. He is doing good work in Matabeleland, and the latest reports from him are of a cheering character. Interest in foreign missions is awakened, and information about them is supplied by the Association. It affords a ready and simple method for Bible classes, young peoples' societies, and mission halls, as well as private Christians, to bear their share in the great work of foreign missions. The secretary (Mr. W. R. Jones) may be addressed at 186, Aldersgate-street, E.C. JOHN JACKSON, Treasurer.

The Salvation Army.

THE Jubilee campaign of the Salvation Army was opened on Monday by General Booth, when Exeter Hall was thronged morning, afternoon, and evening. The Army was naturally present in great force, but the general public were also well represented.

General BOOTH said that as it was the anniversary of Pentecost he would take for his text the words, "Ye shall receive power, after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you." The Apostles were sent to carry on the work of Christ, but they wanted the power, till that promise was fulfilled; then they were transformed into heroes, and what they suffered and accomplished had been the wonder and the blessing of the world from that day to this. People now are in much the same predicament as the Apostles were; there is the same wail of want of power. There is plenty of power in the world—the power of machinery, the power for war, the power for amusement, the power of intellect, the power of wickedness. Yet with all that power, if we go into the spiritual world, the wail is "I can't." It is the pouring forth of the Holy Spirit that will give the power needed to do all the work which God demands. We must surrender all to God. At the conclusion of the General's address about fifty men and women came up to the penitent form.

The afternoon and evening meetings were crowded, and were marked, if possible, by even greater enthusiasm. The General announced that the Salvation Army is going to celebrate the Jubilee by forming 100 new army corps.

The Scottish Assemblies.—Some errors of fact crept into our brief notes last week on the Assembly gatherings. The principle of local management of the drink traffic was not endorsed as stated, but was rejected in the Free Assembly, though by a small majority. The decision of last year in the Established Assembly not to entertain the adoption of the joint hymnal was this year reversed by a decided vote.

Discharged Prisoners.—Since its formation, the Metropolitan Discharged Prisoners' Aid Society has assisted upwards of fourteen thousand prisoners, of whom it would appear that only about 7 per cent. find their way back to prison; while of unassisted prisoners a very large proportion do so. The total number of cases dealt with by this Society during 1896 was the very large number of 1317. The means adopted to find honest work for prisoners are various. The following are some instances: Purchasing a small stock to commence trade, such as fish or other articles, or tools for the prisoner's work, putting him in communication with a former employer, or taking him to some place where mere physical labour is required without any previous character. The central address is 15, Buckingham-street, W.C.; but there is a "Home" connected with the Society close to Pentonville Prison, and under the superintendence of a resident agent.

Catastrophe in Pisa Cathedral.

ON May 29 the priests had announced a splendid service in the Cathedral, when the very ancient picture known as the "Madonna di sotto gli Organi" was to be uncovered and brought out from its altar with great pomp and the celebration of Pontifical Vespers.

The whole of the immense building was illuminated by thousands of wax candles, with garlands of paper flowers between them. In consequence of the recent catastrophe in Paris, great precautions were taken, and the galleries were not let, as had been intended, on a sliding-scale of prices, just as in a theatre. The object of the committee which promoted the proposed fêtes was "to affirm, in the fiftieth crowning of our Madonna, the popular faith of Pisa, which has never been belied during the past centuries," and also to give a stimulus to commerce in the city by the coming of visitors and pilgrims from all parts of Italy. The civil fêtes and special services begun on May 22 were to be continued at intervals up to August 15, to the indignation of the Liberal party at such a revival of fanaticism.

On the evening of May 29, at the moment the local authorities were signing the documents for the uncovering of the picture, a candle fell, setting light to some of the paper flowers. Although it was at once extinguished, a cry of "Fire!" was raised, on which an uncontrollable panic took place, and so many of the thousands of people assembled rushed to the principal doors that a most terrible scene ensued. Women and children fell on the outside steps, where eight or nine were crushed to death, while a large number were more or less seriously injured. Others fainted, and some had their clothing literally torn to shreds in the terrific struggle.

Meanwhile, with the shrieks of the victims, and the cries of agonised relatives searching for their dear ones outside the Duomo, there mingled the tones of the exquisite music within and the singing of the choir of the Sistina Chapel in Rome, for the service went on as if no such tremendous struggle between life and death were taking place outside.

The Madonna was uncovered with all solemnity and carried out in procession; the electric and other lamps began to be lighted for the intended "splendid illumination." Upon this arose an indignant protest from the crowd of people and students in the square. The Archbishop was received with hisses, and some 2000 people marched through the town extinguishing the illuminations and tearing or smashing images of the Madonna.

The Duomo was then closed by order of the Prefetto, and the fêtes suspended for ten days. A message of sympathy was published from the King and a public funeral given to the victims on Monday, May 31.

A special tract had been prepared and largely circulated, entitled "Story of the Madonna taken from the Gospels." I would ask your readers to remember Pisa very specially in prayer, that this effort and all other Gospel work carried on here, may be very abundantly blessed, and that even this sad calamity may work together for good and for the glory of God. S. H. CARRUTHERS.

Pisa, June 5.

Portsmouth Soldiers' Institute.

EVERY worker here seems interested in making the place a good, comfortable happy home for every soldier willing to use it. No extraordinary or sensational methods are adopted to this end, but Divine guidance is sought daily to make the Institute really helpful, socially, morally and spiritually. Readers from the Institute go to barracks at the proper time, and, looking upwards for guidance, almost invariably find that the men receive such visits with pleasure, and it is believed that very many soldiers have thus been brought to Christ. Since the transfer of troopships to Southampton, a coffee-bar has been worked at the docks there, and every ship has been visited, but these efforts being insufficient to meet the need, a large house has been secured, in an excellent position, for a branch institute. The preparation and fitting up of this branch has necessitated considerable outlay, also some changes in the Portsmouth staff.

The Walsall Y.M.C.A. has benefited to the extent of £100 under the will of the late Miss Windle, an old subscriber.

Hudson Taylor, Bishop Ridley (of Caledonia), Mrs. Bishop.

Pastor Frank H. White and Mrs. White write us that they feel deeply grateful for the letters of true Christian sympathy they have received since their recent bereavement. The very large number of such communications prevents, to their deep regret, individual acknowledgment.

Spreading the Truth.—A quiet and unobtrusive work in spiritual seed-sowing continues to be done by the Society for Distributing Scripture Truth, which has been in existence for over thirty years. Its headquarters are at Eastbourne (65, South-street), but the Society is far-reaching in its operations. Its hanging text-rolls, cards, leaflets, etc., are found in railway waiting-rooms, hotels, hospitals, tramps' lodging-houses, prisons, and all manner of places at home and abroad. The need for such ministry is greater than ever, and the openings are increasing in number.

The Land of Edom.—Some interesting discoveries at Petra are reported by Father Buillon, Professor of Hebrew at Jerusalem, including ten unpublished inscriptions. The most important was that on the statue of King Rabel, the pedestal of which is 3 ft. high by 2 ft. broad. It is near the triumphal arch and alongside the Roman road. Another of the inscriptions is on one of the great tombs near the ravine of the Sie. It is bilingual, but has been so furrowed by rain as to be almost undecipherable. These discoveries are likely to lead to fresh light on Syrian history.

Archbishop Plunket Memorial Fund.

Perhaps no language could more forcibly set forth the claims of the Spanish Reformers to our sympathy and help than the words of the late honoured president himself, when for the last time he pleaded in public on their behalf. His Grace, in preaching from the text, "Be ye patient, for the coming of the Lord is nigh," said:—

"Does it appear strange that I should so importunately plead this cause? Does my anxiety on behalf of these reformers in so distant a land seem to any of you something like the craze of a well-meaning enthusiast? Ah, brethren, had you only seen what I have seen, had you only heard what I have heard, when going to and fro among these our brethren in Spain, you would no longer wonder. Had you come to know, as I have, the cravings and perplexities of these anxious inquirers, groping their way, as it were, among the dark mountains, and beseeching us to aid them in returning to the safe old paths. Had you witnessed, as I have, the obloquy, the hardship, and sometimes the peril to which they who so return are not seldom exposed; had you seen, as I have, the bold stand which they have made for Christ, facing contumely and shame for his dear sake. Had you watched, as I have, the earnest looks with which more than one of the brethren have grasped my hand, and thanked me, even with tears, for having done something to evoke sympathy on their behalf; ah, brethren, had all this been imprinted on your minds as it has been, and is, even at this moment, imprinted on mine, no one would wonder at my importunacy! No. What you would wonder at is this—that an appeal, however importunate, on behalf of brave and earnest men such as these, should ever have been made—as alas! it has sometimes been made—in vain!"

Contributions will be thankfully received by Dean Lefroy, Norwich; Preb. H. W. Webb-Peploe, 25, Onslow-gardens, S.W., and by the undersigned.—Yours faithfully,

H. E. Noyes, D.D.

Liverpool Evangelisation Society.

During the twenty-first year (1896) of this Society's labours in Liverpool and the neighbourhood, it has been encouraged by receiving many additional applications for help in preachers, and the various Gospel messages delivered both by their superintendent and volunteer staff have been very generously appreciated. Open-air meetings have been largely held in different parts of the city. Mr. T. Lydiatt, as superintendent, gave much help in the Jewish quarters and elsewhere, where there were many listeners. The number of indoor services provided with preachers cover a wide range of districts; the total number of meetings held during the year being 965, as against 757 in 1895. The Hon. Secretary is Mr. T. D. Barry, 3, Hackins Hey. This much-needed work of preaching the Gospel to the poor of a great city bears evident signs of success and progress, though the expenditure of the past year has not been fully met by income.

Belfast City Mission.

The home heathenism of Belfast is vastly greater than when this Mission was set on foot more than fifty years ago. This, of course, is due to the city's rapid and enormous growth, yet none the less is it a matter of most serious import. The utter godlessness of tens of thousands in the community constitutes a menace to society and a call to earnest effort by the Church of Christ. House-to-house visitation is an important department of daily labour by the twenty-four missionaries of this organisation, while open-air services, cottage meetings, tract distribution, and special evangelistic services stand prominent among other operations directed by the secretary, Mr. Wm. Maxwell, from the office at 12, May Street. It is not possible to tabulate the spiritual results and far-reaching influence for good of such a Mission, or to calculate the loss to this great and growing community were its agents and operations withdrawn. It is to be regretted that, owing to an exhausted exchequer, no addition to the number of missionaries has been possible during the past year.

Mr. Marcus G. Daniel, a Nestorian from Kurdistan, is in London pursuing studies with a view to undertaking evangelistic work among his own people. He has the endorsement of missionaries in Persia, and many well-known Christians in England. He is thoroughly acquainted with Nestorian conditions of life, and while still among us would be glad of opportunities to tell his story and plead the cause of the Gospel among the Kurds. Communications may be addressed to him, care of Miss Barclay, 9, Tranton-road, Bermondsey, S.E.

Work at Costers' Hall.

Mr. W. J. Orsman, J.P., issues his 35th annual report, the work having been commenced in Golden-lane in 1861. Costers' Hall is rightly described as "a remarkable centre of light and influence. Everything clusters around the Word of God, which radiates and inspires hundreds of once dreary sinful lives to holy activities." It is added that the most real and permanent way to elevate the poor is to reveal to their hearts the reality of eternal things. The Gospel in the home soon chases away the darkness and degradation of former times, and the men and women thus influenced become capable citizens and a blessing to society.

The distinct operations now carried on number fifty-five, and the spiritual work is more far-reaching than ever, the large hall being crowded at the Sunday evening services. There are 127 voluntary workers, whose aid makes it possible to carry on a large and comprehensive work at comparatively little cost. The Evangelisation Society supplies evangelists who are much appreciated. Some thousands of working people and their children are in constant contact with the Mission, the attendance every Sunday at Costers' Hall of children and adults being fully 2000. The street traders have the privilege of having rooms, free of charge, in which to carry on their thrift and general meetings. The week-day work—religious, social, and benevolent, deals with a much larger number of persons.

Mr. Orsman proposes that during Jubilee week a thousand poor persons will be entertained at Costers' Hall, as the most loyal way of remembering the Queen's sixty years' reign; but gifts either in kind or in money will need to be sent if this is carried out. The spiritual work, after all, remains the chief thing, and Costers' Hall represents a working mission church of several hundred members. Parcels of goods or left-off clothes should be sent to Costers' Hall, letters to Mr. W. J. Orsman, J.P., Shacklewell-green, N.E.

Schwifat Mission Schools.

After three weeks of itinerancy along the coast in ancient Phœnicia we came to the village of Schwifat, which lies between the mountains of Lebanon and the Mediterranean. There is much here to attract and delight the artist and the poet; but what has most interested and delighted us is Miss Louisa Proctor's work. She began, as you are aware, with twelve pupils, in 1886; but now it appears that she has, of boarders and day scholars together, in and near Schwifat, over 200 juvenile students of both sexes. Miss Proctor has many blessings to be thankful for, but chief of these, we think, is the staff which assist her.

At evening worship last Saturday St. John xi. was read, and the pupils were examined on the passage. The fulness and accuracy of their answers struck me as being remarkable; but the examination on the morning sermon last Sabbath evening was so detailed and accurate as to astonish a man who has sat at the feet of the best educators in Great Britain and America. It could be matched only by the best effort of the kind among the Scotch. It seems that some of Miss Proctor's friends have desired her to visit Great Britain, and tell a little about her mission schools; but while she could not comply, she is sending her "right hand," Mr. Tanious Saad, an honorary assistant, who enjoys her complete confidence. For some time past he has been collecting curious objects, which he will exhibit in England to make his lectures on "Bible Lands" more entertaining and beneficial. He is described by Christian travellers who have visited these schools as eminently fitted to interest and instruct, and no doubt many would like his services. If so, he may be addressed, care of Mr. Glockler, 153, Adelaide-road, Hampstead, London, N.W.

PERSONAL RESPONSIBILITY.—Rom. xiv. 10-21.
GOLDEN TEXT.—Ver. 21.

THE law of love which, in the former chapter, is applied to our political and social life, is here applied to the differences which may exist among Christians. The lessons are two:—

1. Love saves from harsh judgment of others (10-12).—Explain the condition of the Church in Rome. The well-instructed Christian, who knew his liberty in Christ, was free from all bondage to the Jewish ceremonial. To him all meats were lawful, and the sacred feast-days of the Jews were no longer binding. But others were "weak." Some were in bondage to the Rabbinical law which forbade the eating of meat which heathen butchers had killed, and the drinking of wine from heathen vineyards. Others still felt the obligation to observe Jewish law in matters of meat and drink and holy days, as Peter himself did before his vision. (See Acts x. 14-15.) Others had been idolaters before their conversion, and were not wholly free from the influence of their idolatry. An idol was not yet understood by them to be "nothing" (1 Cor. viii. 4-6); hence they regarded the eating and drinking of what had been offered to idols as participating in idolatrous worship.

How to deal with these weak ones, that is the question. It would be easy to say, "They ought to know better," and to seek to argue them out of their mistake by doubtful disputation (ver. 1). Or worse than that, there may be mutual misjudgment. The weak may judge, i.e., condemn the strong, the strong may "despise," or "set at nought" the weak (3, 10). But love will not do either. It will lead a man to love his brother who with a clear conscience can do what would be wrong in himself (4-6). It will render it impossible for anything like contempt to be shown towards a brother whom Christ has received. More love would not make us all think alike, but it would lead us to respect one another's differences.

The application of this lesson need not be confined to questions of eating and of holy days, nor even to religious differences. Wherever we meet with one who is weak, or ignorant, or timid, we may be tempted to despise him. Or when we meet others who can do what we dare not attempt, we may pronounce judgment upon them. The apostle says, "Don't do so, but love them." Is not that a more excellent way?

And this lesson is enforced by the prospect of our own manifestation before the Judgment Seat of Christ (10, 12). It is not what men call the General Judgment to which the apostle refers, but that before which Christians are to have their works tried (see 2 Cor. v. 10); and their works will include their conduct towards those brethren who differed from them. There is One Judge—and only One. We must not arrogate to ourselves his work; but should live so constantly with the thought of meeting Him that our attitude towards all would not be condemned. How do our harsh judgments of others appear in the light of that day?

II. Love prompts to the spirit of self-denial on behalf of others (13-15). This is the lesson, particularly for the strong. It is their privilege to give up their liberty sometimes for the sake of others. A thing may be lawful, but it is not expedient (1 Cor. x. 23). "Why should I give up what I have a right to enjoy, simply because of somebody's weakness or ignorance?" Have you never heard anybody talk like that? Have you never talked that way yourself? "I've got a right to it, and I mean to have it!" Now learn the more excellent way of love. Love never talks like that. It was Cain who talked as though his brother were no concern of his. Love recognises two things: First, that fearful injury may come to the weak brother who attempts to do what another does with safety; and secondly, that Christ died for that weak brother as much as for the strong. He is, therefore, dear to Christ, and must be cared for and helped for Christ's sake. There are many applications of this. Card-playing, dancing, the use of intoxicants, certain places of amusement, Sunday travelling—are these stumbling-blocks to some? "Oh, yes," you reply, "to some weak, ignorant Christians." Well, if you love them, as you must, you will care for them, and bear their infirmities. To forego an indulgence for their sake is very little in comparison with what Christ did for them. And yet you are to love them with his love "shed abroad in your heart!"

This lesson is enforced by the statement as to what is really important in our Christian life (17-19). The three essential things are not dependent upon these outward things. Whatever we surrender for a brother's sake, if these are left to us, we may be more than content. But if indulgence destroys our peace with our brother, will it not rob us of the joy of the Holy Ghost, and of the consciousness of being right with God?

Irish Notes.

By the will of the late Mr. Robert Carr, of Kingstown, Dublin, Methodist foreign missions receive £500, Methodist home missions £100, and other Methodist funds £200.

Much regret is felt by a wide circle of friends at the death of Dr. T. A. McKee, of Dublin, who has just passed away, aged seventy-three. Deceased had been for twenty-seven years governor and chaplain of Wesley College, Dublin.

The Home of Rest at Bangor, co. Down, has proved a real boon to many an overworked female operative in Belfast, as in it she has found not only bodily, but spiritual health. Last year the visitors numbered 2000, and last week a new wing was opened.

The Bible and Colportage Society of Ireland, the annual meeting of which has been held in the Christian Union Buildings, Dublin, is doing a good and useful work. The total sales last year were 66,171, including 929 Bibles, 791 Testaments, and 863 Douay Testaments.

The Presbyterian Colportage Association employs forty-three agents, and its income last year was £1500. A new departure has been made by some nineteen students volunteering for this work, as a labour of love, during the summer months. Dr. Williamson, Moderator of the General Assembly, has said that this will give them an experience which will be better for them than a whole college session.

Among the Aged Blind.

THERE is always an interest, none the less real if a little melancholy, attaching to a gathering of blind persons. The sightless eyes are often concealed in a bright and cheery countenance, which is a rebuke to the unrest sometimes manifested in many whose faculties are unimpaired.

Such was the scene witnessed last week at the seventeenth anniversary of the Homes for Aged Blind situate at Crouch Hill, which an encouraging number of friends met to celebrate in the Jubilee Hall erected ten years ago for the benefit of the institution. An appropriate sermon was preached in the afternoon by Rev. Llewellyn Parsons, of Finsbury Park, and at 7.30 p.m. Mr. Samuel Iles, of Bristol, presided.

Eighty-two men and women are now in the Homes, most of whom have passed their three-score years and ten, while twenty two range from eighty to ninety three years of age. During the twelve months recorded, five had died, having shared the benefits of this kindly retreat, some for a dozen years and others less. Their darkness and suffering are now done; they shine in the light of the presence of the Lord in whom they had trusted.

The committee have decided to commemorate the present year by establishing at Southend-on-Sea a Branch Home for the Blind, the partially blind, and those who work on their behalf. An unencumbered freehold house has been secured, to purchase, repair, adapt, and furnish which £1650 will be required. Of this £1000 has been subscribed or promised. An urgent appeal was made for the balance, £650, so that the Home may be opened free from debt before the year is out. Rev. Henry Bright, himself blind, and his devoted wife superintend the work, at 77, Hanley-road, Crouch-hill, N.

A Jewish Testimony.—By way of rejoicing with Great Britain at the approaching Jubilee, the Union of Missionaries to the Jews have resolved to hold a meeting for prayer, praise, and testimony in Victoria Park on the afternoon of June 20. It is expected that about 200 Hebrew Christians will take part in this meeting, the aim of which is to express gratitude to God for the numerous blessings, both spiritual and temporal, which have been enjoyed by the Jews in Great Britain during the Victorian era. The sec. of the Union is Mr. M. S. Bergmann, 222, Burdett-road, Bow, E.

Spectacle Mission.—Only those who have themselves suffered from failing eyesight can fully appreciate the immense boon a pair of suitable spectacles confers; and if this be the case with the well to-do, how important it is that those who need such appliances, but are too poor to purchase, should be mercifully assisted in this respect, especially when their livelihood depends upon unclouded powers of vision. The London Spectacle Mission Society, founded in 1886 by the late Dr. E. G. Waring, has for some years been under the management of a responsible committee, the Bishop of London having expressed warm approval of the movement, and many clergymen testifying to the good work which the Mission has done in their parishes. Every subscriber is entitled to a number of spectacle cards for distribution, and each pair of spectacles is accompanied by a booklet. The hon. sec. is Miss Waring, of 197, Sutherland-avenue, W.

Personalia.

Mr. Wm. Quarrier, of Glasgow, is now on his way to Canada with a party of girl emigrants. He will be absent about two months.

Rev. W. Milburn, the blind chaplain of New York Senate, is about to visit England and Scotland. He will preach at various places.

Dr. T. L. Cuyler, in an article on "Books that have Helped Me," lays stress on the value of good biographies as an inspiration to devoted service. Of Finney's "Revival Lectures" he says:—"They are Sinaitic thunder and chain lightning; the perusal of them always sets me on fire. They are a grand tonic for young ministers."

Mr. M. S. Bergmann, who has for a number of years been engaged upon a translation of the Holy Scriptures into Yiddish, for the use of the Jews, has now completed the Old Testament portion of his work. The stereo plates are ready, and it is hoped that funds will soon be available to carry through the printing. Mr. Bergmann has nearly completed the New Testament in the same version. Several of the Jewish missions are encouraging his undertaking. Communications should be addressed to Mr. Bergmann, at 222, Burdett-road, E.

Obituary.

REV. J. HALL SHAW, VENTNOR.

By the death of Rev. J. Hall Shaw, M.A., Ventnor has lost one of its best-loved residents. By Nonconformists, as well as Churchmen, he was held in warm esteem; and although he had only held the vicariate for about five years, he had made a deep impression by force of character and Christian activity. Mr. Shaw was fifty-four years of age, and had held charges at Cheltenham and Harborne. From 1886 to 1892 he was vicar of St. Paul's, Canonbury, and was related to the late Miss Havergal.

REV. JAMES TROUP.

On Friday morning Rev. James Troup, of the Helensburgh Congregational Church, died very suddenly at the Manse. He retired in his usual good health, but ween twelve and one o'clock the housekeeper was attracted by a noise in Mr. Troup's room. On her entering, Mr. Troup uttered a few inarticulate sounds, and expired before medical aid could be summoned. Mr. Troup, who was a native of Rhynie, was educated at King's College, Aberdeen, and the New College, London. After the close of his college career he was called to Helensburgh as colleague to Rev. John Arthur, of the Congregational Church. At the end of five years he accepted a call to a Shetland church, but in 1870 he returned to Helensburgh as sole pastor of the Congregational Church, and he has since filled the pulpit with great acceptance. He was a cultured, scholarly preacher, and took the greatest interest in every evangelistic, philanthropic, and temperance effort.

MR. MARRIAGE WALLIS, J.P.

Religious and philanthropic circles in Brighton have lost a familiar figure by the decease of Mr. Marriage Wallis, J.P., in his seventy-seventh year. A native of Essex, and of Quaker descent, he entered the grocery business of his relative Isaac Bass, at Brighton, when thirteen years of age. As the years passed there was developed a warm sympathy in commercial activity, political energy, philanthropic interest, and religious life. Daniel Hack brought a like combination of vigour and character into the firm, and with its advancement there was a growth of influence for the good of Brighton and its best enterprises. The public spirit and generosity of Mr. Wallis are widely known. He was for many years a minister among Friends, also a thorough temperance worker; and for twenty years he served his fellow-citizens on the School Board. In him the Y.M.C.A. loses a firm friend and supporter; and in his capacity of president he was wise in counsel as well as to the fore with material help, and all this from the early days of the Association's existence.

Dartford.—The twenty-first anniversary of the Blackwood Temperance Hotel and Heath-street Hall was held a few days ago, Mr. A. C. P. Coote presiding. Though the general expenditure had been met, there is still a heavy debt on the building. The annual report, read by the superintendent, Mr. T. W. Stidolph, stated that the coffee tavern had been well patronised. The lads' Bible-class under Miss Wilkins had been well maintained; a sphere of much usefulness was open in the conduct of a girls' Bible-class, and it was earnestly hoped that some lady would undertake the work. Rev. A. Sturge, in the course of a vigorous address, expressed gratitude that the work was put under trustees, because that was a guarantee for its continuance. There was no hall in Dartford better situated for carrying on the social uplifting of the people.

THE BOOK WORLD.

JUNE MAGAZINES.

Bubbles, Dr. Barnardo's monthly, is famous for its coloured pictures. Some of the most striking in this number relate to natural history.

Young England is full of good matter for boys, useful elements not being crowded out by the imaginative. (Sunday School Union.)

Cottage Gardening is as varied as ever in contents, and calculated to render good service in brightening small homes. (Cassell & Co.)

In The Clergyman's Magazine Dr. Moule's thoughtful chapters on the Epistle to the Colossians are still running. There are many suggestive condensed sermons. (Hodder & Stoughton.)

The Expository Times sets forth all sides, and always has some useful matter for those who will study its pages with care. The Great Text Commentary is still dealing with John's Gospel, and there are some good notes on chap. xii. 24 ("The grain of wheat"). (T. & T. Clark.)

The Church Missionary Intelligencer opens with a thoughtful and instructive article by Rev. T. A. Gurney, on "The World Empire and the Everlasting Kingdom." Another remarkable contribution is "The Church and the C.M.S. in 1837," over the familiar signature of "E. S."

The Quiver in its "Royal Jubilee Number" has a loyal poem, "Victoria Victrix," a profusely illustrated article, "The Queen to her People"; a lyric, "Victoria the Good," by Rev. S. J. Stone, with more by Dr. G. C. Martin, and a splendid photograph of Her Majesty by Bassano. (Cassell.)

The Temple Magazine is varied, and among the most attractive contents are illustrated articles on "The Queen as Monarch," by W. T. Stead, and "The Queen's Horses and Carriages," by Mary Spencer Warren. Ten writers give their judgment as to the most striking characteristic and the most beneficent achievement of the Queen's reign.

In Good Words Mrs. Oliphant does justice to the Queen in a courtly and womanly sketch; and a capable pen tells of "Crete and the Cretans" with the aid of the artist's pencil. The Sunday Magazine's contribution to the Jubilee is "Sixty Years a Queen," by Dr. Spence, Dean of Gloucester. There are also interesting papers on Dr. Hugh Macmillan and Dr. Alex. Maclaren. (Isbister & Co.)

Religious Tract Society's Magazines. There are many echoes of the Jubilee time in these favourite periodicals. In The Leisure Hour Mr. F. Langbridge has a poem, musical in structure and lofty in imaginative power, entitled, "The Sixty Noble Years." Sir R. Palgrave contributes a most interesting sketch of the Queen's Prime Ministers with portraits. "Queen of Queens," the Jubilee number of The Girls' Own Paper, gives a comprehensive review of "The Queen and Her Reign," with portraits and illustrations. Sunday Hours (6d.), the popular new serial for the young, has an attractive bill of fare, including a fully illustrated account of "Life in Dr. Barnardo's Homes." The second part of The Boys' Sunday Monthly makes a fine pennyworth of varied reading. Among the varied and readable contents of The Girls' Own Magazine is a paper on "The Physiology of Plants," by Mrs. Brightwen, the well-known authority on natural history subjects. "The Roses of June" is another timely and finely illustrated article. The Boys' Own Paper, among other good things, has chapters on "Coins and Coin Collecting," by David F. Howorth, and an article on the cricket season. Several stories are running their course, and the "Boys' Own" Collector's Corner is a department of wide interest. The Sunday at Home opens with a "Hymn of Praise: The Twentieth of June, 1897," by Ellen Thorneycroft Fowler; and there are very readable articles on "The Victorian Years," "Some Recollections of the Sixty Years," and "The Threshold of the Twentieth Century."

Joseph Garibaldi, Patriot and Soldier. By R. Corlett Cowell. (1s. C. H. Kelly). A capital popular biography, brightened by a number of illustrations.

London Convention for the Advancement of the Spiritual Life, is the title of a book giving a full report of the addresses delivered at St. James's Hall, April 5 to 10 last. The book will be welcome to many. (1s. net. Marshall Bros.)

Three excellent additions to Messrs. Partridge's Pansy Series of wholesome stories (4d. each) is "Miss Priscilla's Hunter," by "Pansy"; "Wild Bryonie," by Jennie Chappell, and "Avice," by E. F. Pollard. They make capital holiday reading.

Prayers for the Week. From the Private Devotions of Lancelot Andrewes. (1s. Oliphant, Anderson, & Ferrier.) A deeply interesting section of the volume which was recently issued, with biographical and other chapters, by Dr. Alexander Whyte.

The Scripture Way of Salvation, a famous sermon by John Wesley, has been edited with preface and notes by Dr. Agar Beet, and published in a neat little volume by C. H. Kelly (8d.). This discourse embodies Wesley's mature thought on the subject of "Christian perfection."

Surenne's French Dictionary, a well-known school book, has been issued in a cheap form, with "thirteenth edition" on the title page. It is twofold and well arranged; and being of pocket size, it will prove of service to travellers. (1s. 6d. Edinburgh: Oliver and Boyd; London: Simpkin, Marshall and Co.)

Great Britain and Her Queen. By Anne E. Keeling. This popular book, which should be of special interest to Methodists, seeing that in its closing pages it outlines the progress of their Church, has been issued in a revised and enlarged edition. The illustrations are over a hundred in number. (2s. C. H. Kelly.)

A very freshly conceived and thoughtful little treatise, by Rev. T. Greenwood, entitled The Greatest Problem, Miracle, Work, and Wonder in the World, is published by Messrs. Passmore & Alabaster. (1s.) The problem is Evil; the miracle is Jesus Christ; the work is Redemption, and the wonder is human Unbelief.

The Young Man's Friend and Guide through Life to Immortality, by John Angell James, has been re-issued by Simpkin, Marshall & Co. Though a book of the last generation, it is of great practical value. The companion volume, The Young Woman's Friend and Guide, has been published in uniform style. Both books deserve many readers. (2s. 6d. each.)

A new "Present-Day Primer" is the Key to Green's Brief Introduction to New Testament Greek. Prepared by Samuel W. Green, M.A., Professor in Regent's Park College, it will prove of service to beginners, and perhaps do something to extend the usefulness of Dr. Green's "Brief Introduction" and the larger "Handbook." (1s. Religious Tract Society.)

Hero Tales from Sacred Story is a volume of sermons by Rev. Louis Albert Banks, D.D. (6s. Funk & Wagnalls Co.) All the author's discourses are rich in illustration, drawn from life and reading; and this volume, like its predecessors, will have use for preachers, as well as comfort and instruction for those who read sermons because they are unable to hear them.

Englishmen, Israelites, Turks Edomites, Politics and Prophecy, by H. Herbert Pain, is a popular work, which has reached its second edition within a few months of original issue. The Israelitish "identifications," historical and philological, are sometimes quite amusing. The more general section of the book is of wider interest, and bears evidence of much reading on the part of the author. (1s. Banks & Son, Racquet-court, E.C.)

Through a Pocket Lens. By Henry Scherren. (2s. 6d. Religious Tract Society.) This volume, with its ninety illustrations, informs our boys and girls what wonders are brought within their reach in the sphere of natural history, by the use of an inexpensive pocket lens. The structure and life history of some of the smallest of God's creatures may be studied without costly apparatus, and Mr. Scherren is a good guide to beginners in this delightful and instructive occupation.

Child-Saving Institutions. The fifteenth edition, enlarged, of The Classified List of Child-Saving Institutions, certified by Government, or connected with the Reformatory and Refuge Union and Children's Aid Society, is a publication likely to prove of great interest to philanthropists. The book also contains complete lists of Discharged Prisoners' Societies, Magdalen institutions, and Inebriate retreats. (1s. 6d. Reformatory and Refuge Union, 32, Charing Cross, S.W.)

Church Reform in Spain and Portugal: A short History of the Reformed Episcopal Churches of Spain and Portugal, from 1868 to the present time. By H. E. Noyes, D.D., hon. chaplain to Her Majesty's Embassy, Paris. (2s. 6d. Cassells.) The late Archbishop of Dublin, who took a deep interest in struggles for church reform in Continental countries, writes an introduction to this work, which is from the pen of one who has diligently followed the movement which he describes. The book demands the sympathetic attention of Protestants.

The Personal Ministry of the Son of Man is a volume of studies on the Saviour's application of his own teaching, by James Jeffrey, M.A., of Trinity United Presbyterian Church, Pollokshields. (5s. Oliphant, Anderson, & Ferrier.) Twenty-four in number, these discourses begin with Jesus and the Baptist (Matt. iv. 13-17), and end with Jesus and the Restored Backslider (John xxi. 15-22). Exposition and application are combined throughout; and while calculated to instruct those who cannot hear the Word opened in preaching, the pages will help workers to a deeper realisation of the Lord's method of dealing with those individuals with whom He was brought into contact.

"Spring-Time: The Only Pretty Ring-Time." Edited by Charles Peters. (7s. 6d. Religious Tract Society.) This handsome volume contains a series of well-written and beautifully-illustrated chapters on various aspects of springtime. The longing which dwellers in great centres of population and work feel for a visit to the country in the spring, and which so few of them are able to indulge, may be to some extent gratified by reading these attractive pen sketches, and by studying the fine engravings which at once carry the mind into the heart of the country. Well-known writers on natural history and country life are among the contributors, and the book will form an acceptable present at any time.

Heaven: An Inquiry into what Holy Scripture reveals and suggests of the glories of the Father's House. By J. Hunt Cooke (2s. Baptist Tract and Book Society). Twenty-one chapters, dealing with sublimities, in the light of Scripture, and with becoming reverence and caution. With the Christian the heavenly hope is an object of faith, rather than a logical demonstration: this truth is duly recognised in these thoughtful and attractive pages. The beauties of holiness as they relate to the immortal life, are charmingly set forth by Mr. Hunt Cooke, the reading of whose book should impress perplexed believers with the great goodness of the Heavenly Father, and induce in them a disposition to wait with expectant patience the call to the immediate presence of the Lord.

Bible Selections for Daily Devotion, arranged by Sylvanus Stall, D.D., contains 365 readings from the Authorised Version. They have been taken from Old and New Testaments in the order of the books, and each reading is about the length of the first chapter of Genesis. In the words of the title page, the book has been compiled "for use in family worship, for daily Scripture reading by Christian Endeavourers and members of other societies of young people who have covenanted to read a portion of God's Word each day, and for use in the chapel services of colleges and universities, and by teachers in the opening services of the public schools." The author desires to meet a need, and not to supersede the use of the Bible in its entirety. Proper names are accented, and their pronunciation indicated; in the Gospels a chronological arrangement has been followed. For the purposes specified this will be a very useful book. (4s. Funk & Wagnalls Co.)

Primeval Revelation: Studies in Genesis i.-viii. By J. Cynddylan Jones, D.D. (6s. Hodder & Stoughton.) The author of this substantial volume delivered the "Davies Lecture" last year, and took for his subject "Mosaic Theology." He divided the work into three parts, the first of which is here given. It is hoped that the second and third parts, "Patriarchal Revelation" and "Sinaitic Revelation," will likewise be published in due course. "Primeval Revelation" is complete in itself, and on many grounds demands first attention. In regard to the early chapters of the Bible many modern theologians hardly have a judgment to stand by; therefore it is well that Dr. Jones did not keep back this part of his work. Gathering facts and facing difficulties, he has produced a book crowded with information and strong in argument. He holds the Bible story to be trustworthy; and while some find in Genesis a grain of truth and a bushel of myth, he finds the opening pages of God's Word rich in treasure, natural and spiritual, historical and religious. The chapters of Genesis that are here surveyed and examined deal with the fundamentals of Divine truth, as the Epistles to the Romans, the Galatians, and the Hebrews show. While not answering for every position assumed, we are glad to commend the work, which bears witness of the author's eloquence as well as of his wide reading on many subjects.

The "Diamond Jubilee" and Some of its Lessons, by Rev. S. G. Green, D.D., is a booklet of sterling value for circulation among the people at the present time. (7d. per dozen. Religious Tract Society.)

The Image of a King (Eikon Basilikè), by W. H. Brazil, M.D., is a booklet specially written for the boys of our public schools. It has a grand message for them, and we trust parents and others will enclose copies in their letters. (4d. each, 3s. 9d. per dozen, post free. Tillotson & Son, Bolton.)

The second part of Messrs. Cassell and Co.'s Jubilee serial, "The Queen's Empire." (6d.) gives a profusion of pictures, showing how the Queen's subjects travel in different parts of the realm. "The Queen's Pictures" (6d.), issued by the same firm, reproduces many paintings illustrative of leading social events in Her Majesty's life.

Austin's Arrival in Britain: Two Letters by William Adamson, vicar of Old Ford, London, E. This is a capital booklet, showing (1) that Austin did little or nothing of direct good for English Christianity, and (2) that the British and Keltic evangelists were the agents used by God in spreading the Gospel in our land. This is a booklet for the times, from the pen of a thorough Protestant. ("English Churchman" Office, 74, Strand.)

Peelton School for Girls, South Africa.—It has been resolved to reopen this school, which at one time did such splendid service in training the Kaffirs. Rev. Mark Wilson, who has charge of the station, is anxious to obtain the help of a lady as head mistress, who possesses the missionary spirit, and has a love for Christian work as head mistress. If any readers of The Christian know of a suitable person they should at once communicate with Rev. D. B. Hooke, at the Memorial Hall, Farringdon-street, London.

AMONG THE CHURCHES.

Church of England.

THE C.M.S. still needs £5500 to extinguish its adverse balance in last year's accounts.

Rev. G. W. Gent, principal of St. Mark's College, Chelsea, and examining chaplain to the Bishop of St. Asaph, has been appointed principal of St. David's College, Lampeter.

It is pointed out that while 320 churches have been built in the diocese of London in the past sixty years, the church accommodation has not nearly kept pace with the growth of the population.

The Queen has given directions that a sum of £500 out of the income of the Duchy of Lancaster, payable to Her Majesty's privy purse during the current year, shall be applied in augmentation of the stipends received by the holders of certain small livings in the gift of the Duchy.

Colonel C. E. Lefroy, of the Rifle Brigade, has given to the Missions to Seamen his steam yacht, to be used as a mission vessel for boarding ships. The gift has been appropriated for the Mersey Mission, the chaplains of which have long needed a useful steam launch whilst ministering to the crews on the river.

Work of an interesting kind has recently been begun by Rev. Richard Free in that part of Millwall which lies between the Isle of Dogs. Although the new district is barely three miles east of London Bridge, it is a little known and extremely desolate spot. The population of about 4000 is almost exclusively engaged in the numerous docks and factories which line the river-bank. In the most squalid part of the district a church, with clubrooms and schoolrooms, is about to be erected.

The committee of the Irish Church Missions have unanimously adopted a minute in regard to the reply of the English Archbishops to the Papal Bull. This minute says that "the committee, having carefully considered the reply, are constrained, with the deepest sorrow, to declare it to be as a whole, both in matter and tone, unworthy of the Protestant and Reformed Church of England. That it should have emanated from the two Archbishops of the Church is, in the opinion of the committee, a fact of solemn and portentous significance in view of the prevalence of sacramentarian and sacerdotal teaching."

The committee of the London Diocesan Church Reading Union have arranged the following series of lectures on "The Church in the Reign of Queen Victoria," to be delivered on Wednesday, at 1.15, at St. Michael's, Cornhill:—June 16, "The Church and Foreign Missions," by the Bishop of Tasmania; June 23, "The Church and Philanthropy," by the Archdeacon of London; June 30, "The Church and Education," by Prebendary Wace; July 7, "The Church and the Colonies," by Bishop Barry; July 14, "The Church and Home Missions." by the Bishop of Stepney; July 21, "The Church and Literature," by the Rev. J. E.C. Welldon.

The Jubilee service at St. Paul's Cathedral on Sunday morning, June 20, will be attended by the Prince of Wales and other members of the Royal Family, the Ambassadors, the Governor and Company of the Bank of England, and some of the judges, as well as by 150 members of the Bar, accompanied by 150 ladies. The service will consist of "choral matins" at half-past ten, and a sermon by the Bishop of London, followed at half-past eleven by a "high celebration," at which the Bishop will probably also officiate. It is reported that the Russian prelate who is coming to England to represent the Russian Church at the approaching Lambeth Conference will be present.

Congregational.

Ilford Church has been reopened. Additional seating accommodation is provided for 200 persons.

Rev. J. Ossian Davies will commence his ministry in Paddington Chapel, Marylebone-road, on Sunday, June 13.

The ministers of Monmouthshire, English and Welsh, have had a "quiet day" at Llanrachles, the birthplace of Welsh independency. About forty ministers were present.

Recognition services have been held in connection with the settlement of Rev. Ben Evans at Winton, Bournemouth. Rev. J. Ossian Davies spoke in eulogistic terms of his friend.

With reference to the International Congregational Council to be held in Boston in 1899, the authorities of the American churches have suggested that the English delegation should consist of two hundred.

The pastorate at Glastonbury has been accepted by Rev. A. W. Bennett. Mr. Bennett's last pastorate was at Macgregor, Manitoba. Previous to that he had been seven years in Whitechapel, and about the same length of time at Southsea.

Rev. G. J. Williams, of the Union Church, Hong Kong, has resigned his position as a missionary in connection with the London Missionary Society, his church, which has hitherto been aided by the Society, having become self-supporting.

In consequence of the condition of his health, Dr. Horton has been allowed to retire from the chair of the London Congregational Union, on the understanding that he will, if able, take the office again next year. In these circumstances the Union has elected Dr. Guinness Rogers and Mr. Albert Spicer, M.P., joint chairmen for the present year.

The Sheffield Association has held its summer conference. Rev. James Ross, in a paper on "The Witness and Work of Present-day Nonconformity," said that Nonconformity was not merely a political condition. The lack of knowledge of Nonconformist principles was especially prejudicial to the welfare of young members. They had lost their young people largely because they had failed to instruct them, and the reproach must be wiped away somehow.

At the General Committee of the Congregational Union of England and Wales, which met at the Memorial Hall on Tuesday afternoon, the following were selected as the representatives to attend the National Thanksgiving Service at St. Paul's Cathedral on June 22:—Rev. Dr. Charles A. Berry (chairman), Rev. Dr. Alexander Mackennal, Rev. Dr. Parker, Rev. Dr Guinness Rogers, Rev. Alfred Rowland, LL.B. (chairman-elect), Rev. W. J. Woods, B.A. At the same meeting Mr. Alfred J. Shepheard was unanimously re-elected chairman of committee for the ensuing year.

Calls.—Rev. W. H. C. Palmer, of Spa Fields, to Emanuel Church, Tunbridge Wells; Rev. A. W. Bennett, Glastonbury; Rev. J. Angell Jones, Garstang.

Baptist.

Rev. G. Hay Morgan, pastor of Woodberry Down Church, has changed his address. It now stands, 53, Woodberry-grove, N.

Cann Hall Church, Leytonstone, has a Sunday-school of about 800 children. During the past year over twenty of the young people have been received into church membership.

Kirton-in-Lindsey is a cause 234 years old. The chapel is in course of enlargement.

Rev. R. M. Julian, of Calcutta, has sailed with his sick wife for England. After a second fight with sickness, he has had to seek refuge for his wife in the climate of his native land.

Rev. Thomas Phillips, B.A., Kettering, has been again invited to the pastorate of Bloomsbury Chapel. His congregation has unanimously passed a resolution urging him to decline the invitation.

Dr. Percy Lush has accepted the office of treasurer to the Young People's Missionary Association, which is an auxiliary to the Missionary Society. Dr. Lush is a son of the late Mr. Justice Lush.

Revs. E. G. Gange (President of the Baptist Union), S. Vincent (Vice-president), Dr. S. H. Booth (Secretary), and Dr. Maclaren will probably occupy four of the allotted places at St. Paul's on June 22.

The recognition services of the Rev. J. Neighbour at Retford were held last week. The Rev. J. G. Greenhough, M.A., preached a sermon in the afternoon, and the Free Church ministers of the borough spoke at the evening meeting. Mr. J. Clements presided.

At a meeting of the Candidates' Committee of the Missionary Society the following brethren were accepted as missionaries to the Congo:—Mr. J. Jeffrey, from Rawdon College; Mr. A. G. Adams, from Bristol College; and Mr. T. O. Ransford, from Regent's-park College.

Successful services have been held at Dunnington in connection with the ninth anniversary of the settlement of Rev. C. Chrystal. The report stated that the congregations continued good, and that mission and temperance work are being prosecuted with vigour and attendant blessing.

The Suffolk and Norfolk Association has held its 126th annual meeting at Stowmarket. Mr. W. Dixon, Bradfield St. George, delivered a most interesting presidential address. One of the weaknesses of present Nonconformity, he said, was that there was not enough known of early struggles for liberty. Another of the great things wanted was that Baptists should hold their distinctive position.

The centenary of the Baptist Home Missionary Society has been celebrated at Mansfield-road Chapel, Nottingham. Rev. E. G. Gange, President of the Baptist Union, was the chief speaker, who said that as a denomination they had not made the headway in church extension that they ought. The society maintains a missioner, and helps to support 107 village pastors. In England to-day there are 120 churches which, in times of weakness, were supported by the society; and in their present independent positions these are under strong obligations to support the society, and promote its important work.

Calls.—Rev. R. G. Fairbairn, B.A., Cheltenham, to Downs Church, Clapton; Rev. B. Williams, of Denbigh, to Llwynhendy, South Wales.

Methodist.

For the office of college principal Rev. Dr. Townsend will be nominated at the New Connexion Conference, in addition to the three ministers of the College Committee.

Rev. J. G. Davies has been appointed by the Wesleyan Missionary Society to proceed to the Nigel Goldfields, in the Transvaal, and Rev. H. Oswald Brigg, of Headingley College, to Mashonaland.

The Wesleyan Missionary Committee has given consent to the return home of Rev. Sidney R. Hodge, M.R.C.S., who for the past ten years has rendered invaluable service as medical missionary at Hankow, China.

A serious illness has seized Rev. W. J. Ward, Primitive Methodist, formerly of Market Rasen, who, in February last, left to take charge of a mission station at Jamestown. At last report he was in the hospital at Old Calabar.

In connection with the Queen's recent visit to Sheffield a knighthood has been conferred on Alderman C. T. Skelton, who is a leader among the New Connexion Methodists in Yorkshire. The new knight is a thorough teetotaler.

Rev. George Lester, general superintendent of the Bahamas District, having received permission from the General Committee to return home with a view to re-entering circuit work, is likely to be succeeded by Rev. Fredk. W. Gostick, of Melton Mowbray Circuit.

The foundation-stones of a new Wesleyan Chapel have been laid at Barry. The new building will be erected on land adjoining the present chapel, which will be used for the purposes of a Sunday-school, on the hill overlooking the town, the island, and a large sea front.

The Duchess of Albany attended an interesting gathering last week in connection with the Queen's Commemoration Fund of the Wesleyan Methodist denomination in aid of the Soldiers' and Sailors' Homes. In the address presented to her Royal Highness by Sir George Chubb, it was stated that there are now twenty-nine homes in various parts of the Empire, and that this special Diamond Jubilee effort had already reached £5000, while a total of £6000 was expected.

Presbyterian.

The ticket for the Jubilee service at St. Paul's Cathedral, allocated to the Presbyterians, will be used by the Moderator of Synod.

Dr. Moinet has been inducted to the pastorate of Bromley Church. Rev. J. Jeffrey Johnstone, of Forest Hill, presided, and the induction sermon was preached by Rev. William Armstrong, of West Norwood.

An effort is being made by the Brondesbury congregation (Rev. R. E. Welsh) to complete its mission-hall premises at Willesden Green by the addition of class-rooms. Between £300 and £400 will be needed.

Out of 311 ministers belonging to the Presbyterian Church of England, 210 are known to be total abstainers, and the proportion continues steadily to increase. Nearly all the younger ministers are strong temperance men.

At the meeting of the London South Presbytery last week a letter was read from Rev. J. M. Stuart proposing to commence church extension work in Brixton. With reference to the iron building at present occupied by the West Norwood (Tulse Hill) congregation, it appeared that the building was erected by the Presbytery, and that they were responsible for the existing debt of £363. Rev. J. More, of Woolwich, offered to raise £253 of the debt if the West Norwood friends would raise the remaining £100. This offer was accepted.

Fallen Asleep.

At Egremont, Captain JOHN HERRON, J.P., an elder of the Presbyterian Church, and a well-known helper in Christian effort.—At Leytonstone, Mr. H. STEVENS, aged sixty-five, deacon of Milbrook Baptist Church, and to the front in all good work.—Mr. JAMES LEVER, formerly of Bolton, more recently of Liverpool, for many years a warm supporter of work among the Congregationalists.—At Hastings, Mr. G. A. KEYWORTH, son of a former professor of Hebrew at Cheshunt College.—At Norwich, Mr. HENRY TREVORS, for more than half a century associated with the Baptists in the city and county.—At Woburn Sands, Rev. C. E. WOOLMER, who entered the Wesleyan ministry in 1846, and was superannuated in 1884.—At Tyddyn Purpas, Mr. RICHARD JONES, for forty-six years deacon at the Newborough Presbyterian Church, and well known and respected throughout Anglesey.—At Percy Main, Newcastle-on-Tyne, Rev. A. T. COATES, vicar of the parish.—At Scratnagh, co. Wicklow, Mrs. SMITH, aged ninety years.—At Darrenpoint, Miss DARRINGTON, a zealous worker in the Methodist Church.—At Ardee, co. Louth, Mr. NICHOLAS ARTHURS, aged eighty-three years.—At Mullyloughran, Armagh, Miss MAGOWAN, daughter of the late Rev. R. Magowan, Methodist minister, aged sixty years.—At Lowestoft, Mr. HENRY TUTTLE, for many years a worker among the United Methodists, and highly esteemed throughout East Suffolk, alike in commercial and religious circles.

DONATIONS

Received by Messrs. Morgan and Scott to Tuesday, June 8, 1897.

 Donations should be sent by Cheque or Post Office Orders, not by stamps.

 Will donors oblige by stating explicitly and fully the titles of the institutions to which they wish their donations to be applied? Further correspondence will thus be obviated. Will they also bear in mind that the Donation List is made up for the Printers on Monday morning? Any amounts received afterwards will be acknowledged in the subsequent week's number of THE CHRISTIAN.

 Cheques, Money Orders, or Postal Orders should be made payable to Messrs. Morgan & Scott, 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C., and crossed "City Bank"; this will effectually prevent loss.

☞ Donors are particularly requested to fill in "Morgan and Scott" on Postal Orders, in accordance with the Post Office regulations.

Appeals.

A Seaside Home for the Blind is to be erected at Southend by Mr. J. Passmore Edwards, if funds can be secured for the purchase of a site. Donations will be received by Mr. W. G. Smith, 7, Charles-square, Hoxton, N.

A Gospel Tent is greatly needed by the Open-Air "Out and Out" Gospel Mission at Brighton. A good site is secured for its erection. Contributions will be received by the hon. superintendent of the Mission, Mr. George Bird, 80, Preston-road, Brighton.

Soldiers in Camp.—Rev. R. Deane Oliver, chaplain at Aldershot, is desirous of carrying on this year, as last, a four months' Gospel mission in the cavalry camp in a tent at Twesledown Camp. He will be grateful for help towards the expenses of the effort. His address is—6, Queen's-road, Aldershot.

Tracts for Venezuela.—Miss E. M. White, Apartado Postal 419, Caracas, Venezuela, sends an earnest appeal for a further supply of Gospel tracts in Spanish, for distribution there. The need is pressing, and the opportunity at present is great. Mrs. White, Fort Etna, Limerick, will give information as to the best kind of tracts for this field.

Mildmay Consumptive Home.—This excellent Home at Torquay is appealing for help in raising a capital fund of £1500, so as to place the institution on a good financial basis, and save annual rental. Patients are received from all parts of the country and lovingly nursed. The Secretary of the Home is Miss F. Gumbleton, Connemara, Torquay.

The Evangelistic Mission has entered on its summer Gospel work in country towns and villages by means of tents and other agencies. An appeal is made for the maintenance of this work. The House of Rest for Christian Workers at St. Leonards also requires help for repairs and general renovation. The director, C. R. Hurditch, 164, Alexandra-road, St. John's Wood, N.W., will be glad to answer communications.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

WHAT the Jubilee crowds will be like, the police who will be responsible for the management of them must tremble to imagine. For even the early undress rehearsals are attracting crowds so immense that the regulation of them is a very serious undertaking.—Daily Mail.

We beg our readers' serious attention to the letter on "The Queen's Diamond Jubilee." The recollection of the recent catastrophes at Moscow, Paris, and Vienna may well lead us to think what may occur, except the hand of God be stretched out to protect the eight or nine millions in London on that day, and our gracious Queen.

The Rev. J. Mountain has written an ode with music for the Diamond Jubilee, both of which will be found in our present issue. The ode is in three cantos, and deals with the private, public, and political life of Her Majesty, as viewed from a Christian standpoint. There are many odes now being published to celebrate the greatness of Britain and the superlative virtues of our noble Queen. But it is only when we trace, as Mr. Mountain does, those virtues and that greatness to their source in Christian faith and character, that we can rightly gauge the nature and effect of the forthcoming Jubilee. The music which Mr. Mountain has composed for his ode is of a stirring character, and will be sure to catch the popular ear. The ode, with its music, is published on separate music paper at the office of THE CHRISTIAN, price sixpence.

If any difficulty is experienced in obtaining extra copies of this week's issue of THE CHRISTIAN, the publishers, Messrs. Morgan and Scott, 12, Paternoster-buildings, London, E.C., will forward one copy post free for three-halfpence, or twelve copies post free for 1s.

With reference to the proposed distribution of illustrated Gospels to the poor guests at the Jubilee feasts around London, Mr. W. Walters, secretary of the Scripture Gift Mission, informs us that the project has excited considerable interest. The London City Mission is taking a noble part in the details of the undertaking. It is hoped that the Scripture Gift Mission will be liberally supported in its endeavour to give spiritua food—the Word of God—to the people, while others are showing them kindness on the lower plane of ministering to temporal need and comfort. Communications to Mr. Walters should be addressed, 84, St. Paul's-churchyard, E.C.

The recent decision of the five judges on betting is causing serious thoughts among gamblers and patrons of the turf. One of their writers believes that if it is finally upheld, we shall soon see the last of the British bookmaker, and even the beginning of the end of the turf itself.

Without the ring and the money which the public bring to the ring, racing will become merely the pastime of a few rich men and the genuine sportsmen who love a race for the sake of the sport, and not for the money that is in it.

This gentleman goes on to say that there is no chance of an Act of Parliament being passed to legalise betting; to dream of such a thing is to live in a fool's paradise.

A Government proposition to legalise betting on horse-races would call forth such a cyclone of indignation all over the country, that the Government itself would probably be hunted out of office in twenty-four hours.

The testimony of an enemy is worth noting, for here it condemns the turf as a base money-making machine, no place of honest "sport." It admits the success of the Anti-Gambling League, and it confesses the power of conscience in the nation.

The religious influences of outward nature, when devoutly and reverently received into the heart, are unquestionable. She speaks to us of God's power, wisdom, foresight, and order, with no faltering voice; the subtle message of her beauty is subduing and full of solace. But there is one direction in which she is absolutely dumb. She has nothing to tell us about redemption. Her myriad voices are silent about God's love for the sinner; her calm indifference to moral distinctions gives no whisper of hope to the despised and lost. Only in the written word and the blessed life do we find that message. We must carry this message into our contemplation of the natural world, then we can find innumerable symbols and parables for the enforcement and illustration of its mighty truths. But the temple of nature is empty of hope till it echoes to the words of the Son of God.

At the June meeting of the committee of the Howard Association, Bishopsgate Without, London, E.C., the following resolution as to the imprisonment of children was adopted :—

Whilst the committee of the Howard Association have observed with pleasure the large reduction of late years in the number of children committed to prison (a result attributable, in some degree, as they believe, to their own exertions in this direction), they respectfully commend to the consideration of the Home Secretary the desirability of further legislation, wholly to discontinue the use of the jail for children under fourteen years of age, except for serious crimes.

Either an industrial discipline in special institutions, or, better still, a system of conditional liberty under the supervision of probation officers, together with a more effectual enforcement of parental responsibility than hitherto, would appear to be a far more just and wise disposal of very young offenders than their incarceration in a prison.

Very good. But where parental responsibility cannot be enforced, as in the case of demoralised or drunken parents, should not the State come, in loco parentis, and provide for the upbringing of the child? Mr. Mundella's words at Dr. Barnardo's anniversary are very much in point here.

Some things said at the recent meetings of the Unitarian Association are worth noting. One speaker reminded his hearers that the more they increased the devotional life of their church the more they would attract those who were hungering for the bread of life. It was, however, a strong condemnation when the same speaker said that there was not a church of their order which was not afflicted by cliquism and "standoffishness."

A ministerial correspondent raises a well-worn question, which, like the poor, is always with us. He writes :—

Some conveners of meetings seem to forget that we are not millionaires. They expect us to attend meetings at a distance, but no mention is made of expenses. Eight or ten shillings are soon consumed in fares, the expenditure of which makes an appreciable mark on a small salary. I have made a point of writing to the delinquents, and in some cases have received absolutely no reply.

Want of thought is one thing; want of heart is another. Ministers are not supposed to think about money matters, but the butcher and the baker are inexorable in drawing his attention to them.

It is gratifying to learn, from the reports of religious gatherings in the Welsh papers, that the old-fashioned preaching assemblies, or "Cymanfaoedd," still maintain their hold on the people. Last week the annual Congregational assembly of the three counties of Carmarthen, Cardigan, and Pembroke was successfully held in the latter county. Thousands gathered together, and gave up two days to the hearing of the Gospel in the vernacular, and stirring sermons by chosen preachers were delivered. This institution has lasted for over a century and a-half, and in common with the Sunday-school has had more to do with making the Welsh the people of the Book than all other influences combined. It is a testimony to the continued power and faithfulness of Welsh preaching that the many distracting and demoralising influences of modern life have failed to wean away the affections of the common people from their love of hearing the Gospel.

The basis of a proposed union between the Primitive Methodists and Bible Christians seems to have been found. Membership in the two denominations stands on the same footing; in polity, it was found that there were many features in which the two bodies were so much alike that neither would be required to make any perceptible change, while the slight differences which existed, which could not be easily adjusted, were very few; the condition of chapel property as to the amount of debt relative to the value of property appeared to be practically the same in both denominations. As there appears to be a sincere and general desire on both sides for a union, the work of the preliminary committee will probably be accepted by the various circuits and by the respective conferences to whom it will now be referred. There is a great interest felt in the result, in some cases great anxiety, for a small hindrance may block the way of a great work.

Among the precepts given for living a becoming Christian life the Apostle Paul wrote :—

I will that women adorn themselves in modest apparel, with shamefastness and sobriety; not with braided hair, and gold or pearls or costly raiment; but (which becometh women professing godliness) through good works.

The Apostle Peter gives a similar injunction. Are these words of present-day import, or were they intended only for the times of the apostles? Were those times luxurious? So are these. Were those times depraving to the simplicity of the spiritual life? So are these. A West-end clergyman has been speaking out against the extravagance of a lady spending £1000 on a dress, and has composed a "Meditation for Christian Ladies," in which he draws a parallel between things as they are and things as they were in Isaiah's days. But a mere worldling cannot, of course, be judged by a Christian standard, and we imagine that no Christian lady worthy of the name would be guilty of such an act.

The Westminster Gazette, speaking of the policy of Macchiavelli, misses the point of its own excellent illustration when it says:—

If you send a cargo of missionaries to sea in a coffin-ship, they will inevitably go to the bottom.... It is, therefore, the business of those who are on the side of the missionaries to see that they do not sink, and if they will insist on putting to sea in their coffin-ship, to use all possible means to prevent them.

An illogical conclusion, surely! Rather is it the duty of those who are on the side of the missionaries to provide them with a seaworthy vessel, and not to prevent their going forth on their good work. Peter, voicing the spirit of the world, said, "Be it far from Thee, Lord: this shall not be unto Thee." But the Master replied, "Get thee behind Me, Satan, for thou savourest not the things that be of God, but those that be of men." Are all good causes to be abandoned which mean trial and loss?

The peace negotiations between Turkey and Greece, or rather between the Great Powers and Turkey, advance slowly, as everything is slow in which Turkey has a part. But so far, the British representative seems to have spoken the mind of the nation. Vacillation is not a successful policy, and any exhibition of it at this juncture would produce lamentable results. It is heart-breaking to think of the misery which this short war has caused, the harvests destroyed or lost, the property ruined, the families made homeless, the lives taken. It would, indeed, add the final sting to the tribulation if the people of Thessaly were again to pass under the Turkish yoke.

We are glad to see that some steps are being taken to limit the sale of liquors on the Coast of Africa. Mr. Chamberlain has given the matter great consideration, and finds that eighty per cent. of the total revenue of the Niger Coast Protectorate, and sixty per cent. of the revenue of the Gold Coast and Lagos is derived from the liquor traffic. The Foreign Office proposes a conference, so that an international agreement may be arrived at limiting the liquor traffic. It is impossible to jump by one leap to prohibition, but we devoutly hope that this conference will result in some practical means of preserving the bodies and souls of the natives from the poison which is regularly imported for their destruction.

It would seem, too, from the news that comes from South Africa that the temperance movement is yet in its infancy among the Dutch churches of that colony. Not only has the Synod of the principal Dutch Reformed Church passed a resolution recently that it was "lawful" for a Christian to make wine or brandy from the produce of his vineyard, and to employ the profits to the support of church institutions, but another branch of the same church has just passed a more drastic declaration still:—

The Synod decides that members who unite themselves with teetotal societies become unfaithful to their membership in the Gereformeerde Kerk, and must be repeatedly and earnestly warned, and if they will not give heed after many warnings they must be treated in accordance with Art. 21 of our synodal rules.

Various writers in American papers declare that there has been an over-production of ministers. We believe that a good deal may be said in defence of the statement, so long as we look simply at home needs. Were the members of Christian churches, both in this country and in America, to do their duty in the work of spreading the Gospel, a great deal that now falls to the hands of ministers would be as well or better done than it is, and ministers themselves would be free for service in really needy places. It is not fewer ministers we want, but a better distribution of them. Home has more than its proportion; and the over-supply is not favourable to the spread of the Gospel where it exists. Our college tutors would do well to direct the thoughts of students to the needs of far-off lands. The home ministry would be improved by larger numbers of students, and the best of them, entering heathen fields.

"Denominational Loyalty."

It is an excellent principle upon which the Christian Endeavour Society is founded, that the members of each branch should be "loyal to the church" to which they belong. It would lead to endless trouble if they were to work independently of, or antagonistically to, its pastor and officers. Further, it is eminently desirable that the young people of the Society should be affiliated to a specific church, in which they find their spiritual home, to receive definite instruction, to be strengthened in their faith, to grow in grace and in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ.

With these positions we are in heartiest accord. The Society is doing sterling work, and goes far to meet the difficulty, which is ever with us, how to hold our young people when too old for Sunday-school. No one who attended the mighty concourse of "Endeavourers" at Liverpool last week could fail to see in them a practical solution of the problem. Their happy faces aglow with the joy of the Lord, their enthusiastic zeal, their fixity of holy purpose, are just what this weary world is yearning for, and bespeak boundless possibilities of service in days to come. This being so, it would be more than "a pity," it would be a sin, for any element to be allowed to enter in which would mar the usefulness of so important a movement, or tend to restrict it to any purpose narrower than to serve the Church universal of our Lord Jesus Christ.

It is a work of God, and as such demands, and has, our strong support. But it is worked by man, and as such is liable to mistakes, easily made, but with difficulty rectified. Proverbially, "lookers-on see most of the game," and we may be pardoned if, in no unkindly spirit, we call attention to what appears to us a real danger ahead.

The C. E. Society is between two fires, both, in a sense, of its own kindling. First, its pledge. Many churches hold aloof from it on this account, certainly to their own loss. They are afraid of it; it is too definite! But the weakest point of much of our church life is its encouragement of a general desire for goodness without insisting on a specific yielding of the life to God. This generation lacks the grit and backbone of bygone days. "I know whom I have believed, and am persuaded," finds too little place in its creed; and "I count all things but loss that I may win Christ," "whose I am and whom I serve," has too small a share in its activities. In a word, it lacks the CONVICTION which made its fathers great. This the C. E. S. sets itself to remedy.

But while thus losing supporters through its pledge, it is apt, in the second place, to alienate others by over-insistence on denominationalism, and by aspersions which, judging from some of the speeches at Liverpool, it casts upon thousands of loyal souls, true friends of Christian Endeavour, who do not belong to any of the "denominations," commonly so-called. It urges, and rightly, "inter-denominational fellowship," and there is no doubt that much that is called "undenominational" work would be more properly described as "inter-denominational." But it is unworthy to apply such terms as "weak," "flabby," "molluscous," "jelly-fish" to those, as a class, who for purely spiritual reasons are neither Baptist, Congregational, nor Methodist, but are content to bear the time-honoured and not less Scriptural name of "Christian."

That there are "molluscous" Christians, and all too many, we freely admit, but they are the property in common of "Church" and "Dissent," and are the monopoly of none. Why, then, should the C. E. S. thus malign some of its best friends? We are loth to believe that such is the intention of either its founder or its officers, and shall be thankful to learn that its speakers have gone beyond their authority. Only in that case some restrictions should in future be applied.

But, further, is it really a part of its programme to intensify and accentuate denominationalism, which is so great a hindrance to the spread of the Gospel the world over? We cannot think so. This is the greater evil. People can afford to smile at hard names, which cannot hurt. But the Church at large cannot afford to have the aims and objects of so grand a power as the C.E.S. limited by sectarian boundaries. It would be a great calamity for the young Christians of the coming generation to be taught to work for an "ism," or brought up "in the nurture and admonition of" a sect.

Our opening paragraphs make abundantly clear our sense of the necessity of a definite spiritual home. But does the word "church," as used by the Society, mean a single community (with which, for the time being, the "Endeavourer" is in fellowship), or a denomination to which he or she is expected to give life-long allegiance? With the former we are quite in accord; the latter may, we consider, prove a serious evil.

Can we have misinterpreted the minds of the speakers? Possibly. But it was evident that the rank and file accepted them in the same sense. At one meeting a young fellow prayed: "Lord, keep us true to our denomination; let us remember we are 'for our church' as well as 'for Christ.'" And a lady, at the "Rally" of her denomination, urged her audience not to subscribe to any missionary society but the one more especially connected with it. We strongly deprecate the division of a small sum among many agencies. Far better give substantial help to one than dole it out in dribbles which are of use to none. But that is not the same thing as tying up our sympathies to a single society, however deserving it may be.

We, therefore, in all love, but with all earnestness, for the sake of Church and Kingdom of God, plead with the C.E.S. authorities to pause before committing themselves further to the inculcation of sectarian principles in their young people. It is too late in the day for this. Rather let them use their great power to remove the stones of stumbling with which denominationalism has too long impeded the chariots of God.

The Apostle of the Gentiles.

Rom. xi. 13.

By Rev. F. B. Meyer.

IT is probable that during his years of quiet work in Cilicia and Syria, Saul of Tarsus was being led with increasing clearness to apprehend God's purpose in his life, that he should be the Apostle of the Gentiles. The heavenly voice at the commencement of his Christian career had announced that he would be sent to them (Acts xxvi. 20). Ananias had been informed that he was to be a chosen vessel to bear the name of Jesus before the Gentiles and kings (ix. 15); the vision in the temple had culminated in the words, "Depart: for I will send thee forth far hence unto the Gentiles" (xxii. 21); and there is no doubt that by the exigencies of the situation, since he was compelled to labour for so many years amid populations largely composed of Gentiles, he was compelled to begin to preach to them directly, and apart from Jewish notions of proselytism and propriety. We learn this from his own lips, "I declared both to them of Damascus first, and at Jerusalem...and also to the Gentiles, that they should repent and turn to God, doing works worthy of repentance" (xxvi. 20). But still the true channel-bed of his life was hardly discovered until circumstances transpired, which will now demand our notice.

Antioch.—Half-way through Luke's narrative the centre of interest shifts from the mother-Church at Jerusalem, to that which had been founded shortly before the time we are describing, in the gay, frivolous, busy, beautiful city of Antioch. Connected with the commerce of the Western world by the River Orontes, which flowed majestically through the marble palaces and crowded wharves that lined its banks, and communicating with the thoughtful conservative East by the caravans that brought the merchandise of Mesopotamia and Arabia through the passes of the Lebanon, Antioch was an emporium of trade, a meeting-place for the Old World and the New, "an Oriental Rome, in which all the forms of the civilised life of the empire found some representation." It is for ever famous in Christian annals, because there a number of unknown believers, fleeing from Jerusalem before Saul's persecution, founded the first purely Gentile Church; because there the disciples of "the Way" were first called Christians; because thence issued the first missionary expedition for the evangelization of the world: and because it was the see of the great bishop, saint, and martyr, Ignatius.

The population of Antioch was a rabble of all races; but the Greek element predominated, with its licentious rites, its vivacious sparkling intellect, its marvellously elegant and subtle tongue, its passion for the theatre, the arena, and the racecourse. There was need indeed that the river of Life should find its way into that swamp of beautiful but deadly corruption; but probably none of the leaders of the Church would have dared to take the initial step. Peter and the Church at Jerusalem were only just learning, through amazing incidents in the house of Cornelius, that God was prepared to grant unto the Gentiles repentance unto life. It was left, therefore, to a handful of fugitive Hellenistic Jews, men of Cyprus and Cyrene, to break through the barriers of the centuries, and begin preaching the Lord Jesus to the Greeks at Antioch. Instantly the Divine Spirit honoured their word, gave testimony to the word of God's grace, and a great number believed and turned to the Lord.

In answer to an appeal for help, the mother-Church despatched Barnabas, who was himself a Cypriote, to make inquiries and report. His verdict was definite and reassuring. He had no hesitation in affirming that it was a definite work of God's grace; he rejoiced that these simple souls had been thrust into so ripe and plentiful a harvest; he carried on the work which had been inaugurated with great success, "and much people was added unto the Lord."

The crowning act of his mission to Antioch, however, consisted in recalling the special qualifications of his old friend and fellow-student, and fetching him from Tarsus. "And it came to pass that for a whole year they were gathered together with the Church, and taught much people."

There is little doubt, that the Church, thus composed of Gentiles, in its origin was largely recruited from their ranks, and for the first time believers in Jesus Christ stood forth as distinct from the Jewish synagogue, and demanding to be considered and reckoned with as a separate community. Up to this moment the followers of "the Name" had been regarded as but one of the many Jewish sects. Circumcision and identification with Judaism had been the necessary conditions of discipleship; but henceforth it was clear that a new society was emerging, in which there was neither Jew nor Greek, but was open to man as man on the simple conditions of separation from the evils of the time and devotion towards Him whom the Jews had rejected, but whom God had anointed to be a Prince and a Saviour. As the witty, frivolous crowds remarked the growth of this new body among them, they felt that it must be labelled; and as they listened to the exhortations and confessions of its members, they caught at the one word that was constantly on the lips of teachers and taught, and from the name Christ derived the nickname Christians.

But this year's experience at Antioch was of the utmost consequence to Saul. He learnt from Barnabas the conclusion to which the Church at Jerusalem had come, on hearing Peter's recital of God's dealings with Cornelius and his household (xi. 18): he noticed how evidently the Spirit of God had set his seal on appeals, whether by himself or others, addressed directly to the Gentiles, and thus he came to formulate the Gospel which he afterwards preached among them (Gal. ii. 2). All the while his horizon was broadening, his confidence increasing, his conception of God's purposes deepening.

We need not stay over his brief visit to Jerusalem at the end of his year's ministry at Antioch, to carry alms from the Gentile Christians to their suffering Jewish brethren. Suffice it to say that it was in perfect accord with the principles of his after life, and proved that there was no sort of antagonism between the new society and the old, but that all were one in Christ. On this occasion he does not seem to have met the Apostles, who probably had withdrawn from Jerusalem to avoid the murderous hate of Herod (xii.); and the gift of the Church at Antioch was, therefore, left with the elders of the mother-Church (xi. 30). And nothing occurred to divert the heart of the future Apostle from those resolves which were crystallising with increasing clearness in his thought.

Set Apart by the Holy Spirit. It was a momentous hour in the history of the Church, when, on the return of Barnabas and Paul from Jerusalem, they met, with three others, for a season of fasting and prayer. What was the immediate reason for this special session we cannot say, but it is significant that they represented between them five different countries. Were they yearning after their own people, and wistful to offer them the Gospel, as they now saw they might offer it, apart from the trammels and restraints of Judaism? That, however, was the birth-hour of modern missions. The Holy Ghost, Christ's Vicar, the Director and Administrator of the Church, bade the little group set apart two out of their number to a mission which He would unfold to them, as they dared to step out in obedience to his command.

That journey was a revelation to those early ambassadors of the Cross. In Cyprus, to which they were attracted, because Barnabas was born there, though they proclaimed the word of God from one end to the other in the synagogues of the Jews, they seem to have had no fruit till the Roman Governor called them before him, and sought to hear their message. After landing on the mainland, and toiling up the steep ascent from the coast to the far-reaching table-lands of the interior, 4000 feet above the sea level, they found the Jews of Antioch in Pisidia refusing, and the Gentiles welcoming them; so that they were compelled to turn to these. "Seeing ye thrust it from you, and judge yourselves unworthy of eternal life, lo, we turn to the Gentiles; for so hath the Lord commanded." Then it was that the Word of the Lord spread throughout all the region.

At Iconium, whither they fled before a persecution which the Jews instigated at Antioch, they again found the malice of the Jews so persistent that they were driven forth into the Gentile cities and district of Lycaonia, where there were probably no synagogues at all, where they preached the Gospel, and perhaps laid the foundation of the churches in Galatia. But everywhere it was the Jewish element that was obstructive and implacable, while the Gentiles welcomed them and received their tidings. God manifestly opened the door of faith to the Gentiles, and wrought signs and wonders among them by these means (xiv. 27; xv. 12). As Paul quietly studied these indications of God's providence, he must have become increasingly convinced that a spirit of stupor had been permitted to befal the chosen people as a punishment for their long striving against the truth. They had eyes that could not see, ears that would not hear. The original branches were being broken off, that the wild olive grafts might take their place. Blindness in part had happened to Israel, until the fulness of the Gentiles had been gathered in (Rom. xi. 8, 17, 25). His love was not abated. How could it be? Were they not his brethren, his kinsmen according to the flesh? And yet he was bound sorrowfully to confess that the door seemed to be closing on Israel, whilst it was being set open to the world. This made his course as the Apostle of the Gentiles the clearer.

The Recognition of his Apostolate by the Apostles.—We do not propose to add anything to the discussion in which so much has been urged on either side, as to the time when the visit to Jerusalem, referred to in Gal. ii., took place. After carefully considering the arguments of those who would identify it with the visit to bring alms mentioned above, and of those who would make it a separate visit for the special purpose of obtaining the opinion of the leaders on his ministry—we fall back on the more generally received view that Gal. ii. refers to the visit mentioned in Acts xv.

But, after all, it is not very material to settle this point; but to notice, that on this occasion Paul sought the opinion of those in repute among the Apostles on his teaching, lest by any means he should be running, or had run, in vain. In the course of the consequent interviews it became increasingly evident to James, Peter, and John that their former persecutor had received a Divine commission to the Gentiles. They saw that he had been entrusted with the Gospel of the uncircumcision. Peter especially recognised that He who wrought in himself unto the apostolate of the Jew was equally energetic in this fervid soul unto the Gentile. They could not help perceiving the grace that was given to him, and finally they gave to him the right hand of fellowship, that he should go to the Gentiles, whilst they went to the circumcision.

This was the further and final confirmation of the purpose which had been forming in his heart; and he recognised that he was appointed an herald and an apostle, a teacher of the Gentiles in faith and truth. He gloried in this ministry, and often spoke of the grace which had been given to him, the least of all saints, to preach unto the Gentiles the unsearchable riches of Christ. He always began his work in any place by an honest endeavour to save some of his own flesh; but he always realised that his supreme stewardship was to those who were called uncircumcision by that which was called circumcision in the flesh, made by hands.

By the hand of the risen Jesus he had been appointed to the apostleship from which Judas fell. In nothing did he come behind the very chiefest of the Apostles; and truly the signs of an Apostle were wrought through his means, in all signs, and wonders and mighty works.

"Mr. Spurgeon's Orphans."

HIS own, yet not his own! But none the less dear to the honoured preacher was the large family of orphan boys and girls housed and cared for at Stockwell Orphanage; and now that he has gone, the God of the fatherless and widow prompts the hearts of others to carry on the work over which the founder's brother, Dr. James Spurgeon, now so sucessfully presides.

Only a minority, perhaps, of the busy throng of passers up and down the Clapham-road have any idea of the handsome pile of buildings, approached by an unpretentious carriage way, which lie behind the neighbouring villas. Not that the institution is a "hole-and-corner affair" by any means, for the extensive grounds of which the occupiers of former days were proud, now form a miniature village, nearly four acres in extent, tenanted by these little ones who are committed to the care of the Christian Church.

"But are they not all Baptist children?" asks a reader. Not at all. I doubt if there be one, out of the many denominations known in our land, which may not boast its own representatives among these happy youngsters, not excluding Moravians, and even Roman Catholics; while, curiously enough, since the Homes were established thirty years ago, the Church of England has furnished the majority, the orphans whose parents were of that communion reaching the high total of 788. Here we have a splendid vindication of the broad catholicity of the institution.

Equally interesting is a study of the various professions and trades involved, a complete analysis of which would show something like forty callings to which the fathers had belonged. And as for where they come from, ask, rather, whence do they not! One hundred districts of London, thirty-four counties in England, as well as Scotland, Ireland, and Wales, have each sent up their "little stranger," boy or girl, and a jollier set of children it would be difficult to find. There are about 500 now in the Homes.

"Are any of them delicate?" Yes, a good many when they first arrive, and some there are who will never be strong. But good food and sleep in plenty, with fresh air ad lib., soon work wonders, the pale faces tinge with healthy colour, and the general physique steadily improves.

I recently paid them a visit one fine afternoon, preferring to see the "real thing at home" rather than on a May-meeting platform. Ushered into the beautiful Memorial Hall, erected in thanksgiving for the work and labour of love of the founder, I found them picturesquely clad, ready to entertain me with song and drill. And it was no shoddy performance either. The musical programme was rendered with excellent taste and effect under the joint direction of the head-master, Rev. Vernon Charlesworth, and Mr. T. W. Partridge—poet and composer, respectively, and each a bit of a genius in his own way. The chief item was their original composition in honour of the Jubilee,* both words and music being majestic and sweet in turn, a worthy tribute to our gracious Queen, whose heart has ever responded to works of mercy among the needy and the poor.

Then came the hand-bell ringers, well sustaining the reputation they have attained throughout the country, as well as in America, for their performance; and, lastly, musical drill and gymnastics, which, for precision and neatness of execution, a well-trained adult squad would find it hard to outrival.

Joined now by Mrs. Harrison Lee, who had come to see the Orphanage prior to sailing to her Australian home, we were conducted through the "village" to laundry, bakery, dormitories, schoolrooms, and all else there was to see. The "cottage-home" may here be examined in active operation, and needs no words of mine to establish its infinite superiority over the old herd-and-pen, barrack system of massing all the inmates into one large building, with everything done on so large a scale that when the girls go out to service they are comparatively lost to know what to do or how to do it. Here they live, as it were, in families, each house containing such utensils, culinary and otherwise, as would be found in an ordinary middle-class dwelling. Thus they learn to cook and fulfil general domestic duties, in a way that should render them competent to manage other people's homes (or their own) in time to come.

"Do the children behave well?" asked Mrs. Lee. "Oh, yes," replied Mr. Charlesworth, with a facetious twinkle, "especially the boys!" In answer to a further remark as to the stairs leading up to the schoolrooms, he explained that the "steps to knowledge are always difficult!" In one of the class-rooms is the old Primitive Methodist pulpit from Colchester, from which in 1850 Mr. Spurgeon heard the message which entered his soul, and led to his conversion—a relic of the past which the officers of the Orphanage very highly prize.

And what about the after lives of these children? The records of the past twenty-five years furnish much encouragement. The good, practical education given fits them for many walks of life, and both sexes have acquitted themselves well, to the unstinted satisfaction and appreciation of their employers.

Such a sketch as this would be incomplete did it not press the claims of so worthy a charity upon the generosity of the Christian Church. I will not go into details. Get the new annual report, gentle reader, which the courteous secretary, Mr. F. G. Ladds, will be only too happy to send you, and peruse it for yourself. (No, the Homes are not "endowed"; they depend entirely on voluntary contributions.) And, one thing more: arrange for the choir of boys and handbell-ringers to visit your town or church, and if they fail to excite the enthusiastic interest of their audience, then music must have lost its charms to soothe the tuneless breast.

East London Nursing Society.—The work of this organisation, of which Mr. Arthur W. Lacey is secretary, consists in providing nurses for the sick poor in their own homes in the East-end of our crowded city. Good results have been seen during the past year, in spite of unusual financial and other difficulties. The Society continues to act in full accord with medical and parochial authorities, and to have the constant co-operation of the clergy and other ladies who bring under notice many sufferers specially needing help. One benefactress gives the free use of 43, Stepney-green, admirably suited for a nursing centre; and an extensive work covering a wide area, spreads out from the office, 49, Philpot-street, Commercial-road, E., from which address copies of the annual report may be had.

The Diamond Reign, 1837-97.

God of our salvation, Lord of ancient days,
Hear the adoration we unite to raise;
While angelic legions hymn Thee, God alone;
Stoop to take the tribute of an earthly throne.
In the great Thanksgiving we would bear a part;
Voice we now the praises of a nation's heart.

For Divine protection, for the years serene,
'Neath the wise direction of our gracious Queen;
For the peace and plenty of our sea-girt land;
For the "Greater Britain" owning her command;
For an open Bible most of all we lay
At thy feet, Jehovah, grateful thanks to-day.

For the bright example one high home hath set,
For the crystal virtues in one coronet,
For the hand so willing succour to impart,
For compassion thrilling through one stricken heart;
For the countless mercies we to-day recall,
To the God of nations lift we praise for all.

Sixty years victorious in one peerless reign!
Sixty links all glorious in one regal chain!
Sixty years of blessing from the Hand above!
Sixty years for winning all her people's love!
In the great Thanksgiving we would bear a part;
Voice we now the praises of a nation's heart!

Lucy A. Bennett.

1. God of our Fatherland,
Swayed by thy mighty hand
England appears;
Now be thy name ador'd,
While we, with one accord,
Good—undeserved—record
These sixty years.

2. Freedom—her flag unfurl'd—
Heralds throughout the world
Britain's increase:
Peoples and tribes afar
Wearied with pain and war
Bid her—glad-voiced—declare
Tidings of peace.

3. From thy creation-store
Thou hast vouchsafed to pour
Largess divine:
Light linking land with land
Far-reaching oceans spann'd,
Knowledge, at thy command,
Bounteous, benign.

4. Yet, for a throne endeared,
Yet, for a life revered,
Steadfast, serene,
Raise we our song again,
Praise we in deeper strain,
World-wide the glad refrain,
God save the Queen!

5. Now, while the circling crowd
Hails her in accents loud
Queen, mother, friend,
Bless from thy Throne on high;
Grant her, as years roll by,
Peace—Christ-won victory
On to the end!

6. And when the King of kings—
Life, healing in his wings—
Earth shall restore,
When, with angelic train,
Lord, Thou shalt come again,
Grant her with Thee to reign—
Thine evermore!

Ragged Schools in South London.—Earl Compton, M.P., laid the foundation-stone of a new Memorial Hall in connection with the Lansdowne-place Ragged School and Mission, on Wednesday afternoon of last week. The hall, which is the gift of Mrs. Dudfield (in memory of her mother), will cost about £1000. Mr. John Kirk having made a brief statement, Earl Compton spoke of Ragged School work as a valuable testimony to the power of prayer, and suggested that on that occasion the note should be one of praise and rejoicing. Mr. William Olney laid the second stone. A public meeting followed, at which Pastor T. Spurgeon and others delivered addresses on Ragged School work.

THE LATE

Mr. James H. Raper.

LIVES like J. H. Raper's are amongst the brightest adornments of the Victorian era. Every movement for the uplifting of humanity had his sympathy, but he is most widely known by his temperance work, which was given with a broad impartiality to every organisation requiring help. His personal identification with the movement was contemporaneous with the Queen's reign.

Born on October 6, 1820, a posthumous child, he early became the companion of his widowed mother, who was of a noble type. At seventeen years of age he awakened to an inner spiritual life, the practical outcome of which was that he became a Sunday-school teacher through his desire to help others.

Before the Band of Hope movement was established, he was a pioneer of juvenile temperance work, and president of the Bolton Youths' Temperance Society; a member of the executive of the British Temperance League, also of the Rechabite Order. He was upon the committee of the Mechanics' Institute, and one of the visitors of the Bolton Benevolent Society. From the first he was an advocate of Sunday-closing, and in 1853, when addressing the Bolton Freehold Land Society on the cutting of their first sod, reminded the shareholders "how much more such societies would abound, if it could be borne in mind that every time an individual took a pint of ale he swallowed eight bricks."

He identified himself with the anti-slavery agitation, and the oppressed native races always had his fullest sympathy. Ever an adversary of war, and every form of unjust oppression, he counted liberty of thought and religious equality bulwarks for which a man should labour. On the committee of the Anglo-Indian Association, he took a deep interest in that race of philosophers, and had a strong attachment for many of the young Brahmans who came to England to study at our Universities and legal and medical schools.

Mr. Raper was of the true Evangelical type, a member of the Free Methodist body, though during his later years he attended Mr. Sylvester Horne's Congregational Church, Kensington. He possessed a broad catholicity which recognised the good in all sects, a sense of oneness on great fundamental points which could discard minor differences. Right thinking, right living, leading, as they invariably must, to right doing for others as for self, were for him the touchstone for all. The lever of his life, the lever to lift the world, was a continual sense of the Divine presence within, the Spirit of Christ working through the life, using brain and lips for the inspiration of all around him.

A born teacher, none who heard Mr. Raper can forget his unconventional style, his happy asides at a difficult meeting, the wit and humour which lay like sparkling gems upon an undergrowth of solemn earnestness, the enthusiasm which awoke in others a flash and its resulting warmth. No verbal reporting could ever do justice to or catch the subtle feeling which pervaded his addresses; there was a something about him which made him a magician to sway the hearts of his audiences as he would. The electric force, which is not merely of the mind, but of the soul, thrilled through him to the hearts of others, becoming a power in their lives, even as it was in his. The secret of it all was, the yielding of himself for the light of the Spirit to shine through—that Divine Spirit which dwells within the consecrated temple of the body, and uses it to give forth words of wisdom and deeds of power.

Mr. Raper's great success as a speaker led to his appointment in 1860 as Parliamentary Secretary to the United Kingdom Alliance, which position he held for nearly twenty years, when he was elected a member of the executive, and subsequently a vice-president. His rare geniality, strength, and loyalty to truth, made him one of the favourite "strangers" in the House of Parliament. His last work in the lobby was for the Irish Sunday Closing (Amendment) Bill on May 10. To the close of his life he did as much for the Alliance con amore as any of its regular staff.

Mr. Raper travelled in various parts of Canada and the United States, gathering information about the working of prohibitory law in those States which adopted it, and local option in other parts of the Union. While there, General Neal Dow conceived a great friendship for him. The countries of Europe were also visited by him, with a view to gaining knowledge by studying and comparing various systems. In Sweden he entered into the practical working of the Gothenburg system. Constantly asked to enter Parliament, he declined, with one exception, to stand as a candidate, feeling he could do more, and possibly better, work outside.

From Photograph by Messrs. Lambert, Weston, and Son, Folkestone.

He had a strong belief in personal effort, and always carried pledge cards about with him to gain the individual. An enthusiastic and active non-medical associate of the Society for the Study of Inebriety, he was constantly appealed to by those whose friends were victims of the drink curse, as well as by those who experienced the curse within themselves. Space will not allow even the names of the many societies in which he took a prominent part. While being a universal friend to many, it was his own personal friends, those who knew him best, who loved him best, for of all his many gifts his great heart of love was that which drew them to him. Bitter sorrows entered his life, but following the One who was "made perfect through suffering," he knew they had an end to serve, and bore them bravely, and even cheerfully, living out Ugo Bassi's words.

> Measure thy life by loss instead of gain,
> Not by wine drunk, but by the wine poured forth;
> For love's strength standeth in love's sacrifice,
> And who so suffers most hath most to give.

Friedenheim.

FOUNDED by Miss Davidson at Mildmay Park in 1885, this Home for the Dying was, seven years later, removed to Upper Avenue-road, Swiss Cottage, Hampstead, N.W., where over 1800 applications for admission have been received. Numbers were reluctantly rejected for lack of accommodation. The necessity for such institutions has long been felt. While the immediate purpose is to surround dying men and women with comfort and kindly sympathy, and to make the closing days of life as bright as possible, a larger aim is ever kept in view—to lead them to living faith in Him through whom death becomes the gateway of life eternal.

The Lecture Hall of the School for the Blind, adjoining "Friedenheim," was placed at the disposal of Miss Davidson for her annual meeting on Saturday afternoon, when Canon McCormick presided. The Hon. Treasurer, Mr. J. H. Tritton, in dealing with finance, said the necessity for an isolation ward, with other sanitary alterations and repairs, will involve an expenditure of £1000. A generous gift of £600 has been received towards the object in view, and it is hoped that the remaining £400 may be speedily given. About £3000 will be required annually to meet the regular expenditure of the enlarged work.

The exceptional degree of confidence inspired by the work formed a point of strong commendation in Prebendary Webb-Peploe's address. Much spiritual courage, he said, is required on the part of ladies engaged in this blessed work, in daily facing death; taking part, as it were, in the very agonies, distresses, and difficulties connected with the departure of the soul from its bodily frame. He knew that Miss Davidson disliked to talk about money; but the provision of adequate means is a necessity which needs no pressing upon those who know the real and great claims of this merciful Christian enterprise.

Dr. Henry Soltau was sure that London's need demands a much larger "Friedenheim." His work is among people, some of whom were dying in their one-room tenements. The only substitute for "Friedenheim" is the workhouse infirmary; and, from their natural dread of this, they have to be nursed in pitiable surroundings. He had left a poor dying woman hopelessly longing for the time when this Home would be large enough to receive her.

That sorrow and sickness are largely divorced in the wards of "Friedenheim" was the testimony of Dr. A. T. Schofield. All that love, skill, and individual Christian thoughtfulness can do is done to make sorrow flee away from the inmates. The Home has been kept steadily to its great Christian purpose; while relief of pain and prolongation of life are frequent results of kindness and care unequalled by any hospital in London. The Chairman added his quota of earnest commendation.

The Customary Missionary Breakfast was the rallying ground for many Christian friends at Talbot Tabernacle, Bayswater, on Whit Monday, when Pastor F. H. White presided. Stimulating addresses were given by Rev. F. W. Baller, from China, Dr. A. T. Pierson, and others. The meeting realised about £35 for Christian work in various lands.

Calvinistic Methodist Church.—The tabulated statistics submitted to the General Assembly of the Calvinistic Methodist Church show an increase for which praise is due to the good spirit of God. The growth in Church membership in the year was 3,145, the largest increase of the past twelve years; twenty-two new chapels were opened in the year; Sunday scholars have increased 4,466; chapel debts amounting to £44,028, were paid. The membership now stands at 150,442. This Church has been a great power in carrying on God's work in the Principality.

A Sketch at Epsom Races.

WHAT a spectacle! Thousands, tens of thousands, and on "Derby Day" hundreds of thousands, pouring into the town of Epsom and up to the Downs: men, women, and children, of every class of society, from the Royal Family to the lowest specimen of degraded and wrecked humanity conceivable or inconceivable! On they come, by road and rail, hour after hour, all the morning and mid-day, and far into afternoon, in eager pursuit of pleasure, godless gain, or other sinful attraction, finally forming on the racecourse and all around it, far as the eye can reach, an assemblage perhaps the most unique, the most heart-stirring and soul-saddening on which this early June sun is shining the wide world over. Truly, we say, as we gaze upon it, "the god of this world" has lost not one whit of his old power to enslave and to destroy.

For, to all human appearance, many of the poor souls gathered here are indeed "destroyed"—brutalised, marred, and crushed by the great enemy to an extent such as overwhelms with horror many of the godly who look and labour among them—specially such as for the first time have come to join the forces of the Open-Air Mission on the racecourse.

How shall I attempt to describe a work for God conducted amid such surroundings, and which one feels must be seen to be understood? But let me try.

And first, as to the labourers. These consisted of some sixty men of God, drawn partly from the ranks of the London City Mission, and partly from the Open-Air Mission, but all united in perfect harmony for mutual fellowship and service. They arrive, some on Saturday, May 29, more on Monday, the 31st, and most on Tuesday morning, June 1, for though the races are held during four days there are opportunities among gipsies and others extending over nearly a week. Missionaries, evangelists, business men, captains, majors, and colonels in the army of Her Majesty, make up a splendid aggregate of devoted workers, all filled with one desire—that souls may be saved and God be glorified.

Then as to the methods. These have often been described, and need only be briefly recapitulated. "Early in the morning" all gather for earnest prayer in Miss Alexander's Mission-room, where her genial welcome and hearty hospitality cheers all.

Refreshed and strengthened for service, the band now sets forth; some in small companies to occupy the various approaches to the racecourse, armed with great supplies of choice booklets, tracts, and cards for distribution. Thus both pedestrians and carriage folk are met, and are personally offered the Gospel message in printed form. Special literature has been printed for this purpose, and altogether about 120,000 publications are given away during the week. This is hard toil—it involves long standing in one position as the crowds pass, and listening to the curses and oaths almost innumerable which are hurled at the evangelist. But some accept thankfully, many read at once, and most place in their pocket for future perusal, the publications offered.

While all this is in progress, the greater number of the missioners proceed straight to the racecourse, where, for nearly three hours each day, the Gospel is proclaimed in speech and song just opposite the grand stand, and within hearing of the royal box. It is very encouraging to see how, immediately upon the formation of this "Gospel ring" in the very centre of evil, among many other rings formed by "tipsters," a large and motley crowd gathers round, prepared to listen attentively. Gipsies, tramps, policemen, betting-men, and professional "bookmakers," gentlemen, members of Parliament, all are represented, and while many come and go every few moments, a large number remain for successive hymns and short addresses. No light work this! To gain and keep the attention of such an audience, amid such a scene, is a task of almost unparalleled difficulty, yet many brethren do it admirably. A large heart, a loving and gracious manner, winning words, a timely anecdote, these do not fail where loud and rash denunciation is utterly useless, and only provokes riotous disturbance or disperses the throng. Nor, as a physical effort, is this work unworthy of attention. There can be little moving here—the ring must be well kept until the bell rings for the first race, and every man must be at his post. The greatest element of success in these morning racecourse services is the presence of the London City Mission Male Choir, under the able leadership of Mr. A. Williams. Their beautiful singing wings its way into many hearts, and almost compels attention.

After a brief afternoon's rest the tract work is resumed, as the crowds return from the course, and later in the evening two large open-air services are held simultaneously in the town, again attended by most pathetic specimens of Satan's handiwork, many under the influence of drink.

And, lastly, what can we say as to results? Thank God, a great deal more than can now be fully related. For instance, a poor fellow was found in tears at Tuesday evening's meeting, was taken for prayer to the mission room, became deeply penitent, told his sad story of ten years' separation from his wife through drink and gambling, and fully accepted the Saviour. He was seen to the station on his return to Lancashire, from whence he had only that day travelled. "Write to my wife," he said, "and tell her I will come back a new husband," and her name and address were taken for this purpose. Another case was that of a young man who had wandered from the Lord, was prayed with, returned to the Lord, and on succeeding evenings formed one of our company of Gospel singers with a happy face.

A striking testimony was given by a degraded man, who had been observed listening attentively on the racecourse. The following day, meeting one of the missionaries, he said: "You saved me from being in prison yesterday. Along with five others, I had arranged to break into a gentleman's house near here, but what I heard touched me so much I felt I could not do it. So I told my companions. "What," they said, "have you turned religious?" "I don't know that," he replied, "but I am not coming with you." The consequence was, they were so frightened, fearing he would disclose their plans, that they refrained from committing the burglary. Assuredly the gentry of Epsom and elsewhere should subscribe to a mission which, by God's blessing, turns burglars into honest men.

Let me conclude by mentioning the effort also put forth by Mr. Josiah Nix and his helpers, which, I trust, will bear much fruit. Their tent was a prominent object near the racecourse.

Will your readers kindly help to bear the many heavy expenses which the Open-Air Mission has incurred in this truly wonderful and blessed evangelistic campaign against the Prince of Darkness?

Frank Cockrem, Secretary.

The Tramps' Mission.—Special efforts for the uplifting of this neglected nomad class continue to be made by Miss S. E. Garnett, 2, Eldon-villas, Battledown, Cheltenham, and her helpers' visits to casual wards have brought good influences to bear on the inmates. Last year forty fresh unions were provided with Scriptures and Christian literature, but over 200 unions are still unsupplied. Gospel services are held in 180 unions. The Church Army have been helpful in getting work for men through their Labour Homes. Chaplains and masters of workhouses and others testify to good results from the efforts put forth.

American Notes.

THE Believers' Conference will convene this year on July 7, at Niagara-on-the-Lake, ten miles from the far-famed Falls. The seven days are devoted exclusively to Bible study, including devotional hours; each morning some special feature of the Holy Spirit in his manifold relations is presented. The Minor Prophets and Paul's Epistles to the Churches will receive special consideration this year. We gladly welcome any English friends visiting Canada this summer to share in our fellowship at this Conference.

During the past months we have had well-known brethren from your own side of the sea, each one exercising his own special gift and presenting the Truth from his own point of view. Rev. F. B. Meyer was helpful to many who have felt the lack of the abundance of spiritual life for holy living and joyful service. Pastor Archibald G. Brown was very happy in his presentation of a full-orbed Gospel. Rev. John McNeill confined his work to New York and Brooklyn. Great crowds hung upon his lips. Pharisees received no small attention from him, and his scathing denunciations of hollow-hearted professors will not soon be forgotten. With tremendous energy and pointedness he preached salvation through Jesus Christ. Preceding these brethren, we had a prolonged visit from Rev. John Robertson, of Glasgow, who visited many of our cities, and in each place had a goodly following.

All our own evangelists have been busy; but there have been no deep or extensive revivals. The unconverted have not been reached in great numbers, while most of the preaching has been directed to the Christian people. This may be, in God's providence, the method which we hope will culminate in widespread results. Dr. Chapman continues his pastoral work, with frequent evangelistic visits. Dr. Munhall has been on the Pacific coast greatly used of the Lord. Pastor A. C. Dixon has confined his labors to Greater New York, radiating from his church in Brooklyn and touching around the circumference. He has been the director of the work carried on by Messrs. Moody, Meyer, McNeill, and others. Pastor D. M. Stearns is on a visit to the Orient. Most of his Bible classes are discontinued for the present; others of them have been in my charge. Mr. Stearns has developed a missionary spirit to a very large degree, so that the classes in connection with his own church, and individuals whom he has reached, sent five thousand pounds to the treasuries of several missionary societies. These classes, through their leader, now sustain many missionaries abroad.

A Gospel Tent, under the leadership of evangelist Thomas Needham, has been erected. At present it is in the neighbourhood of New York, in the midst of a population of 50,000 persons, few of whom are brought under church influence. Later on, the Tent will visit other great centres where the Gospel of Christ is most needed. Already many persons have confessed faith in the Lord Jesus as their Saviour.

Bible conferences continue to multiply. As our cities are so widely apart and the cost of travel excessive, we cannot always have the Niagara and Northfield teachers, but we look for the development of new men who will be prepared for this ministry. Dr. W. J. Erdman has kept himself free from pastoral and other local work, so that he may give his whole time to the expounding of the Word throughout the country; he employs much time in visits to Bible schools.

Destructive Biblical criticism has been again revived by Dr. Lyman Abbott's attack on the infallibility of Scripture. One of his own ecclesiastical confrères, Dr. Behrends, has come to the front with a masterly argument against German rationalism. Dr. Behrends has dived into the depths of agnostic philosophy, and vindicates the Bible against these attacks.

Royal Counties Agricultural Show.—The Colportage Association and other Christians have been at work during this show at Reading. The people have gladly received tracts and other literature. The country colporteur and his co-worker do good work among the vast crowds at the gate by testifying for the Master. Major Liebenrood invited the herdsmen and employés to an open-air meeting on his lawn, and it was gratifying to notice the ready response, especially at the Sunday gathering, where upwards of 200 men were present.

OUR DAILY HOMILY.

SUNDAY, June 20.

"AND WE, HOW SHALL WE ESCAPE?"—Is. xx. 6.

THE argument is as follows—Assyria, according to Isaiah's prophecies, would sweep down on Ethiopia, and take them into captivity, and where this happened the inhabitants of the coast-line, which we know as Philistia, would have reason to fear indeed. If Ethiopia and Egypt, to whom they looked for aid, could not withstand the mighty northern nation, how hopeless it was for them to expect to withstand it alone!

The moral is obvious, and it is well pointed by the Apostle Peter when he says: "The time is come for judgment to begin at the house of God, and if it begin first with us, what shall be the end of them that obey not the Gospel of God? And if the righteous is scarcely saved, where shall the ungodly and sinner appear?" Scarcely saved! Assuredly our salvation has cost God infinitely. Blood and tears and heart-break are the price with which our redemption has been secured! How then will they escape who venture forth into the storm which shall soon break upon our world, apart from the only salvation which can withstand its fury? "If the word spoken by angels was stedfast, and every transgression and disobedience received a just recompense of reward, how shall we escape, if we neglect so great salvation?"

A pious man, when death approached, longed to die in triumph for the conversion of his sons. Instead, his soul was overwhelmed with gloom. But this was used of God to the conversion of the whole family, for they said: If so good a man died in the dark, what will be our fate who have never professed his religion? How shall we escape?

MONDAY, June 21.

"WATCHMAN, WHAT OF THE NIGHT?"—Is. xxi. 11.

Across the desert spaces a voice was heard calling from the land of Esau, to know whether the long night of Assyrian oppression was nearly over. The prophet stood on the hills of Zion watching the dawn, as the priests were accustomed to do, to give the first signal for the offering of the morning sacrifice. The question, "Watchman, what of the night?" is repeated twice, as if the weary sufferers could hold out no longer. The answer is enigmatical. The morning was already on its way, but the night was spreading its raven wings in the same sky, "The morning cometh, and also the night." Morning for Israel, but night for Edom; but if Edom would repent, she might come again with her inquiries to find that God had turned the shadow of death into the morning for her also.

Never in the history of the ages have men looked more eagerly towards the Eastern sky, or inquired more persistently, What of the night? What of the night?

To those that watch, the Eastern sky, standing on the mount of vision afforded by the Word of God, there is but one answer—The morning cometh, but also the night. The morning of millennial glory, and of the bridal chamber; of the taking home of the saints, and the revelation of Jesus Christ; but the night of unutterable sorrow to the servant who knew the Lord's will and did it not, and to the world which would not have this Man to reign over it. Yet if individuals will turn from darkness to light, and from Satan to God, they shall receive an inheritance amongst the children of the morning.

"THE KEY OF THE HOUSE OF DAVID WILL I LAY UPON HIS SHOULDER." Is. xxii. 22.

The Divine Man stands behind the earthly type in these words in majestic beauty. "These things saith He that is holy, He that is true, He that hath the key of David, He that openeth, and none shall shut, and that shutteth and none openeth. Behold I have set before thee a door opened, which none can shut." Words of incomparable splendour, capable of endless application.

Let Jesus open each day of service, each opportunity of ministry, each door into another soul, each new chamber of life, and knowledge, and opportunity, and remember that He who sets before us open doors is He who knows our works, and that we have but little strength. He will never open a door leading into a passage of life beyond our strength to tread. The open door will reveal to us possibilities within our reach of which we had not dreamt, and when once a door is opened, though access to it may be beset, as in Bunyan's vision, by armed men, and though strong pressure is brought to bear upon it, for its closing, let us dare to persevere against disease and pestilence and opposition, relying on these sublime words, None shall shut. Dear soul, say it to thyself repeatedly, None shall shut.

But the Lord shuts doors. The Spirit of Jesus suffered them not to go into Bithynia. Down a long corridor of closed doors we may sometimes have to pass. It seems heartbreaking to see doors labelled, Friendship, Love, Home, shut against us, but beyond them there is the one unclosed door through which we shall enter our true life.

"THE SEA HATH SPOKEN."—Isa. xxiii. 4.

Zidon is bidden to be ashamed because she is suddenly left childless, and this to an Eastern woman was shame indeed. The prophet, personifying Zidon as the City of the Sea, describes the sea as lamenting. It is as though the sea took up Zidon's complaint at the destruction of her children, and spoke in all her multitudinous waves.

With what different tones the sea speaks. Sometimes in the musical breath of her wavelets on the beach, or the long draw of the shingle in the recession of the retiring billow, or in the rising storm, when the waters lift up their voice, or in the angry roar of the mighty waves far out at sea. Speaking in whispers and in thunder; speaking to itself and to God under the canopy of night The sea-voices are not the least amongst those of nature. It seems to us sometimes like a great organ on which every note of joy, triumph, or distress is represented.

And what are the wild waves saying? We are his for He made us; we own his sway, for He once trod our crests; his voice is as the voice of many waters; his thoughts are deep as our profoundest depths; his throne stands behind the sea of glass mingled with fire; his least word prevails over our wildest fury. He shall live when the sea shall be no more, and in his home his children shall never tremble before our yeasty wrath, or be separated by weltering expanse.

THURSDAY, June 24.

"FROM THE UTTERMOST PART OF THE EARTH HAVE WE HEARD SONGS."—Isa. xxiv. 16.

In this chapter the prophet describes the general desolation about to overtake the earth of his time, when it should be utterly emptied and utterly spoiled, when the world would languish and fade away, and the high ones of the people languish. The polluted earth, groaning beneath the curse of those who have transgressed the laws, changed the ordinance, and broken the everlasting covenant, sighs in bitter anguish. But amidst it all the children of God, dwelling on Mount Zion, rejoice in the reign of their King, who reigns before his ancients gloriously, and as that spectacle is beheld by the sons of men, as they compare their unutterable sorrow with the light and glory of the people of God, they lift up their voice and shout. For the majesty of the Lord they cry aloud from the sea, they glorify Him where morning lights her fires, and from the uttermost parts of the earth songs roll in a tumult of ecstasy, Glory, glory to the righteous.

It is a true sentence. Though for our discipline, and to fit us to minister to men, we are often passed through the fiery furnace, yet on the whole it is well with us. Ours is the peace of God, ours the knowledge that love is over all, ours the anticipation of a morning that shall never be overcast. Earth shall yet become the home of song, her travail shall be succeeded by great joy, and it will be seen that the righteous Lord loveth righteousness, and vindicates the righteous.

FRIDAY, June 25.

"HE WILL SWALLOW UP DEATH IN VICTORY."—Isa. xxv. 8.

In this ode, which Isaiah prepared for singing when Babylon the first should have fallen, the Apostle, taught by the Holy Ghost, saw an anticipation of the triumph of the saints, when the strong bastions of death should be destroyed before the coming of Him who is the resurrection and the life. "This corruptible must put on incorruption, and this mortal must put on immortality." In these words he refers to the first stage in the Second Advent, when the living saints shall be changed, and those who have died shall be raised, and then he proceeds to quote these words, "When this corruptible shall have put on incorruption, and this mortal shall have put on immortality, then shall come to pass the saying that is written, Death is swallowed up in victory."

There can be no doubt that this is Paul's prayer for himself. He says, "We would be clothed upon, that what is mortal may be swallowed up of life.' No doubt it would be very delightful! None of the pains of dissolution, no going forth of the unclothed spirit, but the sudden subliming and transfiguring of the mortal, as ice passes into water, or water into vapour. It is not to be wondered at that the prophet adds, "The Lord God will wipe away tears from off all faces." In the rapture of reunion, in the glad embrace of eternity, in the consciousness that death and trouble are for ever behind, and that God has kept his word, we shall forget how to weep!

SATURDAY, June 26.

"THOU WILT KEEP HIM IN PERFECT PEACE, WHOSE MIND IS STAYED ON THEE, BECAUSE HE TRUSTETH IN THEE."—Is. xxvi. 3.

The Hebrew is very significant. Perfect peace is Peace, peace. As though the soul dwelt within double doors, like some chambers which we have entered, which had double windows against the noise of the street, and a baize door within the ordinary one to deaden the sound of voices from the next apartment. Understand, dear soul, that it is thy privilege to live inside the double doors of God's loving care. He says to thee, "Peace, peace." If one assurance is not enough, He will follow it with a second and a third. The city is strong, the bulwarks and walls are massive, salvation is appointed and prepared, but the gates do not frown with iron or move heavily on hinges of stone; they open musically and gently; they are the two-leaved gates of peace; they open automatically to the righteous soul that keeps the truth.

We must see to it that our mind is stayed on God. For mind the margin suggests imagination. It is through our imaginings that we get perturbed and defiled. We anticipate and fancy so many ogres; we harbour such dark forebodings; chambers of imagery are thrown open to all unseemly company; hence our perturbation. Do not imagine, but trust; do not anticipate, but leave God to choose. "Looking forward strains the eyesight; looking upward opens heaven."

The Evangelisation of Turkey.—A correspondent at Aintab writes:—"Quite an unusual display of energy is being shown by the Government in vindication of law and order. The people are fairly clamouring for schools and teachers. Young and educated Armenians in America and England are asked, in self-sacrifice, to return at this crisis, and labour for their fellow-countrymen."

Full sixty summers' sunshine
Has waned since thou wast crowned,
To reign as Queen and Sovereign
O'er Britain's realm renowned.
Though forming many nations,
Apart by land and sea,
Yet hail we as one People
Thy Diamond Jubilee.

4.

We loved thee when, as maiden
Thou camest to thy Throne:
We joyed in all thy gladness
When Albert was thine own·
We sang with thee, as mother,
With children by thy side:
We wept with thee, as widow,
By death's dark, chilling tide.

5.

Your loving hearts had blended
In sweetest sympathy!
Your minds had ever movèd
In heavenly harmony.
"Albert the Good" too early
Had fought the warrior's fight!
Thou, left to walk in darkness!
He, in the realms of light!

6.

How bravely hast thou suffered!
How patiently endured!
Ne'er from the path of duty
By selfishness allured.
Thy bleeding heart thy People's,
Their sorrows all thine own;
And so we all are bounden
With love-bonds round thy Throne.

7.

As Sovereign, wife, and mother,
Illustrious hast thou been;
As Queen among the monarchs,
Thy compeer ne'er was seen.
The secret of thy greatness,
And Britain's greatness too,
That in thy heart thou shrinest
God's Holy Word so true.

8.

Was ever there a monarch
So gracious, wise, and true?
Who ne'er sought after power
Which was her People's due.
Thy motto, Queen Victoria!
To the autocratic school—
"Let monarchs do the reigning,
But let the People rule."

Second Canto.

9.

For righteousness and freedom,
Victoria! thou hast reigned;
And thus hast bound thee to us,
By mutual love enchained.
And as the years roll onward,
Thy Throne's security
Shall ever rest on justice
And wider liberty.

10.

Thy reign will be distinguished
For science and for art;
But pity for the needy
Its most illustrious part.
Thou, who hast nobly cherished
Thy deep and life-long grief,
Couldst ne'er forget thy People's,
But strive for their relief.

11.

The poor, the sad, the lowly,
E'er found in thee their friend;
Thou, all their troubles sharing,
Thy tears with theirs didst blend.
And not alone in pageants,
'Mid royal glory's sheen,
But by the cottage bed-side,
We find our widowed Queen.

12.

Thy Throne is in the temples
Of loyal hearts and free:
Thy Crown shines ever lustrous,
With their deep love of thee
Thy triumphs not in warfare,
But just and equal laws,
The smiting off men's fetters
In holy freedom's cause.

13.

Thine empire is the greatest
The world hath ever seen:
Four hundred millions love thee,
And pledge thee as their Queen.
Upon that glorious empire
The sun doth ever shine;
To-day we all are singing—
"Queen-Empress! we are thine!"

14.

And not alone thy subjects
This day proclaim thy fame;
But all the world's great nations
Greet thee with glad acclaim.
We give them hearty welcome,
Columbia specially,
For though, alas! we're severed,
She's of our family.

Third Canto.

15.

Reign on, great Queen! and reigning,
Thy mighty work pursue;
God with His wisdom fill thee,
And with His grace endue!
Inspire our legislators
With purpose high and great;
May none be for a Party,
But all be for the State!

16.

The snows of time are on thee:
But e'en the winter-snow
Is not more pure and spotless
Than Britain's Queen, we know.
For this it is we love thee,
That in sunshine, cloud, and strife,
Thou wearest e'er the lily—
A pure and blameless life.

17.

Thy Throne, though high and lofty,
Hath not uplifted thee—
The pattern of thy People
In gentle charity.
Thy Crown hath not adorned thee,
Though lustrous with renown;
By character so Queenly
Thou hast adorned thy Crown

18.

May Britain's sons and daughters
Thy bright example take;
And Britain's mighty empire
A nobler Britain make!
That so, in distant ages,
To earth-tide's glorious e'en,
They still may be extolling
Victoria, Empress-Queen!

19.

Victoria! Victoria!
Our hearts are glad to-day,
We belt the world with singing,
And bless thy regal sway.
We praise our Heavenly Father,
For Britain's God is He,
And pray that He will prosper
Thy Diamond Jubilee.

20.

And when thy gracious Saviour
Shall call Thee to thy rest,
With loved ones gone before thee
To mansions of the blest;
Then, thine and theirs the rapture
Upon His throne to be:
Supernal Hallelujahs!
Eternal Jubilee!

Missionary Week.

Text to Learn.—Isaiah vi. 8.

Hymn.—"Here am I, send me" (S.S. and S., No. 18).

I AM glad to find how much the young people themselves can do for the benefit of missionary work. Here are some instances that have reached me:—

A lady writes: "On Sunday afternoon I saw a little girl of about six or seven years standing outside a Sunday-school door, struggling to get something out of her glove. I asked her if I could help her. 'Oh, no,' she said, 'it is only my halfpenny for the poor little children in India. I am going to send it to them to buy them some bread and a leaf of the Bible, or if it will not buy a whole leaf, just a small bit of one, where they can learn that Jesus loves them. They don't all know that, and I am so sorry for them; aren't you? Here comes my halfpenny, and now I must run into school.'"

From another lady I hear of two children, aged eleven and thirteen, who, quite alone, arranged a little sale of work in their dining-room. All the work was done by themselves and their little friends, so that it was quite a "children's sale." And the money they gained by their efforts (£1) they sent to the poor starving children in India.

Another little girl, named Bessie, wanted to get ninepence to put in her missionary-box, and after talking about it with her mother, she thought perhaps she might get it if she could get up a little bazaar. So she asked two of her little friends, named Elsie and Dora, to help her, and they agreed to give up some of their playtime to making pin-cushions and little bags, which they filled with sweets, and to dressing two or three little dolls. One of them brought some roots of primroses, forget-me-nots, and pansies, and Bessie's mother gave some cakes for the refreshment stall.

The little girls sent out invitations to all their friends, and many of them came, so that at the end of the sale the little girls found they had taken 22s., which so delighted them that they mean to try again next year.

Work in India.

Dear Young Friends,—You cannot imagine how pleased I was to receive the £37 for helping some of the poor Indian children, and to know that you too are caring for them. Since writing from Patna, I have been in other places, and the most interesting of all to me is Ajodhea, where I now am. Here the people are mostly Hindoo idol-worshippers, and as they walk along the streets they sing or shout, "Rám! Rám! Sieta Rám!" But you will be glad to know that through "helping hands" there has been a school for Christian teaching opened here, and in it daily about forty-six children are taught, most of them girls, and very poor. This morning I took two sacks of grain (rice and dál), and distributed amongst them, and also bought several yards of print and calico to divide amongst them, as they are badly in want of clothes. Last evening I took my magic lantern to another part of the city where we have another school for girls, and showed them my magic lantern pictures, after which I gave each of them two tea-cups full of rice and one cup of dál. I also hope to give calico and print to some of them from the money you sent. All that I am now telling you was done with those rupees you sent.

One day I took a sack of rice and another of dál and drove to a part of the city where I had heard there were a great number of poor children, and sure enough soon I was surrounded with a motley crowd who yelled and pushed and begged and whined around me, while I, with an enormous hat on, something like an English coalheaver's, only larger, and streams of water pouring down my face, tried in vain to quell the tumult, and to distribute the grain. My coachman and another man helped me to shout and beat off the crowd with our umbrellas. Besides children, there were leprous men, blind women, and lame and diseased in different ways, and all of the poor things filthily dirty and clad with only a few rags! At last I had to make a rush for the tum-tum and drive away.

Now, dear children, I must not stay to write more, but, God willing, I shall be in England next September, and perhaps may get an opportunity to tell you more. Do pray that instead of "Rám" the sweet name of Jesus may soon be sung by hundreds in this place.—Yours in his love,

Annie Hill,
Zenana Bible and Medical Mission.

From Bulgaria.

A young lady missionary at Samokov says:—"Joyful fruit is borne in the efforts which have been made in Bulgaria, especially of late years, to reach the children, not only by the regular Sabbath ministrations and the Sabbath schools, but also by the weekly prayer meetings which have been organised in so many towns and villages especially for them. Not a few children have acknowledged the claims of God upon them, and have given their lives to Him. Our hearts were rejoiced by hearing, the other day, that three or four little girls about ten years of age had just been received to the membership of the Bansko Church. May God multiply manifold the number of child Christians in Bulgaria! I have found Rev. E. P. Hammond's book, 'The Conversion of Children' (published by Morgan & Scott), of great service in instructing the children, and encouraging them by the example of others to come to Jesus."

Mohammed.

You will remember that a few weeks ago Uncle Ted wrote you a letter about Mohammed. Some readers have thought he gave too favourable a view of him, but Uncle Ted explains that he was describing only one part of his life, intending to follow it up with another letter showing how grievously wrong Mohammed's teaching was. I am sure no one would think that Uncle Ted intended to say what was incorrect, still less to praise what was wrong. He has sent me his second letter, but I hardly know when I shall be able to insert it.

Uncle Tom.

The Leys School, Cambridge.—At the Speech Day, last week, the Lord Chancellor presided, supported by several dignitaries and men of wide influence. Among the visitors who delivered brief addresses were Chief Justice Way (from Australia), Judge Waddy, the Provost of King's, and Sir George Chubb.

Young Christian Missionary Union.—A Rally was held on June 12, at Regent-square Presbyterian Church. Rev. F. B. Meyer presided, and addresses were delivered by Dr. A. T. Pierson, Rev. J. Smith (L.M.S.), from India, and Rev. Alexander Connell, concluding with a solemn time of consecration.

A Home for Girls of Weak Intellect has been opened near Halifax, Yorkshire, where girls are admitted on payment of 5s. per week. They must be of good character. The home is principally for Yorkshire cases, but others are taken as well. Ages of admittance from fourteen to twenty. The Home is managed by a general committee of guardians and prominent workers elected from the principal towns in Yorkshire. The chief occupation of the Home is laundry work, but other cheerful things are taught according to the ability of the girls. Applications may be addressed to the secretary, Mr. Ward Tamplin, 28, Heath-crescent, Halifax.

Essex Home for Destitute Boys.—For a good many years this Home has been carrying on the work of educating and training boys, especially orphans in danger of falling into crime. The institution is on a freehold site on the Rainsford-road, nine minutes' walk from Chelmsford Station, and is open to the inspection of visitors. Information about the work is obtainable from Mr. J. Brittain Pash, Chelmsford. There is no doubt that the influence exerted by the Sunday evening teachers and the kind interest they take in the boys, even after they have gone out into the world, is a great power for good. A very large percentage of boys who have left are doing well, and frequent encouragement is received from the visits of boys, once scholars, now in good situations.

The Mildmay Conference.

OPENING MEETING.

IN the most beautiful of summer weather this now ancient assembly of Christians met, on Tuesday forenoon, for the opening session of the Conference. There had been of course the customary prayer meeting earlier in the morning, to entreat the Divine blessing on the proceedings of the three days. This year, owing to the Diamond Jubilee festivities, the Conference was fixed for a week sooner than usual. Whether the great national festival of next week had brought to London any friends from distant parts who also attended the Conference, we cannot say. At any rate the attendance on the opening morning was not in excess of that which we have seen for years past; there were a good many empty seats near the front when Lord POLWARTH, the chairman, one minute before eleven, invited the company to bow for a brief space in silent petition to God. Then, on the strike of the clock, his Lordship called on all present to join in singing the well-known invocation:—

Holy, holy, holy, Lord God Almighty,
Early in the morning our song shall rise to Thee;
Holy, holy, holy, merciful and mighty,
God in three persons, blessed Trinity!

Prayer was thereafter offered by the Vicar of Islington, Rev. W. H. BARLOW, who made comprehensive petition for the multitudes all over the world yet unevangelised, mingled also with thanksgiving for all the mercies of the past. The prayer had specially appropriate reference to the subject of the three days' conference—"World-wide Evangelisation in our own generation." There was also tender and loyal allusion to the Queen and her sixty years' reign, with all its freight of advancing light and liberty throughout the Empire.

A portion of Isaiah vi. was read by the Chairman, after which was sung some verses of another hymn of praise.

CHAIRMAN'S WORDS.

The Chairman's brief opening address followed. We meet at this time, he said, in very special surroundings in this great metropolis. These surroundings and circumstances bearing on the long reign of our Queen may have a definite message for us. The throne is the centre of our nation's life, and God in his mercy has caused our Queen's reign to be the channel of many mercies to the nation. Looking at the matter from the Christian standpoint, we are called to note the wonderful expansion, not only of the Empire, but of the opportunities for spreading God's Gospel, He has over-ruled national events—even war, plague, famine, and the march of discovery to open up the world to the reception of the message of salvation.

Our subject this week is "The Evangelisation of the World in Our Own Generation." At first (continued the Chairman) my own thought was not quite in harmony with this way of putting it. Christ's redeeming work has reference to all generations—the most distantly future. But, of course, one sees that for us to-day this generation is the nearest and the most important so far as our personal testimony is concerned. The evangelisation of the world is not to be confounded with the conversion of the world, though every true believer must long for that. Next week we shall see in London many emblems of our nation's power extending to the limits of the empire. But our King Jesus has all power in heaven and on earth, and in this work of world-wide evangelisation we are to see the manifestation of his omnipotence stooping down to reach and to save the lowest sinner that lives. We go to the uttermost parts of the earth, not in our own strength, but in the might of Him who is King of kings and Lord of lords. Going in his great name and endued with his might we cannot fail. We are to hear this morning of the special qualifications needed for those who would undertake this work. If we are to be his witnesses in the world we must be much in communion with Him.

The company sang the stately ascription of praise in the hymn beginning—

Praise, praise ye the name of Jehovah our God;
Declare, oh declare ye his glories abroad;
Proclaim ye his mercy from nation to nation,
Till the uttermost islands have heard his salvation.

Rev. E. A. STUART

gave the first address on the "Qualifications" of those who would work for the evangelisation of the world. The atoning work and death of Jesus Christ (he said) was the great purpose for which He became incarnate—not simply as a higher example to mankind, or a fuller revelation of God's mind. We cannot conceive that any other being but the Son of God Himself could have made atonement for the sins of the world. Having completed this work Christ, we are told, sat down; and this may give rise to perplexity in some minds. But it is plain that God does not intend to do what others can do. He only could work out the redemption of the race, but He has sat still all these centuries because He has entrusted to his Church the mission of making known that redemption. We have not to do with past generations; our responsibility is that, so far as we can, none shall pass away into the unseen without having heard the message of a salvation that is accomplished. No previous generation has had such forces at command in fulfilling the task. During the decade between 1880 and 1890 we are told that 12,600,000 square miles of the earth's surface have passed out of the hands of heathen and Mohammedan powers into the hands of Christian powers. The doors of the world are marvellously open; are we able to enter into them? It is calculated that it would only need one out of each 1300 Protestant communicants to go to foreign fields in order to proclaim the Gospel to the whole world during this generation. The American estimate is somewhat higher. The Moravian Church sends abroad one out of every sixty of its communicants, and the young native church in Uganda devotes one out of ten. Shall the older Christian communities be less earnest and devoted in carrying out our Lord's command?

Coming to the specific point of special qualifications for the work, the speaker referred to our Lord's choice of his immediate followers. In this work of evangelising discipleship must come before apostleship; further, apostleship must be the outcome of discipleship. As to the marks of discipleship, one is the taking up of the cross (Luke xiv. 27)—crucifying our own selfish will, and yielding fully to the perfect, acceptable will of God. The cross must be willingly borne, not reluctantly or grudgingly. Another mark of a disciple is a teachable disposition; a third mark is faithfulness: abiding in Christ, and He abiding in us. Out of such disciples Christ will choose his apostles, though all the time they will remain disciples. The marks of apostleship are (1) the sinking of self, and the telling to the Master of everything that is done; (2) progress in faith, and a realisation of personal weakness; (3) a due sense of the power of the blood of Christ shed for the world. Christ sits at God's right hand, but He is there "expecting, till his enemies be made his footstool." Shall He expect in vain? As Christ said to John on the Cross, "Son, behold thy mother," so He says to us, "Behold the lost world." Can we really love Him and yet neglect his admonition?

When Mr. Stuart had ceased his earnest exhortation, all sang:—

Lord speak, to me that I may speak,
In living echoes of thy tone;
As Thou hast sought, so let me seek,
Thy erring children, lost and lone.

REV. G. H. C. MACGREGOR,

after prayer, followed with an address on the "Attitude" to be taken up by those who undertake mission work. The news of the Gospel has not yet been brought to two thirds of the human race. The nearer we come to the Second Advent of our Lord, the more urgent becomes the missionary question. The Church has, in a few short years, to make up for the apathy of the past. If the Lord is coming "quickly," shall not the Church be "ready" to do whatever He appoints? This word supplies the key to the proper attitude of the Church in this matter. What is implied in such readiness? In 2 Tim. ii. we find the Christian spoken of as a "good soldier of Jesus Christ." The end of all military arrangement is readiness for every emergency. On the soldier's part there must be full surrender of will to his commander. He must also be separate from all other avocations. So the Christian soldier is to be disentangled from the affairs of this life. Half-hearted consecration will not suffice. What could not God do if all the Church communicants were fully surrendered to Him, and were single in heart and aim in doing his will and work?

Again, in the same chapter, the Christian is described as a "servant." He also must be ready—full of attention to the Master's orders, waiting silently and patiently for the word of command. These things God expects of us, but He does not always get them. In some quarters there is an apathy as to this question almost amounting to apostasy. Some are so busy with plans of what is going to be done, and with reports of what has been done, that they have no time to wait on God for guidance and direction. Another characteristic of the true servant is an eagerness that will make him leap into the breach at the word of advance. The Christian, once again, is spoken of as a "vessel" in this chapter. The lessons to be derived from this last figure are perhaps deepest and most important of all. If we are to be vessels meet for the Master's use, we must be entirely at his disposal. We must be clean vessels. Behind all conduct is character. In the story of missions we find that it was personal character in the workers that enabled God to use them. We should also have the attitude of humility. Finally we must be "empty." Can anyone among us truthfully say, "None of self and all of thee"? It is not after all, the power of the missionary, but the power of God the Holy Ghost working through broken, emptied, and cleansed vessels that will bring about the evangelization of the world.

After some moments of silent waiting on God, Preb. Webb-Peploe led in prayer, and the solemn meeting came to a close.

The Bible in South America.

PASTOR GRAHAM, who resides at Las Flores, 120 miles south of Buenos Ayres, has sent to the La Plata Agency of the American Bible Society the following incidents from the journal of Colporteur Suarez, who works under his direction:—

"One of the most encouraging cases of blessing through the reading of the Bible I have ever seen is that of a Spanish family just outside Las Flores. About nine months ago Suarez called at the house and offered his books. The husband was absent at the time, but his wife purchased a Bible, which she showed him on his return. He began to read it, and soon became so interested that he hardly cared to do anything else. When Suarez called, about six months later, he found the man delighted with his Bible. Until then he had not heard of our meetings, but immediately began to attend, bringing with him the other members of his family. Now the father and mother, four grown-up sons, a daughter, and son-in-law are, through the reading of the Bible, earnestly seeking the salvation there is in Christ, of which they already have had a taste. The father and eldest son are carrying the Gospel message to places at a distance where their work calls them, and bravely bearing persecution from their former friends.

"Another case is that of a shoemaker and his wife, whom we had the joy of baptizing on December 20. This man found peace to his soul through reading the Epistle to the Romans. This also was the result of the sale of a Bible. The man had been far sunken in drunkenness. Now both husband and wife are faithful witnesses of Jesus Christ. We could tell of many more cases where great blessing has resulted from the work of our colporteur Suarez."

As we announced some weeks ago, Pastor Graham is now on a visit to this country.

The Guildford Convention.

[BY A CORRESPONDENT.]

THE annual Convention at Guildford was held last week under the most favourable weather conditions. There was quite an average attendance at the various meetings as a whole. The visitors, who this year subscribed their names in a book provided for the purpose, hailed principally from different parts of the Metropolis, but many other centres within easy reach of the place of meeting were also well represented.

As in previous years, the Convention was opened on the Monday evening and continued the whole of the week. The proceedings each day were appropriately initiated by a meeting in the early morning for prayer, at which also a short address was delivered by one or other of the different speakers. Then followed the Bible reading, taken exclusively each forenoon by Pastor Stockmayer in the Church Institute, adjoining the large tent. This was succeeded at half-past eleven by a general meeting under the spreading canvas, which this year proved a most acceptable shade from the burning rays of the sun outside. The afternoons were devoted to gatherings for men, conducted in the tent by Mr. George Clarke, whilst meetings for ladies were held in the Church Institute under the direction of Mrs. Hatt Noble and Mrs. Baxter. The gatherings in the evening were naturally most largely attended, business people in the town who could not at any other portion of the day conveniently be present, helping to swell the audiences.

At Monday evening's convention meeting Revs. J. B. FIGGIS and A. E. BARNES-LAWRENCE were the speakers. Following a few suitable words of welcome by the chairman (Rev. FRANCIS PAYNTER), they pointed out the necessity for a condition of preparedness of soul, with a view to a realisation of the presence and power of the Holy Spirit.

Those who availed themselves of the opportunity of attending the Bible-reading on Tuesday morning, as also the three succeeding ones, must doubtless have listened with profit as well as interest to the freshness and depth of thought which characterised Pastor STOCKMAYER'S deliverances regarding Jesus Christ as our righteousness, sanctification, and redemption. The speaker showed that there is no true righteousness outside of a knowledge of Christ; that practical sanctification means, first, a realisation of having come under the curse of sin and Christ having been made a curse for us; and, secondly, a devoting of our lives not to worldliness but to God's service, just as the vessels of gold and silver captured at the taking of Jericho were placed in the temple to be devoted there not to secular but for ever to Divine use. The third Bible reading was a further expounding of the subject of sanctification, and in the last the speaker dealt with redemption through Christ in a double aspect, that is, redemption at conversion and the fuller redemption that takes place in the subsequent life of every progressive Christian.

Besides the Bible reading in the morning of Tuesday an address was given by Mr. BARNES-LAWRENCE, which he based on the words, "As my Father hath sent Me, so send I you." He drew attention, for our imitation, to the fact that the mission on which Christ was sent into the world was one characterised by perfect obedience to and absolute dependence upon God. Mr. FIGGIS discoursed with regard to the potter's vessel, first as "a broken vessel," and then as "another vessel." He referred to the fact that we are all, so to speak, by nature marred vessels as the result of sin, and that only Christ, the great Potter, can fashion us again into vessels fit for his service.

Rev. J. J. LUCE, on the following day, emphasised the necessity of believers being humbled into the dust of death in order that they may be prepared for exaltation by God into a higher life of service for him. Mr. ROBERT ATKINS, who was also one of the speakers on the previous day, dwelt upon the fact that only to the sons of God, the true spiritual children of God, can the Holy Spirit be imparted for instruction and guidance. Mr. FIGGIS spoke of the waiting, prayerful attitude as an absolutely essential condition before the Spirit can take full possession of the Christian, and make his life one of power for God. The Lord's memorable words when He wept over Jerusalem were applied by Mr. GEORGE CLARKE as a warning to people who are not careful to know the time of their visitation; in other words, to give Christ admittance into their hearts and lives when He knocks for entrance, and allow Him to be sole ruler there.

Rev. HUBERT BROOKE, on Thursday, based an address on the forty-fourth and remaining verses of the last chapter of St. Luke. His chief object was to show that the Scriptures must of necessity be true, because they were confirmed and attested by Christ Himself, who told his disciples that "all things must be fulfilled which were written in the law of Moses, and in the Prophets, and in the Psalms concerning Me." The speaker pointed out the great responsibility, so little realised comparatively speaking, that rests upon the Church of Christ to fulfil our Lord's words, "that repentance and remission of sins be preached in his name among all nations." Mr. ATKINS spoke of the journey of the Israelites from Egypt to Canaan as symbolising the dealings of God the Holy Ghost in bringing his children out of spiritual bondage into the land of promise and privilege and power.

Rev. J. HUDSON TAYLOR enlarged on the fact that God has called us to the wonderfully privileged position of being co-workers with Him—not in the energy of the flesh, but as simply working out what God is working in. Mr. Taylor also gave an address on Tuesday, of which the leading idea was faith in, and dependence upon, God. The closing address on Thursday was given by Mr. LUCE, who spoke of the exercise of faith in God as a command of our Divine Lord, "Be not faithless but believing."

On Friday Rev. E. W. MOORE founded an address upon Stephen's vision of the opened heavens, and pointed out that the Christ reveals Himself to his people only when, as in the case of Stephen, they are filled with the Holy Ghost. Bishop TAYLOR SMITH expatiated with regard to the precious treasures, centred in Christ Jesus, that are ever at the disposal of the Christian for meeting all his needs. Mr. MOORE enlarged on the fact of the Christian being sealed by the Holy Spirit. He described the nature of the sealing, and then spoke of the Author of the sealing and the duties of the sealed. Mr. HUBERT BROOKE gave the closing convention address, and specially emphasised the importance of being able to realise in their lives the truths that had been taught at the various meetings. For directions whereby that end might be attained, he referred his audience to a careful study of 2 Tim. ii.

In addition to the gatherings already mentioned, three missionary meetings were held, respectively on Wednesday, Friday, and Saturday. Inspiring accounts were given of the work in different parts of the world. The chief speakers were, as representing Western Equatorial Africa, Bishops Tugwell, Taylor Smith, Phillips, and Oluwole, and M. Coillard (Zambesi), Miss Strong (China), Mr. W. C. Morris (South America), Mr. Marcus Daniel (Persia), Miss Edith Mulvany (India), Miss Bailey (Syria), and Mrs. Baxter.

Liverpool Sheltering Home.

FIVE orphans left exposed to terrible risks by the death of father and mother within a month! These are numbered among children under the care of Mrs. Birt, the superintendent of the work carried on in Myrtle-street. One by one other cases arise, which force sorrowing little ones to live for a time at least in the poorest surroundings, and then to come to the Sheltering Home as a forlorn hope. Every day something is being done there to relieve distress, and lift into a better condition each case that comes, whether man, woman, or child. The orphans who are placed in the greater England over the sea, from the distributing home at Knowlton, in Canada, certainly get the fairest chance there is for them in this world; and the visitation last year of 278 boys and girls in the Canadian Homes revealed most encouraging results.

Sedgeley Temperance Home Mission.—Mr. F. A. Homer has seen thirty-seven years of earnest Christian effort on behalf of the many in his neighbourhood, who are living without God. This unsectarian effort finds in the condition of the people dire need for its existence. The little band of devoted men and women are prosecuting their labours of love with increased zeal, patiently sowing in hope. During the past year, the Sunday and Thursday evening services, also the Bible-classes and prayer meetings in the Mission Hall, have been blessed with increased attendances.

Helping Armenian Fugitives.

FROM Schumla, in Bulgaria, Pastor Abraham Amirchanjanz writes:—

"The Lord has directed my way from Finland, viâ Germany, to visit 25,000 Armenian fugitives in Bulgaria. Although aged and week in health, having had to undergo within seven years seven surgical operations, I have left Finland and come here to weep with my sorrowing fellow-countrymen, who have escaped the cruel sword of the Turks and taken refuge in Bulgaria. My commission from the Berlin Committee was:—(1) To examine the condition and the needs of the refugees; (2) to help the most needy ones amongst them with about £1000; (3) to take about 100 or 200 orphans to Germany.

"This last desire I found impracticable, but the two other objects I have been able to carry out. I found the needs of the poor emigrants were not in all cases the same. To Philippopolis had come only such men and families as had been able to save at least part of their property, and were not in any distress, their only complaint being the lack of suitable employment. But in other towns of Bulgaria, such as Burgas, Varna, Schumla, Rustchuk, Silistria, I met the very poorest, who had need of everything—food, clothing, lodging, wood, light, soap, bedding.

"With laudable energy have German and Swiss friends collected gifts, by which much distress has been alleviated, many tears dried, and many hundreds of human lives rescued from starvation. The distress has not been diminished; in many cases it has grown much worse. The Armenian cemeteries have been filled with graves, and those who are yet living are like skeletons—thin, withered, sick, with countenances expressive of hunger; without courage, strength, or hope, they walk the streets or stand at some corner leaning against a wall, pictures of utter despair. I have just come away from these sad sights and come to Schumla, in order to look out for a large building for an orphanage. In two days I return to my sad, distressing labours in Varna. Some idea of the great despair may be formed when one sees that many of the sufferers actually prefer returning to Turkey, where they may expect to be butchered by the cruel Turks, to a slow death from starvation in this hospitable country."

I need not say what demands there are for Christian benevolence and help. There is need of clothes, new and old, for men, women and children, to be sent to Pastor Abr. Amirchanjanz, Varna, Bulgaria. Previous to his residence in Finland Pastor Amirchanjanz was banished for four years to Orenburg as one of the Stundist exiles.

F. W. BAEDEKER.

Weston-super-Mare.

Armenian Refugees.

SIR,—We beg a small portion of your valuable space to explain to the Christian and philanthropic public our position and purposes.

(1) Our superintendent, Rev. G. H. Krikorian, has announced his intention of going to reside and work in the United States. For some time past this has been his desire.

(2) We find that the Armenians now coming to our homes are, in the majority of cases, not fugitives from persecution, but speculators and adventurers, who have heard of the kindness extended to their countrymen here and are attracted to our shores by the hope of making something out of it.

(3) Our funds are seriously falling off. The public interest, on which we have relied, has been turned by recent events from the Armenians to the Greeks and other unfortunate peoples.

(4) The tenure of the houses in Kingdon-road, Hampstead, expires in September.

Under these circumstances, our committee think it will be expedient to close up our work during this summer, helping into situations those who are now with us, and assisting temporarily any extreme cases that may yet come to us. We shall be glad to receive pecuniary help and offers of situations for these, but we would wish it known through the Press that our work is closing, so that immigrants from St. Petersburg, Paris, and New York may be deterred. We have done a good work, helping more than 300 cases of heartrending distress, and we have good accounts of many for whom we have obtained situations.—Yours faithfully,

F. B. MEYER, Chairman.

"Endeavourers" in Force.

[BY OUR OWN COMMISSIONER.]

WHAT may fairly be called a "record" Convention was held last week in Liverpool, when the Young People's Society of Christian Endeavour assembled, literally in its thousands, to celebrate the seven years of its existence in these islands. The actual delegates numbered 2000, but these were few compared to the friends and sympathisers who, to the number of some 15,000, thronged meeting after meeting, morning, noon, and night, on Whit-Sunday, Monday, and Tuesday.

The largest halls in the city, with Hengler's Circus and several chapels, were retained, six meetings being held simultaneously three times a day. For anything like a full report we must refer our readers to the official organ of the Society, Christian Endeavour, and content ourselves with noticing the more salient features of the proceedings. Of these the splendid organisation calls for special notice, as well as the precision with which every item on the programme was carried through "to the tick." The bell-man, though occupying generally a back seat, is none the less a presence to be felt and a person to be feared. When the speaker's allotted time has only two minutes to run, "ding" goes the bell by way of warning; and when it sounds a second time he has no alternative but to retire. The effect occasionally is rather amusing. A speaker had just asked his audience, "How shall we best fulfil the purposes of our society?" when the crucial moment came, and amid laughter he answered the question himself in the only possible way—"By sitting down!"

The subjects selected were all such as bear upon the practical aims and features of the work, and were dealt with by speakers well qualified to stand forth as their exponents. The fact that the same topics had to be taken up by several speakers in the various gatherings simultaneously, minimised the temptation to pass from one meeting to another—even if it had been practicable. Indeed, nothing could be gained by so doing, for the addresses were uniformly good, and more than good. We wondered what it was which seemed to bring some of the ministerial speakers, as it were out of themselves; and of others we thought that if their sermons were always as useful, and bright withal, as their platform speeches, they need have

NO FEAR OF EMPTY PEWS.

But, after all, it was not man but God who was exalted from first to last. The phenomenal progress of the movement was attributed to Him alone, a suitable keynote to all that followed being found in the "God is able" of the founder, Rev. Dr. CLARK, of Boston, U.S.A., who was received whenever he spoke with rounds of hearty cheering. He repeatedly pressed home the futility of human effort, apart from Divine power. "We wish to evangelise the world," he said. "Let us hear God say—for I am certain He is thus speaking, in accordance with all providence and history, and his Holy Word—'I intend to evangelise the world, and I will do it in part through you, Christian Endeavourers, if you will walk by my side!'" One of his best addresses during the Conference, as he reviewed past successes, was from the striking assurance in 2 Chron. xxv. 9, "The Lord is able to give thee much more than this."

Another important topic was "Denominational Loyalty and Inter-denominational Fellowship." It is quite certain that pastors of churches need have no fear that the existence of the Society in their midst is intended to undermine their denominational instincts. The very essence of the movement is to work within, and not outside, church organisation. If the speakers erred at all it was in emphasizing the first element of the subject over the second; but in practical working the two are well balanced, the one treating of personal life and conviction, the other of active service. A timely illustration of this occurred (to quote Dr. Clark again) in Melbourne on a similar occasion to this. "The young people in the meeting determined to show their loyalty to their own denominations, and their fellowship with all others. There were in one gallery Presbyterians, in another Congregationalists, in another Baptists—behind were Episcopalians, in another range were Bible Christians, Free Methodists, and the New Connexion, while the Wesleyans were 1300 strong. The time came for responses. The Presbyterians sang an old Scottish version of Ps. xxiii. to an old Scottish tune, then sat down. The Baptists, Congregationalists, and Episcopalians sang the 'Te Deum.' The Bible Christians, the Methodists, and others followed. Then the 1300 Wesleyans stood together in solid phalanx, and sang the first hymn Charles Wesley wrote after conversion—

Oh for a thousand tongues to sing
My great Redeemer's praise!

They sang the first verse by themselves, then the second and third—no one joining, for it was their song of consecration and devotion. Then they began the fourth verse,

He breaks the power of reigning sin:

They could not get through that by themselves, for the Presbyterians joined.

He sets the captive free, and the Episcopalians joined.

His blood can make the foulest clean, the Baptists and Congregationalists joined in.

His blood availed for me, then all were singing, because it told of their personal love and loyalty to the personal Saviour." One could only wish so striking an occurrence had been re-enacted here, but such scenes cannot be produced to order. They must arise spontaneously or not at all, and the spirit is with us, even though the letter be across the seas.

It was good to hear the Society giving no uncertain sound on the position that "Protestantism" is "Scriptural Christianity" and not less important was the insistence on "the Quiet Hour" as a necessity in the life of every Christian, young or old. "Self-sacrifice for Christ and the Church" as not only a duty but a privilege, was also forcibly set forth, and this drew from one speaker an utterance which may be quoted as a sample of much else that was good throughout the Convention. When a strong thing needed to be said, it was said fearlessly, cavil who might, and none could complain of any lack in either robustness of diction or commonsense of thought. Said he:—

"The Endeavour Movement has won its way and done its work by reason of the faith that was in it—faith that the young would respond to a strict call from duty, and conscience, and constraining Christ-love; and faith in the Gospel that it could do without sweetening. We have learned many things anew; one, that if a man be young or old, and he is a Christian, the Cross must be at the centre of his life, and the print of the nails at its extremities. It is not true that our young men and women are but a generation of self-pleasers, that they are given over wholly to sordid materialism and frivolous pleasure-seeking. Instead of watering down the claim of Christ to meet these tendencies half-way, let us meet them with their frank Christian opposite, and it will be found there is that in the heart of youth which responds to that deep word of the Master, 'He that loseth his life for my sake, the same shall find it. 'For my sake'—that is the guarding word. The sacrifice of self is first for Christ. Self-denial must not run to seed. It can become over-strained, self-righteous, affected. Self-sacrifice for Christ's sake is one thing; asceticism for one's own sake is about the opposite. There is a spurious self-denial to be shunned by every healthy soul. The test is 'for Christ's sake.'"

In this connection may also be mentioned a warning repeated more than once, against that "glibness" in speaking of spiritual things which goes to make of which many ministers are afraid, and, on this account, hang back from introducing the movement with its pledge into their churches. Let it be clearly understood that the Society strives hard to fortify its young people against this. At the same time it recognises the danger of going to the other extreme, "the Church having almost lost its tongue," as another speaker put it.

No account of the Convention must overlook the part which music played in the proceedings. The rendering of an exceptionally strong programme was a feature at each meeting, but the selections at the afternoon services of praise were high above the average. Rev. Dr. Carey Bonner is an enthusiast—and a wise one—in this department, and threw all his energy into his work. For many a day Liverpool will carry in its memory the wonderful scene on Whit-Monday afternoon when the steps and immense forecourt of St. George's Hall were thronged at the "Open-air Demonstration" with thousands of singers, on a scale with which only a Handel or other great Festival can compare. It was a rare treat to the multitude who stopped to listen. They were not "passers-by"; they would not pass, nor could they if they would, to such effective purpose did heart and voice unite.

"Who are they?" asked a bystander.

"Why the Christian Endeavour lot," replied his neighbour; "the place reeks with 'em!"

"And a very good reek, too, I should think," rejoined the first. "We can do with a lot of it here, if this is a sample."

Let this notice now conclude with Dr. CLARK'S deliverance upon

THE ENDEAVOUR PLEDGE,

a delicate subject skilfully handled. "Its importance may be estimated by the names given to it in various parts. It has been called the Magna Charta of Christian Endeavour; the hub of the Endeavour wheel; the spinal column of the Christian Endeavour body; and in Scotland, our Solemn League and Covenant—a name so beautiful that I almost wish it had been chosen for it from the first. It has been the battle-ground of Endeavour; it is still the target of the enemies of Christian Endeavour, who would hardly know what to do without it. The only foolish thing I ever heard said in Australia was that the pledge was unscriptural, because it did not allow silence in the meetings, and the Scripture said, "There was silence in heaven for the space of half an hour." But that objector was answered according to his folly, for an Endeavourer at once told him that no doubt the angels had a reason for silence that they could offer to their Master. Sixteen years ago I would not have dared to say as much for the pledge as I can now, after a decade and a half of experience of its uses. It is Scriptural—the Bible is full of covenants; it is reasonable—the excuse you can offer to Jesus Christ will satisfy the society. Many people are willing to make vague promises in a general way, and it is reasonable to object to the Endeavour pledge, because it grips. It is a necessity—between man and man there must be pledges. Business, social, and family life are all built on pledges of one sort or another, and experience has proved that it is the only safe basis for Christian Endeavour, and it has succeeded in forty different languages. But or even the pledge will be useless. Dr. Clark then solemnly and earnestly urged his young hearers to secure the quiet hour with God which alone can make the hour spent with the society blessed: to study the books of Rev. Andrew Murray and Rev. F. B. Meyer; but, above all, to study the Book of books, to yield an open heart to the influences of the Holy Spirit, and so make the pledge a power, and realise in the meetings all that their souls are longing for.

THERE MUST BE LIFE BEHIND IT,

Mr. Herbert R. Francis has been lecturing on the Tabernacle with interest and blessing to Christians in Scotland since his return from India. Old friends needing such help may write to him, care of James Nisbet, Esq., Lambden, Greenlaw, N.B.

Cape Colony.—We had very interesting services at Kyber out-station last Sabbath. About forty-five sat down at the table of the Lord in the afternoon. We baptized seven people. The Lord's work is prospering in this district. A. WELSH.

Dr. Barnardo's Homes.

A WEIGHTY TESTIMONY.

THE following is an extended note of Mr. A. J. Mundella's tribute to the excellence of the work of Dr. Barnardo's Homes, to which we made brief reference in our report last week:—

"My presence here is due to the fact that I presided for two years over a departmental inquiry which was established by the Local Government Board for investigating the condition of the Poor Law schools of the metropolis. In the course of that inquiry my committee felt it was their duty to investigate Dr. Barnardo's methods and to inquire into his success. I can only say to you, without in the least flattering Dr. Barnardo, that at the conclusion of our inquiry I came to the opinion, which was shared, I think, by all my colleagues, that we could wish in the Local Government Board there was a department for the Poor Law children of this country, or what are called the children of the State, and that we had a Dr. Barnardo to place at the head of them. Nothing astonished me more than the magnitude of Dr. Barnardo's undertaking and the faith—I may say the daily Christian faith—on which that undertaking seems to be resting. He has raised this institution till it may be regarded almost as a national institution. We found, as our committee went on, that Dr. Barnardo was often boarding out in his boarding-out department more children than the whole of the local authorities of this kingdom, and frequently he was emigrating more to the colonies than all our Poor Law boards taken together. It is a marvellous work that has been done in these homes during the last thirty years, and its growth is entirely due to wonderful energy, determination, and character.

"I think I may say, without the least reserve, that Dr. Barnardo is not only a born administrator, but he is a born master of method. When our committee came to report, we made what has been deemed by the local authorities a very strong report. I may say to you that most of the reforms that that committee have recommended Dr. Barnardo has anticipated and put in practice in the administrations of his institutions. We owe him much for what he has done. I think we owe him more for the example he has set us of how to do it. With respect to his boarding-out children, sometimes as many as 2000 children are boarded out in the course of a year. He had the advantage, and it was an advantage due to his own good sense, to select trained ladies who had become medical practitioners of eminence to be the inspectors of his boarded-out children, and as the result, not only do they report that those children are comfortably tended in their homes, often most affectionately tended, but also that the sanitary condition of all the children under Dr. Barnardo's care is something that is marvellous in contrast with those under our local and our State system. Now it is only fair to make this acknowledgment, and I do it all the more heartily because I confess that when I started on the inquiry I had grave doubts about Dr. Barnardo's methods. I am here to say publicly that I would to God the same methods were introduced into the system of administration of the whole of the Poor Law children of the country."

A party of 187 young emigrants (163 boys and twenty-four girls) from Dr. Barnardo's Homes, left St. Pancras for Liverpool on Thursday morning en route to Canada as emigrants by the steamer Labrador, Dominion line. Some of the older lads will be placed out on the industrial farm of 10,000 acres in Manitoba owned by the institutions, and now being developed under their auspices; the boys will go direct to situations in Ontario, or to the Distributing Home in Toronto; while the girls will go to the Distributing Home at Peterborough. All of these young people have been trained in the English Homes, and have thoroughly approved themselves healthy, respectable, and industrious before emigration. These 187 bring up the total emigrants for the current year to 318, and it is hoped that three more parties may sail in July, August, and September, bringing the total number up to 500. The Homes have now placed out a grand total of 9048 boys and girls since they began their work of emigration. Up to the present the good conduct record of all these emigrants includes over 98 per cent. of the whole. These young people throughout Canada are kept in touch with the Homes by systematic correspondence and visitation until they attain years of independence.

Paris Homes for Young Women.

THE annual meeting of these Homes in Paris for English-speaking Women and Children, was held last week in Paris, and was presided over by Dr. Faure Miller.

Reports of the work were read by Rev. Dr. Adams. These gave a full account of the efforts maintained in the four Homes during the past year. At the Mission Home, 77, Avenue Wagram, there have been 522 admissions; 370 situations have been found, whilst 2,496 visited the Home for classes, meals, etc. On Sunday afternoon there is a Bible-reading, and a short service in the evening. The Governesses' and Artists' Institute and Y.W.C.A., 18, Rue de Milan, has received 222 young women into the two homes (A. and B. departments), chiefly students and young women in business, exclusive of many visitors who come for advice and attend the Bible classes. Meetings in the Mission Hall, Band of Hope, mothers' meetings, and kindergarten, are all much appreciated. The outstanding liabilities for the year are £770.

Mr. J. T. B. SEWELL, one of the directors in Paris, who is brought into almost daily contact with the work and workers, spoke of the extreme need of the institutions, and of the many traps and pitfalls which abounded in Paris for young women. The results of such a work could scarcely be adequately appreciated. Professor AYERST said he was much struck with the completeness and detail of the work. He had watched it for many years, and knew how much it was needed. The strain upon the voluntary workers was often overwhelming, and he could not say enough in praise of their devotion.

The CHAIRMAN drew attention to the Orphanage, which has now rescued 360 children, many from a life of shame and cruelty. But for the goodwill of Baroness Rothschild it must have been closed for lack of funds. Out of the £1000 per annum required for its support, only £200 was raised in annual subscriptions. The stories of some of the children were pathetic in the extreme, and it was terrible to think what must be the future of these children had the doors of the Orphanage to be closed.

Mrs. Lewis, the founder of the Homes, was unfortunately detained in London through indisposition.

Things are Changed Indeed!

"IT has been lately said to me, 'This is enough to break your heart, Mrs. Butler, after your thirty years of bitter conflict, and now that you have no longer youth or strength to go forth as you did, through the whole country, pouring out vials of wrath on the false and wicked principles against which the populations of the North rose as one man at your call.'

"My reply is, 'No! it shall not break my heart. Not for one moment am I discouraged. I know in whom I have believed, and in whom I continue to believe.'

"But I do feel this, and this is my message to you to day, that we need a great electric battery to send a lightning shock throughout the country, so to arouse the latent spirit among the women and the electors (whom the women will stir) as will make it impossible for Lord Kimberley and his fellow lords to prate again about the change which has come over the country and public opinion. Never has there been a time when promptitude and activity were more wanted.

"Years and impaired powers make it impossible for me to act as I did in 1869 to 1880, but I believe that God will give me the means in some way of communicating to others the wrath and the pity, the undaunted courage and high hope with which He continues to fill my soul."

So wrote Mrs. Josephine Butler to the Conference recently held at St. Martin's Town Hall. Surely her pathetic appeal to the people of this country will not be heard in vain. It is essentially a woman's question, and should have all women's support.

Melksham, Wilts.—A convention for the promotion of Christian unity and personal holiness was held on Wednesday, last week, at Giffords, the residence of Mr. G. Stratton. Meetings were held, afternoon and evening, in a large tent in the orchard, and heart-searching addresses were given by Rev. F. B. Meyer. Over 400 attended the meetings.

Nyassa Industrial Mission.

THE annual meeting of this Mission was recently held at Christ Church, Westminster Bridge-road. Rev. C. RUDGE, hon. sec., gave a brief résumé of the five years of the Mission's work, telling the story of its early struggles and present prospects of prosperity. The first station, Likabula, is on the eve of being a self-supporting station, and has a nucleus of twenty baptized believers, forming the first native church of the Mission.

Mr. B. J. GREENWOOD, treasurer, as a business man, dealt with the policy of industrial missions, and satisfactorily answered the objection commonly brought against industrial mission work, viz., the danger that commercial interests will override the spiritual. Whilst aware of the danger, Mr. Greenwood pointed out how is had been minimised to its lowest degree. No worker in the Mission will be permitted to share in the profits. All profits are to be wholly applied to the furtherance of the work. The idea of taking loans to forward the work has been abandoned, but £511 are required in order to clear the Mission of obligations already incurred. Altogether, for implements for stations and stores, passage and outfit for Mr. and Mrs. Decath and Miss Jones, about £1000 are necessary.

The CHAIRMAN, Mr. E. Cayford, said he believed that this system of propagating the Gospel to heathen races would have many imitators.

Mr. DEEATH, the African superintendent of the Mission, told how impressed he had been on seeing the influence of industrial methods on the natives. He spoke of the need of employing converts in some way or other, if they wished to keep them under Christian influence. Dr. PIERSON said industrial missions had no need to offer apologies for their existence. He showed how, by linking industrial with missionary effort, an independent community could exist, which would be very favourable to converts surrounded by heathenism and godless influences. Idleness and ignorance are the handmaids of vice; industry and intelligence the handmaids of virtue. As soon as a heathen is converted, it is necessary he should separate himself from corrupting influences. The convert can come to the Industrial Mission to find a new means of subsistence. Rev. J. H. ANDERSON, who laboured in India for forty years as a missionary, also testified to the need of industrial missions, and quoted the example set by the Moravian missions.

Mr. and Mrs. HERBERT HALLIWELL, formerly of Brighton, have taken charge of the Mission institute for the training of native evangelists. Preparatory work has been going on since the arrival of the missionaries at Likabula, the base station of the Mission, with the result that they are now ready to begin the actual training of the natives, among whom they have a number of eligible candidates. The object of the college is not to detach native converts of ability from their industry, but to qualify them to become industrial evangelists on the various stations of the Mission as the work extends. To erect the necessary buildings about £200 is required. Communications may be addressed to Fredk. G. Halliwell, Sec. Institute Sub-Committee, 19, North-road, Brighton.

Alexandria, Egypt.

DEAR SIR,—Rev. T. R. Lawrence, superintendent of the Sailors' and Soldiers' Institute, Alexandria, being now in England, I embrace the opportunity of recommending his work to the sympathy and generosity of the Lord's stewards. During a residence of between four and five years in Alexandria as Wesleyan chaplain, I had every opportunity of observing the work of the Institute, and of learning its value and its absolute necessity. The Institute serves as a common centre, or rendezvous, for Evangelical Christians of all denominations and nationalities, whose gatherings there have been greatly blessed of God.

May I mention also the work in Egypt of the North Africa Mission, as well worthy of encouragement and support. Mr. W. Summers, the senior missionary in Alexandria, is shortly expected in England on a much needed furlough. I doubt not that many of your readers will avail themselves of opportunities of hearing him speak of the work among Moslems and others.—Yours truly,

MICHAEL JAS. ELLIOTT, Wesleyan Minister.

Touring in Spain.

IN a recent "Letter from Spain" Pastor Lopez Rodriguez, describing an itinerary, writes: "When I arrived at B—— a fair was proceeding, so I had golden opportunities for conversation, and gave away over 200 Gospels. I held two meetings, attended by different persons from various parts of the province. I rested in a posada, the landlord of which, also his wife, made me welcome. As they sell wine, at mid-day the charcoal burners come in from the woods, and take their dinner there, which gave me the opportunity for reading and explaining the Scriptures.

"The next day I was trudging along the dusty road, hot, weary, and footsore, when I was overtaken by a cart. The owner stopped as I offered him a Gospel, and asked me if I were a Protestant. On replying in the affirmative, he at once offered me a seat, which I gladly accepted. He and his son were curious to know about my religion, and I spent a pleasant half-hour explaining to them the way of salvation. Soon after alighting I met two men, with whom I entered into conversation. They were unusually intelligent Freethinkers, and seemed really desirous of knowing the Truth. They had evidently lost all respect for the Romish Church and her priests, who have gone too far in enslaving the consciences of the people. Thank God, not a few are awakening from the sleep of centuries, casting away their chains, and helping on the grand work of spiritual and moral emancipation.

"My route now lay along bad rocky mountain roads. Towards evening I reached a farmhouse, where I was admitted on high payment, but with little good-will. My books and tracts were refused. The food was badly cooked, and the lack of welcome was so evident, that I thought it wiser to push on to J——, in quest of a lodging for the night. My position was not much improved. The landlady of the inn admitted me with reluctance, and gave me the worst accommodation she had, a wretched garret. Had it rained I should certainly have had to take refuge under the bed, for the roof was a veritable sieve!

"This afternoon I had a little Bible-reading in San J—— with seven young men; one of them is the son of my landlord. He is twenty-three years of age, and has just left home to start a business. Some time ago I gave him a Bible, which has wrought a wonderful change in his life. He is no longer the same man. Before he was a blasphemer and gambler; now he is never seen in bad company, and has struck up such a warm friendship with me that he is my constant companion, and follows me like my shadow. So far from being ashamed of the Gospel, he accompanies me to Olot (a most fanatical Carlist town) whenever I hold meetings there."

Rotherhithe Free Church.

THE Weavers Brothers have just concluded a fortnight's mission in the above place, which has been marked with great blessing all the way through. On Sundays the church has not been able to accommodate the crowds who pressed in to hear the Gospel, and the week-night congregations were well sustained, increasing night after night.

At every service numbers openly expressed a wish for pardon, and sought for peace in the inquiry-room. It has cheered our hearts beyond measure to hear from the lips of the young converts simple yet earnest testimonies of the Lord's saving power.

On the closing night of the Mission we were delighted to have Mr. F. N. Charrington with us, who came from the Great Assembly Hall, and presided over the meeting, giving the young converts counsel in their new life.

At the close of the meeting quite a number decided for Christ, and then everyone was eager to say "Good-bye" to our brethren, who, by their genial, earnest, and faithful work have endeared themselves to us all; so over a thousand of us, headed by our brass band, accompanied them to the station, and there an affectionate farewell took place.

Rotherhithe is all the richer for the visit of Messrs. Bewley and Frank Weaver, and the church here is full of praise and thankfulness for the rich outpourings of the Holy Spirit manifested and experienced THOS. RICHARDSON.

Pontymoile Mission.

SINCE the introduction of the McKinley Tariff in America, the tinplate industry of South Wales has been well-nigh ruined, scores of large works being closed, thus rendering idle thousands of men and women who are willing to work if they had it to do. To cope in some measure with this state of things has been the lot of Mr. T. M. Wintle, of Pontymoile, with his large staff of devoted, whole-hearted, spirit-filled voluntary workers at his five mission centres. In this way upwards of £245 has been used during 1896.

Turning from the sad necessity for such ministration, it is interesting to learn that abiding fruit is still found from the work of grace seen some time ago among young girls just merging into womanhood. Regular meetings have been organised among them for prayer and the study of God's Word; and, says Mr. Wintle, "It is gratifying to see 'our girls' in the after-meetings, watching for the souls of those of their own age and sex, with that earnestness and love which would well become Christians of more mature years."

One of the first things that strikes a visitor to Pontymoile and other branches of the Mission is the great number of young men who attend the services. Meetings are held for social intercourse with the lads, when, in a kind, brotherly way, difficulties, temptations, and trials are talked over, and counsel and encouragement are given. The unvarying congregations attending the Mission services generally is a profit, the old Gospel has still power to attract as well as save the masses.

Police-court work is another merciful departure of this many-sided Mission. Mr. Bowen, one of the magistrates, stated on a certain occasion that of all the cases Mr. Wintle received from the court, not one had appeared a second time. There are always outlets for loving Christian sympathy either to the aged and those disabled in the mines, or to others partly or wholly dependent upon them. Several fallen girls, too, have been rescued during the past year, and placed in refuges, others have been restored to their friends, and a few, after a little loving watching and training, have gone to service and are doing well. The Lord has graciously blessed labours in connection with the Mission amongst discharged prisoners from the county prison at Usk; and numerous other beneficent agencies are in active operation.

The Veddahs of Ceylon.

SIR,—I trust you may be able to find a small space for an appeal on behalf of the Veddahs of Ceylon. These are descendants of the aboriginal race of the island. A few hundreds still remain in the heart of the forest about fifty miles west of Batticaloa, who receive no religious instruction of any sort and are living in squalor and indigence. Rev. J. West, of the Wesleyan Mission, has a small community of these people under his ministration at a place about fourteen miles north of Batticaloa (Kalaneukerin), on the coast, but the people in the interior are untouched, partly owing to their distance from mission centres and partly from the unhealthiness of the jungles in which they reside.

I write from personal observation; as an official of the Ceylon Government, my work takes me in the locality of some of the Veddahs. Some friends, with myself, have been in communication with Mr. West, in view to his extending his sphere of work, so as to include these unfortunate and destitute people about Kalludai, Ekirian-Kumburum, and Mahnoya. We should like to have a medical mission and children's schools, but at first we propose to send a native missioner subordinate to Mrs. West. The cost is estimated to be six hundred rupees (about £40) annually. We are reluctant to commence until the contributions are assured.

The case of these people is a piteous one. Deficient in almost an idea of a God, never having heard the name of Christ, dirty in habits, and often half starving, no one who has seen them can withhold his compassion.

Rev. J. West, at Batticaloa, Ceylon, would receive subscriptions. Reports of progress would be sent yearly to those interested.—Yours faithfully,

E. O. WALKER, C.I.E.,
Supt. of Telegraphs in Ceylon.

Letter from Oxford.

[FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.]

OXFORD seems ripe for a special evangelistic movement by the churches. At the annual meeting in connection with the Oxford House in Bethnal Green, held on Sunday in the hall of New College, the Bishop of Stepney urged that "if Christianity could not grapple with the difficulties of Bethnal Green, Shoreditch, or Hoxton, it would not be the Divine power we believed it to be; but if, on the other hand, it can produce an ameliorating effect even in Bethnal Green, then there is no problem in the world which it is not abundantly sufficient to solve." There are problems waiting to be solved nearer to us than Bethnal Green. The Church, as the exponent of Christianity, must apply herself to them.

For instance, take college servants. There is no class for whom less is being done, yet they would respond, we are sure, to an earnest, loving effort to meet their spiritual needs. A meeting was arranged for them on Sunday evening, June 6, in St. Aldate's Rectory Room. Colonel Macgregor gave the address, and Rev. W. Warner, of Christ Church, presided. About twenty-five were present.

Friends of Rev. F. S. Webster, of Birmingham, were glad to welcome him last week, and were much helped by his earnest appeals. He preached twice at St. Peter-le-Bailey, and addressed a gathering of some 150 undergraduates in Hannington Hall at mid-day. A fixed evangelistic service for University men would be a great boon. Friends could then be invited, taken to the meeting, and their conversion prayed for. Here is another problem waiting to be solved.

Col. Van Someren pleaded the interest of the Army Scripture Readers' and Soldiers' Friend Society on Friday, at a meeting convened by Miss Hales, of Ascham School, Canon Christopher in the chair. It is a matter for great thankfulness that among the 125,000 soldiers stationed at home we have a body of men whose right to enter the mess-room is recognised, and who, as the Colonel strikingly remarked, are men to be met, seeing they go with the Bible in their hand and the love of God in their heart. They cannot be ignored.

The Cowley-road Congregational Church has, in measure, solved the problem of retaining elder scholars. At a meeting held on Wednesday to welcome their new pastor, the Rev. E. J. Hammond, it was noticed in the annual report that from a class held on Sunday evenings for senior boys, eleven had joined the church and were now engaged in Christian work.

Bishop Mitchinson, in a sermon preached at St. Edward's School Commemoration on Thursday, urged that if education was to be of any lasting value the foundation of it must be laid in rock. This rock he described as "the dry details, the unattractive formulæ, things which were exceedingly difficult to assimilate, and which it was necessary to have driven into our inner nature." He ridiculed the idea of making education easy, and of simply teaching boys or girls those things that would interest them.

By the death of Miss Prudence Jephson, of Norham-road, the city has lost a devoted worker and a warm friend. Her name is a household word in many a parish of Oxford. In the poorer districts she will be much missed where her personal influence was widely felt. The Crêche in the parish of St. Thomas ye Martyr, established by her and the present Miss Jephson, will serve as a perpetual reminder of one who lived for others. "The memory of the just is blessed."

The painful scenes in connection with the Socialists' meetings were continued on Sunday evening, and one undergraduate was arrested. While far from excusing members of the University for the violence used, it must be stated in all fairness that in the first place the speakers were the offenders. On the highest authority it must be said that many of their statements were personal affronts to the undergraduates. When will earnest men learn that nothing but evil can accrue from exaggerations?

Evangelical Society of Geneva.—For more than three score years this Society has been a useful instrument in God's hands for spreading the Gospel, not only on the European Continent, but in foreign lands. Its three main agencies are a theological college, colportage work, and evangelistic effort. About 500 faithful pastors and evangelists have been trained and sent out during its history; an average of 170 colporteurs are supported, and much has been done in evangelism. Of the £8000 yearly needed, Geneva contributes £2000, the rest being given by Christians of other lands. The latest report contains many encouraging facts as to the progress and fruitfulness of the work. Pasteur Charles Rimond, Geneva, is general secretary.

Letters to the Editor.

THE QUEEN'S DIAMOND JUBILEE.

Sir,—The anticipated gathering together, for the Diamond Jubilee of our gracious Queen, of thousands from all quarters of the globe, besides the millions of our own countrymen, women, and children, who will throng London, is an event which, with all its exceeding joy and thankfulness, has assuredly a solemn side. There has never been anything like it in all past history; nor, in all human probability, will there ever be anything like it again, until the King of kings comes to take his great power and reign on the earth, when all earthly splendours must pale before the glories of his triumphant return.

In all great throngs there must be untold dangers when the masses meet, and only the Arm of the Omnipotent can shield all from injury. Then, let us, who believe in that Almighty power, wielded by Him whose Name is "Love," entreat Him to put it forth to shield our revered and beloved Sovereign from all hurt or harm, and to extend that Divine protection also to the vast multitude.

When we think of the awful catastrophe at the time of the Czar's coronation, which made the civilised world stand aghast, and of the recent terrific calamity in Paris, which struck the nations with horror, surely the Lord's remembrancers will be fervent in prayer, that by his watchful care peace and prosperity may guard and crown our great Thanksgiving Day.

A PRAYER

to be used in connection with the great Thanksgiving:—

Almighty God, we beseech Thee to preserve our beloved and revered Queen and all the Royal Family from accident, or alarm, or any injury, on the day to which Her Majesty's whole Nation and Empire, and the civilised world, are looking forward with joy. Also we pray Thee to preserve from harm the millions of her people who will assemble from all parts of her dominions to greet their Queen and Empress, and to keep from hurt all the foreigners who have come to share in our national joy, and give to all thy blessing.

Pour down thy Holy Spirit in fresh abundance upon our Sovereign Lady, and upon all who meet to show their loyalty and love to her. May they all be led to look up to the King of kings as their own Saviour who loved them.

Thus may this day of thanks be the birthday of countless, who shall join in the triumphant song of heaven: "Made us kings and priests unto God even his Father; to Him be glory and dominion for ever and ever."

Hasten, we beseech Thee, the promised time when the kingdoms of this world shall become the kingdoms of our Lord, and of his Christ, and He shall reign for ever and ever.

All this we ask in his glorious Name. Amen.

Credo.

"THE HIGHER CRITICISM."

Dear Sir,—As I have given much attention to the Higher Criticism works of the continent, I feel able to say something about them. Dean Farrar and others are treating the main positions of the higher critics as to the Old Testament as established, and writing of the books affected on this assumption. Nothing could be more presumptuous. The Higher Criticism in its main features, as plainly acknowledged by Kuenen (its most able exponent and almost constructor), and by others, is simply an attempt to account for the Pentateuch and other books, their statements of miracles, etc., on the understanding that there is no miracle, no prophecy, not even a personal God. I speak advisedly.

On this understanding the whole of the narratives and laws must be explained, and it is no wonder that books and passages have to be turned topsy-turvy in order to their being so, since the books of the Old Testament from the beginning are instinct with miracle, prophecy, and special providence. They have adopted also as a basis the certainty of the evolution theory as to the origin of man, which, as is known to scientific men, is not in the least established. Men, they say, basing on this theory, knew nothing of God in Abraham's time, nor even in the time of the Psalms. They were then evolving upwards, and it was only Isaiah and the later prophets that invented a personal God—who, according to this view, is a mere idea. But that idea not having been invented so early, all that treats it as real, such as the Pentateuch, Psalms, etc., must be post-prophetic or even post-exilian. Then, of course, the prophecies that were fulfilled were all impostures, putting at a later age into the form of prophecy statements of events that had already happened, etc.

This is the sole ground of any importance for the attacks upon Daniel—one of the greatest of all the prophets—whose work could not by any possibility have been written at the late date assigned to it, most dogmatically, from mere second-hand information by Dean Farrar. "Daniel in the Critics' Den" has ably exposed this. It is perfectly amazing that many scholars in this country who believe in God and the supernatural, can adopt the main points of a criticism, founded avowedly upon an atheistic hypothesis, and which, apart from the asserted truth of such hypothesis, has nothing whatever to rest upon.

It is a time to say—"A thousand times, No!" to the constantly-reiterated assertion that the Higher Criticism has been established. It has not only not been established, but it has nothing whatever to rest upon apart from its atheistic basis, taken for granted. There is no doubt whatever that in a few years it will disappear altogether, made utterly impossible by the increased information from ancient records, which already, indeed, as shown by Professor Sayce, has shaken it to its foundation. The Higher Criticism in all its leading supposed discoveries is baseless, utterly baseless.—I am, yours truly, Investigator.

The Prisons of Italy.—2.

THERE has been recently a clerical reaction in this country, but it is evidently more apparent than real, and many who have voted for the priestly party have only done so from a political point against the socialism which was then so noticeable.

Having gone almost through the length and breadth of this beautiful land, and mixed with most of our ministerial brethren and some of the pastors and evangelists of the Evangelical Church of Italy, I am glad to be able to report good news of real work being done, and of great hopes entertained by those who stand by the Gospel of the grace of God.

The population of Italy is 30,000,000, and it is supposed two-thirds are sceptical, whilst the Protestants number 60,000. The Rev. Guiseppe Silva, of Milan, told me that, out of a population of half a million in Milan, only 20,000 communicated at Easter, and that the bulk of the people are throwing off the influence formerly exercised by the priests.

The late Lord Mayor of Venice, S. Selvalico, is a most outspoken man, much beloved by the people, and though hated by the intolerant party has recently been returned as M.P. for Venice. One of the leading papers illustrated him as standing with an open Bible saying, "I take my stand upon the Gospel of the Lord Jesus, and repudiate his badly-named Vicar at Rome."

The above was supplied me by Dr. Alexander Robertson, of the Scotch Church, Venice, who added, "The authorities of Italy favour the Protestant Churches, for they are aware of their loyalty to the King, who, I believe, is conscious that the very foundations and stability of his throne is strengthened by the Protestantism which is spreading through the land."

Certainly the King has gone out of his way to recognise many of the Lord's servants, who are labouring in the Evangelical movement, and every liberty is offered, and their efforts recognised. I can only pray that there may be soon seen as much effort to evangelise the 62,000 prisoners as there is liberty to preach the Gospel among the soldiers in this land.

Personally, I have to acknowledge the great kindnesses received from the authorities; whilst the King himself has written me two most gracious letters.

My credentials were renewed with pleasure, the Director-General remembering my former visit, and was pleased to permit me to go anywhere, and to supply me with all the information I required; and has even thanked me for calling attention to serious defects in the sanitary condition of some of the old prisons, and other complaints which I was bold to make on behalf of our fellow-men who are imprisoned for many years.

Let me here, however, tell of the good news to hand from places near Milan.

The pastor at Milan was rejoicing when telling me that lately there are several small towns which have left the Church of Rome en masse and embraced the Gospel of the New Testament; the churches of these places are forsaken, not a soul save the priests left, and to-day every one of them is closed.

Special priests have been sent to seek to draw them back, but the people have said, "We don't want you, we have heard and know the glorious Evangel."

These small towns are within some fifty miles Milan. Who can tell what labours and effort ma have been put forth here by brethren in the past and who can measure the vast amount of blessir which may ensue in the future?

In Naples I found four large prisons, and tw others, of which I spoke in my last article; but the are others, some distance out of Naples which desired to visit, and, accompanied by my friend, th Rev. R. Walker, I went to the Island of Nisid which is close to ancient Puteoli, where Pa landed.

This is one of the prisons which was visited b Mr. Gladstone when it was used for political pr soners, and, like all old gaols in most countries, it dirty and unhealthy.

It was formerly a lazaretto, and its constructio altogether unfits it for confining men for ar length of time. We found some hundreds of me here under long sentences, some twenty or mo sleeping in one room, and were surprised and paine to find the drinking water kept in a tub within thr feet of a similar vessel used as the latrine, and th marvel is that any sane governor could have pe mitted it. The Director-General at Rome, whe he was informed of it, corrected this infamous ne lect immediately.

Returning to Naples, and from thence to Rom my next point to reach was Civita Vecchia, son fifty miles from the capital. The Rev. James Wa went with me, and we were soon in the huge pr son, containing 1400 convicts, whose sentenc range from ten years to over thirty.

One large long room contained no less than 35 men, all of whom were under life sentences, all we wearing heavy chains, and all had been guilty one or many murders, and, what seemed dreadf to think of, they were all herded together, no wor to do, no books to read, and no humanisin influence and no moral power brought to bear upo them—a foul, festering mass of wickedness, and y 350 precious souls, who, had they known the gra of God in earlier days, would have been saved the present condition.

Yet did not our Lord die for such? and is n the command "to every creature"? And I glad sought an entrance among them; but, alas! I w not permitted, it was not deemed safe; and, sad say, I was unable to leave the Word with ther This is the only place where I have failed (and thi I hope, only for the time being), but priestly i tolerance prevailed; and the governor, being new one, appointed only a few days, cared n to assert his authority.

The 1400 prisoners here have only four lar rooms or corridors to sleep in, each one acting a dormitory for 350. There was plenty of disc pline here, but no kindness seen, and we did n wonder when we were told many committed suicid and many died of consumption.

Will not the Lord's people remember this laza house and its inhabitants before our God? "Wit out God and without hope in the world." "Let th sighing of the prisoner come before Thee." Haste ing northward to Florence and Venice, we fou plenty of scope for work.

The governors and officers of the gaols as a ru are always willing to help our work forward. asked at Milan whether the priest would be pe mitted to take the books away from the prisoner "Perhaps, secretly, by saying, 'It is a bad boo give it to me,' but he cannot do so openly. If yo put 100 large Testaments in the prison library the will be entered in the catalogue. Any man can as for one; then it is our property. The priest cann touch it." I need hardly say that prison contair that hundred volumes. In answer to my inquiry the governor, "Do you think it is a bad book? he said, "No, no; it is a good book."

Chas. Cook.

The Soldiers' Home, Hounslow, is sadly need of help. Unless sufficient funds are forthcomir it will have to be closed. The Home has been existence for nearly three years. It has been muc used by the men of the garrison, who appreciate th home life there. The work has been much blesse The Home is on undenominational lines, and for th reason it does not get the support of any particul church. Miss Meyers, the hon. superintenden devotes the whole of her time and income to its su port; her health has broken down, owing, in a gre measure, to the strain upon her strength. It therefore absolutely necessary that more suppo should be forthcoming.

Jno. Read, Lieutenant, Middlesex Regt.

The Y.M.C.A.

THE new association at Blythe already numbers eighty members, and a successful inaugural public meeting has been held.

The premises of the new Association at North Shields (51, Camden-street) have been publicly opened by Mr. E. W. de Rusett, of Tynemouth.

The membership "campaign" of the Nottingham Association has been the means of adding the names of some 800 young men to the roll as members and associates.

Mr. M. W. Ridley, the son of the Home Secretary, has consented to become the patron of the new Association at Blyth, Northumberland, which has already fifty members.

The annual meeting of the New Cross and Brockley Association was lately held in the Goldsmiths' Institute. Rev. W. Justin Evans, of Lewisham High-road Congregational Church, delivered an address, heartily endorsing the all-round work of the Association.

The annual meeting of the Clapham Y.M.C.A. was held on June 9, in Clapham Hall, Mr. Percy Thornton, M.P., chair. Addresses were delivered by Dr. A. T. Pierson, Dr. Eugene Cronin, and Mr. W. Hind Smith. The secretary, Mr. George Hoppen, presented an excellent report of work.

The annual festival of the Sydney Association has recently taken place. The report presented was throughout of an encouraging character. The chief difficulty of the committee is in connection with their building. On mortgages they have paid away £14,500 interest, and the debt is still £20,000.

A cyclists' village mission corps meets on Monday evenings in connection with the Leeds Association. Last summer was a most successful season in this unique branch of the religious, educational, and social activities, which centre in 13, Southparade. The meetings were large, and people showed hearty appreciation by attention and pressing invitations to come again; while spiritual results have not been wanting. It is cause for gratitude that the increased attractions of the Association are enabling the committee more largely to influence for good the young men of Leeds. A free ticket for one month is given to young men coming as strangers to Leeds, on application to the secretary, Mr. T. Moffett.

Hackney Association (275, Mare-street) has among its social functions a breakfast meeting on the first Sunday in each month. This, being followed by a young men's evangelistic meeting, has proved a source of blessing to many. Holiday parties were organised last summer, in connection with which mission services were conducted and collections made on behalf of the Children's Holiday Fund. The secretary of this Association, Mr. F. L. Porter, is also district travelling secretary for the N.E. Metropolitan District Union of Y.M.C.A.'s; and is an outcome of the Knott's Green Conference of the latter body, a special attempt to reach the men of East London has recently been made, by means of a six weeks' series of meetings.

The Y.W.C.A.

THE members of the Fulham branch have made a special effort to send a Diamond Jubilee gift to the missionary cause. They have sent to the Zenana Bible and Medical Mission and to the China Inland Mission 20 guineas as the result of their labours. This branch is growing rapidly, and doing an important work in a neighbourhood where it is much needed. There are about 200 members, and though in a poor and thickly-populated part, it has a good home at 1, Barclay-road, with very comfortable bedrooms, which are generally occupied. It has also a good number of warm friends and supporters, who appreciate the efforts made for the temporal and spiritual welfare of the young women of Fulham.

The Protestant Governesses' Home.—This Institution, with its headquarters at 22, Chatham-place, Brighton, helps struggling governesses and elderly gentlewomen in the decline of life with pecuniary aid and good clothing. The work, says the new report, is cramped for want of funds to obtain a small house. The Home at present has only accommodation for three ladies at the same time. It is not only a temporary resting place for boarders, but the lonely ones in the neighbourhood are welcome to come and enjoy a refreshing interlurse. Surely the heart of every women will be touched by the painful circumstances of our silent sisters nurtured in homes of comfort and refinement, and consequently intensely sensitive to the great adverse. Some have been received free for a period of ten weeks; others have had pecuniary help. Miss Clementina Kingdon is superintendent.

Christian Endeavour.

THERE are now 4,482 Christian Endeavour Societies in Great Britain.

In each of the two state prisons of Kentucky will be found a Christian Endeavour society, total membership, 225.

Two new societies have recently been formed in the province of Huelva. This means much more in Roman Catholic Spain, than it would in the United States.

A Baptist Christian Endeavour Society in Scotland has a committee whose duty it is to go from house to house and read sermons to the sick and aged prevented from attending public worship.

It is reported that by the time of the Convention in San Francisco, the Secretary's annual report will show fully 50,000 Christian Endeavour societies in the world, with a membership of nearly three millions.

Mexico now contains one hundred Christian Endeavour societies, with 2,047 members. Twenty-eight of these are Junior societies, with 469 members. Last year there were only seven junior societies in the country.

"Politics are very warm in the South African Republic, President Kruger's domain," writes President Clark, "and the outlook is warlike; but Dutch and English churches alike are forming Christian Endeavour societies, and perhaps this may be one of the ties that will bind in Christian love the hearts of these discordant races."

The programme for the San Francisco Convention has been published, and is the most attractive in many ways, ever prepared by the United Society. All railroads are making extensive preparations for handling an unusual amount of transcontinental business in July, on account of the very low railroad rates granted for the Convention.

Irish Notes.

THE late Lady Victoria Wellesley, of West Stoke House, Chichester, who recently died, bequeathed £6500 to the Sustentation Fund of the Episcopal Church of Ireland.

A Convention for the deepening of spiritual life has been held at Dublin. Among the speakers were Dr. A. T. Pierson, Rev. J. Hudson Taylor, Rev. Chas. Inwood, and Mr. Robt. Wilson. There was a good attendance.

Five Presbyterian churches have been built in Belfast during the past year, twenty six students have passed the theological examination, and nineteen have volunteered for colportage work during the summer months.

The Presbyterian General Assembly met in Belfast last week. Professor Leitch was elected Moderator for the current year. A large increase in funds and members was reported. An animated debate in reference to the adoption of a new Congregational Hymnal took place, and the proposal in favour of the Hymnal was adopted by an overwhelming majority.

Sailors in Antwerp.—A Strangers' Rest for Sailors has been established in Antwerp. Miss Mary A. Smith and Miss Bœtzmann have taken up their residence, and are already making a beginning. Several friends have rendered generous help, and it is hoped that others will be glad to share in sustaining the work. I have consented to act as treasurer, and shall be pleased to receive any contributions. W. C. PARKINSON, L.C.C.

Mothers' and Infants' Home.—The Mothers' and Infants' Home at Lancing-on-Sea, Sussex, in connection with the N.E. London Gospel Mission, was opened last year, and supplied a great need. Here a large number of poor and weakly mothers, who could not leave home without bringing one or sometimes two, or even three, little "bairns" of tender age, have found a happy and hospitable "Home," where the babies may exercise their "charms" without causing friction. But when some twelve mothers, with as many or more infants, have on wet days, and for some hours on other days, to be cramped into a low-ceiled room only some 15 ft. by 9ft., the air quickly becomes both foul and offensive. We have, therefore, undertaken to enlarge some and add another bedroom, as well as a new day-room. The entire cost would be met by about £400, in addition to the amount we have in hand. The Matron, Miss C. Durham, would gladly welcome visitors at any time, and show them the premises, or forward letters of application for the "Homes." Mrs. F. A. Bevan, the wife of our hon. treasurer, would also thankfully receive offerings, addressed to her at 59, Princes-gate, London, S.W.

International S.S. Lessons.

June 27.

REVIEW OF QUARTER'S LESSONS.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Matt. xxiv. 14.

WHEN this quarter's lessons began, the Church had extended throughout Judea and Samaria, but had not begun to touch the Gentiles. This series marks a further advance in a very remarkable degree. Let the first object of the review be to show how widely the work has extended. The Golden Text begins to be fulfilled.

The incidents connected with this extension gather mainly around two apostles—Peter and Paul. Each name taken separately will suggest inquiries which may elicit the facts.

I. At least three of the lessons (I., II., and IV.) concern Peter. In the first he is at Lydda and Joppa, where the work was greatly helped through the miracles he performed. Can you recall what they were? In the second, he is the subject of a very remarkable vision. State what it was. Who else had a vision in the same chapter? What was the connection between the two? and what was the object of them both? In the fourth the apostle is in prison. Who put him there? and why? Yet God showed Himself strong to deliver. Point out the different work of the angel who liberated Peter, and of the Church who were praying for him. What does this story teach concerning all opposition to God?

II. In the remaining lessons Paul is the prominent figure. From what Church were the first foreign missionaries sent out? Tell the story of the origin of the Church as explaining why it became a missionary centre. Who accompanied Paul in his first journey? Trace on a map the course he pursued. Who was their first convert? and what striking and solemn incident took place in connection with it? Distinguish between the two Antiochs, and tell the theme of the Apostle's sermon at Antioch in Pisidia, and its result. Connect some incident with each place visited, and show how, though the Apostles were everywhere opposed, yet they were everywhere successful in winning men for Christ. "Greater is He that is for us than all that can be against us." Let this lesson be enforced.

Another lesson is—the fitness of the Gospel for all sorts and conditions of men. There are none to whom it does not speak, and none who do not need it.

Specially enforce the importance, not only of knowing the triumphs of the Gospel elsewhere, but of receiving the Gospel for ourselves.

Obituary.

REV. CLAUDE BOSANQUET, FOLKESTONE.

The death is announced of Rev. Claude Bosanquet, M.A., vicar of Christ Church, Folkestone. He was an able preacher of the Gospel, and served the public on the School Board. The English Churchman says of him:—"Mr. Bosanquet was blind, but his memory was prodigious. Sunday after Sunday, year after year, he would preach, and his sermons were always distinguished by eloquence and originality of thought. He had all parts of the Bible at his fingers' ends, and would quote and requote with marvellous facility. As late as Monday of last week, he officiated at the funeral of a local medical man, and his repetition of the 15th chapter of Corinthians astounded those who heard him on account of its wonderful accuracy."

Personalia.

Mr. A. W. Needham, son of Rev. and Mrs. George C. Needham, of Plainfield, N.J., is to be married to Miss Linda Maria Smith, of Harrisburg, Pa., on July 2.

Rev. Archibald G. Brown was married a few days ago at Winchmore-hill Congregational Church, to Miss Hannah Gearing, daughter of the late Mr. John Hillman Hetherington, of Slough, Bucks.

Rev. J. T. Webster, who has for some time been engaged in Jewish mission work on the Continent, was ordained last week in the Free South Church, Aberdeen. He returns to Buda-Pest as colleague of Dr. Andrew Moody.

Children's Free Holiday Home.—Another year's work has been accomplished by this agency, among the fatherless, the motherless, and the hungry little ones. The secretary, Mr. George H. Breton, has his headquarters in a neighbourhood which teems with needy little ones, namely, at 84, Great Dover-street, Southwark, S.E.; while the Home itself, which has been the source of so much joy as the scene of a weekly holiday for some 350 children each year, is in St. Ann's-road, Southend-on-Sea.

THE BOOK WORLD.

JUBILEE LITERATURE.

Labour in the Longest Reign, by Sydney Webb (1s., Grant Richards), is a fair and candid summary of the present position of labour, written from the standpoint of "Collectivism."

The introductory volume just issued of Messrs. Horace Marshall & Sons' "Story of the Empire Series," is The Rise of the Empire, by Sir Walter Besant. As a compressed and lucid review of the founding of the British Empire, this little book is worthy of all praise, and the series promises to be at once popular and useful. The editor is Mr. H. A. Kennedy, and the price of each volume is only 1s. 6d.

The celebration of the Queen's record reign has been the occasion of not a few works dealing with the progress of the Empire during these sixty years. One of the most comprehensive of these is Mr. T. H. Escott's Social Transformations of the Victorian Age. (6s. Seeley & Co.) The author is an acute and trained observer as well as a literary artist. His present book is largely an adaptation of an earlier work, "England: Its People, Polity, and Pursuits," most of the chapters being brought closely up to date. We notice a few exceptions to this: e.g., no mention of the Salvation Army is made in the chapter devoted to transformation of religious thought; and the greatest of all modern recreations, cycling, is ignored in the chapter on "Play." All departments of English social life are touched on, and the result is encyclopœdic in its marshalling of facts and developments. One need not approve of all Mr. Escott's views, politically, socially, or religiously, in order to appreciate the informative value of his remarkable survey.

TALES FOR THE YOUNG.

Cousin Mona, by Rosa Nouchette Carey (R.T.S.), is a very pretty tale of the influence exercised by one who lived for others and not for self.

Messrs. Partridge & Co. have lately added some interesting stories for children to their stock. Sweet Kitty Clare, by Jeannie Chappel (1s. 6d.), is a healthy and well-constructed tale, illustrating the outcome of wrongdoing and deceit, as well as the due reward of self-sacrificing devotion. Honour, by Elizabeth M. Alford (2s.), is a thoughtfully written narrative describing "a nineteenth-century heroine" and telling of life's disappointments, joys, and sorrows. Jack (1s. 6d.) has to do with a so-called "scapegrace," whose experiences may carry some wholesome lessons to boys.

Irish Methodism is a capital historical sketch by Rev. Randall C. Phillips. Though of special interest to Methodists, it is well worth the attention of all who work and pray for the progress of the Gospel in the Sister Isle. (9d. C. H. Kelly.)

The Times of Christ, by Rev. Lewis A. Muirhead, B.D., is an addition to the series of "Handbooks for Bible-classes." (2s. T. & T. Clark.) Although disposed, in deference to Criticism, to adopt positions by no means secure, the author has digested a large amount of useful information in this little work.

"When Ye Come Together," by Rev. Evan Thomas, of Ealing, is a volume of sixteen stirring sermons. (3s. 6d. Simpkin, Marshall & Co.) There is point and purpose in every discourse; the style is popular, and the pages will afford welcome reading to many who, through infirmity, are unable to "come together" for Divine worship.

The Ancient British Churches is a substantial pamphlet, containing the charge recently delivered by Archdeacon Sinclair. Much interest attaches to the story of the Celtic churches, which preceded the Roman mission of Augustine, and fought nobly against Papal aggression and assumption. Dr. Sinclair's pages present a useful outline of a great chapter of ecclesiastical history. (1s. Elliot Stock.)

"Before the Lost Arts." By Rev. Wilbur F. Crafts, Ph.D. (60 cents. Reform Bureau, 210, Delaware-avenue, N.E., Washington, D.C.) This little book is the first of a series which aim at presenting the kingship of Christ in nature, Scripture, history, and reforms. It deals with Christ in nature, in four lectures. The first, which gives the book its title, presents the argument from design in a novel form, and with many striking illustrations.

The Life of the King is a large pamphlet, giving a course of instruction on the life of our Lord, arranged in thirty-six lessons adapted for use in the Sunday-school. Another course of lessons (fifty-two in number) on the Acts of the Apostles, and designed for advanced scholars, is entitled, The Founding of the Kingdom. Both these are by Rev. W. Hawks Pott, Ph.D., and the lessons are in the form of question and answer. (1s. each. Bagster & Sons.)

The Mission of St. Augustine to England, according to the Original Documents. (5s. Cambridge University Press.) Edited by Canon Mason, Lady Margaret Professor of Divinity at Cambridge, this "Handbook for the Thirteenth Centenary" of the coming of Augustine will meet a distinct want in the study of early religious life in England. The book gives all that is known concerning the Gregorian mission, following, on the one hand, Gregory's letters, and, on the other hand, Bede's Ecclesiastical History. The original Latin of the documents translated is given at the foot of the page. Four dissertations on points of history and topography, and three maps, complete the volume, which will be useful so far as it goes, although the dissertations show a tendency to exalt Augustine and his mission by disparaging the ancient British churches and their work.

Some Lessons of the Revised Version of the New Testament. By Brooke Foss Westcott, D.D., D.C.L. (5s. Hodder & Stoughton). These "lessons" were in large part contributed to the Expositor ten years ago. The considerable lapse of time since the publication of the Revised Version of the New Testament in no way detracts from the great value of these studies in grammar and style, alterations of the "text," and points of special doctrinal importance. Bishop Westcott holds that the Revisers have no reason to complain of the reception accorded to their labours; so far as he has been able to ascertain, the Revised Version is more commonly used by preachers now than the Authorised Version was after a similar period of trial. The value of these pages lies in the explanations they give, in a carefully classified way, on the one hand of important renderings, etc., on the other hand of failure to express the true force of the original. The book represents a great deal of labour, and the student will use it to much profit, for the light thrown upon many portions of Scripture, and the attention drawn to vivid details in local and temporal colouring. A fair idea of the range and scope of the work may be gathered from the fact that the Scripture references, as given in the full index, exceed fifteen hundred.

A Study of St. Paul: His Character and Opinions. By S. Baring-Gould, M.A. (10s. 6d. Isbister & Co.) The title fairly represents this work. The author has no patience with lives written simply in amplification of the New Testament story; and the more heroic treatment of certain modern writers does not satisfy his mind. The line he has adopted is, to use his own words, "that of a man of the world, of a novelist with some experience of life, and some acquaintance with the springs of conduct that actuate mankind." In further explanation, in the course of a vivacious preface, the author says: "I treat the great Apostle as a man. I put aside detail unnecessary to my purpose, archæological, epigraphical, historical, geographical. My book is not, therefore, a life of St. Paul, if incidents and accidents make up a man's life, but a study of his mind, the formation of his opinions, their modification under new conditions, and the direction taken by his work, under pressure of various kinds, and from different sides." Obviously, this is a "line" in which we may expect boldness of treatment, and now and then an uncommon interpretation of familiar scenes in the Apostle's life. And these expectations are fully realised. The author is no ordinary biographer; he is not anxious to let St. Paul explain himself, nor does he care much about the Apostle's consistency in word or deed. Though this book is not calculated to help the ordinary student, it assuredly has matter for such as require to read wide for illustrative purposes. The pages are characterized by candid criticism and varied learning, and to a loyal Christian, following Paul as he followed Christ, they certainly emphasize the majesty of the great apostle. With all its deficiencies, the book will have peculiar attractions for some minds. From first to last, it is readable, and though not always in sympathy with his subject, Mr. Baring-Gould concludes by declaring St. Paul's position unique. "The only man of ability among the Apostles, who, though last called, laboured more abundantly than they all, striking out a line for himself and maintaining it, and sealing his testimony with his blood."

Breaking the Record; or, the Future Record Reign, is a booklet by H. B. Carron, on the claims of "Another King." (6d. per doz. Stoneman.)

A new weekly paper is Live Stock Hobbies, which appeals directly to amateurs as distinguished from breeders and fanciers. (Office, 12, Paternoster-square, E.C.)

A condensed but most readable sketch of the career of the famed Bishop Butler forms the latest issue of the Religious Tract Society's penny "Biographical Series."

The June issue of Footsteps of Truth opens with a group of "thumb-nail" portraits of leaders in the Irish Revival of 1859-63. The general contents of the magazine are good.

Temperance. A new edition of Hawes' "Useful Handbook of Temperance Hotels" is issued (Hiffe & Sons, 3, St. Bride-street, E.C. 6d.). It contains also a list of market days, places of interest to tourists, and nearly sixty cycling tours throughout England. "Octogenarian Teetotalers" (3s, Paternoster-row) is a very interesting collection of biographical notes of aged abstainers, with over a hundred finely-reproduced portraits.

Cassell's Guide to London (6d.) is an admirable handbook for visitors to the great metropolis, whose name just now is Legion. The stranger, with this guide in his pocket will not need to ask a policeman or anybody else in order to view the many "lions of the town.

William Tyndale: Reformer, Saint, and Martyr. This is the title of a capital lecture by Mr. Paul Askin, J.P., Dublin. High principles and great truths are interwoven with the biographical matter, which is admirably digested. (Dublin: Carson Brothers, Grafton-street.)

Russia's Destiny in the Light of Prophecy. By Alfred H. Burton. (6d. Partridge.) The author holds the parenthesis and rapture theories. He treats his main subject on the well-known lines, which shows Russia as a power steadily aiming at universal sovereignty.

The fourth booklet on Errors of Rome, by H. B., is devoted to an exposure of the doctrine of the Invocation of Saints and Angels. These small publications are worth the attention of those who would study Romanism in its latest phases. (3d. Apel's Library, Robertson-street, Hastings.)

Sunday Hours for June 19 is the boys' and girls' tribute to the Queen. Prize essays on various aspects of the Queen's life and reign are given from boys and girls in England, Ireland, Scotland and Wales. The essays are accompanied by portraits of their youthful authors. (R. T. S.)

Hymns for Use at Diamond Jubilee Thanksgiving Services, June, 1897. Here are twelve melodies, old and new. The selection will serve the purpose of many a gathering during the next few weeks. (1s. 6d. per 100. Bristol: W. F. Mack & Co., 52, Park-row; London: E. Nister, 28, Paternoster-row.)

A series of Missionary Picture Cards have been prepared for the Woolwich and Plumstead C.M.S. Bands. Six make a set, and depict scenes in India, China, and Africa with descriptive letterpress. Many bands may like to use them, and help the "Three Years' Enterprise" Fund. (3d. a packet. C. M. S. House.)

Messrs. Bridel & Co., Lausanne, are bringing out a very important work by Professor Aloys Berthoud, of Geneva, entitled Apologie du Christianisme. It will cover a wide field of inquiry on religious history and the fundamental facts and mysteries of Christianity. The subscription price of the book is seven francs.

Evangelical Church of France.

Founded in 1849, the Union des Eglises Evangéliques Libres has been able to pursue its mission to a much greater extent than was anticipated. It now has nineteen mission stations and agents. The work is under the direction of M. Paul Guignard, Ste. Foy-la-Grande (Gironde); and the record of progress during 1896 is full of interesting details told in a very graphic manner. It is obtainable from the Editor, 30, Welbeck-street, London, W.

We quote from a letter of Pastor S. Delord, who has recently been sent to Madagascar by the Paris Missionary Society, after a visit to Rouillac (Charente):—"Fourteen years ago this locality was spiritually a desert. Half a dozen Protestant people, scattered about and disheartened, strove to make their poor light to shine in the thickest darkness produced by Roman Catholicism and cupidity. To-day God has, by his grace, produced true spiritual oases. For fourteen years the valiant servant of God, who is at the head of this work, has worked single-handed, surrounded by great difficulties, and now he has the joy of seeing grouped around him sixty Christians, mostly the fruit of his ministry. Those in the parish under the pastor's care number 210. The Gospel is preached regularly in the three chapels of Rouillac, Segonzac, and Sonneville, and in twenty-seven localities besides. Over 300 meetings have been held during the year within a radius of twenty-eight kilomètres. Our friends are literally unable to meet the demand made upon their activity. New doors open on every side, and they cannot enter them."

To These. . . To Me.

The sun had set, it was the evening hour,
In God's cathedral, e'en his beauteous earth;
From his own censers—bud, and bloom, and flower—
Sweet incense rose; hushed were the strains of mirth
The nightingale sang on; her plaintive lay
Melted to tranquil calm, then died away.
God's star-lamps shone in Heaven's blue arch above
Whilst on the stillness came the voice of Love.
'Twas He Himself, who made all things so fair,
Born for our sakes in Bethlehem's manger bare,
Infinite, yet finite, as none else was He,
God veiled in human nature, flesh-robed Deity.
How blessèd she who clasped Him to her breast,
And with a mother's love her Child caressed;
How blessèd she who bathed the Christ-King's feet,
And on them pressed her loving kisses sweet.
Would that I, too, might near my Lord have been,
To wait on Him who bore my load of sin.
He, answering, saith, "Weep not; thou, too, may see
My face by faith, and minister to Me.
Behold my suffering ones; I know their pain,
And with them suffer in the flesh again.
Say, wouldst thou tend Me, go to yon poor alley,
Where the young children fade;
Bid them rejoice in woodland, sea, and valley,
And greenwood's leafy shade,
Till ease shall come to limbs so sorely aching,
Dim eyes grow bright with glee,
Healing to hearts that once with grief were breaking
For 'Inasmuch—ye did it unto Me.'"

Whom will the King address personally? "The dead shall hear his voice."—St. John v. 25. "Then shall the King say to them on his right hand, Come ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you. Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto Me. Unto those on his left hand, Depart from me, ye cursed, into everlasting fire prepared for the devil."—St. Matt. xxv. 34.

The Banquet which the King attends in person. "The King came in to see the guests. He saw there a man which had not on a wedding garment."

"Lord, is it I?"

The Kingdom come. "Now is come the Kingdom of our God, and the power of his Christ; for the accuser of our brethren is cast down. And they overcame him by the blood of the Lamb, and by the word of their testimony."—Rev. xii. 10.

Its endurance. "He shall reign for ever."—Rev. xi. 15.

Albion Hill Home, Brighton.

THE good work for the benefit of friendless girls, which has been carried on in this institution for more than forty years, continues to be maintained. The Home now shelters and trains over sixty girls, while the direction of the several departments is entrusted to eight matrons. Rev. R. C. Macdonald, Home Villa, Queen's Park, Brighton, is chaplain and secretary. Letters continue to be received from ladies who have taken girls from the Home into their service, some of them bearing testimony to permanent reformation in character and conduct. Many of the letters of the poor girls are most affecting in expressions of warm and simple love and gratitude for benefit derived from their stay in the Home. The door of mercy has been widely opened, and of late years the proportion of inmates from other parts of England has been largely increased.

Requests for Prayer.—For blessing on services in connection with the Children's Special Service Mission at Langland Bay, S. Wales, from about Aug. 10 to about Sept. 10.—A teacher in a country school asks for blessing on her scholars, also on work in her village during the summer.—For blessing at the annual open service next Sunday afternoon, at St. Peter's Men's Service, Highgate Hill.—That during approaching festivities the powers of evil may be restrained, that no evil accidents may mar or disturb our thanksgivings, nor vices of drunkenness or impurity disgrace our rejoicings.—For meetings next week in Ramsgate by Mr. and Mrs. Alexander.

AMONG THE CHURCHES.

Church of England.

THE Bishop of London has issued a notice that he leaves adult baptism to the discretion of the clergy.

Prebendary Sir James Erasmus Philipps, Bart., has resigned the vicarage of Warminster, which he has held for thirty-eight years.

The one thousand three-hundredth anniversary of the death of St. Columba has been commemorated by a service in Durham Cathedral.

Dr. John Owen was installed and enthroned at St. David's Cathedral on Friday, in the presence of about 120 clergy and a large number of the laity of the diocese.

Canon Garry, who has been vicar of St. Mary's, Reading, for the past twenty-two years, has, in consequence of advanced age and impaired health, sent his resignation to the Bishop.

About 130 bishops have accepted the invitation of the Bishop of Bath and Wells to visit Glastonbury on August 3, when a service will be held in the abbey ruins, and an address given by the Bishop of Stepney.

The Association secretaryship for Lancashire and the North-western district of the Church Pastoral Aid Society, vacant by the removal of Rev. H. M. Sanders to London, has been filled by the appointment thereto of Rev. H. D. Lampen, curate of Redhill, Surrey.

The Archbishop has conferred the Lambeth degree on the Bishop of Sierra Leone. The Senate of Durham University also intends to confer the same degree upon the bishop. Dr. Taylor Smith is the only bishop who wears a decoration for service in the field, having the bronze star for the Ashantee expedition of last year.

A special service was held at Bristol Cathedral on Friday on the occasion of the Bishop of Gloucester's farewell. There was a large congregation. Subsequently, at a gathering of clergy in the chapter-house, Dr. Ellicott said he hoped they would find their new bishop sound in the faith, and in Church principles, and sympathising with each school of thought in the Church.

At St. Paul's Cathedral, on Saturday, there was an imposing celebration of the one thousand three-hundredth anniversary of the baptism of King Ethelbert, who endowed and enriched the first cathedral in London. There was a large congregation, and the Bishop of Stepney gave an interesting historical address, at the conclusion of which the clergy and choir sang a solemn "Te Deum."

Lord Halsbury and Lord Herschell announce that an Inns of Court Mission, supported by members of the four societies of the Inner and Middle Temple, Lincoln's Inn, and Gray's Inn, is on the point of being established, on the general lines of the Oxford House, in the poor district around St. Giles-in-the-Fields. Rev. H. G. D. Latham, the warden, will be assisted by lay members of the Inns of Court.

The annual synod of the Reformed Episcopal Church has been held at Christ Church, Liscard, a large number of clergy and delegates attending. The report of Bishop Eldridge on the state of the churches was exceedingly satisfactory and encouraging. After the business sessions, a largely-attended public meeting was held, at which addresses on the position and principles of the Reformed Episcopal Church were delivered. The Synod of 1898 will be held at Christ Church, Exmouth, S. Devon.

A return which has been prepared as to the state of Church work in Birmingham shows that five parishes, which have a total population of 144,000, there is only sitting accommodation in churches and mission-rooms for 8800, and an aggregate staff of twenty clergy. In six other parishes, where the aggregate population is 96,530, the sitting accommodation is only 7300, and the number of clergy fifteen. It would require seventy-six more clergymen to bring the number up to one for every 3000 of the population.

Congregational.

Rev. H. A. Davies, Cwmaman, in his speech as President of the Glamorganshire Association, a few days ago, emphasized the need of a religious revival.

Rev. J. A. Mitchell, of St. Helens, has decided to accept the invitation to succeed Dr. Paton as principal of the Nottingham Congregational Institute.

The John Robinson Memorial Congregational Church at Gainsborough, Lincolnshire, was opened on Wednesday, last week. The cost of the new church and site is £7000.

Dr. Berry, whose health is reported to be steadily improving, has definitely accepted the invitation to preach the "jubilee sermon" at Plymouth Church, Brooklyn, in the autumn.

At the annual meetings of the North Bucks Union, held at Buckingham, Rev. R. Westrope, of Westminster Chapel, London, preached an earnest and searching sermon on spiritual power, the present need of the individual and of the church.

Calls.—Rev. R. J. Worrall, of Cannock Chase, to Castlecroft, Bury; Rev. A. Hamilton, M.A., of Hampstead, to Leek, Staffs.

Baptist.

Rev. D. Thompson, of Bunyan Church, Norbiton, is, under medical advice, about to take a long sea voyage. It is expected that six months will elapse before he will resume ministerial duties.

Tuesday, June 8, being his sixtieth birthday, Dr. Spurgeon paid a visit to the Stockwell Orphanage, accompanied by Mrs. Spurgeon and Dr. and Mrs. A. T. Pierson. The children sang several pieces from the festival programme, and interesting addresses were delivered.

The anniversary of the pastor (Rev. G. A. Miller) at Rochester, has been celebrated with many tokens of blessing. Among those who took part were Revs. E. G. Gange (president of the Union), E. J. Edwards (Dover), J. Doubleday (Sittingbourne), G. Walker (Maidstone), and J. W. Davies (Lee).

A very successful opening service, after thorough renovation, has been held in the Baptist Free Church, Alcester (Rev. E. J. Crofts, pastor). Rev. J. H. Jowett, M.A., of Carr's Lane, Birmingham, preached the reopening sermon on "Christ died for our sins." The church here has lately undertaken a successful forward movement.

At the Yorkshire Association meetings at Farsley, Mr. Joseph Brooke, of Huddersfield, who presided, said the progress of the denomination throughout the county during the past year had been very encouraging. Twenty-six years had passed since the Yorkshire Association last met at Farsley. They then had a total membership of 10,157; now the total was 20,503.

A new church has been opened in Heaton-road, Newcastle. Colonel Angus presided at the luncheon, the first item in the day's proceedings, and congratulated Rev. B. Gawthrop, the pastor, on the success of his labours. Mr. William Angus performed the ceremony of opening the door of the new church. The pulpit was occupied by Rev. E. G. Gange, of London (President of the Baptist Union).

Calls.—Mr. D. F. Walters, of Cardiff College, to Caersalem, Bargoed; Rev. W. B. Griffiths (B.), Cefn Coed, to Tabor, Llantrisant.

Resignations.—Rev. F. G. Kemp, Scarisbrook-street, Wigan; Rev. W. Trotman, Stonehouse, Plymouth.

Methodist.

A new Wesleyan chapel has been opened at Harrogate.

The members of Nelson Wesleyan circuit have decided to erect two chapels in Nelson, at an estimated cost of £8000.

Rev. John Innocent, who is likely to be chosen president of the New Connexion Conference, has expressed his willingness to serve.

At the annual meeting of the Manchester and Salford Free Methodist Guild, Rev. Henry Hooks, of Openshaw, was unanimously elected president for the year 1897-8.

The Wesley Guild has 600 branches. A recommendation is to go to Conference that for one year an assistant be granted to Rev. W. B. Fitzgerald to enable him to devote more time to the Guild movement.

The increase in the membership of the Methodist Free Churches has been accompanied by a gratifying increase in the number of applicants for the ministry. With two exceptions, every district has one candidate or more.

The annual report of the Birmingham Wesleyan Mission for 1896 has just been issued. In the churches of the mission there are now over 1300 church members, and over 2000 scholars in the Sunday-schools, whilst the number of hearers on the Sunday-night is only limited by the size of the buildings. Some 500 workers are actively engaged in the various departments.

The London Wesleyan Mission Band Union has conducted a very successful series of meetings in the King's Cross Chapel. There was a good attendance at both afternoon and evening meetings. In the evening, when the invitation was given to those who desired to lead a new life, several held up their hands. These were dealt with personally, and some very touching cases of conversion resulted.

Negotiations for the organic union of the Primitive Methodist and Bible Christian Churches have been in progress for the past three years, and at last the joint committee has arrived at a possible basis of union. A brief report has been prepared and issued, to be submitted to the forthcoming Conference of each of the denominations referred to. It is proposed to give to the combined denominations the name of "The Primitive Methodist and Bible Christian Church."

Presbyterian.

St. John's Wood Church (Rev. Dr. Monro Gibson) has been supplied with the electric light, and was used for the first time on Sunday.

The churches, halls, and manses of the denomination are insured for £1,187,355, and are estimated to represent a capital of £1,781,032.

Arrangements are in progress for the due celebration of the 250th anniversary of the publication of the Shorter Catechism, at a meeting to be held in London on November 25.

London Presbytery North' recently held its monthly meeting at the College, Bloomsbury, Rev. James Macintosh moderator. It was agreed to sustain the trial discourse of Mr. W. Christie, of Aleppo, and to ordain him as a missionary to the Jews.

Rev. H. M. Mackenzie lately conducted a thanksgiving service at the close of his three years' labours at Clapham Junction. The congregation began by his personal invitation on a few handbills in 1894, and now numbers 130 communicants. A church, hall, etc., have been erected.

A copy of the booklet "Our Scholars for Christ" will be given to each Sunday-school teacher in the Presbyterian Church in England (about 3000), with commemorative presentation note, on June 20. A similar effort is contemplated for Ireland. Donations in aid will be received by the author, Rev. R. Ballantine, Peebles, N.B.

Resignation.—Rev. Robert Wylie, Canonbury.

Fallen Asleep.

At Batley, HENRY ACKROYD, a member of the Society of Friends.—At Dent, Rev. A. B. CARTER, Primitive Methodist minister, aged 52.—At Old Ford, E., Rev. PETER PRESCOTT for nearly forty years chaplain of the City of London Infirmary.—At Liverpool, Mr. C. H. STANLEY, for over thirty years superintendent of the Sunday-school attached to Stanley Congregational Church.—At Llanarmon, near Mold, Mr. JOHN PARRY, a well-known member of the Presbyterian Church.—At Kircubbin, co. Down, Canon LYLE, rector of parish.—At Damascus, Rev. ARCHIE STUART, Presbyterian missionary, of fever, after only five years' service.—At Drumgath, Rathfriland, Mr. ROBERT WRIGHT, for over sixty years a Presbyterian elder, aged ninety-seven years.—On May 15, aged ninety years, at 41, Great Coram street, Russell-square, Mr. RICHARD JAMES COPE, for some years an active and esteemed member of the Church worshipping at Bloomsbury Chapel.

Appeals.

SPANISH EVANGELISATION.—Rev. G. H. Giddins, Secretary of the Evangelical Continental Society (15, Memorial Hall, Farringdon-street, E.C.), appeals for help in enabling a Protestant congregation at Santander, Spain, to rid themselves of a debt of £200 on their church building. A good work is going on under the care of Pastor de Tienda, who is visiting England on behalf of the object stated.

ALDERSHOT.—We are camping out with our two militia battalions and staff from Hamilton, having a temporary Soldiers' Home under canvas. Our work comprises coffee-bar, reading-room, savings bank, and Gospel meetings whenever possible. Gifts of bright, interesting books, magazines, and tracts suitable for men, groceries for our coffee-bar, or donations towards the expenses of our tent, etc., will be gratefully received.

ELLA STARKEY, Lady Supt.
Hamilton Soldiers' Home Tent, Scrogg's Ground, S. Camp, Aldershot.

City Workwomen.—Ladies are much needed once a week or fortnight for half-hour services during the dinner hour in City workrooms. Any who can help should communicate with Mrs. Fisher, 186, Aldersgate-street, E.C.

Tracts and Books for the West Indies.—Please convey thanks for parcels received from unknown donors. If there were any sign or address, I would have sent a card direct. Some time ago I received some "Horner's Stories," and would be glad of more. All Christian literature, cards, illustrations are valuable in my large and increasing work.—Yours, A. P. FLEURY Olgander Villa, St. Thomas, Danish West Indies.

DONATIONS

Received by Messrs. Morgan and Scott to Monday, June 14, 1897.

 Donations should be sent by Cheque or Post Office Orders, not by stamps.

 Will donors oblige by stating explicitly and fully the titles of the institutions to which they wish their donations to be applied? Further correspondence will thus be obviated. Will they also bear in mind that the Donation List is made up for the Printers on Monday morning? Any amounts received afterwards will be acknowledged in the subsequent week's number of The Christian.

 Cheques, Money Orders, or Postal Orders should be made payable to Messrs. Morgan & Scott, 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C., and crossed "City Bank"; this will effectually prevent loss.

☞ Donors are particularly requested to fill in "Morgan and Scott" on Postal Orders, in accordance with the Post Office regulations.

HOLIDAY HOME FOR POOR AND SICK CHILDREN.

This home, situated in a most charming part of Epping Forest, which has for several years past been of incalculable benefit to many hundreds of poor little waifs and strays, many of them half famished and pent up in the narrow and stifling courts and alleys the whole year. To continue this much-needed work during this season, an earnest appeal is hereby made for help to the Christian public. Last year, over 500 were taken for one or two weeks, and over 3,000 for a day. Donations in any form will be gratefully received, and can be sent to the treasurer, at the Bank, 54, Lombard-street, E.C., to the Office of The Christian, or to the Secretary, 25, Brighton-road, Stoke Newington, N. JAMES ATKINSON, Secretary.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

IN consequence of the Diamond Jubilee holidays, this issue of THE CHRISTIAN is obliged to be sent to press earlier than usual. Many articles and communications are held over, so as to give space for our reports of the Mildmay Conference addresses.

A correspondent inquires if there is any institution into which there could be received and provided with suitable work a young woman who was born without hands. She can write, knit, and sew a little with the prongs which represent fingers. We should be glad of any information.

The suicide of Mr. Barnato is a striking reminder of the insufficiency of riches to satisfy the better parts of a man's nature. A millionaire takes his own life! Yet the great bulk of humanity go on seeking the same goal, and straining every nerve to become rich, as though the golden key were the one that opens the gate of Paradise. But the soul refuses to be fed on barns full of produce. There is no solution to the problem of man's need but the one revealed by the prophet: "Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace whose mind is stayed on Thee." It is the only road to peace for millionaire and pauper; but how slow men are to learn the lesson!

Among the many great qualities which have endeared the Queen to her subjects, and established the throne on which she has sat "broad-based upon her people's will," one of the greatest has been her advocacy of the purity movement, not only in her own Court, but in its wider applications. In the "Life of Mrs. Booth" it is stated that Her Majesty expressed her full sympathy in the movement for defending young girls from the horrors of an openly evil life. A second communication to that lady informed her that the Queen had given careful consideration to the subject, and felt very deeply on it. During the early years of the reign it was almost unanimously felt that this vice was a necessary evil. A widening body of opinion has pronounced unhesitatingly against so shameful a doctrine; and though there seems to be a set-back just now in certain directions, the knowledge of the entire sympathy of the Throne with the cause of womanhood is one of the guarantees that the movement towards purifying our social life will finally triumph.

Professor Adeney, writing on "The Change in the Churches during the Queen's reign," admits that, whereas at the beginning of the reign the Gospel was explained in all evangelical churches as a distinct and well-articulated plan of salvation, now many preachers seem scarcely to know how to expound the doctrine of the Atonement. He thinks that if, as it may be feared is the case in some places, the Cross is no longer so prominent in the centre of the Gospel message, the change is to be deplored. Another critic of the times, however, is of opinion that there are teachers of every denomination who perceive more clearly than ever that Christianity is a supernatural religion, or nothing at all. The two views may not be incompatible. But if preaching is to have power the supernatural influence of the Cross must not be absent from it.

How little are the capacities of children often considered in public worship. We are surprised at the inappropriateness of the hymns sometimes selected even for Sunday-school anniversaries and the like. Beautiful and inspiring for adults, they are hardly sung, much less understood, by children. Not more happy are the tunes occasionally set to interpret them. Thus what might and should be a pleasant service is rendered wearisome by sheer lack of thought. They are most successful with the little ones who have the most vivid memory of their own childhood. How vividly John B. Gough used to describe his own reminiscences of such an occasion, when, after aching through an hour's sermon in a straight-backed pew, his legs dangling high above the ground, the service would conclude with the hymn:

> Where congregations ne'er break up,
> And Sabbaths never end!

In a recent conference, Rev. J. S. Tucker, principal of Trent College, Notts, read a paper on "Evangelical influence in the Universities and public and private schools," which detailed some lamentable facts regarding the religious teaching in middle-class schools. In many, only the most perfunctory attention, for about two hours a week, is given to the subject, while many of the masters are incapable of making the lesson a reality, and take refuge in history, antiquities, Oriental life, and illustrative matter, in all of which there is a conspicuous absence of spiritual force. It would appear, however, that there is a greatly improved tone prevailing among Oxford and Cambridge undergraduates. Those who take up a religious stand are genuine and earnest; they manifest a keen desire to help others, and a marked love of prayer; and they keep up a growing interest in missions.

That this good work may be successfully started earlier during the period of school life is proved by the uniform and startling success of the Universities' Camps movement during the last five years. Last year 604 boys were drawn from sixty of our large public schools; each tent being in charge of a "cadet," who is usually a University undergraduate. At the gatherings that close the exercises of the day, many boys have obtained the greatest help and blessing. The sight of young men fresh from school themselves, making a manly appeal to these boys to yield themselves to Christ, has a profound influence on them. This is the right way to reach their sympathies, and, wisely managed, this work must do untold good.

That the "centripetal" movement among the denominations is growing in range and intensity is being more and more clearly proved. The latest impulse towards reunion is among the Primitive Methodist and the Bible Christian Churches. The sad effects of the separatist tendencies of the past are matters of history, and now that the temporary causes of these divisions are being forgotten, it would be unnatural to perpetuate such of the differences as are based on no real principle. That there will ever be "diversities of administration" and distinct types of church government is in accordance with a law of human nature, but it need not involve any real loss of unity. But the "unity of the Spirit" demands that no needless diversities should be perpetuated, and it is in accordance with the truest genius of the Gospel that where union is possible it should be cherished to the utmost.

It is surprising how much men may be impressed and limited by the groove in which they work, to the exclusion of all that lies beyond. A prominent minister, and one who travels a good deal about the country, expressed his doubts, in a recent conversation, as to any results to be found from the missions conducted by Messrs. Moody and Sankey, nor did he know that any practical work was done outside "the denominations." There are few mission agencies engaged in caring for the souls and bodies of men through the land which do not number among their helpers some who trace their conversion, under God, to the labours of these and other evangelists. Our friend had not found them because he had been too busy to look for them.

"A Poor Lady" sends a touching plea on behalf of reduced gentlewomen. She says it is astonishing how little sympathy and help are afforded to these silent sufferers. How little they can get for their work, which is generally bought by those who are able to pay a fair price for it. The very fact of the work being done by "poor ladies" seems to make the purchaser consider she ought to get it for a lower price than she would, as a rule, have to pay for it at a shop.

We are in entire accord with Dr. Haughton in his letter on Vivisection (p. 25). We have frequently expressed our conviction that the notion that our dumb animals must be tortured with Satanic cruelty in order to benefit mankind, is a slander on God, a libel on their and our faithful Creator. Indeed, this contention is given up by Vivisectors themselves, as witness the following :—

IS VIVISECTION MAINLY FOR THE BENEFIT OF HUMANITY?

"After the furtherance of science that [the benefit of humanity] is the object we have in view."—PROF. VICTOR HORSLEY (English).

"If the positive utility to man of every experiment is to be maintained as a justification for its continuance, the practice must evidently stop! If its justification rests upon anything, it rests upon the broader conception—that investigation for its own sake is a worthy end."—The Boston Medical and Surgical Journal, April 25, 1895 (American).

"The advancement of our knowledge, and not utility to medicine, is the true and straightforward object of all vivisection. No true vivisector in his researches thinks of the practical utilisation. Science can afford to despise this justification with which vivisection has been defended in England."—PROF. LUDIMAR HERMANN, in "The Vivisection Question Explained to the General Public," Leipsig, 1877 (German).

A national hospital of which the medical and surgical staff shall be thorough opponents of Vivisection, is proposed. Information may be obtained from Mr. A. L. Woodward, Hon. Sec. of the Society for United Prayer for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, 158, Lancaster-road, London, W.

It is impossible to worship God in a meeting-house (i.e., Dissenting chapel), because, having no priest to offer up the sacrifice of the Mass, you have no actual or bodily Presence of our Blessed Lord.

The Bible could not possibly have been intended for universal reading. It is a text-book for the clergy, and not for the laity. The Catholic Church is the guardian and sole interpreter of Holy Writ.

I think it nothing short of blasphemy to place the Bible before the sacraments of Holy Church.

I cannot ask —— to read her Bible daily, but I will urge her to hear Mass daily, as this would do her much more good.

If the laity are allowed to read the Bible there is always a danger lest they should begin to think for themselves and exercise their own private judgment, which, of course, would often sow the seeds of Protestantism.

The above are a few quotations from a letter written by a High Churchman to a young member of a North London Nonconformist Church. Comment is needless.

While the doctrines of Roman Catholicism appear to us so absurd and childish, we are compelled to admire the "no compromise" spirit of those who profess to believe in them. Some time ago, at a Lord Lieutenant's banquet in Dublin, an English bishop sat opposite to Father Healey. The former, wishing to be agreeable, said, "Father Healey, I have never been able to see the difference between the beliefs of your Church and the one to which I belong, and I have been in this world sixty-five years." "My dear friend," said Father Healey, "you will not be sixty-five minutes in the next world before you find out the difference." Earl Carrington, who related this at Tottenham last week, emphasised the need for a tenacious grip of what we profess to believe. While he referred especially to political matters, we felt that the remarks were even more applicable to present-day religious conviction. The strongest men in every age are those who not only possess a belief, but are also possessed by it.

"They have ascribed unto David ten thousands, and to me they have ascribed but thousands. And Saul eyed David from that day forward." How often this bit of history repeats itself in our church life. Our Christian work is hampered, as was the progress of the host of God, by these petty jealousies. There is possibly more small but deadly strife of this kind in the churches than in most other places. The cure, of course, lies only in a clean heart and a Christ-like spirit. But the weakness of human nature is discounted to a large extent in some places by having every branch of work represented in the councils of the Church. The workers then feel that they have a voice at Court, and mutual sympathy and hearty co-operation are promoted.

Two notable books have just been published on that question of perennial interest—the character of Oliver Cromwell. The eminent historian of the Commonwealth, Prof. S. R. Gardiner, deals with "Cromwell's Place in History," and sums up his estimate of him as "the greatest because the most typical Englishman," and says:—

He stands there, not to be implicitly followed as a model, but to hold up a mirror to ourselves, wherein we may alike see our weakness and our strength.

What this strength consisted in is more vividly brought out in Dr. Horton's little book on "Oliver Cromwell: A Study in Personal Religion." He finds the secret of that massive personality in the fact that "he was not only a religious man, but a man to whom religion was everything"; one of those typical Puritans who "felt in the full tide of life what pious men now feel on their knees and on their deathbeds." It is a part of the purpose of the latter volume to rouse the young men of England to a true realisation of this great principle. A sympathetic and prayerful study of these two volumes should lead to a sense of the eternal meaning and opportunity of this life, the full bearings of which can only be realised in the light of eternity.

The Mildmay Conference.

THE forty-first Mildmay Conference has been of a definitely missionary character. All Christian conferences and conventions must, directly or indirectly, have the same tendency. For every Christian is a missionary, a sent one: "As Thou hast sent Me into the world, even so have I also sent them into the world...that the world may believe that Thou hast sent Me."

Conferences to study Scripture or promote Christian unity, conventions for the promotion of Christian holiness or the deepening of the spiritual life, have each and all for their ultimate object and purpose the fulfilment of the command, "Be ye clean that bear the vessels of the Lord."

The one work committed to the people of God, from Abel downward, is that of being his witnesses. The elders named in Hebrews xi. were representatives of that great cloud of witnesses who believed in God and whose faith made itself manifest in showing forth his glory.

God sanctified to Himself the seed of Abraham his friend, and separated them from the nations, for this specific purpose; as Isaiah testified, "Ye are my witnesses, that I am God." And when the Lord Jesus had fulfilled his mission, put away sin by the sacrifice of Himself, and so made it possible for the promised Spirit to be poured without measure upon men, his last act before He entered his glory was to constitute his believing people his witnesses of his death and resurrection to the uttermost parts of the earth, beginning at Jerusalem; and his last word was the promise, not many days hence, of the only Power by which they could accomplish this world-wide and age-long command.

Beyond question, therefore, the most worthy object on which they that fear the Lord can speak often one to another, is that which fills the Lord's mind still, the preaching of the Gospel to every creature. This is the one work of the Church on earth—the one legacy of her ascended Lord. The only adequate purpose for which Christians can be convened together, the chief subject on which (if their high calling be rightly understood) they will occupy themselves, is how they may defeat the god of this world in blinding the minds of them which believe not; how they may cause the light of the Gospel of Christ, who is the image of God, to shine unto them; for "We preach not ourselves, but Christ Jesus as Lord, and ourselves as your servants for Jesus' sake." "We are ambassadors for Christ, as though God did beseech by us; we pray in Christ's stead, Be ye reconciled to God."

The representatives of a government, entrusted with an important embassy, must never be off duty; they must continually confer together how they may maintain the honour of their Sovereign and their country. They must never be off their guard; their dress, their behaviour, their every thought and word and act must be worthy of the vocation wherewith they are called. None of these is an end of itself, but a means to an end. And all these conditions apply, with supreme significance, to God's ambassadors to his revolted subjects in this world of the usurper.

A very thoughtful and observant brother from over the Atlantic pronounced last week's Mildmay Conference the best he had ever attended. True, the numbers were not as in the ancient days; but this business of the King requires not quantity so much as quality. Should the same subject be definitely pursued in future years, and men and women who have had experience in actual evangelistic work at home and abroad be well represented among the speakers; and if methods and their results be unreservedly, Scripturally, and prayerfully discussed, the maturest and most fruitful days of Mildmay Conference may be yet to come. Covetousness.

A BIBLE STUDY.

CALLED by many better-sounding names, this is one of the most conspicuous sins of the age, and is considered almost a virtue. God's opinion of it and warnings regarding it are ignored, and it is extolled as an evidence of prudence and praiseworthy ambition. Covetousness shows we want what God has thought fit to withhold from us. It is a practical denial of his love, bounty, and wisdom. It implies a want of faith in, and satisfaction with, his gifts and orderings.

Covetousness has been the cause of endless national and individual woes. History is a long record of its awful consequences.

Let us see what the Scripture saith about it:—

Man blesses it, yet God abhors it (Psa. x. 3); God places it in the catalogue of crimes (Rom. i. 29; 1 Cor. vi. 9, 10). It is branded as idolatry (Col. iii. 5) because it implies the worship of the creature rather than the Creator. It is against the spirit of the law (Rom. xiii. 9). Those who indulge in it cannot inherit the kingdom of God (Eph. v. 5). And there are reasons for this:

(a) It renders the conscience callous and indifferent to sin (2 Pet. 2, 3; Micah ii. 2; Eph. iv. 19—"greediness," R.V., "covetousness").

(b) It brings a curse (Hab. ii. 9; Josh. vii. 21; 1 Tim vi. 10; 2 Pet. ii. 14; R.V., "children of cursing" or "bit of a curse"). Throughout Scripture and the history of God's people, it stands prominent among the vices. It is branded in the Commandments (Ex. xx. 17) in all its many-sided developments. The Elders of Israel must be free from it (Ex. xviii. 21). It was the special sin of backsliding Israel (Jer. vi. 13, 17, 22).

When we come to the New Testament, we find no change of note, it is only accentuated. Christ warns against it (Luke xii. 15). He says its seat is in the unregenerate heart of man (Mark vii. 22). The rulers of the Christian Church are told to keep themselves free from it (1 Tim. iii. 3, cp. v. 8). Christians generally are exhorted not to countenance it amongst themselves (1 Cor. v. 11, cp. v. 10) as encouraging distrust and discontent. Covetousness is to be conspicuously absent from Christian conduct (Acts xx. 33; 1 Thess. ii. 5; Heb. xiii. 5) (lit., let your turn of mind be free from the love of money) and even the appearance of such a spirit in Christian work is to be condemned (2 Cor. ix. 5) because it is this spirit of loving the present world and what it affords that hinders the reception of the Gospel (Ezek. xxxiii. 31).

Covetousness viewed in its Bible light goes far beyond mere "love of money," and includes many kindred vices of impurity, selfishness, etc. But taking only the first thought, What lessons does it bring home to the Christian business men of the present day. The doctrine will never be acceptable to the professing church (Luke xvi. 14). But our prayers must be (Psa. cxix. 36), while at the same time "setting our affection on things above," we must covet spiritual gifts (1 Cor. xii. 31).

It All Goes Together.

EARLY in the second half of the present century earnest Christian people used to say one to another, "We cannot speak too much of the work of Christ for us, but do we think or speak enough of the work of the Spirit in us?" One of those good men said that justification is as the vestibule, and sanctification is as the temple; and we must pass through the vestibule in order to enter the temple. During the last thirty years there has been an increasing tendency to make the work of the Holy Spirit in us the subject of testimony rather than the work of Christ for us. It is seldom that any generation preserves the proportion of the faith. We do not generally hear in these days, even in the most evangelical circles, the same grand and powerful declarations of foundation truth as were the staple of Reformation preaching. Men of the older generation have come perhaps to regard justification by faith as taken for granted, and as underlying, in the taught as well as in the teachers, all exhortation to consistent and holy living. But while we exhort our hearers and readers to add to their faith the seven-fold graces of the seven-fold Spirit, are we making sure that we, like the apostle, are addressing those who "have obtained like precious faith with us in the righteousness of our God and of our Saviour Jesus Christ"?

THE BALANCE OF TRUTH,

"THE TESTIMONY OF JESUS"

(i.e., concerning Jesus) "is the spirit of prophecy." The work of the Holy Spirit is to take of the things of Christ, and to show them unto us. "He shall testify of Me." It is this testimony which leads to the conversion of sinners. The prayer of the apostles and their company in Acts iv. 23-30 is very instructive as to this. It ended with these words: "And now, Lord, behold their threatenings; and grant unto thy servants that with all boldness they may speak thy word, by stretching forth thy hand to heal; and that signs and wonders may be done by the name of thy Holy Child Jesus."

The result of this prayer was that the place was shaken where they were assembled together; they were all filled with the Holy Ghost; with great power gave the apostles witness of the resurrection of the Lord Jesus; great grace was upon them all; neither was there any among them that lacked; evil in Ananias and Sapphira was terribly judged; many signs and wonders were wrought among the people; they were all with one accord in one place; of the rest durst no man join himself unto them; the people magnified them; and believers were the more added to the Lord,

MULTITUDES BOTH OF MEN AND WOMEN.

Nothing tends so much to the growth of the Church collectively, and of its members individually, in grace and in the knowledge of the Lord Jesus Christ, as the conversion of sinners, and the addition of believers to the Lord. They see with their eyes the fulfilment of his word, "I, if I be lifted up, will draw all unto Me." They live over again the experience of their own conversion; their love is drawn out to Christ, and to the children whom God has given them through the power of Jesus' name; they feed his lambs; they tend his sheep; they become nursing fathers and nursing mothers; they have no time for strifes of words, or disputations, or endless genealogies or their modern equivalents; they rejoice in one another's joy over those who are begotten again through the word of truth; they weep with them that weep over such as turn aside to vain jangling, or like Demas forsake them for love of this present world; they are sometimes caught up into Paradise and hear unspeakable words which it is not possible for a man to utter; they receive the white stone and the new name which no one knoweth but he that receiveth it; their hearts become established with grace, not with meats, which have not profited them who have been occupied therein; they reign already in the Kingdom of God, which is not meat and drink, but righteousness and peace and joy in the Holy Ghost.

It all goes together. Justification leads to sanctification, as in Rom. v. 1-11. Testimony in the Holy Ghost to the work of Christ for us produces the work of the Spirit in us. In grace, as in nature,

NEW-BORN CHILDREN BRING THEIR LOVE

with them. The conversion of sinners is necessary to the graces of those who have fore-hoped in Christ. The love of God the Father, the incarnation, death, and resurrection of God the Son, the testimony of God the Holy Ghost—it all goes together, until the Son shall deliver up the Kingdom to God, even the Father, that God, the Triune, may be all in all. Mr. Moody's Winter Work.

A VINDICATION.

IN a recent issue of the New York Independent there appeared an article by an American professor, in which Mr. Moody's last winter campaign in that country was animadverted upon, and its results said to have fallen short of expectation. Many readers in America must have been surprised at the attack, knowing that it has not been Mr. Moody's custom to prophesy as to results; he seeks to do his very best in any work he undertakes, but he rightly leaves results to a higher Power. In the latest number to hand of the Independent there is a reply to the strictures, by Dr. J. M. Gray, of Boston, Mass., which, it seems to us, sets the matter in the true light. The writer says:—

"I reply that the revival has come. Competent witnesses have testified that the work in New York last fall, while somewhat different in method from that of a score of years previously, was nevertheless as great as any which Mr. Moody has ever done in the same period of time. And it is still going on—four meetings a day in Greater New York at the present time, five months after Mr. Moody's departure from the city, is almost unparalleled even in the history of his own labours. Moreover, it is stated on good authority that at least two-thirds of the churches there were never more united in the support of his work than they now are, and that if the others would graciously substitute co-operation for criticism throughout these summer months the revival would be likely to continue for some years.

"As one of the Committee who invited Mr. Moody to come to Boston, I was in close touch with the movement throughout, and I know that many who left the meetings to return home and organise local meetings themselves; in response to Mr. Moody's appeals, union meetings of churches were arranged for in several places; evangelists of lesser note were set to work in a number of localities round about, and, better yet, some pastors who had never done the work before, and supposed that they were lacking the peculiar gift to do it, turned evangelists on their own account with blessed results. Are not the souls thus converted and gathered to the Lord to be credited as the fruit of the Moody meetings? Moreover, there is one church in Boston which has received about fifty additions on confession of faith since Mr. Moody's departure, and while perhaps few, if any, of that number can be traced directly to his work, yet the pastor in this case freely grants that the rise of the spiritual tide which was produced throughout the whole city very largely accounts for them. I suppose it is true in this instance, as it always has been, that the churches which have thrown themselves into the work have gathered a harvest, and have pronounced the work a failure, because they have received no benefit from it.

"But Mr. Moody (it is said) has been preaching to the churches. Granted that such is the case. Which is likely to produce the greater and wider results, the preaching of Mr. Moody himself directly and continually to the unregenerate in one series of meetings, or the setting to work by him of a thousand others, on a smaller scale, in unnumbered meetings all over the land? During the past winter, instead of holding one great central gathering in the evening, resulting in the closing of all the churches round about, Mr. Moody spoke only in the daytime, giving up the evenings to the churches themselves to do their own work in their own way; and as far as I have been able to confer with pastors on the subject, the plan has met their hearty approval. It was something like this which they desired. They shrank from giving up their regular church work for so long a period as two months, and were glad of the rare opportunity to get some of the fire into their hearth without parting with any of their own coals. And

HOW DID THEY GET THIS FIRE?

Through the attendance of themselves and of their members at the day meetings of Mr. Moody, when they listened to the simple exposition and defence of the old Bible, and had their thoughts turned toward the Holy Spirit as the one source of spiritual power.

"Has Mr. Moody been preaching an impracticable doctrine? If so, he has been preaching it for twenty-five years at least. It is strange, too, that an impracticable belief can make so practical a man; for what Mr. Moody preaches is only the expression of his own inward experience. I have known Mr. Moody a long while. It is no 'Second Blessing,' or 'Higher Life,' or 'Keswick Movement,' or other 'scheme of sanctification' for which he stands, except as it is expressed in our Lord's words, 'Ye shall receive power after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you.' What he has received for himself he covets for all of us."

Summer.

Oh summer! beautiful summer!
Thy praise the nightingales sing,
And field and grove with the song of love
In echoing gladness ring.

Oh summer! beautiful summer!
Thy fingers have touched the sea,
And children play through the livelong day,
By its sun-kissed waves with glee.

Oh summer! beautiful summer!
Thy kisses have blessed the earth;
And children play in the fragrant hay,
With rollicking joyous mirth.

Oh summer! wearisome summer!
The tiny faces are pale;
And mothers weep as their watch they keep
At their darlings' weary wail.

For in stifling court and alley,
God's blossoms are fading fast;
O hands that hold the much-needed gold,
Your "mite" in the treasury cast.

God hath no need of your bounty,
His coffers are deep and wide;
He calleth now, O Christian, that thou
Mayest work with Him, side by side.

He knoweth the joy of service,
A servant to earth He came.
For you He trod the wearisome road
That led to the Cross and shame.

And now, from his risen glory,
He sayeth to you and me,
"What ye have done to each little one,
Ye have done it unto Me."

DEAR SIR,—I have longed to do something for the many little sufferers in our courts and alleys, but being only a poor girl, and having many calls, I have been unable. If you should think the above lines likely to influence those to whom God has given more of this world's prosperity it would give me great joy.—Yours obediently, A. D. D.

"Fourteen Years Ago."

2 Cor. xii. 2-5.

By Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A.

IF we count back fourteen years from the writing of this epistle, we shall find ourselves amid the events narrated in the thirteenth and fourteenth chapters of the Book of the Acts; especially at that momentous hour in the history of Christianity when five men, representing five different countries, met together to fast and pray about the state of the world and their duty in respect to it. The Evangelist tells us in two chapters the results of that conference, in the separation and sending forth of the two missionaries, and of the hardships, difficulties, and sufferings through which they fulfilled their high calling. But Paul draws aside the veil from his heart and shows us what his inner experiences were during those wonderful months. He was a man in Christ, caught up into Paradise, the third heaven, to hear unspeakable words. Luke dwells on the outside, the covering of badger-skins; Paul on the inside, the hangings of blue. Luke speaks of the man; Paul of the man—in Christ. Luke depicts the sorrows and tears that beset him; Paul the elation and joy which bore him to the very bosom of Christ, so that many pains and sorrows were actually necessary as a make-weight, lest he should be exalted above measure on account of the abundance of revelations afforded him.

How little we know of one another's lives! Only the little circle around us, or some twin-soul, and sometimes not these, realise the visions and revelations, or hear the unspeakable words, which fall to the lot of the favoured soul. Perhaps even Barnabas, who shared the toils and perils of this man of God, had little or no conception of what his companion was experiencing. He beheld the scenes on which their outward gaze rested, but not the visions that were unfolded to the inner eye. He heard the voices that sounded in their ears, of blaspheming and reviling critics, with which so few notes of comfort and encouragement blended; but he was not aware of the still small voice of Christ, which bade Paul have no fear.

It would be a sorry thing if all our life could be summed up in our journeyings to and fro on life's thoroughfares, our business engagements, or our glad intercourse with the dear ones of the home circle, if there were nothing except what a Barnabas might share, and a Luke record.

that is lacking in light, and shade, and depth, is not art. We need to dwell deep, to have a life beyond a life, to have windows in our heart that look across the river into the unseen and eternal. The pictures that fascinate are those that suggest more than they reveal, in which the blue distance fades into the heavens, and the light mist veils mountain, moorland, and sea. Oh for the peace that passeth understanding, the joy that is unspeakable and full of glory, the deep things which eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, nor the heart of man conceived! We may be thankful, therefore, that we can supplement the narrative of Luke by the words of the apostle, as he recalls what happened to him fourteen years before he wrote.

I. The description the Apostle gives of himself—"A man in Christ." He was in Christ, but that did not make him less a man. There are three qualities in a truly manly character: Resolution, Fortitude, and Courage.

Resolution—that a man will take up one high ambition and aim, prosecuting it through good and evil report, through sun and storm. How evidently this characterised the apostle's character, who pursued his purpose of ministering to the Gentiles from Antioch to Iconium, and thence to Lystra, and Derbe. The hatred of the Jews did not dissuade; the fickleness of the crowds did not daunt; the hailstone storm of stones at Lystra did not turn him aside. It was his persistent ambition to preach the Gospel, where Christ had not been already named, so that they should see to whom no tidings of Him had come, and they who had not heard should understand.

Fortitude—that a man should be able to sustain sorrow, and heart-rending anguish. Every true man needs this; for there is no one without his hours of heart-rending grief, when it seems as though the heart-strings must break, and the life-blood be shed. Then to be strong, to steer straight onward, to dare to praise God, to sit alone and keep silence, because He hath laid it upon us, to put our mouths in the dust, if so be there may be hope—this demands fortitude indeed. But Paul manifested this also, when he bore with uncomplaining nobility the relentless hatred of his fellow-countrymen, and after his stoning at Lystra, aroused from what had seemed to be his death-swoon, struggled back into the city from which he had been dragged to all appearance a corpse, and having saluted the brethren, and specially the young Timothy, started on the following morning to continue his loved work in the neighbouring cities of Lycaonia.

Courage—that a man should have a heart, like John Knox, the inscription on whose tomb tells us that one lies beneath who NEVER FEARED THE FACE OF CLAY.

Paul never lacked this courage. He never flinched from facing an amphitheatre full of raging fanatics, or braving consuls and procurators, or from withstanding an apostle who deserved to be blamed. And his heroic courage was conspicuously manifested in this very journey, that instead of taking an easier and directer route home by way of his native city and the Cilician gates, he dared to retrace his steps to each of the cities in which he had preached, confirming the souls of the disciples, exhorting them to continue in the faith, and that through many tribulations they must enter into the kingdom of God. At great personal risk he stayed long enough in each place to appoint elders in the infant churches, and to pray with fasting, commending them to God, on whom they believed.

When we become Christian men we do not forfeit these characteristics. No, but they become purified of ingredients that might vitiate and corrupt them. Apart from Christ,

RESOLUTION MAY BECOME OBSTINACY,

fortitude stoicism, and courage fatalism, as in the case of the Turks. These are exaggerations, and therefore defects. Directly, however, a man is in Christ—not only in Christ for position, but in Christ for condition; not only in Christ for standing, but in Christ in his daily walk; not only in Christ as before God, but for the environing atmosphere of his daily life—then all danger of exaggeration is done away, and the native strength of manly character is invigorated from the Lion of the Tribe of Judah, and sweetened by the meekness and gentleness of the Lamb who was slain.

II. To such, bridal moments come.—Days of the bridal of heaven and earth—high days—hours of vision and ecstasy—when the tide runs high and fast, and the cup of life brims to overflow. "I knew such an one caught up even to the third heaven, to Paradise, and heard unspeakable words, which it is not lawful for a man to utter. On behalf of such a man will I glory."

At first we might suppose that the apostle was really describing the experience of some one else. He appears to distinguish between that blessed man, whose experience he was describing, and himself. "On mine own behalf I will not glory, save in my weaknesses." But as his story proceeds and he tells us that by reason of the visions and revelations granted to him, there was danger of his being exalted overmuch, it becomes clear that he is describing some radiant experiences through which he passed during that first missionary tour—so marked, so blessed, so full of transfiguring glory, that their light had not entirely died from his heart, though a chasm of fourteen years lay between.

Such experiences may come in hours of great pain. The conjecture has been hazarded that this rapture into Paradise took place during the Apostle's stoning at Lystra. But be this as it may, he could find no words to tell what he saw and heard. The disciple whom Jesus loved had a similar experience; he too saw through heaven's open door, but with all his wealth of language he has failed to do more than ransack creation and revelation for imagery and symbols which simply leave the mind in a condition of bewilderment, like the masses of colour in Turner's later pictures. Paradise were indeed a poor place if words could describe it. The third heaven were not worthy of its Maker if its glories did not transcend our furthest imaginings. He hath set eternity in our heart, a capacity for the infinite, a yearning after the divine. In hours of reverie, when stirred by certain notes in music, especially of the violin or organ, when under the spell of a sunset on a summer's eve, when we wake up to love, we know that of thought, the signs and symbols of realities, and not the realities. Translate into words for me the sighings of the wind through the forest, and the withdrawal of the sea down a pebbly beach, and the spring sunlight playing on the hyacinth-strewn grass. You cannot! Then you know why the Apostle described his experiences in Paradise as unspeakable.

But these hours are as evanescent as they are unspeakable. Lest we should be exalted above measure, and become proud. If the Apostle feared this, much more should we. Lest we should come to trust in an experience, as an aim or object of life, instead of regarding it as God's seal and testimony, which He may withhold, if we make more of it than we ought.

WE MUST NOT LIVE IN AN EXPERIENCE, but in Jesus, from whom, as from the sun, all lovely and helpful experiences emanate. Lest we should get out of touch with men and women around us, the majority of whom do not live on mountain-tops, but in valleys, where demons possess and worry the afflicted.

But, deeper than all, such radiant hours do not linger, because our strength is not fed from them. We shall not get much working strength out of whipped cream, however pleasant it taste to the palate; and if we only rely on the raptures of Paradise for our sources of spiritual power, we shall come lamentably short of our true reinforcements. So God, in his mercy, gives them once or twice, now and again; and at the time of sending them, accompanies them with a make-weight that we may be reminded of our utter weakness and helplessness and driven to avail ourselves of his grace, in which alone is our sufficiency.

Do not expect the vision of Paradise to linger; it would dazzle you, and make life unnatural and unreal. Do not regret the passage of the blessed, rapturous hours, light of step and fleet of pace. Do not think that you have fallen from grace when their flush and glow are over. Whether they fall to your constant lot or not, or even if they do not visit you, you are still in Christ, still joined to the Lord, still accepted in the Beloved; and neither height of rapture nor depth of depression shall ever separate you from the love of God, which is in Jesus Christ our Lord. Be content, then, to turn, as Jesus did, from the rapture of Paradise, presented on the Transfiguration Mount, to take the way of the cross, through which you will become able to open Paradise to souls in despair, as was the dying thief.

III. The Discipline of Pain.—We need not stay to discuss what was the nature of Paul's thorn in the flesh. It is not very material now and here. It suffices to know that God permitted the messenger of Satan to buffet his servant; and all through that first missionary journey he had to face a long succession of buffetings. There were perils of robbers, of waters, of mountain-passes, and of violent crowds; but, besides all these, there was the lacerating thorn.

If he suffered from weak eyes, or some distressing form of ophthalmia, as might be gathered from the eagerness of his Galatian converts to give him their eyes, and from the clumsy letters with which he wrote his postscripts to his epistles, the pain would be greatly aggravated as he faced the keen blasts that swept the mountain plateau on which the Pisidian Antioch was situated.

Was it during this journey that he besought the Lord on three separate occasions for deliverance, and received the assurance that though the thorn were left, more than sufficient grace would be given? It may have been so. And if so, like a peal of bells, at Antioch, Iconium, Derbe, and Lystra, he must have heard the peal of those tender words: My grace is sufficient, sufficient, SUFFICIENT for thee. My strength is made perfect in weakness.

O men and women in Christ, be strong and brave, to do or suffer! Life is not long. It is more necessary to fulfil our course and to do a good day's work than to be happy. Remember that God is working with and beside you (Acts xiv. 27). Ask for the faith to behold and keep step with Him. It is for us to march straight onwards; it is for Him to open the doors of opportunity and success.

"The Lepers are Cleansed."

100 BAPTISMS AT PURULIA.

THE Mission to Lepers was able to report upwards of 1000 Christian lepers in connection with the various asylums at the end of 1896, and this number has been increased by 100 more just baptised at the Purulia Asylum at one time. This is probably a unique event—100 of these poor afflicted outcasts with one accord "putting on Christ," so far as outward profession is concerned. The history of this asylum has been one unbroken record of growth and blessing. Commenced just over nine years ago, it has been enlarged repeatedly to meet the urgent entreaties for admission from the lepers, till now it contains some 400 inmates, of whom about forty are leper children, and as many more are untainted children whose parents are lepers.

The Rev. H. Uffmann, the devoted superintendent, and his equally devoted wife and helper, were consecrated to this work in a specially solemn manner. About the time of its commencement their eldest daughter, then about fourteen years of age, was sent home to Germany, where she developed leprosy of a malignant type, and died after about a year's suffering.

This terrible sorrow was accepted as a dedication by the parents to work on behalf of lepers, and nobly have they carried it out. Something like 1000 inmates have passed through the asylum or are now in it, and of these by far the greater number have, there is every reason to believe, been savingly converted. On this point, and to show that this baptism of 100 is not the result of pressure or of indiscriminate encouragement, the testimony of Dr. Revie may be quoted. After a visit to the asylum, he writes:—

"Mr. Uffmann deserves all that has been said in his praise by others. The most noticeable feature of the asylum, and the one which first struck me, is the happy, contented expression on the faces of the inmates. They seem to be really happy in spite of the terrible disease which clings to them. I am satisfied now—I was in doubt before coming—that the conversion to Christianity of almost all the inmates is a real and not merely a nominal thing!"

When it is remembered that these, our leper brothers and sisters in Christ, can be supported, that is, fed, clothed, medically treated, and have the Gospel daily preached to them, for the sum of £6 per head per annum, it will be recognised that this is a most fruitful form of missionary effort. The extra pressure on the Society's funds, owing to the famine, has been (and is) very great, and extensions are urgently needed both at Purulia and elsewhere. Communications may be addressed, Mr. J. Jackson, hon. sec. for London and District, 186, Aldersgate-street, E.C.

On the Way Out.*

THERE was a little crowd to welcome us on our arrival at Tientsin—Mrs. Lees, Mrs. Bryan, Mr. King, Dr. and Mrs. Hart, Dr. Smith, and Mr. Grant (who has come up from Chi-Chou to escort me back there). I felt at home almost from the first minute. The first evening I was here they had their united monthly missionary prayer meeting, which is held in each of the two American and two English missions in turns, and sometimes in the C.I.M. quarters. There was a large room full at that gathering, and the new arrivals were expected to speak, so I asked for something to say, and it was given me. It is wonderful how God supplies the needs of every hour and situation if only we will obey and trust.

The next day I visited the Hospital with Dr. Smith, and enjoyed it all very much. Some of the students from the Government Medical School look in, and Dr. Smith teaches them a little. Some of them are earnest young Christians from Hong Kong, Foochow, etc. There is also a University at Tientsin, where young men are given an English education. Afterwards the Government expects their services, but pays them. Many of them come from our Mission schools in various parts. The house-surgeon (one of Dr. Mackenzie's old students) is a thorough Christian, and wants to influence the students for his Master. Things are looking very bright, and we have a splendid opportunity among these young fellows.

I saw a man-of-war sailor there who looked deeply interested. During the last few years much splendid work has been done, mostly by Miss Kerr and other ladies, amongst the men of the English gunboats and of the American ships. Any amount of work is being done here, and such a bright happy family of workers. It is quite an inspiration to be here, especially when one hears of baptisms and real heart-changes on all hands. I find Tientsin less dreary and desolate-looking than I had expected. The L.M.S. compound is quite a large piece of ground, and contains Mr. Lees's house, the Kings' and Bryans' houses, the ladies' houses, and Dr. Smith's house. The American Methodist Espiscopal compound joins ours.

When Miss Smith and I arrived here, we found the new man for Pekin (Mr. Howard Smith, of Australia) waiting to travel up with her. They set off the other day in two house-boats, Mr. Smith sharing his with a Mr. Stoppe, of the Norwegian Mission, and who is going to Mongolia. They are both very nice fellows, and the latter was a minister in America for years, before deciding on missionary work. I have been feeling lately how much I need my love for God strengthened if I am to be any use here.

NOTHING BUT LOVING TRUST IN HIM

and obedience will enable me to persevere and conquer I feel sure. The Chinese are repulsive often, the streets narrow and evil-smelling, the temptations to self-indulgence are many and strong, and it is not easy here, any more than elsewhere, to live the Christ-life. Love to Christ and personal experience of Him, and of the presence and influence of the Holy Spirit in us, alone can keep us true, faithful, and untiring. I feel sure that love and experience can make us love the Chinese too, and can enable us to overcome all natural shrinking and other difficulties. Please pray for all of us here, that we may love Him more and learn day by day to know Him better.

Mr. Grant and I left on Wednesday for Hsiao Chang, and last night I spoke to about sixteen or eighteen Chinese English-speaking students, many of them Christians, in Dr. Hart's drawing-room. He has them there every Saturday and on Sunday afternoons for a sort of Bible-class as well. They are such bright young fellows. At a communion service on Sunday I was surprised to see how many stayed. Dr. Tin and the hospital assistants were there, and I could not help thinking that but for missions those men would have been heathens still.

I do not find the Chinese language either so difficult or so dry as I had expected, the natives are surprised that we foreigners can learn their language so quickly. The Chinese are a very loveable set of people, when one begins to like them and they know that you do; and they are very lively and good natured. My teacher has had a hard time of it lately. His father, a fiery old heathen, who often used to beat him although he is forty years old now, died the other day. The uncles are heathen too, and it was a heathen funeral, of course. The teacher joined in the heathen rites, for which he will probably come under discipline in the church. None of the Christians went to the funeral. He is a B.A., and therefore a man of some little influence in his native village, and his failure to stand firm will make it harder for the other Christians there to do so in similar circumstances. Truly we Britishers know very little of what it means to endure hardness. I feel quite ashamed when I think of my position here, and of what the poorest coolies we employ have suffered

FOR CHRIST'S SAKE AND OVERCOME.

Mr. Rees is a splendid fellow, and so wise and patient in his dealings with the natives. His study is the heart of this extensive mission, and all the troubled ones come to him when they cannot get relief elsewhere. When you consider that we have twenty churches in twenty different villages, 537 members scattered in ninety-eight villages, over an area of fifty or sixty miles by seventy or eighty, with a population of 2,000,000, and then think how busy a minister at home is with only one church, you get an idea of how busy a missionary, who really goes in for his work heart and soul, may become.

The work here is prospering splendidly, and inquiries are numerous; new centres open up in marvellous ways. For instance, Bao Shien Shung, the pastor here, has just come back from a village, thirty miles from any other station, if I remember right, where he has been examining candidates for baptism. Some time ago a poor labourer, one of our Christians in a distant village, found himself obliged to go to the village mentioned in order to get work for the winter, to keep himself from starving. He took his books with him, however, and managed to tell others something about the "dowlee" (doctrine) while he supported himself by making mats. Bao now reports earnest and intelligent Christians in sixteen families, and they want a church and preacher of their own. We want preachers for places like that badly, but have not the money for them. Already the missionaries here are supporting a boys' school and girls' school and several preachers out of their salaries and what money they can get from a few friends at home. We have

MANY INTERESTING INSTANCES OF CONVERSION.

Mr. Lees was travelling in this district and came across a man with a very serious and severe disease. He could do nothing for him, but took him to Tientsin, where Dr. Fraser, the community doctor, saw him. He pronounced the case hopeless. The man came to Mr. Lees in distress, and Mr. Lees said, "Now you go home and pray, and we will pray for you too, and perhaps God will cure you." He said, "If God cures me, I will become a Christian and give up my house to be a church." In six months he was completely cured, and he kept his word, and now his place is one of our churches.

OUR DAILY HOMILY.

SUNDAY, June 27.

"Let him take hold of my strength, that he may make peace with Me; yea, let him make peace with Me."—Isa. xxvii. 5. R.V.

THESE are the alternatives. You must either resist God, or yield to Him. If the former, it is as though thorns and briars should fight flame. There is no fury in God; He has no desire for the death of the ungodly, but that he should turn from his unrighteousness, and live; but if the blinded soul persists in flinging itself into collision with Him, it must suffer finally and irretrievably. But notice the double invitation, "Let him take hold of my strength, let him make peace."

Where shall I find his strength? the sinner asks. In the mighty mountains girded with strength, in the arch of the sky, in the break of the ocean wave? No, not in these; but where that dying man pours out his soul unto death, and is numbered with the transgressors. But surely there is the weakness of God, not the strength! Nay, but it is the strength. The weakness of God is stronger than men. "We preach Christ crucified, to the Jews a stumbling block, and to Greeks foolishness, but unto them which are called, Christ the power of God."

Come hither, soul of man, the strength of God is in that pierced, transfixed hand. Take hold of it, it will lift thee. In Him God is reconciled, there is nothing to do but take the offered mercy, accept his reconciliation, and be at peace. God is reconciled, be thou reconciled. God has made peace, be thou at peace. God reaches out his hand, take hold of it. God draws nigh, draw nigh to Him And in all time of thy weakness or fear, in the hour of death, and in the day of judgment, be sure and take hold of his strength.

MONDAY, June 28.

"In that day shall the Lord be for a crown of glory, and for a diadem of beauty, unto the residue of his people, for a spirit of judgment to him that sitteth in judgment, and for strength to them that turn the battle at the gate."—Isa. xxviii. 5-6.

What many seek in the exhilarating stimulus of wine, God's people seek and find in Himself. Notice the variety of his attributes. There is something for everyone. Are you eager for glory? There is no reputation or fame equal to having his smile, the consciousness of being well pleasing to Him. Do you recognise the deformity and unloveliness of your character, and desire beauty? Let the beauty of the Lord your God be upon you. Do you desire a right judgment in all things, so as to be able to direct large and important undertakings? Your Saviour is the wise and wonderful Counsellor. Submit your judgment to Him, that He may think through your mind, or direct you to a just conclusion. Are there days when the enemy threatens to carry your soul by assault, and is already at the gates? Then turn to Jesus, and He will be strength to you. Yes, and in great crises, when evil is predominant, and the citadel of faith and righteousness threatens to be submerged in a weltering chaos, when no other help is near, as you look to the captain of the Lord's Host, you will suddenly find yourself able to roll back the dark battalions, in the very hour of victory.

Let us live in closer fellowship with our glorious Lord. They who receive the abundance of his grace shall reign. Out and his fulness may all receive, and grace for grace. "In that day" on Christ's lips always meant the day of Pentecost, and it is only through the grace of the Holy Spirit that we can avail ourselves of the treasured resources of Christ.

TUESDAY, June 29.

"The meek also shall increase their joy in the Lord, and the poor among men shall rejoice in the Holy One of Israel."—Isa. xxix. 19.

"Blessed are the meek," "Blessed are the poor in spirit," said the Lord. Why are meek and poor men so well-to-do, that the Lord blesses them, and that the prophet asserts their joy? Meekness is different from lowliness and humility. It is our attitude in the presence of our detractors and persecutors, not retaliating, or opposing force to force, but bowing in silence and submission before high-handed wrong. It was in such a spirit of meekness that Jesus suffered Himself to be led as a lamb to the slaughter; and instead of calling for legions of angels, suffered Caiaphas' armed band to bind Him.

This spirit is not natural to us. It is in our nature to retaliate and hold our own. But the Holy Spirit waits to reproduce in us the meekness of Jesus. Then, when you meet all injury and unkindness with this unfailing Christian courtesy, bending like a rush before the storm, to rise when it has passed over, you will have joy. Joy, because God will comfort you: because you have not lost yourself in the heat of passion, and have tried to turn others away from their evil purpose: because your hands could not have vindicated or extricated yourself, as God's have: and because you realise that the Kingdom lies in the direction of the patience of Jesus Christ.

Those who fret and fume and storm through life, always standing on their rights, and insisting on being respected and consulted, are in perpetual perturbation. But the meek inherit the earth. All the best comes to them at last. God makes them his special charge. And as they tread the path of Jesus, they too rejoice as He did (Matt. xi. 25).

WEDNESDAY, June 30.

"Therefore will the Lord wait that He may be gracious unto you."—Isa. xxx. 18.

As long as the people tried to help themselves, sending ambassadors to Egypt, and seeking an alliance against the invader, God could do nothing for them, He could only wait until they returned to simple reliance upon Himself. In returning to rest they would be saved, in quietness and confidence would be their strength. At first they said, No. They fought the idea of simple trust in God. It seemed impossible to believe that if they simply rested on Him He would do better for them than their most strenuous exertions. And all the while God was waiting till every expedient failed, and they were in such a condition that He could step in and save them.

How like this is to much in our lives! It is long before we learn the lesson of returning to rest, of quietness and confidence. We will trust in chariots and horses, and ride upon the swift. It is, of course, right to use the means, but our strong temptation is to put them in the place of God, and to trust them. You are trying to save yourself from the just penalty of your sin, from the pursuit of your foes, from perplexing combinations and complications of circumstances; you have been running backwards and forwards, flurried and excited. At how many doors you have knocked to find them closed, and all the while God has been waiting to be gracious to you, waiting till you came to the end of yourself; waiting, till like a spent struggler in the water, you cease from your mad efforts and cast yourself back upon his strong everlasting love. He is exalted to have mercy, but He is a God of method. He can only save in one way. Blessed are all they that wait for Him. The soul that waits for God will always find the God for whom it waits.

THURSDAY, July 1.

"As birds flying, so will the Lord of Hosts protect Jerusalem; He will protect and deliver it."—Isa. xxxi. 5.

It was a beautiful conception, for Jerusalem was perched on Mount Zion as some bird's nest in the cleft of the rocks. Lo! Sennacherib approaches as the hawk, hovering above the fledgelings of the nest. But just as the mother bird gathers her young under her wing and places herself between her treasures and threatening peril, so would the eternal God spread those wings, under which Ruth came to trust in the old time, over the entire city. To Isaiah there was no cause for fear when Sennacherib's legions were encamped on the mountains of Zion. He, at least, realised that the pinions of Almightiness were between the cowering citizens and the dreaded foe. Warm and safe was such abiding.

How wonderful that Jesus should have appropriated this metaphor, and spoken of Himself as willing to gather Jerusalem under his wing to save her from a more terrible fate. Does it not bespeak his consciousness of Deity that He should hide the people under the shadow of his care?

This may be our daily portion. The Lord of Hosts will be strong as the lion that growls over his prey undismayed by the multitude of shepherds that shout at him, and He will be sweet and soft and gentle as a mother bird. Always believe that Jesus stands between you and what you dread. Even now He is passing over you. Do you not hear Him saying, "If you seek Me, let these go their way"? Turn to Him though you may have greatly revolted. Let his pleading entreaty be met, better than Israel did, of whom He said sorrowfully, "I would and ye would not."

FRIDAY, July 2.

"The work of righteousness shall be peace, and the effect of righteousness quietness and confidence for ever."—Isa. xxxii. 17.

Righteousness must precede peace. The writer of the Epistle to the Hebrews clearly affirms that Melchizedek, the type of Christ, is first King of Righteousness and then King of Peace. In Rom. iii. the apostle shows clearly that the righteousness of God has been vindicated, and will be imparted to those that believe, and then says, "Being justified ...let us have peace with God."

Many seek for peace apart from righteousness. They refuse to adjust some wrong in their lives which calls aloud against them. They refuse to permit the light of God's Spirit to ransack their past, because they are conscious that to do so will expose themselves to the inevitable need of confession and restitution, and as they will not submit to the laying of the foundations of peace they miss the peace. How blessed that for evermore our peace is secured! We shall never need to leave our peaceful habitation, or to quit our sure dwellings. However it may hail to the downful of the forest trees, storms shall never drive us from our quiet resting-places, because they are founded upon the righteousness as well as the grace of God.

In your dealings with men be sure to go to the bottom of disputes and disagreements. There is always a right and a wrong in any question. It is for you to lay the foundations of justice at any cost, assured that peace will inevitably result sooner or later. Honeyed words will not abide, but just deeds are a permanent basis for a happy and useful career.

SATURDAY, July 3.

"O Lord, be gracious unto us; we have waited for Thee. Be Thou their arm every morning, our salvation also in the time of trouble."—Isa. xxxiii. 2.

This is a lovely morning prayer, and the beauty of it is that it is so sweetly unselfish. It begins by appealing for the grace of God, but goes on to ask that He would be the arm of loving support and deliverance to others before the suppliant turns back to ask for salvation for himself in time of trouble. "Be Thou their arm...our salvation also." If you want God's arm for yourself ask that it may be given to someone else. If you want salvation in the time of trouble, pray that God would give his arm for the help of your neighbour.

We all want that arm every morning. The gladdest, fairest day that ever broke for us, or will break, must have been marked, or will be marked, by pitfalls and snares. The path may begin with greensward, but before the evening it will have opened upon stones and steep ascents, and you will need the arm of your beloved on which to lean. But you will never ask for it in vain. It will be always at hand.

Is not this a comprehensive prayer for dear ones far away or near? Be their arm, Heavenly Father, to-day. If I may not be there to give the strength of my arm, let thine be their stay, and Thou wilt do better than had been possible for me. Then, when the hour of trouble comes, and you ask that He should be your salvation, you will find stability, abundance of salvation, wisdom, and knowledge, for the fear of the Lord will be your treasure (v. 6), and the glorious Lord will be a place of broad rivers and streams.

Mr. Crab and his Friend.

"Two are better than one."—Ecclesiastes iv. 9.

BY REV. G. HAY MORGAN.

WHEN you have been at the seaside in the summer you have often paddled in the little pools that have been left by the last tide. You have noticed in these pools small crabs creeping about among the seaweed at the bottom of the water. Perhaps you have been rather careless in taking hold of Mr. Crab, and to show you how insulted he feels at such liberties being taken with him, he gives your finger a very nasty pinch with his sharp claw. As soon as you have got over the fright you called him a cruel, vicious thing, because you never meant to hurt him.

Well, I'll tell you why Mr. Crab is so irritable. He is very poor, and finds it extremely hard to get a living. No sooner does he discover a nice little morsel than half-a-dozen others come round and want to share it with him. These envious crabs don't stand quietly round with wistful looks, they try to snatch it from him, and then there's a fight, and very often our friend finishes up with a leg less than when he started. Of course he can't have a wooden one, so he has to stump about as best he can. Now, some of these crabs have found that it does not pay to go on losing their legs at this rate, so they get another fish to do the fighting for them while they search for food.

When next you go to the Zoo, if you look in the fishes' house you will see in the centre some glass tanks, in which there is a number of little creatures of different colours, red, white, and green. These are called sea-anemones. They are like a large reel of cotton standing on end. The hole in the top is their mouth, and round the mouth there is a ring of long thread-like arms.

When Mr. Crab has done as much fighting as he can afford to do, he picks up several sea-anemones, and puts them on his back. They seem to know what it means, as well as if the crab were to say, "Look how those cruel people have knocked me about. They have snapped off two of my legs already." "I wish I could help you, my poor old fellow," says the sea-anemone. "Well, you can; you just stick on my back, and if you'll see that nobody hurts me, I'll find you plenty of food." Whether they talk like that or not, the anemone sticks on, and when the crab finds any food he begins to eat it, but in eating it twirls three-fourths of it into the water above him; the anemone puts out a couple of its many arms, catches it, and throws it into its own mouth. So Mr. Crab keeps his part of the agreement. Then, if an enemy comes near, the anemone does his part of the business. Those long arms of his are covered with poison darts, and he shoots hundreds of these at the foe until the poor creature is driven off in great fright.

You see how wisely God has ordered matters, that these two fishes shall live together and help each other. But the same God who made Mr. Crab and his friend the Anemone made you and me. We can't live happily by ourselves. It is impossible for us to be like Robinson Crusoe, living independently of everyone else. We were created to help one another.

In the family there are sometimes those who always want their own way, and to have the best of everything that's going. But they must learn to "give and take." In this case it is more blessed to give than to take, because we always like those people better to whom we do a kindness than those who do a kindness to us. This is the short cut to happiness. I think Christ must have been the happiest man who ever lived, for He always "went about doing good." That boy will have the softest pillow at night who has shared his treasures during the day. Sir Edwin Arnold said that the reason why so many people committed suicide was because they couldn't do any good to others. No doubt the reason why many people are so miserable is because their life is so useless. Don't wait until you can do great things.

Do the work that's nearest,
Though it's dull at whiles,
Helping, when we meet them,
Lame dogs over stiles.

And while you are thus working for others you will be happy, for you will follow Jesus and "enter into the joy of thy Lord."

A Child of God.

THERE was a ripple of excitement all through the orphan asylum, for a great lady had come in her carriage to take little Jane home with her.

Jane herself was bewildered with the thought. The kind matron led her down the wide stairway, and as she passed the hall door she saw the shining carriage, the fine horses, the liveried servants, and it seemed like a dream.

"I hope she is glad to go," said the great lady, in her gentle tone. "Do you want to go home with me and be my child, my dear?"

"I don't know," said Jane, timidly.

"But I am going to give you beautiful clothes, and a gold ring, and a box of candy, and books, and dolls, and blocks, and a swing. Now, do you want to go?"

"I don't know," said the child still frightened.

"You shall have a little room of your own, with a beautiful bed and table and chair; you shall have a bird in a cage, and a little dog with a silver collar. Don't you want to go with me, Jane?"

There was a moment's silence, and then the little one said anxiously, "But what am I to do for all this?"

The lady burst into tears. "Only to love me and be my child," she said, and she folded the little girl in her arms.

God finds us orphaned and desolate and defiled with sin, and poor and naked and blind. He adopts us into his family, and gives us all that we need in this life, with care and protection, and his own name, and forgiveness, and the companionship of the Holy Spirit, and an inheritance in glory; and all that he asks in return is that we should love him and be his children.—Children's Record.

Loving Back.

LITTLE Alice was playing with her doll while her mother was writing. When her mother had finished the writing she told Alice that she might come and sit on her lap, and Alice said:

"I'm so glad! I wanted to love you so much, mamma."

"Did you, darling?" and she clasped her tenderly. "I am very glad that my little girl loves me so, but I fancy that you were not very lonely while I was writing; you and dolly seemed to be having a happy time together."

"Yes, mamma, we were; but after awhile I got tired of loving her."

"And why?"

"Oh, because she never loves me back."

"And is that why you love me?"

"That is one why, mamma; but not the first one, nor the best."

"And what is the first and best?"

"Why, mamma, don't you guess?" and the blue eyes grew very bright and earnest. "It's because you loved me when I was too little to love you back; that's why I love you so."

That was a very good reason, and even mamma herself could not have given a better one. That is one reason, also, why we should love the dear Lord: "Because He first loved us," and died to redeem us from sin.—Our Little People.

Bible Searcher (No. 77).

[The Searcher this week is a little different from the usual form. Say which verse in each chapter is alluded to. Children under TEN do any three; under FOURTEEN any six. As this involves very little writing, give the extra time to reading about the articles referred to, in which no doubt your parents will be pleased to help you.]

BOTTLES, BAGS, AND BASKETS.

Symbols of Truth, Signs of Blessing, and the Similes of Service are the spiritual lessons we can gather from this group of familiar objects. They are only common things, but when set apart by the Holy Spirit as illustrations of Divine truth, then they are treasures indeed. And we might arrange them this way, to secure the suggested truth: Bottles of water, bags of treasure, and baskets of blessing. Let us carefully open them and examine their contents, in order to enjoy the blessings.

1. Bottles of Water.
   - Bottles of water—the world's emptiness. Gen. xxi.—Failure.
   - Bottles of Heaven—Divine goodness. Job. xxxviii.—Fulness.
   - Bottles of water—real sympathy. Ps. lvi.—Fondness.
   - Spring tears, rain water, and eye water.
2. Bags of Treasure.
   - Bag sealed up—our sins. Job xiv.—Shame.
   - Bag with holes—our folly. Hag. i.—Simplicity.
   - Bag of the thief—our covetousness. John xii.—Selfishness.

   What treasure to be sealed up, and the seal will be broken soon.
3. Baskets of Blessing.
   - Basket of blessing promised. Deut. xxviii.—Promise.
   - Basket of fruit ripe. Amos viii.—Picture.
   - Basket of bread gathered. Mark vi.—Provision.

Providence is God's great basket by which He conveys his blessings to us, and God's measure is overflowing fulness.

Our hearts may be bottles to hold the water of life (John iv. 14), our lives, like bags, may gather up treasure for eternity (Matt vi. 20), and our service may be as baskets of blessing we minister to others in the Lord's name (Mark vi. 43).

UNCLE TOM.

The Boyer Mission to Cripple Children in East London is now merged in the Ragged School Union, who have undertaken all responsibility in connection with it. We are desired to say that Mr. C. L. Boyer, who, we understand, is now in America, is not authorised to collect funds for this work or to represent it in any way.

Rev. William H. Milburn arrived last week in London. He has arranged to preach in London and several places in England and Scotland during the next few weeks. Mr. Milburn is the "blind chaplain" of the United States Senate, and his prayers at the opening of sessions of that body have made him famous in two continents. The chaplain is a Congregationalist, and was President Cleveland's pastor. He is a venerable man of over seventy, of patriarchal appearance, with long white hair. A common sight in Washington is that of his daughter accompanying him every morning to the Capitol.

Lingfield Training Colony.

SOME of the ancient myths and legends were suggestive of much practical truth. The fabled Antœus, we are told, gained fresh life and strength every time he was brought into contact with mother earth. Nowadays, when the problems of our giant and ever-growing city populations press hardly upon us, we are coming to see that a return to the land, with its simpler life and more natural surroundings, is in many cases the way of deliverance. It is this idea that dominates the Duxhurst Colony for inebriate women; and the same experiment is being worked out at the Lingfield Training Colony for men who have been stranded on the shores of the ocean of life.

The Lingfield experiment has now been in operation for more than a year, and its promoters have reason for thanksgiving and hopefulness as to the present and probable future results. One of our representatives recently visited the scene of operations (a lovely location near the junction of Surrey, Sussex, and Kent) and found many things to gladden and encourage the Christian heart. Our reporter accompanied Rev. F. B. Meyer, who has taken a deep and active interest in the effort from the beginning, and who visited the place to note the progress made, as well as to have some helpful Christian intercourse with the residents on the farm. The house-father and house-mother were absent on holiday, but Rev. J. L. Brooks, of Hammersmith, the virtual superintendent kindly acted as guide to our representative in viewing the many departments of work. Mr. Brooks is undoubtedly the right man in the right place at Lingfield, having regard both to personal endowment and past experience; if he can be finally induced to devote his whole time and attention to this valuable experiment, there is reason to anticipate great and far-reaching results.

So much was seen and mentally noted during this visit that it is really difficult to know where to begin and where to end. The men in residence naturally claim the first words. There was a baker's dozen of them at the time of the visit; besides one "Christian brother," a young gentleman from a North of England family of good position, who is rendering splendid service at Lingfield, both in the way of scientific tuition in agriculture and in sympathetic comradeship.

ONE GREAT NEED OF THE COLONY

at this moment is a few more such men. Some of the life histories of the "stranded" men now at Lingfield are of pathetic and even tragic interest, but obviously one cannot particularise. All have been commended to the colony by various Christian workers interested in this movement for the uplifting of the unemployed. Every endeavour is made to find out a man's special gift or capacity, and it is remarkable how many of these brethren in this small community have fallen into niches on the farm for which they have peculiar qualifications. Others, of course, have to be taught and trained from the start. But all find something to do, and they have to do it; for here the wholesome apostolic law is in active operation—that if a man will not work, neither shall he eat. This law, of course, as well as all the other necessary regulations of the household, is interpreted and applied in the spirit of love and of Christian brotherliness. For that spirit is one of the foundation stones of the Colony.

As to the work done, it may be described as multifarious. The farm comprises 200 acres of land, and under Mr. Brooks's management the fields are being devoted to the growing of many different sorts of crops, so as to secure the best scope for the training of the residents, as well as a satisfactory financial outcome. Being as yet in its early stages, it must take some time before the experiment takes permanent shape. There are areas devoted to arable crops; grazing for stock is provided for; dairy work is a special feature; fruit cultivation is receiving ample attention; vegetables of all sorts are being grown; while the hatching and rearing of fowls are in process, according to the latest and most scientific methods. There is also a rabbit run, not to mention other subsidiary ventures in extracting the best results from the fertile bosom of "mother earth." It will thus be seen that monotony in work is avoided, and that variety, the spice of life, lends its added charm to the healthful surroundings of outdoor occupation, in a corner of Surrey which for sylvan beauty at this season of the year it would be hard indeed to beat. A town-tied worker, like the present writer, could not avoid feeling somewhat envious of the lot of these Lingfield brethren, who rise in the morning to the carol of the larks, and are lulled to sleep in these early summer nights by the glorious anthem of the

NIGHTINGALES IN THE ADJACENT COPSE.

After all, a man himself is more than his work or his environment; though the latter are not to be despised as aids, where character has degenerated through evil habit, and the will power has grown weak. This Lingfield colony was originally suggested and founded by Dr. J. B. Paton, of Nottingham, as an English imitation of Pastor Von Bodelschwingh's many-sided institution in Westphalia, described so vividly in Miss Julie Sutter's "Colony of Mercy." The mainspring of that marvellous work is love to Christ and to the souls of men—most of all to the broken down, the disabled, and the afflicted. So it is at Lingfield; with whatever differences of method may be necessitated by English ideas and social sanctions. The work has been undertaken primarily by the "Christian Union for Social Service," of which Mr. Brooks is the honorary director. In an admirable address which he lately delivered to the London Board of Congregational Ministers he gave the following outline of the part that Lingfield is designed to play in this comparatively new social endeavour, so far as Great Britain is concerned:—

At present there is but the farm and a few unemployed men. But our idea travels far beyond this. There are in London over 10,000 crippled children whose life is a sore affliction to themselves and a burden to others. Many of these could do certain kinds of work if they were instructed in it, and a few weeks in the country would certainly mean improvement of health. Now, our next endeavour will be to build a Training Home for cripples, and then prepare work for them in many pleasant ways, such as sorting seeds, bunching flowers, and making baskets for the packing of goods, thus employing little fingers that would otherwise be listlessly hanging down. The great suffering class of epileptics, too, is engaging our attention, and we hope to take a few of these in charge immediately, and ultimately to provide hope and homes for many of them, so that wholesome employment may help them to forget sorrow and facilitate the cure of the curable. Then we are desirous to erect Homes for inebriate men, as has been done for women at Duxhurst, so that sun and soil, aided by skilled hands and loving hearts, may exercise their healing influences on these deplorable cases, until some at least are delivered from the bondage of corruption. And, meanwhile, in the midst of this redemptive work, we are to be training devoted men and women to a manifold ministry, as the fathers and mothers, sisters and brothers, teachers and friends, of Homes like these in different parts of the country.

A kindred subject, in which, as a Social Service Union we have a deep and practical interest, is the relation of our rural churches to the land. The acquisition of small holdings by men able to make the most of them is in many cases rendered impossible. Here is an industrious man with some agricultural and horticultural knowledge, but to whom successful town life seems to be impossible. Two such we have at the Colony now. These have had half an acre of land allotted to each of them. The Colony will supply seeds at cost price. After their hours of labour for the Colony are fulfilled, they will work their own half-acre, the Colony holding their returns on their behalf. In the course of time, through an advance of money from the Agricultural Banks Association, they may acquire a small holding from our present farm, and soon become their own masters. Yet all the while they will be under advice, and have their needs supplied by a friendly hand. Men who have retained character and ability, and saved some money, can, through us, enter upon small holdings, and in this way bring strength to our villages, and at the same time the most healthy form of "Church aid," for town doles for the succour of our village ministry cannot be relied upon as either desirable, effective, or permanent. We cannot afford to let our villages be depopulated and our country churches die. Among the social and economic needs of to-day, which are also largely religious, none is more obvious or pressing than that of restoring the husbandman to the land. Unless something of this kind is done our village churches will disappear, and with them will be dried up the best life-sources of our town and city churches.

It will be seen that the prospective programme of this movement is sufficiently large and comprehensive to engage the interest and the co-operation of the Christian churches throughout the country. It is certainly to be hoped that that co-operation will be forthcoming in abundant measure. The present financial needs of the work—for proposed immediate extensions and requisite buildings—is put at £1000; truly a small sum when one considers the possibilities of the work. Another need already alluded to is that of true and capable helpers in the shape of "Christian brothers" to guide in different departments of work under the direction of the superintendent, and to exercise a good spiritual influence on those with whom they may be associated. An appeal for men of this stamp has been sent out by Rev. F. B. Meyer and Dr. J. B. Paton, of Nottingham, in which they say:—

We expect soon to receive thirty men at the colony. The most important and essential part of our training consists in the associating with the men who come to us from the workhouses, or who are rescued by the mission workers of our churches, of "Christian brothers," who are full of sympathy with these men who have fallen into great poverty, many of whom are broken in health and spirit, and some of whom have been degraded by their pauper life and workhouse companionship. Such men must breathe in the colony a new moral atmosphere, quick with the vital elements of pureness and truth, bracing them up to a sense of manly vigour and independence. This can only be given by the example and friendship of earnest fellow-workers who in the spirit of Christ will associate with them in the work of the field, and in the social pleasures of the evening.

We wish also to make our colony at Lingfield a Training School for men who may assume responsible direction as house father or as foreman in the new labour colonies that are likely to be established in different parts of the country in connection with Boards of Guardians or by Christian enterprise. And there are other kinds of service in asylums, hospitals, and prisons for which the training and experience of our Christian brothers will be very useful. We need now eight or ten men as Christian brothers a Lingfield to engage in this which there awaits them. Those who wish for further information respecting the duties and prospects of these Christian brothers will please apply to our honorary director, Rev. J. L. Brooks, Training Colony, Lingfield, Surrey.

We have special pleasure in giving publicity to this weighty appeal, and trust it may be responded to by Divinely-qualified brethren, who will count it a privilege to devote life and energy to such a Christ-like work. It ought to be added that, as secretary to the Christian Union for Social Service, Rev. J. F. B. Tinling, of City-road Congregational Church, has done good and able service.

Earth's Coming Jubilee.

WE wait thy coming, gracious Lord,
As happy saints before,
The homage of our loyal hearts
At thy approach, to pour—
To chant once more the tale of love,
From sin and sorrow free,
Before the universal joy
Of earth's glad jubilee.

Yet if awhile, 'mid glory's scenes,
Thou dost thy joy delay—
The joy of having us with Thee
In heaven's unclouded ray—
Still, still we wait, for well we know
Our rest must be with Thee,
Before the universal joy
Of earth's glad jubilee.

Till then our waiting spirits join
In songs of faith and love,
Which from our happy hearts below
Shall reach to Thine above.
For Thou hast told us Thou wilt come
And set our spirits free,
Before the universal joy
Of earth's glad jubilee.

Thy church with holy ardour waits,
The nuptial song to swell;
Her heart of hearts, her joy of joys,
Her love of loves to tell.
Her portion Thou, and Thou her own,
In bliss above to be,
Before the universal joy
Of earth's glad jubilee!

ALBERT MIDLANE

From Rev. David Baron.

FROM Tarnov, Mr. Gordon and myself went to Przemysl, a busy town on the San, with a population of 37,000, more than half of whom are Jews. The Leipzig Society's missionary, Pastor Hohne, gladly attached himself to us during our stay, and joined in our testimony for Christ. Among others who visited us in Przemysl was a man who is famed throughout Galicia and beyond as a Jewish poet. He is one of the most gifted Jews I have ever met. Though living among the Jews, and unbaptized, he openly adores Christ as the Son of God. It filled our hearts with special hopefulness for the conversion of Israel to hear this man sing, in the presence of other Jews, some most touching pieces, composed by himself, about Christ as the Son of God and the only hope of Israel. A pamphlet of his poems in Yiddish has recently been published in Leipzig, and consists entirely of sacred pieces about Christ. Such an appearance in Galicia, which is still the centre of Jewish fanaticism against Christ, is indeed a sign of the times.

In Lemberg, the capital of Galicia, we spent four days of mission work, varied by happy fellowship with a few families of Christian workers who reside in this great spiritual desert. Here we met several Jewish brethren, who though living among their own people are true believers in Christ. It was touching to hear from one, a very intelligent and independent man, that he and another meet secretly three times a week, and, after locking themselves in a little room, "for fear of the Jews," read the New Testament, and pray together in the name of Christ. Their own families and relations are so fanatical, and the Jews here are in such numbers and have such power, that if they were discovered they would be in danger of their lives. In Stanislau we received a warm welcome from Pastor Zöckler, who is doing good work among the German Colonists, and Mr. Lucky. The latter is in some respects a very remarkable man. A Galician by birth, and a great Talmudist, he was finishing his studies in the Rabbinical College in Berlin, when, through the reading of the New Testament, the light of Christ broke into his soul. He sacrificed everything, and has now for years been living in fanatical Galicia, among his own people, in lack of all things (for his principle is to take nothing from missions or missionaries), but in his life and work bearing witness for Christ. He publishes a little paper in Hebrew called Ha-Eduth ("The Testimony") which many a Jew reads on account of the beauty of its language. Like some others of his brethren, he holds, what I believe to be a mistaken position, that Hebrew Christians ought to conform to the customs of their nation in the matter of the observance of the Sabbath, circumcision, etc., but whatever difference of view there may be on these subjects, it cannot be but a matter of thankfulness to everyone who longs for the salvation of the scattered people that men of this stamp are found in the very camp of Israel.

From Stanislau we went to Czernowitz, the capital of the Buckovina, where more than two-thirds of the entire population of 55,000 are Jews. Here, too, the Lord gave us access to a number of Jews, some of whom seemed greatly impressed with the truth.

On May 21 we arrived in Jassy (Roumania), and remained till the 26th. In this place especially we we conscious that our labours were not in vain in the Lord, for a few at least out of the many who heard the Word of Life from our lips expressed their determination to become followers of the crucified Messiah. Three-fourths of the entire population of Jassy (about 100,000) are Jews. It had for years been a mission "station," first of the Jewish committee of the Free Church of Scotland, and more recently of the Berlin Society, but now there is no one here, which is a great pity. During our stay in Jassy we had a twenty-four hours' visit from Mr. Joseph Rabinowitz, who travelled expressly from Kischeneff to see us, and the fellowship we had together will remain one of the pleasantest memories of the tour.

Rev. Thomas Grant, Tain.

THE subject of our sketch was born in Strathspey, near Grantown, N.B., in April, 1821. He comes from a race of typical Highlanders whose sons have distinguished themselves in all parts of the world in every walk of life. In boyhood he received a careful home training and such education as an indifferent school supplies; then he went to work with a tradesman with a view to learning his craft. But there were other thoughts than bricks and mortar struggling for expression within the young clansman's breast. These were at first inarticulate, but the weeks and the months gave them form, and such books as he could lay hands on stimulated thought. The youth must be something else and more than a master builder; he must help in the rearing of a temple not made with hands. As he worked he prayed, and the voices within spoke louder and louder, till at last he enrolled as a student at St. Andrew's University.

After a career in which hard work and diligent application stood him in good stead, he finished his literary course with credit and entered the Free Church Hall in Aberdeen as a student of divinity. In these days students were seldom employed as city missionaries, but the ardent Badenoch youth found work to do, and did it with that zeal which has followed him through all the years of his long ministry. Having finished his theological studies he was ordained at Tain in November 1859. This little Ross-shire town has since been the scene of his life's work. For nearly forty years he has been a striking figure and a strong personality in the religious life of the North.

To describe Mr. Grant's preaching is easy; to portray Mr. Grant is not; as a preacher he is always lucid, frequently forcible, and often quaint and original, with that lingering suspicion of genius which leaves one to infer more than is said. His sermons are of a distinctly evangelistic type, but with a strong vein of reasoning, based on sound theological learning, and an accurate study of Scripture running through them. The keynote of the message is God's love to man, and this is pressed home on the heart and conscience with an earnestness and pathos seldom met with in modern preachers.

As a good citizen Mr. Grant takes an active interest in whatever is for the well-being of the community. Schools and the young claim a large share of his love and labour. As an advocate of temperance he has done yeoman service, and like many another has suffered in it, but the children's children shall rise up and bless him. In fighting abuses and evils he is bold to hardihood; as a friend and counsellor gentle as a woman,

A prominent phase of Mr. Grant's work during the whole period of his ministry has been his marked sympathy with all revival moments. It is in connection with such work that he appears at his strongest and best. Those who have heard him pleading with men do not readily forget the man or his words, and many careless souls have called to mind the striking figure of the minister of Tain, and the words and the very tones in which he uttered them in days of darkness and stress after many years. At the great gatherings at highland communions his services are eagerly sought. For the last few years he has lived literally alone, the partner of his life and labours, and a truly kindred spirit, having been called to her rest and her reward some years ago. To such a man the loss was irreparable, and now the silvery-haired saint lives and labours, and waits till his Master called him to yet a higher service.

The Gospel in Mexico.

IN a recent circular letter, Mr. John Mercer, of Harburgh, Fallowfield, Manchester, says:—"The continued good accounts from Mr. Eglon Harris are cause for thankfulness, and we trust will lead to sympathy and prayer for the many-sided lonely labourer willing to work still more abundantly, if the necessary means are supplied."

In his reports Mr. Harris gives interesting glimpses of the work. He writes:—"Besides the remarkable increase in circulation (now 20,000) of El Sembrador, we have the testimony of hundreds of letters that our labour has not been in vain. Apart from the apparent blessing, the fact that by the periodical and its supplementary tracts we can, in a Roman Catholic land, present the Gospel to at least fifty thousand willing readers ought to stimulate us to much prayer and increased effort. Since writing last two more regiments of soldiers have been here. We have as usual been permitted to go in amongst them. Besides tracts and Gospels to all, I was able to give Testaments to 120, and Bibles to superior officers. The Lord is evidently working with some of the children. Let us pray that soon many may yield to the Lord."

Speaking of visits to other parts of the country, Mr. Harris says: "Oaxaca is a town of 33,000 inhabitants, but of the many to whom Brother Alamillo or I gave tracts, and spoke a word or two, not one knew anything of salvation by grace. There are twenty-one temples, and as we were there during 'Holy Week,' we were well able to see what kind of hold Rome has on the people. I judge that it is nothing but fear that binds them to their 'Holy Mother.' They do not love Romanism, and they know her doctrines are not tenable. It is a system which permits any sin to those who can pay for it in dollars. Thus the rich are well satisfied, and these, as employers, dominate over the poor, compelling them to be, at least nominally, Catholics. We gave over 8000 tracts, and in four barracks and a military prison added gifts of Scriptures. We could not enter the civil prison for the governor, who was an old Indian, had serious objections, much to the disappointment of the other officers."

Mrs. Oliphant, it is said, is lying seriously ill at her home at Wimbledon. She only recently returned from a visit to Italy, undertaken in connection with the writing of a new book.

THE MILDMAY CONFERENCE.

TUESDAY EVENING, JUNE 15.

WITH a somewhat reduced attendance the Conference resumed on Tuesday evening, Lord Polwarth presiding. After prayer and a song of praise the Chairman read from 1 Cor. i. 17 onwards, and shortly introduced the subject of the evening's programme. He quoted a saying of the late Mr. Pennefather, to the effect that Christians should not merely enjoy the spiritual refreshment provided at such gatherings, but go on to the practical work which ought to be the outcome of the Christian life. It is good for those present from a distance, as well as for the tried toiling labourers in our great cities to hear what the Master is doing by his servants in different fields of work.

The text given in the programme was, "Ye shall be witnesses unto Me both in Jerusalem and in all Judea." After prayer by Rev. Canon Christopher, of Oxford, in which special petition was made on behalf of the Queen, spoke on Jewish Missions. Having read Isa. xliii. 10 and Rom. xi. 25, he said we may well ask how it is that instead of Israel bearing witness unto God they need to be witnessed to of God. The words of the Apostle in Rom. xi. supply the answer—that blindness in part has happened to Israel. Speaking generally, it is the boast of the modern Jews that they are not a missionary people. In that respect they are only boasting of their shame. They have no mission. The Kingdom of God has been taken from them and given to another people. Modern Israel has no message except the testimony which their history gives to the severity of God. Has God's purpose for Israel been fully carried out? No; the Jews have still a future, when as Isaiah tells us "the eyes of the blind shall be opened." Now they wait for light; but they see only obscurity. One day they will arise that their light may shine; the ears of the deaf shall be unstopped, the lame man shall leap as an hart, and the tongue of the dumb shall sing. There is a remnant according to the election of grace, whose eyes are opened, but so far as the nation as a whole is concerned, it is sitting like the lame man at the Beautiful Gate of the Temple, thinking only of the alms he could get from the passers-by. But the time will come when "out of the wilderness will rivers break out" for refreshment of the whole world. Now, in the interval, the Gentile Church is put into the position of Israel as witnesses for God.

Rev. DAVID BARON

It seems difficult to get Gentile Christians practically interested in the Jew of the present day; though they are greatly interested in the Jew of the past and the Jew of the prophetic future. Mr. Baron told how in Norway a great interest in Jewish missions was awakened through the prayer and effort of a Christian lady of the country, who, in the face of much indifference on the part of those about her, was the means of founding the first missionary society in Norway to the Jews on the Continent. She asked her pastor if they might not add to their petitions for nations prayer for God's ancient people. The pastor did not sympathise with the idea by any means. The Jews were under the curse of God, and we should not pray for them. The lady, a little while later, called on her pastor, wishing to interest him in a very sad case. A son had given his father a great deal of trouble, so that he had been obliged to be banished from his home. The father adopted another boy in his stead, who, however, treated all mention of the exiled son with contempt. At this recital the pastor was indignant. But the lady applied her parable, and said the exiled boy was the Jew and the adopted one the Gentile Church; and the pastor became an earnest lover of the Jews.

Mr. Baron went on to tell how he had just returned from his twelfth missionary tour among European Jews. He recommended our Lord's method of sending evangelists two and two to tell the sons of Abraham of the Messiah and his salvation. The details given by Mr. Baron of this tour were substantially those which have appeared from his own pen in recent letters in our columns. There is a wonderful spirit of hearing just now, he said, among Jews in different parts of the world. We must sow before we can reap; let us pray that fruit may soon appear in large measure. If the spirit of compassion to the Jew is poured out on Christians, a reflex blessing will surely come on the Church.

Rev. Dr. H. M. WILLIAMSON.

HOME MISSIONS.

It is clear to all who have opened eyes that there is something wrong about home missions as well as foreign missions. We give out much and gather very little. The numbers of the heathen are increasing year by year, and the churches are not reaching the multitudes who are without the Gospel. I have pretty much the same opinion with regard to home mission work. In later years the Lord has been gracious to us, and there are perhaps more living Christians now in Great Britain and Ireland than ever there were; at the same time our population is increasing vastly. Think of London, Glasgow, Manchester, Belfast, and all our great cities with their teeming multitudes, living without God and without hope in the world. It is time that we who live in our ceiled houses, should awake to a realization of the facts. They remind us of people partaking of a royal feast, while starving multitudes are looking in at the windows.

All converted men and women profess to be missionaries of Jesus Christ. There are three great principles to be remembered in connection with mission work. First, the forthgoing of power from Jesus Christ; there is no limit to that power. A second truth is that He is wont to put forth this power through what we call the Church: not through angels, but redeemed men. Therefore the members of the Church are responsible for the forthgoing of his power. He is Sovereign, but the law of our duty and responsibility as clearly comes in, and it is this—"Ask and it shall be given." There is a wonderful readiness on our part in shifting responsibility. As it is with limited liability companies, we think the responsibility is lessened because it is divided. But we are all alike responsible up to the measure of our power. How much there is in us that causes the holding back of this power. We are not straitened in God, but in ourselves. The time has come when we who enjoy such privileges should lay to heart what we ought to do for the cause of God.

We heard this morning from Mr. Macgregor about the need of being "ready." There is often much spiritual subtlety in our professions as to getting ready, and waiting till we are fully ready. Meanwhile the labourers do not go forth, and the harvest of souls is unreaped.

As to the work, what is required of us? In the natural sphere, life is shown by activity. So it is in spiritual things: the measure of our activity for Christ is the measure of the life we use for Him. We may deceive ourselves about this. If we would be active for the Master, we must begin at home. The first and truest index of a man's Christian life is that he should seek to communicate to those near him the life he has received. I would be very slow to believe in the actual conversion of any man or woman who has not within him or her

THE INSTINCT TO MAKE IT KNOWN TO OTHERS.

Sometimes people are anxious to do work anywhere except at home. We must begin as Peter's brother began. He ran and told Peter, "We have found the Messiah." So with the woman of Samaria and others in the New Testament. It is the hardest work a young convert can attempt, but it is the first duty of such to tell their kith and kin about the work of Christ in their own souls. Parents should tell children; children with all proper humility should tell parents; friends should tell friends. If we neglect those near to us, it is in vain for us to go farther afield and try to do the Lord's work.

Then we must go to those round about us. This is essential for the welfare of any church or congregation. Think of a town in which there are no children born. Think of a Christian congregation where the cry of the new-born soul is not heard. There is death in the dwelling. There may be much instruction, teaching, activity of a certain kind, but a church where there is not continually the cry of the new-born soul is in an unhealthy state. It is a universal complaint that the churches are so slow to engage heartily in foreign mission work. It is true, but why? A man cannot work beyond his strength, neither can a church. The measure of the spiritual life of a church is the measure of the activity she can put forth in mission work. You may galvanise a corpse, or make a hectic patient look full of life, but when the stimulant has worked out, the sick one will relapse into his former state. We talk and pray and appoint committees, but how feeble and miserable our efforts at mission work. We lack spiritual life in our churches. Someone spoke to-day about requiring one foreign missionary for every 1300 communicants to evangelise the world. That is a miserable account of it. I know a church not at all so spiritual as it ought to be—neither pastor nor people—and it has one missionary for every thirty-three communicants. How miserable must be the condition of churches where those who go forth are so few.

How is this home mission work to be done effectually, economically, and surely? That is the question for all of us in all the denominations. Somehow, there is a great waste in our efforts, and the increase is very small. We shall never make progress until every congregation and church will band together as a church or congregation, like soldiers in a regiment, to do the work that lies at their doors. Anyone who knows anything of my past history will know that I would be the last man here to say anything against our loved evangelists. I have worked with them for forty years, and bless God for them. Many souls have been rescued by them. Nevertheless, with increasing years, I have the profound conviction that if the churches do not themselves

WAKE UP TO DO THIS WORK

it will never be done. Take your city of London. You might get a hundred or a thousand evangelists to work among the people, but they will evangelize, for the most part, your church-going people, and the vast mass of the people are never reached. But when the congregations, under their captains, or ministers, or whatever you call them, band themselves together and realise that they are called to be good soldiers of Jesus Christ, there is hope that the people will be evangelized, but never till then. The people make a mistake in expecting the minister to do all the work. The difference between a regiment and a rabble is this: A hundred men in a regiment properly drilled and led will put a rabble of five thousand to flight. When every member of the great host in our churches will be bound together and keep rank, there will be a thoroughness and efficiency in the work that can never otherwise be obtained. Then the ministry also make a mistake. We clergy are apt to think that it is our whole business to build up the saints, instruct the young, and to attend to certain ordinances. When it comes to the most important work of revival, we think it cannot be done unless we get some brother who has been much owned of God to come in and "get up" a revival. Meanwhile, we have no faith in the present power of the living God to convert men. Ministers and Christians go to church (I am speaking of places I know), but they do not go expecting conversions. So we go on week by week, even congregations advanced in spirituality, but we do not enter the gates with praise, expecting that God will revive his cause. Meanwhile, the unconverted are all round about us, and in their thousands are going down to darkness.

Of course there are individuals whom we call our "workers." I sometimes say they are "a little band and lowly"; they are only a few out of the vast bulk of communicants. With all our prayers and conventions and efforts we shall never do much until every congregation, with the captain at the head of his helpers, will organise and work together as some of you in this great city do. I have often seen the captain of one of these regiments, and all the rest of the soldiers round about, sitting as if they were paralysed in the face of the enemy, allowing some stripling David with sling and stone to fight the Lord's battle. All honour to the stripling, but what a shame to us who with paralysed faith are waiting for some one to do the work which the Lord expects us to do! There are many places in Ireland, England, and Scotland where we need these God-sent evangelists; the Lord add to their number everywhere. But if they were multiplied by hundreds, there would still remain work that belongs to us; we should do our own work and thank the Lord for them. I hold that the pastor who does not do his work, or try to do it, but is letting some one do it for him, is disloyal to his Master. Revival of the true kind begins at the pulpit; if we ministers realised our own responsibility the work would be done. Shall we attend meetings and conventions and then go home and allow the whole thing to evaporate? Let us all feel that we are called on to do the work of the Lord as we have never yet done it.

MR. C. R. HURDITCH.

This experienced well-known London evangelist followed on the same theme. Those, he said, who are most permeated with the Scriptures are the most permeated with the spirit of missions. It has been so in all ages. Addressing himself chiefly to the young workers present, the speaker proceeded to answer the questions—What is a mission? Who are the missionaries? What is the message? The mission of the Apostles was threefold—(1) to make disciples of all nations; (2) to turn men from darkness to light; (3) to gather out a people for God's name. Have we been disciplining men and seeking to turn them from darkness to light, and from Satan to God? We are sometimes told in these days that there is no such darkness but people can find their way out of it by the light of their own reason. Nay, men are under the power of Satan still, and the Apostles were sent to tell men of light and life and that the power that held them as slaves of the devil might be broken. Would to God that the multitudes in this land, rich as well as poor, knew it. Then they were to gather out a people for God—not simply to save men individually, but to gather them into that great company of the first-born whose names are written in heaven; into the one Church which is his body and of which He is the Head.

Who are to do this work? First, they must be themselves saved men. Men get up and talk as though they had some essay to deliver or some theme to discuss; but I fear many do not preach as those who have been delivered from the wrath to come. God forgive us that we can speak for Him with such bated breath and with such unmoved souls. The Apostles were men disciplined as well as saved. Some of them were proud and conceited, full of self-satisfaction. They had to be disciplined, as Peter was. They were full of weaknesses even after they were sent forth. Paul had to recall his words; Peter had to be rebuked by Paul, and so on. Thank God, He used them in spite of all their weakness. Our Master is not as we are. If any of us were caught swearing and cursing and denying the Master as Peter did, our brethren would not be very ready to forgive us. Not so with the Master. Let not any conscious weakness keep us back from Him. The disciples also were men who had companied with Jesus Christ. Are we such men? Have we had visions of God? Have we so lived in company with Jesus that others take knowledge of us that we have been with Him?

What is the message? It was a message of repentance that the Apostles preached. It seems to me we want more such witnesses to-day; one hears little of this calling men to repentance. There is no forgiveness to an unrepentant man. The Apostles also preached justification by faith; they preached righteousness through Christ, with no uncertain sound. What was the result? Thousands responded to the glad sound of the Gospel—three thousand converted under the first sermon. Nowadays it takes three thousand sermons before one soul is converted. I read to-day that three thousand churches in America had not reported a single conversion through a whole year. Such a fact ought to bring us into deep humiliation before God and lead us to take shame to ourselves; for it cannot be the case in America without our being affected by it. Is it not the case here too? I am quite sure Dr. Williamson was right in what he said as to the need of our home districts. There is a great dearth of converting power.

We also want more of the spirit of unity and less of the spirit of criticism; more deep, genuine, real sympathy one with another, so that we may stand for God amid the rising tide of worldliness and infidelity that surrounds us. The signs of the times indicate that we are in the very last days. The forces of evil are gathering with increasing fury; men are departing from the faith, and there is the form of godliness without the power. Do you not feel the iciness of it, and realise the dangers of it all? Oh, for tender sympathy one with another, and for the laying aside of our denominational differences. Oh, to wait at the Master's feet, realising that we are saved men, that we have companied with Jesus, and that we are being gathered home for the grand presentation day, the grand festival, when the voices of heaven's choir shall be heard, as the voices of many waters with the great wedding march, when the marriage of the Lamb has come.

WEDNESDAY MORNING.

Although the weather was not quite so favourable on Wednesday morning, there was nevertheless a large gathering. The subject of conference was "The Results of Undertaking this Work"—the evangelisation of our own generation. The proceedings opened as usual with prayer, first silent, then vocal, and then came the hymn, "O Lord, with one accord." After prayer led by Rev. Dr. Gritton, Lord Polwarth read Eph. ii. 14-22, iv. 7-16, and made a few remarks. He regarded the continual addition of believers to the Church as a most blessed fact. Every soul won to Christ by the power of the Holy Ghost is a stone in the Great Temple which gradually nears completion. The body of Christ has this glory, however, that it is a living body. Any want of harmony, any lack of love among the members, hinders the growth of the body. With the love of Christ shed abroad in our hearts, we should see Christ in our brethren and sisters, and always have great joy in meeting them.

After an address by Dr. Pierson, which we hope to give in a subsequent issue,

Lord Polwarth made some remarks on the Mildmay Institutions, with special reference to their financial need. The Deaconess House, the Convalescent Home, the Haven, with their allied activities, were committed to a prayerful interest and support of Christian people. Col. Morton followed with several special requests, which were embodied in an earnest petition by Mr. J. E. Mathieson. Miss Elliott's hymn, "God of our Fatherland," having been sung, opened an address with the thought that the work of evangelisation is the work of the Church and of the Church only. Only those who are living members of Christ can properly touch this work and really engage in it. Others may be busy about it, but they have, in fact, neither part nor lot in the matter. God of course is the great Worker; but He graciously condescends to use instruments. God makes these instruments: "They are created in Christ Jesus unto good works," created unto this very work of edifying the body.

REV. E. W. HOPKINS

Our subject is twofold—the advancement of the work itself, and the result or the effect of the work upon those who are engaged in it. There is progress in the work of edification: that means the increase of the numbers added to the body or the Church. There is not only the building of the Temple by the addition of living stones to the structure, but there is also the advancement of the spiritual life of those who are already saved. The truth is—Christian character is not complete without that which comes from work for Christ. That is to say, for the development of the renewed soul, it is necessary that everyone should be engaged more or less in the work of evangelising the world. Otherwise Christian character will have a defective side.

In the first place, evangelisation brings us into fuller sympathy with Christ, and we get a better knowledge of his mind. The spiritual life is a life of faith, a life of believing and receiving. It is more—it is a life of giving; and "it is more blessed to give than to receive." Receiving is only the first stage of the Christian life; it must be followed by a perpetual giving out. In the second place, the work of evangelisation tends to strengthen our faith in the power of the Lord Jesus Christ to save. I sometimes meet people who say—We want evidences of Christianity. What kind? I inquire. Well, they say, our faith has been shaken by the assaults of modern infidelity. The work of evangelisation furnishes all that these minds require, for it shows that the Gospel is still the power of God unto salvation. While it encounters the same antagonism as in the days of the Apostles, it manifests the same victorious power, and is attended by the same marvels of grace, wrought by the same Spirit, by means of the same Word of the living God.

Moreover, the spiritual life is advanced by the fact that the work of evangelisation calls us to definite consecration to God and his service. If we would be strong, we must use all our powers. The unused faculty becomes useless. When we are brought face to face with God's work in bringing souls to Himself, we are led to consecrate ourselves to Him, and to exercise all our powers. But we must not make the mistake of regarding evangelisation as a source of spiritual strength; we must distinguish between the means of grace and the Lord of grace. We must get our encouragement from the Lord rather than from the work.

The special gifts bestowed, on the ascension of Christ, were for the equipment of the saints for the work of ministering, that each believer might be able to do something in building up the Church. To be saints, is not enough; we must be saints equipped for service. Work may keep the chisel from rusting, but it will not put an edge on it if blunt. When Canon Champneys was rector of Whitechapel he was visited by a Scripture reader, who was very anxious and cast down. "What is the matter?" inquired the Canon. The man replied that "it was better to wear out than to rust out." The Canon rejoined that there was something better still—"it is better to last out than to wear out." The secret of "lasting out" lies in knowing the secret of perpetual renewal, and in working without strain, in fact, in a restful spirit. We must look not to the work, but to the Lord of the work. Therein lies the secret of all effective service—in the deepening of the spiritual life.

In conclusion, Mr. Hopkins told the story, familiar to our readers, of the awakening in Uganda consequent upon a realisation of the fact that Christian work must be done in the power of God, and in continual dependence upon the Holy Spirit. For fuller particulars of that revival, he referred his audience to the remarkable pamphlet by Uganda missionaries, published by the C.M.S., with the title "The Gospel in Uganda."

WEDNESDAY EVENING.

The subject in the evening was, in a word, missions to Mohammedans and corrupt Christendom. During the devotional service, prayer was offered by Rev. Dr. Williamson. The chair was occupied by who read one of our Lord's last sayings—words spoken from heaven, Rev. ii. 18-29—in fact, the message to the angel of the church in Thyatira. In the course of an earnest address Mr. Fox referred to the controversial character of mission work among the classes specially affected by the subject of conference—Mohammedans and adherents of Roman and other corrupt churches. He said: I know few more dangerous occupations than the duty of controversy. I know no kind of Christian work about which a Christian ought to pray more, and upon which he should enter as from the very presence of the Lord than this, so that when he wields the sword it may be not for the sake of getting a controversial victory, but in order to witness for Christ.

In my younger days I had an old friend, a devoted Protestant minister, who gave a good deal of his life and talent to engaging a controversy. He felt this to be his duty, and he told me that he never undertook any great battle, never entered into a controversy, but he set apart beforehand a day for fasting and prayer that he might be in a spirit to do God's work in God's way. We may not be blind to the corrupt condition of Christendom and the abominable errors of Mohammedanism, but that does not mean that we are to deal with them in a spirit of bitterness. Rather, it is our duty, as well as our wisdom, to find out what is true in the false systems, and from those points to endeavour to win the people for Christ. Islam has for ages been a witness to the unity of God; and let us remember that it was the corruption of Christendom that produced the reaction of Mohammedanism. When it was seen that the Christians worshipped Jesus, Mary, and Joseph, and made figures of God the invisible and of the Holy Ghost as well as Jesus, people fell into thinking that Christians were idolaters and polytheists, and against that the teaching of Mohammed was, to a great, a reaction.

Also, it was the failure of the early Church to witness for Christ that made the existence of Mohammedanism possible. The churches of that day began to indulge in luxury; they sought their own pleasure, and degraded themselves; heresies sprang up, and quarrelling and fighting prevailed; and in the midst of that internecine strife God let fall upon them the Mohammedan scourge. God grant that no such judgment may come upon the Christendom of this age! Sometimes God purifies his Church by letting its sin become its own punishment. So, as the churches neglected to evangelise the world, and concentrated their forces within themselves, they became the prey and victim of the very people whom they had neglected. Here is an argument for missionary work. The more we do for the outside world, the purer we shall be as churches. If we do the duty God has laid upon us, we need not be anxious about the rest, for God will take care of it.

Passing on to speak of Christendom, Mr. Fox said: Many of us think that we have in the Bible a clear prophetic picture of the Church of Rome under the figure of Babylon. We believe that the future of that Church is also predicted; but God has some people there as well as in the Greek Church, true believers in the Lord Jesus Christ, who, in spite of their creed, will be found at the right hand of God in glory. The call to them is "Come out of her, my people." We must lovingly, tenderly, put before them the truth as in Jesus, not railing against them or holding up their superstitions to ridicule or contempt. With regard to the Greek Church, I believe that we stand in a very different position from that in relation to the Church of Rome. Though they are in error, I do not see their future so clearly predicted in Scripture. Wherever the Russian Church has power, the Bible may be freely circulated, and its reading is encouraged. We do not find that state of things in Roman Catholic countries. Let us meet these erring churches in a spirit of meekness, and ever distinguish between the church itself and those whom Satan has misled. I have known of not a few conversions from the Church of Rome, and in every case the change has come through a presenting of the sweet reasonableness of the Gospel of Christ. In Rome there are many empty, aching hearts, longing for something better than Romanism provides; and we should give them that something in a Christlike way, as Christ talked to the Samaritan woman, not in the language of rebuke, but holding up to her something so attractive that she dropped her waterpot and went and told her neighbours that she had found the Messiah.

Prayer followed, led by Rev. D. B. Hankin, who asked that those who labour among Roman Catholics may love them into the kingdom.

Rev. CHARLES MERLE-D'AUBIGNÉ, son of the historian of the Reformation, and for several years past a pastor in the Belgian Missionary Church, delivered an address on work among Roman Catholics. By way of showing the need for mission work among Romanists, he spoke of the difference between Romanism dominant and Romanism when in a minority of the population. We must not judge the system as influenced by the spirit of the Gospel, as in England and Germany, but as found in Spain, Italy, and Belgium, where it has had all its own way for centuries. When we are asked not to disturb the people in their simple faith, we inquire what that faith is; we find that, although she says her prayers twenty times in the morning and as many times in the evening, the working woman has no idea whatever of the words she uses in the paternoster! Talk of their faith in God—what is God for many thousands? Not a Friend to be known or a Father to whom they lift up their hands, but a stranger, an enemy. One woman told him that she had never received anything good from God, and feared the thought of "the will of God," associating it with nothing but misfortune. Asked if they know Christ, the poor people bend before a crucifix on a road side; they know of the miraculous birth and the death, but nothing of Christ's words and deeds of mercy, nothing of his resurrection and his presence now at the right hand of God. Speak of Christ to a Belgian peasant, and he immediately thinks of the crucifix, which is Christ for him. Prayer is not addressed to the Lord, but to the Virgin only.

Proceeding to consider the moral state of Roman Catholic countries, the Pastor spoke of the prevalence of drunkenness in Belgium, also of juvenile crime in that country and in France. Continuing, he referred to the progress of Protestant testimony, telling of the springing up of congregations in all parts of the Continent. He was specially pleased to describe the work of the Belgian Missionary Church. There are thirty-two congregations composed of converts from Romanism; one church has 800 members, and many have five or six hundred.

followed with an address on Russia, basing his words on Mark iv. 26, 27, in which is given the parable of the seed cast into the ground growing secretly, springing up we know not how. The Doctor's story covered the need of Eastern Europe in general—Russia, Austria, Hungary, Roumania, and Bulgaria. He has gone over the ground again and again, casting Gospel seed into the soil, much of it virgin soil, and he has witnessed marvellous results of his labours. Russia, he said, is a land of many nations. There are 141,000,000 of inhabitants, divided into 128 different languages. The ground is not run over with evangelists. I have twice been through Siberia from West to East, and have never met a man on the road; neither evangelists nor colporteurs run on each others' heels there. I have worked as a voluntary colporteur, and maybe shall continue to do so to the end of my life. There is a marked difference between the Greek Church and the Roman Catholic Church. The former welcomes the Book of God; the New Testament runs through the land. What there is of civilisation in Siberia has been taken there in connection with the Word of God.

The speaker went on to describe a deeply interesting outcome of the spirit of persecution in Russia during recent years. Evangelical Christians who have been exiled, have taken the Gospel with them. Again, those who have found Christ while serving as soldiers in Siberia, carry the truth to their homes in later years. On the river Yenesei he found one who regularly called together his friends and neighbours to read the Book of God. There is no need to tell converts to evangelise: they do it as a matter of course. Stundists in Russia, like Armenians in Turkey, have suffered nobly for the faith. Of the latter, some ask, "Are they Christians?" "Well," said the Doctor, "I cannot answer that definitely; I know that in many cases the poor people might have saved their lives, but they refused. Why? They would not deny the Lord Jesus Christ, however little they may have known of Him. They refused to deny Him and receive Islam. Not one of them is lost! We shall find them on the other side! Women saw their husbands butchered, and chose the same martyrdom rather than acknowledge the Mohammedan doctrine by holding up one finger." In conclusion, Dr. Baedeker spoke of the great opportunities in Russia to-day.

MR. E. H. GLENNY.

of the North Africa Mission, laid the Mohammedan world upon the hearts of Christian people. The Moslem peoples are like a wedge in the midst of the earth, a barrier between the Church of God at the north and the heathen world of the south. Numbering, probably, about two hundred millions, the Moslems demand our prayerful interest. Their system of doctrine is not only defective, but in many respects absolutely anti-Christian. No doubt at the first it arose in opposition to a corrupt Christianity, but it is also opposed to true Christianity. It denies the divinity of the Lord Jesus; it declares our Scriptures to be corrupted; in itself it is a religion of human nature, depending on ceremonial works.

Mr. Glenny proceeded to describe Mohammedanism from the moral standpoint, and expressed the conviction that the prophet was a conscious impostor from the first. If in their moral character Moslems answer to the description of Rom. i., then the Gospel set forth in subsequent chapters of the Epistle meets their deepest need. Only during recent years has the Church of God done much for the evangelisation of the Moslems, but in some parts of the field the harvest has been remarkable. In Java and Sumatra the converts are numbered by thousands, if not tens of thousands. A considerable number have been brought to Christ in India; and not long ago the C.M.S. published a list of persons of position who were standing firm in the faith. Where the Turkish power prevails, work is more difficult, yet God has permitted us to see some fruit in North Africa. Mr. Glenny believed that the time is coming, and that soon, when large numbers will acknowledge Christ Jesus as Lord.

THURSDAY MORNING.

Silent waiting upon God occupied the first few moments of this session, and then Rev. J. Wilkinson led in audible prayer. Mr. James E. Mathieson, who presided, read Philippians iii., and announced the subject for the day as "Motives for Undertaking the Work of Evangelisation." The first address was delivered by whose topic was "The Lord's Speedy Return—a Motive to Steadfastness." One of the most striking features of the times in which we live is the prominence given to the truth of our Lord's return. So far as evangelists are concerned, there is scarcely an exception to the fact that they are preaching the Gospel of the coming Lord as well as the Gospel of the finished work in connection with his first coming. Literature on the subject abounds, not so much for the sake of theorising as of drawing attention to the Word of God in this connection. So the number of believers in the doctrine of the Lord's return is rapidly multiplying. There is danger in connection with this, lest the theory should outstrip the spirit of the truth. Speculation and curiosity are by no means the spirit in which this great truth should be approached. The practical and spiritual application of the return of the Lord, is that which the Church and every individual believer most deeply needs. So you find, in the Bible statement of this truth, that the practical side of it is most dwelt upon. You will find such words in the first two passages given on the programme this morning, the word "therefore" frequently connected with assertions of the return of Christ. In the great resurrection chapter, 1 Cor. xv., the grand argument of the Apostle ends with "Therefore, my beloved brethren, be ye steadfast, unmoveable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, forasmuch as ye know that your labour is not in vain in the Lord." Just before he has shown us the great mystery: "We shall not all die or sleep, but we shall be changed in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump." In view of that sudden, glorious transition, he says, "Therefore, be ye steadfast, unmoveable," etc. So also in the chapter read by our chairman this morning, Philippians iii.

We who avow our faith in this great truth, need to be earnest in vindicating it by our action being accordant with it. Of all men, they who believe in the speedy return of the Lord should be holy men and holy women. They who are earnestly looking for Jesus should be the most diligent and the most consecrated in spirit, soul and body, to his service. Truth, and this truth amongst others, has suffered more, perhaps, from the wounds of its friends than from the attacks of its enemies. To-day it seems to me, that the Master is bringing this truth home to the heart of his Church, specially to bring that Church out of the world into holy separation unto Himself. Our special attention is called to

THE SPEEDY RETURN OF THE LORD.

There are varied views held concerning this matter, into which we need not enter. The great fact itself may well suffice to answer the purpose for which we are gathered together. Would that the differences that there are as to the precise bearing of the speediness of his coming—for the whole Church or a part, before the tribulation or after—were merged in unity upon the great main central fact, among those who are looking for Him, so that we might be tolerant in regard to differences of opinion. Patience needs to be exercised with reference to the causes which may harmonise more the differences of this kind which exist.

Taking the Book of Revelation, we find the word "quickly" applied seven times to the coming of the Lord. Three times it occurs in the opening of the Book, among the messages to the seven Churches, in each case bearing upon the judgment which at his coming must begin at the House of God. What does this speedy return of the Lord portend? It portends, first of all, the end of earthly opportunities for service. This seems to me one of the most solemn considerations for the Christian, growing out of contemplation of the truth. Now we have open doors on every side. Now every one of us has the seed to sow and the soil waiting to receive it. As soon as the Master comes we shall have sown our last bit of seed, covered the last bit of soil, finished our work on the earth. Another result portended by it, is the close of the door, now open, to those who have rejected Christ. Solemn thought, this! The Master of the house is about to rise up and shut to the door. The Gospel is rapidly running its course; but soon the last evangel to this dispensation will have been given. At his coming the last opportunity to enter into the number of those who should form the Body of Christ will be passed away. We are on the eve of a change of dispensation; on the eve of the handing over of the weapons of our warfare, because at last the dispensational fight is accomplished. We are about to quit the post of labour for the post of review before the Master. Our stewardship is nearly done. "Therefore, be ye steadfast and unmoveable, always abounding in the work of the Lord."

What is steadfastness? We may easily mistake as to the true answer to this question. If I understand it aright, it signifies altitude rather than activity. The steadfastness to which we are called, in view of the Lord's speedy return, is not a painful effort to keep a certain position against great odds. The word which is used in this last verse of 1 Cor. xv., and translated "steadfast," is a word which is derived from answer signifying a seat. It indicates rest rather than activity.

In 1 Corinthians iii., for instance, you read of the foundation, then you read of those who build upon it; and the work itself has to be done as built upon that foundation. The value of the superstructure depends upon its relation and harmony with the Divine plan given by which the building is to be carried on. To be steadfast, then, we must be firmly fixed upon Christ; we must know our standing in Him, we must see that every effort rests upon his power, not ours; we must see that our whole spirit, throughout the services of our life, is a spirit of dependence upon Him.

How much activity there is to-day which comes to nothing! How much labour at home and abroad, which is not followed by fruitfulness! Why? Because it is not the work of the Lord; it is the work of man. Dr. Mackay, of Hull, once said, in reference to labour involving the spread of the Gospel (which is the great point before us at this Conference), "We have failed because we have aimed at universal conversion instead of universal evangelisation." It contains an important principle applicable to all labour as well as to labour in the great mission-fields at home or abroad. If we aim at the wrong mark, we cannot but fail in the activity we put forth, however earnest it may be. It is not incessant work or incessant talk that is essential; it is continually following the guidance of the Spirit and being filled with his might in whatsoever we undertake.

We do well to ask another question, To what does this steadfastness bear relation? To the spirit within us. Why did Israel fail, in the Old Testament economy, to answer the great end of its calling? God did not choose Israel because He wished to leave the Gentile world in darkness. It was not a bit of partiality or favouritism which led Him so to love Israel as to care nothing for other parts of the world. He chose Israel that it might be a light to the Gentile nations; and had Israel been true to its calling it would have flooded the world with the knowledge of God, even as its Daniels and its Isaiahs sought to do. Why did Israel fail? Psa. lxxviii. 8 gives the reason. Their spirit was not steadfast with God. We cannot evangelize the world; we cannot carry the Gospel to our neighbours and to those far off, unless our spirit be right with God. Paul's great power, on the human side, was this—he could say, "God, whom I serve with my spirit in the Gospel." Bodily toil may be the soul and intellect materialised; but, after all, it is the inner spirit being in contact with God's Spirit that is the secret of all power in service. This steadfastness must enter into the inner life; it must be seen in the closet when the door is shut, and no eye, no ear is thought of but the eye and the ear of the Father. It must be seen in the little things of the daily walk which will not bring us the honour and applause of men, nothing but the testimony from above that we are pleasing God. It must be a steadfastness which will make the coming of our Lord to be our joy; so that we can sit down, and, abstracted, it may be, from all other hopes, joys, surroundings, feast on the thought, "My Lord is at hand." It is when the inner spirit is steadfast with God, that He can use us and

PUT HIS SEAL UPON OUR ENDEAVOURS.

It must relate to the faith—not our faith; but, as Peter says concerning the adversary, "Whom resist, steadfast in the faith." These are days of apostasy; when, on every side, the great sign of the speedy return of the Lord is being manifest—many departing from the faith. Pulpits, instead of sounding and echoing the glad tidings of salvation through the blood of Christ, are occupied with politics, social questions, ethics, and a hundred other things beside the mark. These are days when the Bible is being undermined, inspiration is questioned, prophecy is being relegated to dreamland, and the Word is being wrestled from all but those who, by grace, will hold it fast. The Master's "Well done" will never be spoken to us, if we depart consciously a hairbreadth from the teaching of the Holy Scripture. It is not to go forth and carry the Gospel of civilization, in order that we may prepare the way for Christ. It is not the Gospel of education, to prepare the way for Christ. It is the Gospel of Christ, to prepare the way for civilization and everything else that follows in its train. Oh! that the Church, as a whole, would come back to the Word of God, back to the Cross, back to the baptism of the Holy Ghost, then should we have Pentecost once more.

It relates to the labour done for Him. There is a distinction in that last verse of Corinthians, between the words "work" and "labour." The word for "labour" in that verse is one which means toil, difficult, hard labour, suffering; but the word "work" is a word which simply indicates power. It is the Lord's work, though sometimes we have to toil and suffer in the doing it. Thank God if we are allowed any share with Him in it. We are also to be steadfast in love one to another and to all men. Our love will be seen in our endeavours to bring men to Christ and help them heavenward.

Lastly, our steadfastness must bear relation to the expectation of our Lord's speedy coming. They looked steadfastly into heaven, as Christ went up; Stephen looked steadfastly into heaven after Christ had gone, and saw Him still at the right hand of the Father; and we have to be looking steadfastly up to heaven, expecting Him to come back again. Oh! the joy, to walk about the crowded streets, to do one's work feeling "Another moment and my Lord may be here; another moment and I may see Him as He is." We can suffer, if need be, while that expectation is steadfastly held; we can work while that motive is animating our hearts.

The CHAIRMAN announced that, in response to Christian greetings sent the day before from Mildmay to Bridge of Allan and Manchester Conventions, telegrams had been received reciprocating the sentiments expressed on behalf of this Conference. Requests for prayer, covering many fields of Christian labour and workers therein, were read by Colonel MORTON and were duly presented at the throne of grace.

REV. PREBENDARY WEBB-PEPLOE

spoke upon "The Lord's Tribunal—a motive to fruitfulness":—

Always abounding in the work of the Lord, thus making us ready for Him when He appears on the judgment-seat, and we have to stand before Him and give in our account—such is the branch of the subject entrusted to me. We have to face differences of opinion as to the power, the benefit, and the results of men's work; and we shall need the spirit of forbearance one towards another, as the speaker endeavours to elucidate from the Scriptures what it is that is done in work by the believer, which will enable him to face the Lord Jesus Christ on the day of his appearing, when He takes his seat on the throne of judgment, before which every one of us will have to appear, to face Him with holy confidence and not to be ashamed before Him at his appearing or coming.

There is no question whatever that it is intended we should weigh the value of works which are wrought by men, and understand that, notwithstanding God's love in Christ Jesus which alone provides the perfect gift of salvation, every man's work shall be sifted in that day: shall be so tried by the inscrutable justice of Almighty wisdom, that one act shall receive a reward and another shall receive a terrible sentence of punishment. To get that sentence and reward, our hearts should be stirred, in anticipation of the King coming. He goeth forth to judge the earth. "With righteousness shall He judge the people, and the nations with equity," as well as with mercy; and the people whom he hath chosen and blessed must expect, I believe, to be judged exactly according to their deeds.

In the sentence taken from 2 Cor. v. 9, 10, put before us in the syllabus, we are told "We labour that, whether present or absent, we may be accepted of Him. For we must all appear before the judgment seat of Christ, that every man may receive the things done in the body, according to that he hath done, whether it be good or bad." This is not merely a solemn utterance in the days of past enlightenment, that God will bring every work of man into judgment. It is a Pauline Gospel as well as a word from Ecclesiastes. I humbly think that no writer bringing forth his words from God to man, ever more solemnly charged upon us the tremendous responsibility which attaches to the privilege of being a believer.

The man anointed with the Holy Ghost from heaven is meant to be holy because God is holy, is meant to work because Christ Jesus worked, and because He could say, "My Father worketh hitherto, and I work," and "As my Father hath sent Me, even so send I you." Then He breathed upon them, and the Holy Ghost in his power came upon them. We believe they found it sufficient for all the need of that day and onward; and evermore in the history of the Church that Holy Ghost has been breathed upon believers, with a mighty flow that never pauses, that they may glorify God their Saviour in all things.

"We labour," says the Apostle. It is a remarkable word only found twice besides in his writing, and in each case it is translated in our Bible under a different expression. In Rom. xv. 20 he says, "Yea, so have I strived to preach the Gospel, not where Christ was named, lest I should build upon another man's foundation." Here, in 2 Cor. v., he says, "We labour that, whether present or absent, we may be accepted of Him." In 1 Thess. iv. 11, Paul says, "That ye study to be quiet, and to do your own business, and to work with your own hands." Mark that, in each case, the remarkable expression Paul adopted, though translated by different words in our own Authorised Version—namely, 'strive," "labour," and "study"—has one great meaning and application. The word is properly translated, "I have set my heart with a determination upon an object; and that object, by the power of God, I will attain unto, cost what it may. I have made it my ambition." We may make it our ambition that, whether present or absent, we may be accepted of Him; so that, when the judgment seat is set, we may not be ashamed before Him at his appearing. Says Paul to the Thessalonians, writing as to children, "Take care, that ye have this holy ambition, to be quiet in soul, but also to do your own business."

The Holy Ghost has purposely, in certain passages, brought before us the motives and the principles connected with work. Rather than merely carrying out an operation which shall be judged according to its external merit, we are called to consider the motives and principles upon which men carry out their work. Therefore, it is the doing and not the deed which, in so many parts of God's Word, is tenderly and mercifully brought before us for consideration. There is an essential distinction in this matter, because we are apt, in speaking of the word "deed," to think merely, if not chiefly and entirely, of its external power and effect. Our Master, in Matt. xvi. 27, says He will judge every man according to his doing, and reward him according to his doing. When we look at the word "doing" we had better think of its meaning with regard to the purposes of the action, rather than to the action itself. There is unspeakable comfort in this for many of us. Brilliant deeds, with their results, are apt to dazzle and disturb the judgment of all men. If often happens in this world that some poor widow, with her little mite to give, draws back with modest fear that it CANNOT BE ACCEPTABLE TO THE LORD.

Men do not rightly consider the mission field. Some weary worker, it may be, in the slums of London, lays his head upon the pillow with the sense of strain and nigh unto despair. The work has brought no result, and cannot, therefore, he thinks, be acceptable; while all the time the Master is teaching us by his Holy Spirit and by his Word that it is not the deed as weighed by man and judged by visible results, but the doing which is all important. It is the doing rather than the deed, the motive rather than the matter, in which God is always interested, and which God will judge by hereafter. It matters not what the sphere may be, nor how grand and noble in the eyes of man the special results attained may appear—it is not with this merely that God is concerned. He is concerned with the being much more than with the doing. "Thine eyes are open upon all the ways of the sons of men: to give everyone according to the fruit of his doings" (Isa. xxxiii.).

It may be well asked, and will be, what possible effect upon our eternal destiny, can doing have, under a Gospel of free grace in which it is the special glory of every human being that he is saved absolutely and for ever and perfectly, without works or deeds or doing of his own. "Not by works of righteousness which we have done, but according to his mercy He saved us," says Paul in Titus iii. "By grace are ye saved," he says to the Ephesians, "through faith; and that not of yourselves: it is the gift of God, not of works, lest any man should boast." The pride and glory of the evangelist is, that he can testify to the weakest, vilest, and most miserable of sinner that such a soul may pass from death to life by simple faith in the Son of God; and though it be the last breath which such a one is drawing upon earth, like the thief upon the cross, if he will but acknowledge that he is justly rewarded for his deeds in being brought to condemnation, and then turns an eye of hopeful trust upon the blessed Son of God who died for him, he may, in the very moment of his expiring, hear the words, "To-day shalt thou be with Me for ever in glory." That soul shall enter heaven exactly as surely as the most accomplished and advanced saint who ever trod this earth.

But, then, the moment we have passed, with this thief, from this existence into the presence of God, beyond in the home prepared for the people of the Lord, what do we see? There we are at once taught a great and wondrous distinction. We see principalities and powers in the heavenly places. We see those in command of ten cities or of five. We see those who are endowed with ten pounds, and then eleven are added to the ten which they already possess. Another has taken one pound and turned it into two, and he is allowed to take up the position of a rewarded one in the heavens above. These things we are taught in every part of God's Word. There are differences and distinctions in the presence of the Lord and in the home being prepared for the people of God. The moment we ask of the angel who conducts us, "What mean these things?" the answer is: "These are the rewards of men's lives upon earth. They are receiving now the recompense of the reward." A great reward and wondrous reward in some cases, for the deeds or doings which distinguished them when walking the earth, in a position of temptation and trial. Again and again, both our Lord Jesus Christ and all his apostles, we may add, seem to bring before us this doctrine, that every man's work is to be the cause of reward or the cause of judgment that should be pronounced for or against him. In most cases of defalcation, and therefore of condemnation, we find our blessed Master brings the judgment of eternal destruction upon men, not so much for active deeds as for omitting to do what God requires. Nearly every judgment of my Master upon men and women is for failing to do or failing to be what Almighty God had demanded. But, on the other hand, of those saved, redeemed by the blood, accepted in the Beloved, seated already in heavenly places in Christ Jesus by faith, the reward is according to a man's working here below.

WE HAVE TO FACE THIS SOLEMN FACT.

Strange to say, the methods by which we may bring forth our service, our doings for the glory of God, are described by the Lord Himself, and by his apostles, as being almost as various as the rewards themselves. It is this that I want to press upon you in the last few moments which are entrusted to me—that one finds the reward, according to Christ's own word, for having taken a little child and given it a cup of cold water; another, for having been a faithful steward over the household of God that was entrusted to his care; another, for having simply been watching and waiting, with the lamp lit and the loins girded, yearning for the midnight cry to be heard, "Behold the Bridegroom cometh"; another, for turning the five talents into ten or the one talent into two; another, as Paul so beautifully brings out, for having fought the good fight of faith and finished his course, and now the crown of righteousness is discovered for him, and for all like him, who love the appearing of the Lord; another, for having, as he says to the Thessalonians, brought souls to Christ, who should be his crown of rejoicing, his glory and his delight in the day of the Lord; another, for having, as St. Peter says in chapter v., Epistle 1, verse 4, acted as under-shepherds, faithful stewards of the grace of God—they shall have the crown of glory that fadeth not away; another, as the Master Himself says in Rev. ii. 10, simply endured the trial laid upon him—to him shall be given the crown of life. Yea, brethren, we read in various parts of God's Word of rewards of all kinds. Men upon earth are doing their deeds to be seen of their fellows, and with an eye to earthly advantage; but those who are doing service secretly, perhaps with no eye of human being ever contemplating the deed, shall have their reward hereafter from their Father who seeth in secret and who will reward them openly.

Rewards there are—crowns, thrones, habitations, governments, sharings with Christ in the glory of his reign. It is a mysterious problem—saved by grace, with nought to pay and no possible benefit from one single doing, yet rewarded exactly according to our doings, and no man ever to escape from that judgment, but every man to be brought up for it. Think of it, ye that sit still and let the Master's possibilities, with which you are so richly endowed, pass you at any moment, when a soul is hungering for the word of life, which ye have the opportunity of giving, and yet ye fail to be faithful. Think, that for such refusal to give blessing to another, the Master's condemnation may descend upon your head. Or, if constrained by the grace of God, the opportunity was seized, the stewardship faithfully used, and the blessed salvation of God bestowed upon a soul, ye are rewarded openly in the Master's word, "Well done, good and faithful servant; enter thou into the joy of thy Lord."

This is what we are asked to reconcile, and it does seem difficult at first, the possibility of being so magnificently owned as is the worker for Jesus Christ, with a Gospel that says we cannot do but can only take. What reward shall I give unto the Lord for all the benefits which he has conferred upon me? "I will take the cup of salvation, and call upon the name of the Lord." And yet I am to be judged according to my works! How shall we explain it, my brethren? Simply by the great law which reigns throughout the whole of the revelation of God. There is but one law, if I may dare to say so, which seems to govern the omnipotence and omniscience of Divinity.

IT IS THE LAW OF LOVE.

God knows one law to which he has deigned to submit, that He may press it in upon all creation, and make his creatures here the most richly-endowed of creatures—enter into the mind, character, and beautiful possibilities of divinity. God's law is love, that law being brought to us by the blessed Saviour Jesus, and, entering into our hearts and beings, it takes possession of us the more we yield to Him, and apprehend by faith what He is as a perfect Saviour, who gives us nothing to do to obtain the blessing, but simply endows us with the unsearchable riches which are in Himself.

The moment that law permeates any part of our being, it seizes upon it for action, it quickens it with the vitality of the Godhead which is in the Holy Ghost; and as it quickens that faculty, power, or portion of our being, and takes possession of it for God, that part becomes instinct with the law of Divinity, which is love. As love permeates one's being, and works out through our faculties wherewith God has endowed us, what is the immediate action? It sets one thinking of the coming Lord of whom we have heard, and makes one long to see Him with an inexpressible longing. The heart of man yielded to the Holy Ghost, begins to be actuated by that Spirit towards the Christ of God in heaven, with the longing cry, of which we have already heard, "Come, Lord Jesus, come quickly; my soul yearns to see my Lord."

But that is not all. Because we begin to love, as He hath loved us, we begin to long that He should see of the travail of his soul and be satisfied. We yearn for the completion of the Church; and as we do that, we yearn truly for the utter defeat of the powers of evil, and the overthrow of all the machinations of the devil. As we yearn for that, we begin to yearn over our fellow-men, and out goes our heart of love towards all mankind, until, with width of grace, and grandeur of possibility which only Jesus Christ could give, man begins to reflect his Lord, and to love as Christ hath loved us. As our love goes out toward our fellow-men, we begin to work for the great end; and as we begin to work, we serve; and, as we serve, we give self-sacrifice; and, as we give self-sacrifice, we begin to save; and, as we save, we work backwards through the wondrous stages, and begin to win our fellow-men, begin to vanquish the devil and his power, begin to complete the Church of Jesus Christ, begin to draw the Lord from heaven, and to hasten on the coming of the Day of God.

This is the possibility entrusted to us—that this law of God should work through the Church as it works in the individual members. Observe what happens under its operations. Men are generally becoming conformed to the Master's image by yielding themselves to the laws that actuated his whole life; they are beginning to be like Him more and more; they are passing from the earthly into the heavenly, not merely theoretically and judicially, but experimentally; beginning to be so permeated by the Godhead that though the body must always remain dead because of sin, yet the spirit is filled with life. The soul is touched by the Spirit; and as the soul (which embraces, remember, a man's affections of the heart, a man's power of the brain, a man's control of the will, his whole personality) begins to be affected by the Holy Ghost with the spirit of love, the whole man, except the body (though that becomes a drag-chained slave abased and kept from evil in actual performance) is becoming like the Lord Jesus.

Now we come to that wondrous moment when the Christ of God should appear in his glory, and we have to stand before Him and give an account of the things done in the body. Tell me, who will spring closest to the heart, the bosom of the great Head of the Church, the Bridegroom? Who will lie nearest, as it were, upon the great breast of love? The one who loves Him back again the most, the one who is most truly conformed to his character and image, the one who has most of the mind which is in Christ Jesus. As the man who has thus drawn nearer to Christ, meets his blessed Lord and Master, is it any wonder, if, being most entirely conformed to his character, image, will, and being, he is able more entirely to reflect his new power now given unto Christ by God the Father—to govern because He has learned to serve? He served as did Christ, he shall reign as does Christ. He served as a slave, which Jesus did; and though his servants shall serve Him and be slaves of love through eternity, yet they shall reign with Him over the nations. The nations are to be governed by someone; and Christ passes his deputed authority to the Church individually, exactly according to the measure in which each single soul belonging to the Church has become like the Master,

AND IS FITTED TO REFLECT HIM.

It is not thrones and principalities and powers after an earthly sort that we speak of, though they may be there for governmental purposes; but it is reflecting Christ to the nations around, and acting as his vicegerent over the world, and perhaps throughout many other worlds, each man exactly qualified to do this for his Redeemer according to the measure in which he became like Him here in character. If this be the principle—that love which serves, and service that is self-sacrifice, and self-sacrifice that wins the salvation of souls, is the one great law that actuates Christ Himself and then those who are given to Him—let me ask you, in conclusion, to face the second advent. Looking up, as our brother has said, suppose that, within one half-hour from this present moment, the cry should indeed go up, not only that the Judge standeth before the door, but that He is come!

Think of Tuesday next [Diamond Jubilee Day], and what it will be as the cry goes up from millions of throats, "The Queen! the Queen!! the Queen!!!" Let that go up from your hearts just now, "The King! the King!! the King!!!" And, as He comes, you stand to meet Him, changed, I know, from the poor grovelling, weary form of the present into likeness to Him, and ready to meet Him, to that extent; but each one now to be measured, to be judged, to be rewarded, according to the measure in which you are like your dear Lord. Say, is it no motive power to stir you up to work from love, to love as you have never loved before? Do you say it is a matter of mere measurement, then, and that you cannot bear the monetary principle? My dear Lord Himself was not above the working of this principle. "Who, for the joy that was set before Him, endured the cross, despising the shame, and has sat down at the right hand of the throne of God." I am not bemeaning the Christian character, or Jesus would never have put such motives before us that we may long to be like Him now, that we may be like Him for ever. Though we do not work for the sake of reward, reward shall come as the consequence of working; but the working is the love of God in your soul, by the Holy Ghost reflecting Jesus Christ into your heart. Shall we yield ourselves to it?

Do you notice how the whole key thought of our Conference is, "The King's business requireth haste"? It is towards the world that our thoughts go this morning, with the possibility of evangelising this generation. I have often thought what it would be if I had to stand before Christ, in the judgment day, after years of opportunity. I speak not of the infants who die without the chance; I speak not of men like the thief upon the cross. I have thought what it would be if the Master came this morning, and I had to stand before Him without one soul to my account. You are not responsible to Him for the conversion of the world; but you are responsible for the evangelisation of the world in the measure to which God has put the world before you. Each man here—and I, this morning, am humbly, deeply conscious of that which God has entrusted to me—is responsible for those in this hall first, then out towards London, and away to the heathen. The younger members of this congregation may be saying, as never before, "Lord, here am I, send me," with both hands put into the Master's hands, to be taken possession of altogether as slaves, that He may deign to use you for his own future glory, but for the salvation of some souls that shall be to your account in the great day when He shall come, and when every one of us, standing before the judgment-seat, shall give account of the things done in the body.

It is a solemn trust, a tremendous trust, but it is the highest honour that God can put upon the creature, to be fellow-workers with Him unto that glorious day. If any man will build upon the foundation which God has given, we are told that his work must be tried; but if it be found to have been done faithfully and humbly, as unto the Lord, verily I say unto you, he shall receive a full reward.

AFTERNOON GATHERINGS.

IRISH CHURCH MISSIONS.

In Room No. 4, on Wednesday afternoon, a meeting of this Society was held. General Haig, who presided, said that Ireland had been the despair of statesmen, but such a view must be regarded as the result of general ignorance concerning the country. Emigration has told disastrously upon the fruits of the missions' operations in the West of Ireland, and upon the population of the whole country. But the material prosperity of the people has greatly improved of late years, and this fact tells very favourably upon the prospects of evangelising the people, for poverty crushes people down to an extent which prevents them giving attention to spiritual things. Education has also made rapid progress, so that many more are able to read the Word of God. Romish priests in the West have sought to counteract the good work of Mission schools by establishing National schools. Abatement of political agitation enables the people to turn their minds to higher subjects. In all these points we must admit that Ireland is in a far more favourable condition for the reception of the Gospel than at the commencement of Her Majesty's reign. The speaker gave details of growing influence on the part of the Missions in a constantly increasing ratio with respect to the number of towns worked and agents employed. Itinerary evangelisation, the circulation of Scripture portions, and lantern Gospel meetings are means for benefitting the people that have been greatly blessed of God.

Speaking of the scope and aims of the work, the secretary, Rev. N. F. Duncan, said these were founded upon the Person, Work, and Word of Christ, in contradistinction from directing the minds of the people to the Virgin, the mass, and the traditions of the Church of Rome. Bible burning is still practised to some extent in Ireland by Rome's emissaries, north, south, east, and west. The agents of the Missions are found standing up before crowds of people singing, preaching, and commending the Gospel by their wise presentation of the truth. Colporteurs are encouraged to give the Bible a first place in their efforts by way of sales. In Belfast the agents seek, while occupying neutral ground with regard to Orangism, to reach the Roman Catholics, who form a third of the population, while in Galway a large number of people have been converted from Romish errors. Similar good reports come from Limerick and Cork. All round the coast, in the large towns, the Missions are working efficiently. Their are now 240 agents employed, including about forty text teachers. Increased support with a view to extension is sorely needed.

Some facts calculated to remove prevalent apathy with regard to Christian work in Ireland, were presented by Mr. A. B. Stoney, LL.D. People are found in that land longing to read the Bible, but afraid of doing so because of priestly influence. The month of May has been given up to adoration of the Virgin Mary; and it is that error and similar ones that the Missions have to combat, recognising that it is very necessary to do so in the spirit of patient love. God has been working out a way for the entrance of the Gospel to an extent almost past belief. This is seen in many ways. Father Connellan's paper, The Catholic, has done much to open the people's eyes. The spirit of hearing among the people is a welcome and surprising change from the dangerous opposition with which open-air effort was received some few years back. Wise dealing secures willing listeners. Hundreds are now reading the Scriptures in their homes; and prayer may well be made for such. While there are undoubted difficulties, the country has distinctly opened to the Word of God. Dr. Stoney closed with a kindly word for the poor priests, some of whom are feeling their way towards the light. The Chairman added a few words about the good results of open-air preaching carried on in connection with the Missions. He trusted that the practical outcome of the meeting would be the provision of more men, which means more money.

OPEN-AIR MISSION IN IRELAND.

Immediately following the close of the meeting reported above, Rev. R. C. Hallowes, of Arklow, gave an interesting account of operations connected with the Open-Air mission in Ireland. For the past eight years three hours at least had been devoted each Sunday to open-air gospelling in the streets of Arklow, and the practice was eminently worthy of adoption in other places. The results have been most encouraging. Whether people will hear or forbear we must do our duty in open-air preaching, and God will strengthen and bless us and those who hear us. Mr. Hallowes's church has a lady missionary in Ceylon and other workers wholly engaged elsewhere at home, as the result of this particular work. Less is known among Christian people generally of Gospel work in Ireland than of missionary operations in China or in Africa. As to the necessity for such work, the very reason sometimes urged against it is a powerful motive for increased activity in this direction, for, while it is true that the people are "religious," yet, at the same time, they are sunk in Romish error, and therefore worse off than the heathen who have never heard the Gospel. There are plenty of facilities for all who have a heart for evangelising Ireland. One great advantage of the cause which Mr. Hallowes represented on this occasion is that there are no office or travelling expenses, though practical sympathy in means is most necessary and always welcome.

Mr. Hallowes recapitulated encouraging facts, from various points of view, connected with the aggressive presentation of God's truth to wayfarers and street throngs. If we each did "whatsoever He saith unto you," there would be no need for the urgent appeals, which are so abundant in our day. Let us saturate Ireland with the Gospel without regard to results, which are in God's hands. God's work is at a standstill in many places in that land because Christian folk look with some amount of fear upon the practice of which Mr. Hallowes is such a well-known representative. Others are happily finding a "better way," and setting apart sums of money to promote open-air work. The address was full of incident and practical suggestion, and strongly impressed its listeners with the conviction that the main points of Mr. Hallowes' success as an open-air preacher are found in his strong faith in God, combined with unbounded enthusiasm, ready tact, and unfailing patience under persecution. By request, he closed with an account of his imprisonment some time ago for maintaining his right to preach in the streets of Arklow.

MEDICAL MISSIONS.

An exceedingly interesting hour or more was spent in the tent on Wednesday afternoon, in hearing accounts of medical mission work in different parts of the world. It really seems, from the evidence of many witnesses, that this form of Gospel effort is the mission of the future. Dr. J. L. Maxwell, who presided, remarked on the wonderful progress made during our Queen's reign in medical mission work, and also in the work generally of Christian women. When the Queen ascended the throne there was no such thing in existence as a properly organised medical mission; to-day there are 500 such workers in the foreign field, men and women.

Dr. Edith Brown, of Ludhiana, gave a most interesting account of the starting and progress of a school of medicine for Christian women in that part of India. Its object is to raise up a band of native sisters who shall be qualified to treat bodily disease, as well as to preach the Gospel message to the people. Purely educational work, said Miss Brown, is in danger of stopping short with head knowledge; medical mission work goes straight to the hearts of the people. She gave a graphic account of the early difficulties of this effort, but these are now largely overcome. As soon as the School of Medicine has eight lady doctors at work, and accommodation for a hundred beds, it will be qualified for affiliation with the Government University. Three more doctors are needed, and it is hoped soon to secure accommodation for the required number of beds. The work of the school needs £1500 a year to keep it going in its present stage.

Dr. Gauld, of the Mildmay Mission, furnished a most encouraging statement of the work done among the poor of London by the hospitals and medical mission centres at Mildmay, Bethnal Green, and other parts of London. He related some deeply touching cases of spiritual blessing and transformation met with in the course of the work.

Then followed Mrs. Innes Wright, who, with her husband, has been working on the borders of Nepaul. An account of this interesting and hopeful effort appeared in our columns in October last. These friends work at their own charges, but they appeal for £300 to enable them to build a house and dispensary.

A lady who has worked on the Niger in connection with the C.M.S. having told of the need of a medical missionary in that region, the meeting was concluded with a brief reference by Dr. Henry Soltau to medical mission work in St. Giles's, which is now the scene of his labours.

ZAMBESI MISSIONS.

To a little company in the tent on Thursday afternoon, Rev. F. Coillard, the veteran French missionary in South Africa, told the story of the Zambesi Mission. After some introductory details as to the peoples of South Africa, their cruelties and superstitions, the pastor told how, in 1885, the second mission to the Barotze people in the region of the Zambesi was established as an offshoot of the French Mission in Basutoland. The missionaries had to encounter great difficulties for a time, and were called on to take joyfully the spoiling of their goods with other trials and disappointments. One by one, however, the hindrances were removed; though it appeared sometimes as if the very existence of the work was at stake. The hearts of the workers often sank within them as they saw no definite fruit of their labours.

The king began to take a more friendly attitude. He not only gave up his beer, but prohibited the traffic in it among his people. Sad to say, the evil thing was introduced by Portuguese and English traders. The king, though in middle life, learned to read, and every day, after administering justice in the public place, he would retire to his own apartment and read the Word of God. An interesting functionary among the Barotze, as described by Pastor Coillard, is the "Minister of Mercy," whose prerogative it is to spare the lives of any accused of offences against the law. The missionaries were permitted to exercise the same power; and the speaker said that he had even refused to deliver up to the king those who had offended him.

By and by spiritual results began to appear, to the great encouragement of the workers. One and another made public confession of Christ, among them being the king's son and one of the king's wives; the latter obtained her freedom from the king and left his establishment, suffering much persecution and loss of social position, but willing to suffer for Jesu's sake. These firstfruits of the labours of twelve years are increasing, and the pastor, when he left the Zambesi fifteen months ago, broken down in health, was able thankfully to contrast the dark state of things as it was in 1885 with the improved condition of the country now. In his closing words he expressed great concern at the recent developments of "civilisation," so-called, in that region of Africa, which threatened to exterminate the native races. So great is their vitality, however, that he did not believe that result would ensue. How important to take to these peoples the message of the Gospel, which alone can lift them up and save them. A few sympathetic words having been spoken by Dr. Harry Guinness, the chairman, Mr. J. E. Matheson, stated that in the autumn Messrs. Hodder and Stoughton would publish an English edition of a book Pastor Coillard is preparing, entitled, "On the Threshold of Central Africa." The pastor also hopes to visit England in November, when Mr. Mathieson wishes to arrange drawing-room meetings for him.

THE McALL MISSION.

Immediately after the dispersal of the meeting on Medical Missions, the tent was given over to a company of friends gathered in the interest of the McAll Mission in France. Mr. Frank Deacon, who presided, said that happily the Mission is now out of debt, but lady helpers are wanted to maintain the efficiency of the work.

An exceedingly moving address followed from Rev. C. E. Greig, the director of the Mission, who had come over from Paris to tell the story of the work. A very pathetic and moving story it proved to be. He described the founding of a new branch in one of the suburban communes—how the people came in numbers to hear the preaching and the singing; how the first experimental series of meetings grew into a longer series, with many week-evening adjuncts, and with increasing interest, till now something like a permanent work is established there. The difficulties experienced in dealing with the civic authorities of the commune, who are strongly Socialistic and opposed to all Christian work, were vividly described. Such courage and zeal, however, as these Parisian friends show are not to be damped by difficulties, and the work goes on at this place. Many interesting particulars were given by Mr. Greig as to the work of the Mission in different parts of France, and specially as to the services held in the Salle in the Rue Royale, where the attendance in the Paris season is of a very remarkable type. Persons devoted to fashion and pleasure are present in goodly numbers, and the power of the Divine message in reaching the hearts of these careless ones was strikingly illustrated in some incidents related by the speaker. Much is made of good singing in the McAll meetings, and Mr. Greig remarked that the Mission hymn book had of itself proved a blessing to France that could not be estimated. He told of one young woman gifted with a very fine voice, who was destined for the high musical walks of Parisian opera, but who had cast aside all these prospects and is now devoting her gifts to singing the Gospel in the meetings. Altogether it was a recital to be most thankful for, as affording hope for blessed outcomes in the religious future of the neighbouring republic.

Warm testimony to the excellent and fruitful nature of the McAll Mission was afterwards given by Col. Morton and two French brethren present.

[The address of Thursday evening, the Bible Readings, and other afternoon gatherings will be reported in succeeding issues.]

Prophetic Conference, Clapham.

The fourteenth annual Prophetic Convention was held June 8, 9, and 10 in Conference Hall, 143, Clapham-road. The subjects taken by the speakers all bore testimony to the faithfulness of the prophetic parts of the Bible, while some of the speakers considered the time (not the exact date) of the Lord's second coming was revealed in the Holy Scriptures. Others held that it was not definitely fixed, but all were of one mind that it was near at hand. Some of the speakers also considered that only part of God's people would be taken when the Lord appeared in the air, while others believed that all the Church of God will be taken at that time. The interpretation of the "time, times and a half," mentioned in the Book of Daniel and in other parts of Scripture was very carefully explained by a diagram, and much evidence was adduced to show that this refers to the supremacy of the four kingdoms, Babylon, Medo-Persia, Greece, and Rome, lasting 1260 years; then follows another period of 1260 years in which Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the Gentiles. This also was shown to be near completion, and then will the Son of Man come. The conference was brought to a close by the administration of the Lord's Supper. During the meetings hymns were sweetly rendered by a choir from Stockwell Orphanage. S.

Keswick Convention, 1897.—Much blessing having in former years been received by missionaries attending the Keswick Convention, a fund has been started to aid those needing help in this way. Contributions will be gratefully received by Mrs. Dyce Alexander, Copsley Outwood, Red Hill, Surrey. Kindly respond early. Robert Wilson.

George Yard Mission.

For more than forty years Mr. Geo. Holland has carried on a blessed work for God in one of the most needy districts, socially and spiritually, of our great city. During that long period many happy changes have been witnessed in the condition of those brought under the influence of work in the Ragged School and Mission-room, which constitute the centre of multifarious agencies in operation almost every hour of the day, and all the week through. Some of the people once present at the meetings have been rescued from degradation and misery, and are now engaged in useful pursuits which are beneficial to themselves and to society. "Old boys" and girls once befriended by the Mission are now to be found all over the world, many having emigrated to distant colonies where they are doing well. A great many converts are engaged as Christian workers of various kinds. Where hearts have not been changed, such has been the influence of the Gospel that its restraining power has prevented many from entering upon a life of crime and vice.

Earl Compton presided over the forty-third annual meeting, held on Tuesday evening, 15th inst., in the large mission room, 87, High-street, Whitechapel, bright for the occasion with flowers, bunting, and happy faces. The report was read by the venerable and venerated superintendent, now fully restored from his serious illness of last year. It dealt with the details of more than thirty missionary agencies, having for their object the spiritual and temporal benefit of young and old, and constituted a record of continuous activities by Mr. Holland and his voluntary helpers to an extent which is really astonishing. The work has overflowed into Nonington Hall, Addiscombe, Surrey, where young girls, for the most part motherless, are trained and placed out in service. The need of extension is keenly felt, but it is difficult to obtain suitable premises for this purpose.

The improved condition of the poor through such agencies as this, as illustrated in the report just read, was occasion for an exhortation from the Chairman to hearty thanksgiving to God.

Rev. J. Draper (Rector of Whitechapel) had been able to work heart and soul, side by side with Mr. Geo. Holland, in Christ's vineyard. It was cheering to know that others were with us, waging the same war against ungodliness and indifference. Similar kindly testimony was borne by Rev. E. A. B. Sanders, a predecessor of Mr. Draper. Colonel MacGregor gratefully recognised God's benefits received in connection with this work, and took occasion to sound a Gospel note from that text.

Reminiscences of early work in connection with Mr. Holland, were given by Dr. Harry Guinness, to whom such experience had been a positive inspiration. Mr. T. A. Denny spoke very genially and with much appreciation concerning the work and the man who conducts it. Another note of praise came from Mr. W. H. Seagram, who also longed to see the west and east ends of our great city brought increasingly into loving Christian contact. Closing words of commendation followed from Mr. John Kirk and Rev. T. Hope Steen.

Ascot Races.—Mr. Sidford, of Bracknell, Berks again invited the Open-Air Mission workers to assist on the racecourse this year. The Gospel message has been scattered to the masses assembled, both by preaching and singing, and the distribution of booklets and gospels. Open-air meetings were also held in the village of Sunninghill.

Scripture Advertisements.—During recent weeks, the London daily and other papers have been giving currency to the Gospel message in the words of Holy Scripture. Striking in character, the announcements will, it is hoped, be blessed to many readers. In a collected form, the advertisements have been issued in a neat tract (9d. per hundred) by Mr. J. S. Dodington, 62, Upper-street, London, N. It is suggested that Christians in various parts of the country promote this method of testimony by having such advertisements inserted in provincial papers. Mr. Dodington writes to us: "The Roman Catholic and High Church papers have refused to accept the paragraphs; one manager imputed heresy; another, that the insertion would do harm; a third, that the Blessed Lady was ignored, also the saints, and works for the attainment of salvation. However, in about a dozen papers, from The Times downwards, the messages are running from day to day. Will you request the prayers of your readers on this special effort?"

Letters to the Editor.

"THE BIBLE IN THE TRAIN."

Dear Sir,—Mr. Moody thinks that if you carry a Bible under your arm through the street you are preaching a sermon. Would you not do the same if you let a Bible be seen in a train? I have seen on railway cars in America, metal racks with: "Bible: read and return," cast in the metal, and a Bible in the rack. Englishmen ought not to be ashamed of what the Queen truly said is "the secret of England's greatness."

HOSPITAL VIVISECTION.

Dear Sir,—I should not have troubled you with any remarks with respect to the Prince of Wales's speech at Guy's Hospital if it were not for the recommendation to your readers to endorse the view put into the mouth of His Royal Highness as to the care taken by vivisectors to prevent suffering in the animals experimented on.

It is true that the Prince says he has made "careful inquiries," which, of course, we must respectfully accept. But of whom were those inquiries made? Admittedly of the authorities of the hospital in which he spoke, even of some of the gentlemen connected with the medical school of that otherwise benevolent institution. As well question Shylock about usury as ask a man holding licences to "dispense with anæsthetics," or to kill the animal when he has done torturing him, whether the ways of the vivisector are honourable and straightforward, and several of such I find to be on the staff of the said medical school. When the moral degradation of society is in question, it is not right to be half-hearted in dealing with such men.

It is only necessary to refer to a very recent Parliamentary Return dated June 1, 1897, in order to see the hollowness of the representations which they are accustomed to put forward. Amongst those who have aroused public indignation has been Dr. Klein (an official publicly employed by Government in making experiments on animals), because he plainly stated that he "had no regard at all to the sufferings of the animals." Was he, therefore, worse than the rest? By no means. The worst of all are those who pretend that animals have been efficiently anæsthetised, even when they know that the experiment itself would be vitiated and inconclusive if chloroform or ether was employed.

I forbear to send details of a shocking experiment recently performed in the medical school of Guy's Hospital, and published in The Journal of Physiology. But I will say that it amounted to the most dreadful torture; and that the report in that journal says not a word about anæsthetisation. If men take out, year after year, licences to dispense with anæsthetics, and then publish cases, without alluding to any means of annulling pain, I can only conclude that they are guilty of cruelty, and are condemned out of their own mouths.—Yours faithfully,

Edwd. Haughton, M.D.

Upper Norwood, S.E.

Sir,—I was surprised to read in your number of June 3, that you welcome the declaration of the Prince of Wales that animals are in a complete state of anæsthesia when operated on for experimental purposes, or, if they are not in this state, the experiment is then merely a hypodermic injection.

We would all welcome it, if it were true as regards the anæsthesia, which is not the case, for it is impossible to keep certain animals under complete anæsthesia for the whole length of a long experiment, and so curare is employed, which is not an anæsthetic.

This drug paralyses the nerve of motion, but does not lessen the power of feeling pain; rather it increases it. His Royal Highness has been misinformed.

In regard to the hypodermic injections, I cannot welcome the royal declarations. The pain caused by an injection may be very trivial in its inception, but consider the after-results and agony that follows when the wretched animal is inoculated with, let us say, cancer.

It seems to me that all these experiments on animals, leading as they do to experiments on hospital patients, are cruel, and therefore immoral, and that no plea that they are meant to benefit humanity (a matter on which grave doubt exists) can justify them.

One may not do evil that good may come, and vivisection is an evil of an advanced order. Lord Shaftesbury called it "an abominable sin."—Your faithful servant,

PATHETIC DETAILS.

In a communication received from a worker in connection with the Bethel Santhal Mission, some most touching cases are cited of the destitution and misery caused by the scarcity of food. The writer says:—

"It is really heartrending at times to see some of these people and hear their tale of misery. One poor boy, of about six years of age, brought me two fowls' eggs the other day for sale. I asked him what he would do with the pice (2 pice) I would give him for them, to which he said, 'I will purchase rice for my father, mother, two brothers, a sister, and myself. My father is very ill, and cannot work, or else he would come to you for work.' At first I disbelieved what this child told me, and thought he was saying this to get some more pice out of me. That two grown-up people and four children ranging from ten years to two years could subsist on two pice of rice (½ pound) was, I thought, impossible, so I gave the child the two pice and followed him to his house, and there I beheld a sight which I would never again like to see. The father was lying emaciated and in a state of exhaustion brought on by starvation; the mother in about the same condition, and one of the children I thought was in the last stage of starvation. Not a single pot or vessel in their house and hardly any clothes on their bodies. The man told me he had a number of brass pots in his house, but the great famine coming by had compelled him to part with them one by one, and now they had nothing else to do but lie down and die of starvation.

"I was told by some people that a woman and a child were very ill and dying under a tree about two and a-half miles from my station. I went off with my medicine chest to see what I could do. On my arrival at the tree the sight that met my eyes was enough to shake the stoutest heart. The child was dead in its mother's arms, and the poor woman was too far gone for any help on this earth to revive her. I did my utmost, both medically and physically, to revive the poor woman, but all to no purpose. She died about half an hour after my arrival, another of the many victims the famine has claimed in these parts. Every nook and corner on my station I have had to turn into a shelter for these famine-stricken people. I have had to go even as far as to give up my fowl house and hospital to shelter these poor people.

"To add to the misery existing here at present the rice merchants combined to close their shops and declined to sell rice to anyone till the prices went up, and the famine had become greater. I have been to those of the largest villages here and got the rice merchants together and gave them a talking to, telling them if they closed their shops God would send a great punishment on them. I have managed, through the grace of God, to get these men to keep their shops open up till now. One man tried to put every obstacle he could in my way to getting the others to keep their shops open; the other merchants got hold of him and told him if he did not open his shop within two hours they would out-caste him."

A. J. Meill.

Help can be sent to Pastor A. Haegert, Bethel Santhal Mission, viâ Jamtara, E.I.Ry., Santhal Pergunnahs, Bengal, India, who will send it on to me.

Our Christian College suffers in common with all other charitable institutions. Famine prices have sorely taxed our funds to provide for the boys we already had, and for many others we have been compelled to take into the boarding department. We are in great distress. On the one side are eighty odd boys to be provided for out of a depleted treasury; on the other are the frequent and earnest appeals of poor Christian people to take their children and care for them. Famine drives them in to seek for help from us. Almost daily we receive appeals from poor Christian people to take their children and provide for them. And it is not to be wondered at that there are so many. Most of this great ingathering into Church fellowship in Northern India the past eight or ten years, was from the poor downtrodden classes, and now that famine has come their children cry for bread.

Will you help us to care for these children whom the Lord has given us? We know, from an experience of seventeen years in mission service, most of which was spent in charge of boys' schools, that they will rise up some day in the spiritual strength your gifts and prayers brought them, and will go forth, a mighty host, to declare the Gospel of God in India.

Barbican Mission to the Jews

Among the well-established works for the evangelisation of Israel is the Barbican Mission, which, for several years past, has been under the direction of Prediger C. T. Lipshytz. For some time the work has been steadily expanding, and much spiritual fruit has been gathered through the labours of the missionary and his helpers. To know the work is to become interested in it, for it combines definite evangelical principles with methods that take shape and form from a thorough sympathy with the Jews in their prejudices and religious distress. While open discipleship is aimed at, great caution is exercised, so as not to tempt Jews to profess what they do not possess; and all the while efforts are put forth to befriend the Jews in the name of Christ, and show pity for them in their temporal need and spiritual hunger.

For the past six years the Mission has been domiciled at 33, Finsbury-square, E.C., a house that was kindly taken by a friend of the work for a period of seven years, rent and rates paid. This provision has gone a long way to promote the development of the work, and year by year the staff has grown and the number of supporters increased. The entire round of work, religious and social, has gone forward, and the director and his wife have experienced joys deeper and wider than all the anxieties incidental to maintaining the Mission.

In about a year's time the lease of the Mission House expires, and the committee under whose guidance the work proceeds has determined not to renew it, but that a home shall be sought in a district more distinctly Jewish and in a building more suited to the special requirements. This involves a great undertaking, but as the director has resolved to live and labour in the midst of his brethren in East London, it is felt that financial difficulties will be solved as the project takes shape. It is needful to build in order to secure such accommodation as is needed; and this will, it is felt, put the work on a more permanent basis, and provide conditions indispensable for future development. To purchase a site (there is one in view) and proceed with the building, at least £3000 is required. It is proposed to call the Mission House the "Gordon Calthrop Memorial," in remembrance of the good man who was for years president of the Mission, and helped it in many ways.

The director of the Mission has issued a booklet, in which he gives some account of the work and sets forth the present need. Copies may be had by addressing Herr Lipshytz, at 33, Finsbury-square, E.C.

Anti-Infidel Tract Enterprise.—Mr. W. R. Bradlaugh, of the Anti-Infidel Tract Enterprise, writes to say that, "At this season of the year, scarce a day passes but we receive a communication from some open-air worker or Christian working man, assailed by ungodly shop-mates, appealing for a free grant of our anti-infidel tracts to distribute, but we are now absolutely without funds. What are we to do? Will your kind readers therefore replenish the treasury of our 'Gratuitous Tract Distribution Fund,' which is considerably overdrawn, that we may be in a position to respond to the most pressing of these appeals? Every subscriber of 5s. will receive an assorted parcel of tracts, of the value of 10s." Any contributions will be thankfully received and acknowledged by Mr. Bradlaugh, 70, King's Cross Road, London.

THE EVANGELIST.

"Are we Born Again?"

AMONGST many interesting cases which came under my own observation whilst working in the inquiry meetings in connection with Mr. Moody's gatherings was that of two married couples, who in each case wished to be dealt with together rather than separately. One of the couples was a highly respectable mechanic and his wife, who were evidently deeply earnest inquirers, and just drank in the truth, seeming to keep step in their apprehension and grasp of Divine things, till at last they both expressed themselves as able fully to rejoice in the forgiveness of sins.

In their, as in every case in which I had the privilege of dealing with a soul, I took their address for my own private use, as well as on the card which each worker was required to fill in, and hand to the stewards. When the mission closed I began, wherever practicable, visiting the cases dealt with, and before long found my way to the home of this husband and wife. It was worth going some distance to get such a welcome as I received. The husband was at home and opened the door, and ushered me into a comfortable parlour where his wife was sitting, and exclaimed at once, "Oh! we are so glad to see you. We have been reading the third chapter of John's Gospel, and we do not know whether we were born again when we received the forgiveness of our sins, or whether it is something still more to be experienced."

How thankful I felt for the golden opportunity thus presented of opening the Word of God to these simple, honest souls, to whom it all comes as good news from a far country. An hour soon sped as we talked together, and our hearts did turn within us. Once or twice afterwards I heard from the good brother, telling me of the way in which God was continuing to bless and reach him, and then our different paths in life rendered it difficult to keep in touch, and we must wait for another meeting on the tideless, timeless shore of the better land.

In watering others we ourselves are watered, and whilst teaching others we are learning, and in nothing is this more true than in personal dealing with individuals; the sense of impotence casts one so entirely on God for the Holy Ghost's teaching, that that in itself is a blessing; and then the unveiling of the inner life of another soul, with all its sins and sorrows, is such a revelation of human nature; but more unspeakably precious than all is the insight into the wondrous application by the Holy Spirit of the Word of God, and the blood of Christ to each and every awakened soul, meeting the infinitely varied needs in as many varieties of ways.

"Not by might, nor by power, but by my Spirit, saith the Lord." L. T.

"When the Priest Fails."

ONCE in our wanderings in Oxfordshire villages we found a mother earnestly seeking the Lord, but so far in vain; the "priest," with his seven sacraments, etc., had failed her, and she had been praying for months for a message from the Lord to show her the way. As the simple story was told, the Spirit blessed the Word; she fell on her knees, and in simplest faith surrendered to the Lord. Later on we learned that one or more of her family were blessed by her testimony.

On another occasion a dying young woman was found almost in despair. The priest had come, but could give no help. Soon the story of the cross made her heart leap for joy, and in a few weeks she went home with "Thou art with me" for a parting testimony. Another remarkable case of the priest for years earnestly showing the sacraments as salvation to an earnest, anxious invalid, but, in her own words, "there was no peace in a dead Christ." "Jesus only" reached her ears one day, and long years of soul-winning service and victory have gladdened her heart.

Many years ago we were off our usual track in the Midlands, and were told that a great crowd had gathered in a village near to the consecration of a Roman Catholic church. It was the Lord's Day, and on reaching it we found a regular stream of people passing through the church to see the decorations, etc. We distributed Gospel papers and preached to the crowd, among whom we noticed nuns. On leaving it was remarked the outlook there was sad. Some seven years after we found ourselves again there. The priest had a nice house and most of the villages belonged to the Romish squire. Carefully visiting from house to house we found no Catholics except at the priest's, but instead some very earnest Christians. Apparently nearly every one read God's Word. No room for priests there.

After a hearty meeting we turned to leave, and in the last cottage found an old paralysed man. We were told he could not speak, but on repeating these favourite words loudly into his ear, "The precious blood of Christ," such a hearty "Yes" came.

Our Great High Priest never fails. "Wherefore He is able to save them to the uttermost that come unto God by Him, seeing He ever liveth to make intercession for them." T. S. Heley.

"The Kingdom of God."

THE following collection of passages of Scripture on this, the great theme of evangelising both the converted and the unconverted, may be found helpful to an intelligent understanding of the scope of revelation on the above subject:—

Luke iv. 43.—The Kingdom of God was the subject of the proclamation by the Lord Jesus in his life, and also of his final instruction after his resurrection (Acts i. 3).

1 Cor. iv. 20.—This kingdom is not in word, but in power.

Rom. xiv. 17.—In its essential principles it consists in righteousness, and peace, and joy in the Holy Ghost.

Matt. v., vi., vii.—In these chapters, learners are comforted, encouraged, stimulated, warned. They are educated in mind, heart, and conscience. And the doctrine is brought to bear upon the daily life.

Ps. lxxii. and cxlv.—The Kingdom is set forth in these Psalms in its future glory and blessedness.

Matt. vi. 10.—The coming of the Kingdom is to be prayed for.

Matt. ix. 1-10.—A glimpse is afforded of the Kingdom as it will be in power through the coming Saviour-King.

Luke xxii. 16-18.—The Jews' Passover will yet be fulfilled in the Kingdom of God, and the fruit of the vine be partaken of.

Heb. xii. 28.—This Kingdom is permanent. Whatever there has been in past ages, there will be no further rebellion and fall.

John iii. 3-5.—To enter into it a birth from above is needed.

1 Cor. xv. 50.—Mere human nature cannot inherit it.

Matt. iii. 2.—Repentance in spirit and in conduct is the preliminary moral and practical preparation for it.

Matt. x. 24.—Trusting for happiness through possessing much, instead of trusting in God, is an obstacle of a most widespreading character to entering the Kingdom of God.

Matt. xxv. 34-40.—Here is a startling and awakening statement, not to be explained away, of the characteristics of the heirs of the Kingdom.

1 Cor. vi. 10.—The unrighteous, and the evil who remain unjustified, unsanctified, and uncleansed, shall not inherit it.

Acts xiv. 22.—Many tribulations are to be expected in the pathway by those that would live godly in Christ Jesus (2 Tim. iii. 12).

1 Cor. xv. 24, 25.—The Kingdom, when brought by the Son of God into a perfected condition, all other rule, authority, and power being abolished, all enemies subdued, and death itself destroyed, will be delivered up to God the Father.

2 Tim. iv. 18.—The above outline, to be from time to time filled up through the personal study of, perhaps, some readers, may be well closed by the quotation of the Apostle Paul's personal assurance and hope: "The Lord will deliver me from every evil work, and will save me unto his heavenly Kingdom. To whom be the glory unto the ages of the ages. James Van Sommer.

[We think these passages will become more intelligible as we discriminate between the present Kingdom or reign of God within, and the future manifestation of the Kingdom when the Lord Jesus comes in his glory.—Ed.

A Y.M.C.A. Reunion.

AN interesting gathering was held on Friday morning last at Exeter Hall, when Sir George Williams welcomed at breakfast a large company of foreign and colonial visitors, representing the Y.M.C.A. It was not a young men's gathering in point of years, for the company boasted more than a few veterans, some of whom were able to recall the founding of the Association and the meetings held in London during its earlier years.

Others—and to welcome these formed the raison d'être of the occasion—had come from India, Cape Colony, U.S.A., Canada, Australia, and elsewhere, each with a message of cordial greeting from brethren across the sea, which more than once during the proceedings gave voice to an expressed desire that a more intimate touch should be maintained between the home Association and those branches scattered over different parts of the world.

Needless to say, the genial host was Sir George himself, who characteristically expressed his gratification at the sight before him—men, old and young, met together in a bond of common sympathy and interest in this particular branch of the Lord's work. "The young men of the world for Christ!" he declared to be the standard under which they rallied; while Lord Kinnaird, sitting near by, would, he doubted not, adopt a similar watchword for young women. In happy vein Sir George called upon each delegate to rise as his name was called, putting now and then a pertinent question as to the sphere and outlook of the work represented by the one he was addressing.

Five-minute speeches followed from Lord Kinnaird, Sir John Kennaway, Canon Fleming, and Mr. Martin J. Sutton, followed by representatives of the Y.M.C.A.'s in the Australian, American, and African continents, the chief speaker being the Bishop of Newcastle (Australia). All the speeches were of the same description as he characterised his own — "of telegramic brevity"—but points were raised and testimonies borne which used to the best advantage the allotted time. As a father whose son had but recently travelled round the world, Mr. Sutton expressed his gratitude for the Y.M.C.A. through whose agency young men, strangers in a strange land, can meet with friends and advice which may prove of the highest service. It also came out that there is a good opening for a travelling secretary to organise new branches in S. Africa, Mr. Spriggs, of Cape Town, being mentioned as one whose experience eminently qualifies for the post, if funds can be raised to send him forth. There seemed good ground to hope that the suggestion will not fall on stony ground.

Another encouraging word was that from Prof. Armstrong, now of Montreal, who spoke warmly of the Students' Y.M.C.A. in that city as distinct from the general Y.M.C.A., although in perfect harmony with it.

There is little room to doubt that the interchange of thought and idea between these colonial brethren and our home-workers will prove of distinct benefit and instruction to both, as to the maintenance of efficient Christian service among the world's young men.

Obituary.

DR. BREMNER.

The death is announced of Dr. Bremner, whose name has of late been associated with a very promising mission work in South America. Dr. Bremner passed away on March 11, at Pasadena, Southern California, whither he had gone for a time out of the way of Canadian cold. Writing to a London friend, Mrs. Bremner says: "I think the work my husband undertook was too great for him. He did his best, and God will reward him. 'He doeth all things well.'"

MR. JOSEPH RUSTON.

By the departure of Mr. Joseph Ruston, J.P., D.L., of Monks Manor, Lincoln, the Free Church life of the city and county sustains a severe loss, and many religious and philanthropic efforts lose a sympathetic friend. By his connection with the great engineering firm of Ruston, Proctor, and Co., he exercised much commercial influence. He served the city in municipal affairs, and represented it in Parliament. His means and counsel were ever at disposal in helping the Newland Congregational Church, of which he was a member, with its well-directed mission agencies. He was a deacon of his church, and treasurer of the county association. Those Christians who knew him best loved him most, as a man of a deeply religious disposition, always ready to help such undertakings as his judgment approved.

July 5.

THE PHILIPPIAN JAILER.—Acts xvi. 16-34.

THE path of life is not a monotonous plain, but hills and dales. After the sunshine comes the shower. After the Apostle's success in the conversion of Lydia, came stripes and imprisonment.

I. The Cause of the Imprisonment (16-21).—The girl was a slave, probably suffering from some brain affection. When wrought into a nervous condition she said things which were regarded as inspired, hence so valuable that she could only be owned by several masters as joint proprietors. She had probably heard something of the teaching of Paul, and this had impressed itself upon her. Hence her statement (17). Paul, annoyed at being followed daily by this semi-lunatic, commanded the spirit to come out of her. His strong personality calmed the girl and restored her deranged brain. The spirit was cast out. The masters brought Paul and Silas before the Court of Prætors. The charge was that they troubled the city by introducing a new religion (90, 21, customs), which was forbidden by Roman law.

When a man's pocket is touched, he easily hides himself behind religion. Supporters of the slave trade justified themselves from Scripture. Publicans charge temperance workers with interfering with the liberty of the individual. When Christ made the demons go from the man into the swine, and the swine, so possessed, ran into the sea, the owners "besought Him to depart out of their coast." Many cannot afford to have Christ, or the followers of Christ, in their midst, because it interferes with their trade or pleasures. It is sometimes very costly to be a Christian.

II. The Imprisonment.

Prætors' judgment was—Apostles tied to a post in the court (or market-place), and, being stripped, lashed with rods by the lictors—cruel men kept for that purpose. Then they were cast into the dungeon, lightless, foul, damp, and walls covered with fungi and insects (compare "Little Ease" in Tower of London, where many prisoners were driven mad with horror), feet in the stocks, and chains on wrists and neck. Surely enough to damp the ardour of any man. But

Stone walls do not a prison make,
For happiness dwells in the temple within,
And not in the outward estate.

They had a conscience void of offence. The Christian rises above his circumstances. "Your joy no man taketh away from you." They sang praises to God, and so set the keynote for all Christians. Years later the arena of the Roman amphitheatre resounded with the song of dying Christians. The roars of the wild beasts and the yells of the multitude were drowned by their praises. So Christ gives his followers triumph over all their troubles. We fret and fume over our small difficulties and disappointments. How much better to Sing a hymn to Jesus.

The singing army conquers (witness the Puritan soldiers under Cromwell). Christians are not exempt from trouble, but though "Many are the afflictions of the righteous, yet the Lord delivereth him out of them all."

III. The Results of the Imprisonment.—It is difficult to believe that such suffering and ignominy could be ordained for good. Yet so it was. The jailer and his household would not have been converted, the proud officials humbled, and God glorified before the Philippians, had it not been for Paul's imprisonment. Cried the jailer, "Sirs, what must I do to be saved?" Not saved from the Prætors, for his prisoners were all safe; not saved from the earthquake, for that was past. He was thinking of the slave girl's cry, "These men are servants of the Most High God, which teach us the way of salvation." Paul's reply shows also the drift of the question (30). We all need to be saved from (a) The burden of a guilty conscience. All men feel this, and in every age people have tried to atone for their sins by sacrifice; this is the greatest grief of mankind. Christ lived and died to manifest the love of God. "Herein is love," and love "delighted to forgive." Christ proclaimed forgiveness to all who were repentant. (b) The power of sin. Evil habits bind us. We wish to be free to sin no more. Christ gives us his power. (c) The punishment of sin. "The wages of sin is death." Sin is poison, but by communion with Christ we grow strong in spirit resisting all evil. More, we shall, as we imbibe his spirit do his work, and "He that doeth the will of God abideth for ever."

After his conversion the jailer at once commenced to show Christian charity (33, 34). All around, in home and business, will see our Christianity in our conduct.

AMONG THE CHURCHES.

Church of England.

The Duchess of Somerset has laid the foundation-stone of a new church at Clapham Common.

Bishop Wilkinson has been inspecting sites for proposed new churches at Antwerp, Bonn, and Frankfort.

Canon Garry, for twenty-two years vicar of St. Mary's, Reading, has resigned owing to impaired health, and has accepted the vicarage of Moulsford, Berks.

A Russian Archbishop, Monsignor Anatalji, is on his way to England in order to further the idea of a rapprochement between the Anglican and Russian Churches.

Rev. G. Buchanan Ryley, formerly a Congregational minister, has been ordained by the Bishop of Rochester, and licensed to St. Mary's, Battersea, under Canon J. Erskine Clarke.

The Hon. and Rev. A. R. Parker, rector of Malpas, Cheshire, at the annual service attended by the village club, requested Rev. J. O. Morgans, Congregationalist minister, to read the lessons for the day, which he did.

Dr. Peacocke, Bishop of Meath, was recently enthroned as Archbishop of Dublin, in succession to the late Lord Plunket. Christ Church Cathedral, where the ceremony took place, was crowded by representatives of the various Protestant denominations.

A number of ministers of various denominations have accepted the invitation of the Council of the Home Reunion Society to a conversazione on July 14, to meet some of the American and colonial bishops who have come to England for the Lambeth Conference.

The Bishop of London, speaking at the annual meeting of the Lay Helpers' Association, said it would be a good thing if they could eliminate the clerical temper from the Church. The idea that the Church existed for the benefit of the clergy had not yet died out. The Church consisted of the laity, with the clergy as a guiding head.

The annual meetings in connection with the Church Missionary Society were held in Birmingham last week. At one of the gatherings Bishop Phillips told of the work in the Yoruba and Niger territories. At Lagos there is a self-supporting church, with eleven missionaries dependent on it. The evangelisation of the country is carried on mainly by the natives themselves, who, when they have been taught, go up the country and establish farms which become centres of Christian villages. They meet with persecution, not public but family, which is sometimes more than any official persecution could be. At another meeting Canon Sutton, who presided, read the report, which showed that £4537 3s. 4d. had been raised as compared with £2655 9s. 7d. in the preceding year.

Congregational.

A new Sunday-school room is being built for the church at Ramsbury, Wilts.

Rev. J. Ossian Davies, of Bournemouth, has commenced his ministry at Paddington Chapel.

At the Great Yarmouth Sunday-school anniversary, Rev. W. Heather, M.A., of Beccles, conducted the services, and the reports showed 700 scholars and a year of progressive work.

Alderman E. Spicer, J.P., one of the deacons of Emmanuel Church, Dulwich, is shortly leaving for Madagascar to join Rev. R. W. Thompson, to inquire into the state of things there.

For the past seventy years services at Corston have been held in a barn rented from Lord Radnor. His lordship has now given a site in the centre of the village, on which a new church is being built.

Rev. D. M. Jenkins has announced his intention of retiring from the pastorate of Craven-hill Church, Bayswater, where he has ministered for fourteen years. It is the only Congregational church that serves the large residential district lying between the Marylebone-road and Notting-hill.

Presiding on Thursday last at the 129th anniversary of Cheshunt College, Mr. Augustine Birrell, M.P., spoke of theologians as being in the very thick of the struggle of thought, and warned them they would have to take their part in the coming great controversy on sacerdotalism and the sacrifice of the mass.

The deacons and church members of Park Chapel, Crouch End, after congratulating their pastor, Rev. A. Rowland, on his recent election as chairman of the Congregational Union of England and Wales, gave their willing consent to such arrangements as would set him at liberty to fulfil the duties of the office.

The 250th anniversary of Walpole Church, Suffolk (Rev. D. L. Evans), has been celebrated. Walpole is one of the oldest Noncomformist churches in the county, an ancient record stating that "a confession of faith was made by the church at Walpole at their first settling down, 1647." The chapel is the oldest building of the kind in the county, and is a very quaint structure.

Rev. Dr. Simon, of the United College, Bradford, has concluded a very successful series of lectures in connection with the Bala-Bangor Independent College. The lectures have been followed with great interest by the students, neighbouring ministers, and laymen. Dr. Simon, in the course of his addresses, has dealt with the Israelites and their neighbours, with special reference to religious thought and life, criticism and the literature and history of Israel, the philosophy of inspiration and revelation, the traditions enshrined in the first two chapters of Genesis, evolution and the fall of man, how to approach the Bible, and the problem of the election of Israel.

Calls.—Rev. G. T. Coster, to Hessle Church, Hull; Rev. Rowland Mark, to Denton Church, Norfolk; Rev. J. Robinson, of Manchester, to Barry Dock.

Resignations.—Rev. Thos. Clifton, of Blyth; Rev. R. C. Hutchings, of Tonbridge; Rev. J. Johns, of Totnes.

Baptist.

The foundation-stones of a new Welsh chapel have been laid at Barry Dock.

Rev. Colin Chrystal, of Dunnington, has been elected president of Worcestershire Association.

Rev. W. A. Barker has preached farewell sermons at Brixham, where he has ministered for six years.

Rev. R. G. Fairbairn, B.A. (Salem Church, Cheltenham), has decided to decline the invitation to Downs Church, Clapton.

Pastor James L. Stanley has resigned the pastorate of Chatsworth-road Chapel, West Norwood, after five years' ministry.

Rev. John Thomas, M.A. (Liverpool) has received a cordial invitation to the pastorate of the church at St. Andrew's-street, Cambridge.

A new chapel has been opened at East Molesey. Rev. Wm Cuff (of Shoreditch Tabernacle) preached on the occasion. There is still a debt of about £460 on the building. The treasurer is Rev. Geo. Wright, 18, Gibbon-road, Kingston-on-Thames.

Mr. Herbert Williams, of Cardiff College, has been accepted for mission work at Agra, India, in association with Rev. Samuel Jones (B.M.S.).

The annual meetings of the Norfolk Association were held at Worstead. Rev. J. H. Shakespeare, of Norwich, spoke of the future of the Free Churches in a very hopeful manner.

Rev. E. Palgrave Davy (late Baptist missionary in Patna, North India) has accepted an invitation to become pastor at the Gorse-lane Church, Swansea, and will commence his ministry the first Sunday in July.

Mr. Horlick, M.A., of Edinburgh University, has been invited by the Missionary Society to take the temporary oversight of the work in Trinidad, Rev. R. E. Gammon being about to visit this country on furlough.

In his presidential address to Devon Association, Rev. A. G. Stock said it was the duty of Nonconformists to bring about a state of things by which children might be able to receive elementary education free from clerical and proselytising influence. The report showed 5973 members in the Sunday-schools are 10,788 children and 1103 teachers.

At the ninety-third annual meeting in connection with Rawdon College, Sir John Barran recalled the names of men who figured prominently in the denomination fifty years ago, and who did honour to the cause of Christ. Half a century ago the Baptist denomination in Yorkshire was not so strong as it is at present, but at that time there was an earnestness about its members which, he was afraid, had not been wholly sustained.

Highgate-road Church (Rev. James Stephens) reports a membership of 724, of whom eighty-five have been added during the past year, a net increase of thirty-one. Fifteen members are now engaged in missionary work in various parts of the world. The total contributions (exclusive of the pastor's fund) amounted to £1728, of which £897 was raised for incidental church expenses, £742 for foreign and continental missions, and £87 for home missions.

Resignation.—Rev. C. H. Watkins, Splott Church, Cardiff.

Methodist.

Foundation-stones have been laid of a new church at Ecclesfield.

Queen's-road Welsh Baptist Chapel, Llandudno, has been rented by the English Wesleyans.

A new church has been erected at West-end, Morecambe, at a cost of £6000. The building seats 914.

A handsome new Primitive Methodist Chapel, with class-rooms, is being erected at College Park, London, N.W.

It is decided to erect a new Primitive Methodist chapel and schoolroom in Crystal Palace-road, East Dulwich, at a cost of £2000.

The United Methodist mission work at Wenchow is enjoying substantial progress. During the past five years the church has quadrupled itself. At present there are seven circuits, containing in all sixty churches.

The new president of the Local Preachers' Mutual Aid Association is Mr. J. Wesley Walker, of Maidenhead. The association is in a prosperous condition, the benefit members now numbering 6293, an increase of 376 on last year.

At the London ministers' meeting last week Rev. Thomas Allen read a paper on "The Methodist Census for 1897." In 131 years, he said, Methodism had had no less than twenty-two decreases, and these had usually followed closely on periods of political strife.

The formation of the Methodist New Connexion at Leeds on August 9, 1797, is to be commemorated by representatives of the entire Church in that town on August 9 and 10 of this year. Each circuit will be asked to nominate representatives on the same basis as for the Conference, and hospitality will be provided.

At Portmadoc the North Wales Wesleyan Synod has discussed the proposal to unify the Principality under one synod. Mr. E. G. Jones, of Liverpool, proposed the adoption of the report made by the committee appointed by the British Conference. This was carried. It was decided that the assembly should be called "The Welsh Wesleyan Assembly of Wales," and should at first consist of twenty ministers and twenty laymen, elected by the North Wales synod, and ten ministers and ten laymen elected by the South Wales Synod, together with sundry specified officials.

Presbyterian.

The U.P. General Assembly of New South Wales have elected Rev. David Bruce, D.D., to the Moderator's Chair.

Rev. D. E. Jones, Bettws, will shortly start for the mission field in Lusha, India, for the Welsh Calvinistic Methodists.

The oldest Presbyterian minister in the United Kingdom is said to be Rev. J. L. Muirhead, of Wooler, Northumberland, who was ordained sixty-four years ago.

A great gathering, representative of the Church of Scotland, has been held in the island of Iona to celebrate the thirteenth centenary of the death of St. Columba.

Dr. Leitch, Moderator of the General Assembly in session at Belfast, has occupied the Chair of Biblical Criticism at Belfast since 1879. He is a Senator of the Royal University, from which he received the degree of Doctor of Literature.

Rev. Thomas Hughes, Welsh Calvinistic Methodist, Holyhead, is the oldest Nonconformist minister in Wales. He is ninety-five years of age, and has been preaching for seventy-three years, and is now preparing for a short preaching tour in South Wales.

Rev. G. Ellis, Rev. John Roberts, and Mr. R. Rowland are going out to South Africa, on behalf of the General Assembly of the Welsh Calvinistic Methodists, to consult the Welsh people in the various centres as to the best means of establishing three or four churches for the convenience of the Welsh residents there.

Calls.—Rev. Laurence M. Gibson, son of Dr. Monro Gibson, to St. Kilda's, Jarrow; Rev. David Eades, of Hastings, to Gateshead; Rev. W. Mackintosh, of Troon, to Elmswood, Belfast, U.P. church.

Fallen Asleep.

At Murston, Rev. ALEXANDER FREEMAN, for fifteen years rector of the parish, and rural dean of Sittingbourne, aged fifty-eight.—At Cranwell, near Sleaford, Rev. G. WHITE, vicar of the parish.—At Rhyl, Archdeacon HUGH JONES, the oldest clergyman in the diocese of St. Asaph.—Rev. DAVID MERSON, of Stamfordham.—Mr. JOHN HUDSON, the oldest Wesleyan local preacher in Castle Donnington circuit.—Mr. WM. GILBERT, a generous supporter of Ashbourne-road Wesleyan Church, Derby.—Mr. JAMES CLAYTON, of Chisworth, who had been connected with the Wesleyan Methodists for seventy-one years.—At the age of eighty-one, Mr. JOHN BUMSTEAD, of Cheadle, for more than thirty years superintendent of the Wesleyan Sunday-school.—Rev. E. C. K. BEARCROFT, vicar of Felmingham, Norfolk, formerly chaplain of the English Church, Boulogne.—At Hobart Town, Tasmania, Rev. S. IRONSIDE, for sixty years a minister among the Wesleyans.

DONATIONS

Received by Messrs. Morgan and Scott to Saturday, June 19, 1897.

 Donations should be sent by Cheque or Post Office Orders, not by stamps.

 Will donors oblige by stating explicitly and fully the titles of the institutions to which they wish their donations to be applied? Further correspondence will thus be obviated. Will they also bear in mind that the Donation List is made up for the Printers on Monday morning? Any amounts received afterwards will be acknowledged in the subsequent week's number of The Christian.

 Cheques, Money Orders, or Postal Orders should be made payable to Messrs. Morgan & Scott, 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C., and crossed "City Bank"; this will effectually prevent loss.

☞ Donors are particularly requested to fill in "Morgan and Scott" on Postal Orders, in accordance with the Post Office regulations.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

IMPORTANT information about the sad condition of the millions in the famine districts in India will be given by missionaries just returned from relief work, at the Conference Hall, Eccleston-street, London, S.W., on Tuesday, July 6, at 5 p.m.

Founder's Day, in connection with Dr. Barnardo's Homes, is fixed for July 10, and will be held at Stepney Causeway between 1 and 8 p.m., instead of at the Girls' Village, Ilford, as previously announced.

We are glad to hear that the British Chautauqua has the prospect of a large and representative gathering at Aberystwith this summer. Combining study with pleasure is apt to result in the study being entirely left out of account; but the educational side of this movement seems to be attracting a large number of Sunday-school teachers, who are keeping up their studies in Greek Testament and theology all through the year, and practically come to the summer school to compare notes. We have long felt that something of this kind has been needed to brighten the mental qualification of our teachers. May this be the genesis of other work in the same direction.

Now that flowers abound, the case of the poor in our great cities, who seldom get to the fields, and perhaps cannot contrive to cultivate a box of flowers or a single plant, should be remembered by us all. There should be a flower mission in every church, to which the congregation can send flowers every week. The influence of these beautiful works of God's hands upon sensitive natures is very great, and sensitive souls may be found as frequently among the poor as among the rich. Weary invalids, little children, tired fathers and worn-out mothers, all find a pleasure and a rest in the flowers. We cannot take the city into the country, but this is one of the ways in which we can bring into the city the garden and the field.

The thanksgivings so universally rendered on the Queen's Diamond Jubilee are doubly due for the extraordinary freedom from disaster and accident on the great day of rejoicing last week. It seems almost incredible that, in spite of the tremendous crowds lining the route, there were actually fewer admissions into the hospitals on that day than on an ordinary week day. The behaviour of the crowds was admirable; the spirit of brotherhood and courtesy prevailed everywhere. The charges at the police-courts were so few and trifling that even our magistrates could not refrain from gratified surprise. It is hard to say to whom more credit was due, the police or the public. Both behaved excellently well.

As the soldiery of the various conquered races passed in the Jubilee procession one was reminded of the ancient Roman triumphs, in which prisoners of war followed as witnesses to generals' prowess and power. But the striking difference was that these representative soldiers on Tuesday were cheered by the crowd as brothers and fellow-subjects. This is one mark of the Christian spirit which is acting as a leaven, and will one day make the whole world a broad, grand brotherhood, owning the Kingship of Jesus.

"One touch of nature makes the whole world kin." As the Queen drove along through the lines of cheering subjects there was a lump in many a throat that prevented effective voicing of its loyalty; but it was noticed that the aged Queen was experiencing the same emotion—the wistfulness of her tear-glistening eyes proclaimed eloquently her feelings. She is the same girl and woman these sixty years, and we thought of Mrs. Browning's pathetic poem, descriptive of the weeping girl when she was proclaimed Queen :—

> God bless thee, weeping Queen,
> With blessing more Divine;
> And fill with better love than earth's
> That tender heart of thine.
> That when the throne of earth shall be
> As low as graves brought down,
> A pierced hand may give to thee,
> The crown which angels shout to see,
> Thou wilt not weep
> To wear that heavenly crown.

There is one aspect of the occasion of which little notice has been taken by the newspapers, but it had not a little to do with the success and happiness of the great event. It was the absolute trust reposed in the people by the Royal House. The police and the volunteers who lined the streets on both sides were placed so widely apart that they obstructed no one's view of the Lady that all were so anxious to see; and little or no precaution for her personal safety seemed to have been taken. She trusted herself—as did her sons and daughters—to her people as to tried friends. Probably she is the only monarch who could dare to do so with absolute confidence. We are told that when she was a little girl she was always told to be trustful towards strangers. Our Queen has always been so with the British nation, and her reward on Tuesday week was to find herself surrounded with an affection and loyalty that would have been impossible otherwise. Trust breeds trust; faith and love are not far apart.

The daily papers spoke in very patronising tones of the loyalty manifested by Nonconformists on the Sunday before the Jubilee. The display at the Brompton Oratory was detailed in all its minute paraphernalia, but the hearty thanksgiving in the great mass of the Free Churches was passed over with a brief note, and in the later editions even that note was crowded out. Even the Daily Chronicle, which has been inconsolable on account of the non-representative character of the celebrations, could find but a very small space to record Free Church loyalty, and so left more than half Britain well-nigh unrepresented in its review of the day's thanksgiving.

Amid much fulsome and exaggerated rhetoric about our fleet that has been overcrowding the newspapers during the past few days, there was a wise and sobering word spoken by Mr. Joseph Cowen at Newcastle on Saturday last. In contrasting ancient and modern forms of civilisation, and asking whether our present empire would ever become a memory like that of Rome, he said that > Modern civilisation consisted in the conquest of nature. It had enabled man to harness the elements to his use. We were girt by a zodiac of science which had confined space and lengthened life. But these magnificent achievements in the phenomenal universe were only valuable as they tended to moral amendment and mental elevation. Happiness was not in Board of Trade returns, nor in the returns of the steamboats we had launched, nor in the money we owned; but the test of civilisation was the men it produced.

This was Luther's touch-stone of national wealth—the number of good, wise, God-fearing citizens it contained.

We are so accustomed to abuse from foreign journalists, that it is refreshing to have a taste of the opposite in the Continental papers. The great object-lesson afforded by these celebrations, according to the Paris correspondent of The Daily Telegraph, is suggesting a multitude of reflections to foreigners generally. Never before was England's grandeur and union and power so completely realised abroad. A wonderful though peaceful victory has been gained over foreign prejudice, which will bear fruit in time to come. The Paris Matin bears a heartfelt tribute to the fact that

> The British nation has reached its present degree of prosperity by the exercise of the rarest qualities, the most practical and at the same time the most loyal intelligence, the most unremitting energy, and the most resourceful and at the same time the most deliberate activity of which history gives example.

And it concludes in these significant words :—

> The Imperial Jubilee is more the gratification of individual energy than the celebration of a date in British history, and it is a priceless lesson for the world.

So frank a tribute by a rival nation should make us humble rather than proud, and stimulate us to do all we can as a people to deserve this friendly meed of praise.

A Japanese journal reminds England of some things which should, at a time like the present, be prominently before her. The chief thing is that her greatness is not of her own making. She did not store for herself the coal and the iron that lie beneath her soil. She did not make her harbours, or bring to her shores the warm west wind. "She is the product of ages of human labour from Abraham and Homer downwards." Another salutary truth is that the "world demands from her a service which is her due." Privilege implies responsibility, and happily there is some sense of that fact, though not all that we could wish to see. The thanksgiving at the Jubilee was not unattended by confession of sin and prayer for grace to amend our lives. But we are glad to be called upon by an influential voice in the far East to attest our greatness by larger service to man.

While the Powers are laboriously working at the conditions of peace, the Sultan is at his old tricks in Thessaly. Trustworthy witnesses state that it is being devastated from end to end, and that Larissa, except in the Turkish soldiers' quarters and the few houses of the native Mohammedans, is a city of the dead, all the household effects being confiscated by the officers and men towards their own private account. Those who profess a knowledge of the Sultan's real mind say he was never serious in making a demand for the re-cession of Thessaly, but had ulterior objects in view. What these are is now growing clear. He wished to lengthen out the negotiations till he had made that country unfit to be inhabited when the fugitive population returns. The only way to undo his work is to deduct from the war indemnity the value of the damage to crops and property that has been done; that may reach his susceptibilities. Will the Powers have the firmness to insist on this restitution to an innocent people?

We have long laboured under the impression that slavery was impossible in the British Empire. We have had beautiful stories told how that once a slave gets beneath the Union Jack, he is free. The flag is to him a veritable city of refuge. All this is shattered by the debate in the House of Commons on Thursday last, when the shocking charge was made against British officers of searching for fugitive slaves on a strip of the mainland opposite to Zanzibar, which is under "British influence," and returning them to their owners. The failure of the Government to deny it, however, establishes the indictment, and unless Mr. Balfour's promise to put an end to the practice is thoroughly and promptly kept, there will be a serious account to pay.

This is putting the hands of the clock back some sixty years. But we believe the sore has only been opened to be healed. It is not a question of political casuistry, but of simple human justice. We have long since settled what Mr. Curzon called the ethical part of the case, on which "he would not venture to say anything"—"the right of one man to possess another." Whatever foreign nations, Mohammedan or other, think and do, we will have nothing to say to such a claim except to denounce it; and that there should be men in our army to give it even a momentary support is a blot on our national fame.

Sir Alfred Milner, who was present in the Anglican Cathedral of Cape Town on the Sunday after his arrival, attended High Mass at the Roman Catholic Cathedral last Sunday. He will be present at the principal Dutch Reformed Church on Jubilee Day.

So says the Times; others of the dailies eulogise this "breadth of religious feeling." When a man spreads his religious feeling over too broad an area, it is generally but a very thin film at any given point. But probably it was his official interest rather than "religious feeling" that prompted Sir Alfred's movements, which therefore are robbed of any religious significance.

A new thing in parliamentary history has happened in Denmark. On the proposal of the Minister of Finance the Danish Parliament unanimously voted 2000 crowns for the use of the International Peace Bureau at Berne. The sum is not large, but it is in keeping with the income of a small state, and is altogether honourable to the motives which prompted the sending of it. Great states might copy this example, and be the better for it in every way. They have much to learn from their weaker and poorer neighbours, who are bending their energies to the solution of peaceful and useful problems, because they cannot command large means to be spent upon naval and military works. The last may be first and the first last, in such matters as these.

It is gratifying to find that the check to the Arbitration Movement from the American Senate is not likely to be very serious. There is a project for reviving the treaty at a near date. President McKinley is known to be enthusiastic in its favour, and in an interview with a newspaper correspondent a few days ago, Mr. Chauncey Depew, who is a leader of American opinion, has expressed his confident expectation that the present administration will not be satisfied till it is finally ratified.

Now is the time for every Christian who lives under the Stars and Stripes to do his uttermost to bind two of the mightiest nations in a bond that shall never be broken. On our side we trust that there will be no reluctance to enter into negotiations, and no coldness which will be daunted by a little difficulty. It was said with regard to the late unfortunate treaty, that we entered into it to oblige the United States; we believe that this country had even a higher motive than that, and on such a motive we must act again. To make the mother and daughter perpetual friends is a result which is worthy of great exertion and self-denial.

In a very strongly-worded pamphlet, entitled "Is not this the Blood of Men?" (Kelly), Rev. Mark Guy Pearse re-tells the oft-told story of our national degeneration caused by alcoholic drinks and of our black responsibility for the ruin, through drink, of other and weaker peoples. We think the statement that "the world would be better off to-day if there were no England" is extreme and unprovable; but we are heart and soul with Mr. Pearse in his appeal to Christians to have no parley with this giant wrong in all its forms. Our nation cannot live on the memory of its past progress. Unless we purge ourselves of the cancers that are sapping the national strength, our children's children may be heirs of a very different state of things at the end of another sixty years.

There are estimated to be in London to-day some 400,000 people—equal to the whole population of Leeds—who are "one room" tenants. Mr. Chas. Booth in his latest volume of statistics of "How the Poor Live" points out that this evil occasions "an appalling amount of discomfort," and he might have added, of vice. Lord Shaftesbury used to say that, so far as his observation went, the one-room system too frequently meant the one-bed system, and that neither philanthropy nor religion could avail for the people if their home-life were not improved. A determined and persistent attack on this evil is an imperative necessity. It will need courage and resource to remove it.

There is no colony like Natal for the success with which it is solving the "native" question. According to the Premier, Mr. Escombe, the number of natives has increased since the time when self-government was granted, from 90,000 to 500,000. This is the result of sanitation, cheap food, and attention to all that helps to lengthen life and increase comfort. The natives possess absolute security of life and property. The laws are administered impartially, and, last but not least, the sale of liquor to the natives is absolutely prohibited, and more, the prohibition is strictly enforced. The outcome of this wise and humane treatment is a contented people and a perfectly orderly colony, though there are in it but 80,000 whites to half-a-million blacks. Here is an example that might well be followed in other colonies and countries.

The Chinese translation for Amen is beautiful and expressive—"My heart wishes it to be exactly so." Oh, that the hearts of God's children might cry one continual "Amen" to all his glorious will! What friction, and restlessness, and wearying care we let into our lives because we fail in this. What abundance of peace we might have if we accepted everything as it comes from a loving Father's hand.

But how often we are unable to say "Amen" to God's daily leading and choosing for us. Our hearts do not wish it to be exactly so, but desire something very different. But He has the plan of life marked out for us, which can only be realised as we are willing to be "workers together with Him," and not hindering or frustrating by self-will, but rejoicing that "He knoweth the way that I take, and when He hath tried me I shall come forth as gold."

Amen! It is the song around the Throne (Rev. v. 14; xix. 4). All life's mysteries over, the lessons learnt, the children at home. No more with weary feet, no more tears, stumbling in the wilderness, nor pain; "the former things" will have "passed away."

Principal Fairbairn says that the fatal weakness of the Evangelical party has consisted in their running religion down to mere individualism. It is its weakness no doubt. To get each soul brought into a certain condition, and there leave it, has been the chief or only end. The great public work which could be achieved by the united efforts of Christian men has been deprecated as worldly by many who also discourage any utterance or action on the part of the Church in relation to great national sins; "feeling will be excited, politics will interfere." But all shades of politics in the Church should combine against a wrong. And they would, only that some of them are afraid of appearing disloyal to the government in power at the time, which may represent their views generally. But there are occasions when Christian men should be above governments, and governments ought to know that their Christian supporters will put conscience before party.

If Nelson's latest biographer could write truthfully of him in the following strain, as no doubt he could—"Duty, not ease; honour, not gain; the ideal, not the material; such, not indeed without frailty and blemish, were ever Nelson's motives"—much more ought this to be true of every Christian who serves the Lord Christ. Only he ought to go beyond these, and add love to his motives; indeed, it ought to be love prompting to duty, to honour, to the ideal. Love of country can do much, love of the Saviour can do infinitely more and better.

The Church of Christ is a fighting force, constituted for the purpose of attacking sin in all its strongholds. This is a Divine idea, all too faintly realised. The tendency of human nature is to settle down in contentment and comfort to enjoy what it has, rather than to contend against sin. Trouble, strain, and, above all, contention are disagreeable. Jeremiah complainingly inquired of God why He had made him "a man of strife." Only the constraining love of Christ can sweeten the bitter, and the supreme importance of saving a soul from death cause the difficulties to diminish. Only in proportion as the Church is active and aggressive can she live and grow.

Remarkable Awakening

Among the Zulus of Natal.

AT Mr. Spencer Walton's invitation I undertake to give a brief account of the remarkable work of grace which has been going on for some months past on the mission stations under my charge, and has since spread to other stations. I may say that at this time last year when I was making out my annual report to our home society, much as I wanted to put in something encouraging, I could hardly see a ray of light in the cloud that seemed to overshadow us. But this was only the darkest time, which is said always to precede the dawn. I think God had been preparing the people and missionary for it in various ways. For one thing the scourge of locusts, which had destroyed the food of the natives for two seasons, had been taken by many as a judgment of God for their sins.

Then there was the rinderpest threatening to come in at almost any day. The missionaries also had been quickened by the "Keswick" convention held at Durban last year, and subsequent contact with one of the speakers at that convention, viz., Rev. Walter Searle. So there were in many ways the signs of a shower. An early morning prayer meeting had been begun on this station, which was surprisingly well attended for the time of the day, and deep feeling was manifest. Now just at this time, God sent one of his prophets to us in the person of Elder George Weaver, from America. At the invitation of friends at Mapamulo he began holding meetings at that place, and although he at first attempted to preach without interpretation, and there were very few who understood him, yet it was evident that the Spirit of God was present from the start, and after a few days, as he began to have his sermons interpreted, the revival took hold of the people with great power. It was especially characterised by great grief for sin, confession and restitution, and the forsaking of sinful habits and customs. At one time the feeling reached such a pitch that the meeting was kept up all night long and all the following day. In this meeting and, when she came to herself, she not only confessed her own sins, which were many, but uncovered the sins of many in the church, which God had revealed, and which were for the most part subsequently confirmed by the confessions of the persons themselves. Many laid aside snuff, pipes, heathen medicines, and ornaments. Two heathen men cut off their head rings. Many would have about as soon have consented to have had their heads taken off, as it is a mark of rank and honour among the men. One man confessed to a murder.

All this was at Mapamulo. But a similar work had begun at Umvoti, another station under my charge. After a time, Brother Weaver came down and gave a renewed impetus to the work. Here again we saw the same manifestations of Divine power. The second morning a girl fell down speechless, and we laboured with her for about four hours, when she found her speech, and confessed a great and disgraceful crime. The following night we were awakened about two o'clock by crying and groaning, and soon we were called up. We went out and found a man under deep conviction, and we conversed with him about two hours till he apparently got peace.

We only stopped about a week in Zululand, but when we came back we brought back with us fifteen snuff boxes, one hemp horn, three pipes, three bottles of heathen medicines, and some money, all of which had been confessed and renounced in the meetings. One old woman claimed to have had her appetite for tobacco taken away from her in a remarkable manner. Another was healed of a serpent bite in answer to prayer. A witch doctor confessed his deeds, and promised to give up his evil practices.

In a short time after this, Elder Weaver was invited to Inanda, and here again there was the same marvellous manifestation of Divine power. It was not only among the natives, but, Brother Weaver staying on to our semi-annual meeting, nearly all of our missionaries received blessings, characterised by deep heart searching and confession of sin. As it has been said again and again no meeting in our mission was ever known like it, or could begin to compare with it.

From Inanda Brother Weaver went to Isidumbini, and thence he was called home again to America. But the revival did not stop, as so many do when the great revivalist has gone. It went on in many places with even greater power than before. From Inanda it went to Adams, where is the boys' school, and they, being aroused, carried it to Imfumi and to other out-stations.

Not only the boys but many girls and even children were used of God to spread this new salvation, as it was by many called. It was carried up to Table Mountain (Natal) where there was a wonderful work done, notwithstanding most violent opposition from the adversary and some of his minions.

As this account must be brief, I may not go any farther, but let me give here a

SUMMARY OF SOME OF THE RESULTS.

1. First great spiritual blessing to the missionaries. Many of us have come into deeper experience than we have ever known before, and have come to realise the truth of doctrines which we have held before more as theory than as actual experience.

2. Increased number of meetings. On some of the stations there have been as many as ten meetings a week, kept up now for over six months.

3. Increased attendance. Notwithstanding the greater number of meetings the attendance is much better, and the interest deeper than when there were fewer meetings, and at the present time there seems to be no flagging in interest.

4. Peace and harmony in the Church, long-standing feuds and quarrels having been made up. In many cases these were made up simply by gathering together and continuing in prayer till God gave them to see eye to eye.

5. Increased contributions, notwithstanding the almost total loss of crops. Many have gone away to Johannesburg and other towns to earn money that they might have something to give.

6. Large additions to the church and the restoration of backsliders.

With all this that is good, I do not overlook the fact that while the Spirit of God has been with us, the devil has been present also. Never in my life have I seen such exhibitions of his power both in violent opposition and even counterfeiting the experiences of some who have received the blessing. Nevertheless, we exclaim,

Oh that men would praise the Lord for his goodness,
For his wonderful works to the children of men.

World-wide Evangelisation

IN MEMORIAM.—REGINALD RADCLIFFE.

ABOUT four months ago Christian friends were invited to join a Union to pray for the advancement of our Lord's kingdom throughout the whole world without restricting the members of the Union to time or place. The following friends, among others, signified their approval of the Union, and desired their names to be added to it:—Mr. George Müller, of Bristol; Mr. Peter Terry, of Hornsey, London, N.; Mr. James E. Mathieson, Ladbroke-grove, London, W.; Mr. Martin Hope Sutton, Reading; Rev. J. Hudson Taylor, of the China Inland Mission; and Mr. R. C. Morgan, Editor of The Christian.

From many far-away places come warm and loving acceptances of this invitation, and it might be interesting to the members to hear that the chain of prayer thus formed almost surrounds the globe. If the members of this Union will open the map of the world and put their finger on Matsaye Idyamo, Japan; Chefoo, China; Yatong, Tibet; Melbourne, Australia; Port Elizabeth, Cape Colony; W.C. Africa; Para, Brazils; Los Angeles, California; Morristown, New Jersey, U.S.A.; Manitoba, Buffalo Springs; and Toronto, Canada; Brighton, Mass., U.S.A.; New York City; then crossing the Atlantic to the continent of Europe—touch at Wasa far north in Finland, and turning southwards pause for a moment at Christiansand, Norway, Copenhagen, Berlin, Paris, Nyon, and Marseilles—they may realise that a cloud of prayer is ascending to heaven from all these places so scattered and yet brought so nigh by the precious blood of Jesus.

Our own country, too, is well represented in Cambridge by Trinity College, Girton College, Christ's College, and Clare College; in Oxford by the S.V.M.U.; also by Bala College, Wales; Queen Margaret's College, Glasgow; Trinity College, Dublin; Presbyterian College, Belfast; the University, Liverpool; and by many individual friends in Ireland. Such centres of work in London as the Church Missionary Society, the Home of Industry, the Welcome Home, the Bridge of Hope, the Mildmay Medical Mission have also furnished members. It would take too much space even to name the towns in England and Scotland that are represented. Scattered far and wide on earth our trysting place is at Jesus' feet. Let us be found often there not for ourselves only but for all nations and kindreds, peoples and tongues.

Miss Annie Taylor, in a letter from Yatong, Tibet, accepting membership in this Prayer Union, said:—

My Dear Mrs. Reginald Radcliffe,—Thank you very much for the "World-wide Evangelisation Prayer Union Card." I am very glad indeed to join the union. The evangelisation of the world is but the duty of the Church. It was your beloved husband who wrote to me advising me to take a band of women and to trade. I feared at the time, and so did the friends in England, that women would not stand the "roughing it," but God-sent women will do so. I praise Him that He is now sending women for the work. By trading we are able to live in peace in Thibet, and speak to those who come about us. Will you join us in prayer for the conversion of souls here? There is a spirit of inquiry among the people, and they gladly take the Gospels, etc., in Tibetan, which are given them. Their prejudices, too, are very much broken down, so that whereas when I came only a few would come near me, now the people come in and out of the house freely. The chiefs will sit by the hour telling me the news of what goes on in other parts of Tibet. We are believing for great things soon, and an entrance for the Gospel into the interior. We hear that the Chinese and Tibetan officials are on their way here to make further arrangements. But we are sorely in need of more workers to be ready to go in and evangelise this corner of the world. No day passes without our praying unitedly that the Gospel may be carried to every part of the world, and we shall be glad to think we are uniting with so many in this petition.

Those Christians whose hearts God has enlarged to pray for world-wide evangelisation would be welcomed to this Union if they would kindly send their addresses to Mrs. Reginald Radcliffe, Inglewood, Waterloo, Liverpool.

English Work in Calcutta.—The Union Church in Dharmtala is one of the brightest centres of evangelical activity in the Indian metropolis, under the direction of Mr. and Mrs. Brockway, of the L.M.S. But the growing demands of the English work upon Mrs. Brockway are withdrawing her from the Bengali work on which her heart is set, and she is very desirous of finding a lady who could return with her in October, after nearly a year of sickness in England as a deaconess, relieving her of much of the English work. Any lady with a small income of her own, who would share the home of Mrs. Brockway may communicate with her at Prospect House, Pitlochry, Scotland.

The Conflict of Paul's Life.

Acts xv. Gal. ii.

By Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A.

IN the separation of Abraham from country, kindred, and father's house, the story of his people was foreshadowed. As Balaam under the inspiration of the Almighty, said, Lo, it is a people that dwell alone, and shall not be reckoned among the nations. Their dress, rites, customs, and religious habits were carefully and expressly determined to accentuate their separation, that, being withdrawn from the influence of surrounding nations, they might be fitted to receive, keep, and transmit the knowledge of God. In no other way could they have borne the precious deposit entrusted to them down the centuries, and maintained their unbroken witness to the unity, spirituality, and holiness of God. Not otherwise could they have become the religious poets, prophets, and teachers of mankind.

The laws of separation were so rigid that Peter did not scruple to remind Cornelius and his friends of the risk he ran in crossing the threshold of a Gentile's house, although his host was a man of high rank, of irreproachable character, and well reported of by all the nation of the Jews. And when Peter was come up to Jerusalem, even his fellow-believers, who were of the circumcision, found grievous fault with him: "They contended with him, saying, Thou wentest in to men uncircumcised, and didst eat with them." The law of commandments, contained in ordinances, some of them ordained through Moses, and many superadded by successive generations of doctors and rabbis, stood like a middle wall of partition between Jew and Gentile.

All these barriers and restrictions were represented in the initial act of Judaism, the rite of circumcision, the importance of which had been magnified to a most preposterous extent. It was affirmed by one rabbi that, but for circumcision, heaven and earth could not exist; and by another, that it was equivalent to all the commandments of the law. It was counted more desirable for a Gentile to submit to this rite, than to obey all the affirmative precepts of Moses, or to love God and his neighbour. Rabbis taught that Adam, Noah, Jacob, Joseph, Moses, Balaam, had all been born circumcised; and that subsequently the rite was under the special and peculiar charge of the great prophet Elijah, who was always at hand to see to its due observance.

THE RIGOUR OF THESE OBSERVANCES

was heavy enough in Jerusalem. Peter did not scruple to call them a yoke, which neither their fathers nor they had been able to bear. But in foreign parts, amid great Gentile communities, with whom the Jews were constantly engaged in commerce, it became customary to relax the stringency of the bonds of Judaism, though always maintaining circumcision, the intermarriage of Jew with Jew, and that particular method of preparing animal flesh for food which is still in vogue amongst Jews. It was clear, therefore, that any innovation which Christianity might introduce into Judaism would be more likely to reveal itself at a distance from Jerusalem, where it would not be instantly repressed by the unbending conservative sentiment so strongly entrenched in the metropolis of the national faith. We are not surprised, therefore, that Antioch became the scene of that forward movement, led by Barnabas and Paul, which consisted in openly welcoming Gentile converts into the Christian community, without insisting on their previous conformity to the venerable rite of circumcision.

It was a great advance. Hitherto, especially in Judæa, the Christians were regarded by the people as a Jewish sect; and so long as they were prepared to attend the Temple services, conform to the regulations, and maintain the institutions of Judaism, their belief in Jesus, as the long-promised Messiah, was regarded as a peculiarity which might be condoned and winked at. It was permissible that they should meet in the Love-Feast, so long as they did not forsake the Temple; they might pray to Jesus as God, if they acted in all other respects as devout Jews. But if this rule had been universally maintained, Christianity, like a stream in a marshy land, would have speedily been lost to view. After a few brief years it would have been indistinguishable. And Judaism, with its intolerable burden and exaggerations, would have stood forth among men as the only representative of the purest faith which had ever visited our world. The world of the Gentiles would have been hopelessly alienated; the coming of the Kingdom of God would have been put back for centuries, even if it had ever emerged from the stifling conditions of its cradle.

All this, however, was prevented by the policy to which Barnabas and Saul were led, partly by the exigencies of the case, yet solely by the guidance of the Spirit of God, who had revealed to one of them at least the great truth that the Gentiles are fellow-heirs, and fellow-members of the body, and fellow-partakers of the promise in Christ Jesus through the Gospel. In the Epistle to the Galatians (ii. 4, 12) we have a pleasant glimpse of the liberty which the converts in Antioch had in Christ Jesus.

CIRCUMCISED AND UNCIRCUMCISED JOINED in the common exercises of Christian fellowship. They ate together without question, and even Peter, when on a visit to Antioch, was so charmed with the godly simplicity and beauty of their communion, that he joined freely with them, and partook of their love-feasts and common meals.

The strong conservative party at Jerusalem, however, on hearing these tidings, was ill at ease. They saw that if this principle were allowed to be universal, it would undermine their authority, and eventually rend the religious supremacy over the hearts of men from their grasp. They could not brook the thought that circumcision might fall into disuse, and that the deep spiritual teaching of Moses might become common coin for the handling of Gentile fingers. They therefore, as the first step, sent down false brethren, who were privily brought in, and came to spy out the liberty which the church at Antioch practised. Then, when they were assured of the facts, certain men came down from Judæa, and taught the brethren, saying, "Except ye be circumcised after the manner of Moses, ye cannot be saved."

It was a great crisis, and was the breaking out of a controversy which embittered many succeeding years in the Apostle's life. But it led to some of his his noblest Epistles, and to his exposition of the principles of the Gospel with unrivalled clearness and beauty. For a considerable time the conflict raged in the church at Antioch; but it was finally decided that Paul and Barnabas, and certain others with them, should go up to Jerusalem to consult the apostles and elders about this question.

They travelled slowly through Phœnicia and Samaria, declaring the conversion of the Gentiles in each of the little Christian communities on their route, until they reached Jerusalem, where, in they told all things that God had done with them, that is, in co-operation and fellowship with them, as though by blessing them the living Christ were Himself implicated in the methods they had adopted. But their statements were interrupted by the uprising of certain of the sect of the Pharisees that believed, and the heated interjection of the reiterated statement, "It is needful to circumcise them, and to keep the law of Moses."

Again a special meeting was summoned: in which there was much questioning. Then Peter arose, and said, "This matter was settled in my judgment by God Himself, when in the house of Cornelius the Holy Spirit descended on uncircumcised Gentiles, as on us at the beginning; and as He made no distinction, why should we?"

Then Barnabas and Paul repeated their wondrous story, this time laying emphasis on the fact that they were only the instruments through whom God wrought, and showed how greatly the Gentiles had been blessed, and were being blessed, altogether apart from circumcision. And by enumerating some three or four minor points on which he thought it well to insist, for the right ordering of the young communities; but he did not mention circumcision among them, nor insist on obedience to the Mosaic and Levitical institutions. To him the apostles and elders agreed.

This unanimity between the leading Apostles, and the two Evangelists, who were the cause of the whole controversy, may have been due to the private interview which Paul had sought with them, and which many commentators allocate to this period (Gal. ii. 2, &c.) He tells us that he went up by revelation, as though there were strong spiritual pressure exerted on him; and when he reached Jerusalem he laid before them who were of repute the Gospel he was preaching among the Gentiles, lest he were running in vain. But to his great satisfaction, they did not comment adversely upon his statements, nor insist upon Titus, a young Greek, being circumcised; and they even went so far as to recognise that the Gospel of the uncircumcision had been entrusted to him, giving him and Barnabas the right hand of fellowship, that they should go unto the Gentiles, as themselves unto the circumcision.

THE POWER OF THE RISEN JESUS was so mightily in his servants, that there was no gainsaying their vocation.

The Pharisee party was defeated, and a decree signed in the sense of James's address; but from that moment a relentless war broke out, which followed the Apostle for the next ten years of his life, and cost him many bitter tears. Every church he planted was visited by the emissaries of his virulent opponents, who were not content with insisting on the necessity of circumcision, but asserted that Paul was no Apostle, because he had only seen Christ in vision, and had never companied with Him during the days of his flesh. They traduced his personal character, misrepresented his reluctance to take the gifts of his converts, dwelt with cruel animosity upon his personal defects, and in many cases succeeded in alienating the love and loyalty of his converts.

By prayers and tears, by arguments and persuasions, by threatenings and expostulations, the heroic lion-heart fought the good fight to the end; and, if we may judge from the tone of his later Epistles, he was permitted to see the close of the controversy, in which it was determined once for all that the new wine of Christianity should not be poured into the

WORN-OUT BOTTLE-SKINS OF JUDAISM.

If the conditions of justification are now clearly defined as repentance towards God and faith in our Lord Jesus Christ; if salvation is as free as the flowers of spring in the air of heaven; if we are able to stand fast in the freedom with which Christ has made us free; if we may preach to all and any that those who believe are justified from all things—it is due to the unflinching courage with which the great Apostle of the Gentiles contended for the faith once delivered to the saints.

Sailors' Rest, Dunkerque.—We have now a Mission hall, two comfortable reading rooms, and a temperance coffee-bar Our staff consists of an English assistant, who visits the ships daily, and a young Swede who labours among the Scandinavians on Sunday afternoon. A Scandinavian service is held in the evening; there is a meeting for British seamen at which the help of any Christian officer who may be in port is gladly accepted. There are also meetings during the week. The work is supported by voluntary contributions. This year there is a serious deficit. Contributions will be thankfully received. (Mrs.) A. Kairouan, the Holy City.

KAIROUAN the Holy, for twelve hundred years hermetically sealed to the polluting foot of Jew, Christian, or Pagan, has been opened by French troops; to remind the world of the ultimate triumph of the Cross over the Crescent, and the omnipotence of the arm of the lowly Nazarene. This beautiful Eastern city was built by the warrior Okbah 671 A.D., in the midst of a large inland plain about thirty-seven miles from our present station of Susa.

Popular tradition says that at the time when, flushed with his victories over the Christian armies, and laden with rich booty, he came to this heaven-directed spot, under the spurs of the Atlas range, it was covered with dense forest, and full of wild beasts and serpents; but, nothing daunted, he adjured them in the name of the omnipotent Allah to begone, upon which they fled in terror, leaving the believers in safety to build the city, which until recently was second in sanctity to Mecca, the birth-place of the False Prophet.

On entering the city one is impressed with the religious air about everything and everybody; on arches and doorways, on marble pillars or rude masonry, is written or carved some portion of the Koran, while around the exterior of many of the mosques appears in plaster relief the Mohammedan formula, "There is no God but God, and Mohammed is his prophet." Eighty-five mosques and ninety schools, some large and beautiful, other insignificant and dirty, are used for the training o students in the Koran, the Hadeeth (traditions o Mohammed) and the commentaries, which embrace n the judgment of "the faithful," about al one need to know in this world. Of the mos ques, the grand mosque is exceedingly handsome consisting of a large outer court, the interior of the mosque proper, and a lofty minaret.

The place is the depository of the remains of North African architecture, Christian and Pagan and as one gazes upon the five hundred massive pillars of marble supporting the colonnade of the outer court, and the interior of the mosque, many of them exquisite gems of art, the mind runs back to the time when the land was filled with beautiful Christian churches, echoing the burning words of Tertullian and Cyprian, producing such martyrs as Perpetua and Felicitas, but alas! having left their first love, their candlestick was removed out of its place. And what was the first step in this declension?

SPLITTING THEOLOGICAL HAIRS

while the surrounding millions of heathens were perishing, as Bishop Wilberforce truly says: "The North African Church was swept away because it was never a missionary church," and can we truly say that we are a missionary Church in proportion to our capabilities and responsibilities? In the light of the history of the North African Church it is not a question to be lightly put aside.

Walking through the hot and dusty streets of the city, and with many heartburnings in ruminating over the departed glory of Israel, I felt a strong compulsion to lift up my heart in prayer to the Lord of the harvest, that He would thrust forth more labourers into this portion of the harvest field, and to open to us that day some door of usefulness and blessing.

We were attracted to a shop by a man deftly plaiting silken braid in a very ingenious fashion for the busy tailors; and after passing salutations, he was glad for us to sit down and have a chat; which, after a few preliminaries about his handicraft, turned into the channel we desired; and forthwith we made known our intent in visiting the place, and produced a portion of the Gospel for him to read. Hearing a strange book being read which spoke of Jesus the Messiah, of God and his commands, about heaven and the hereafter, curiosity attracted a small group of friends, who were nearly all good readers, and our informal chat soon developed into an organised discussion, foll owing upon a statement that the Lord Jesus had died upon the Cross as a Redeemer for all mankind, and that there was no salvation for them in any other. "What proof of this have you?" they queried.

Well, (1) In the Pentateuch it was foretold.

(2) In the Prophets his redeeming work is more fully explained.

(3) In the New Testament we have the fact stated that He died "according to the Scriptures."

(4) The dispersion of the Jews following upon this crowning act of wickedness, added to their own confession of the fact.

(5) The testimony of the Koran.

What! this teaching in the Koran! Show it us if you speak the truth.

Certainly. Have you not read in the chapter of "The Family of Imran," "When God said, 'O Jesus, verily I will cause thee to die, and will take thee up unto Me'"? "Oh, yes. But do you know the words 'cause thee to die' do not really mean that He actually died, but that God ended his earthly existence by taking Him up unto Himself, and another upon whom God cast the likeness of the features of Jesus was crucified by the Jews in mistake?"

"THUS DID HE OUTWIT THE UNBELIEVERS."

To this interpretation of the word we objected, as the common meaning of the word which is in everyday use is understood by everyone to mean "to die" in the actual and plain sense of the word. Upon this our audience were strongly inclined to accede to our point, but asked, "Then what do you make of the passage in the chapter entitled 'women.' When the Jews said, 'Verily, we have slain Jesus, the Son of Mary, the apostle of God, yet they slew Him not, neither crucified Him, but He was represented by one in his likeness.' Is that not explicit enough for you? How say you that He died upon the Cross as a Redeemer of mankind?"

"Well, you see we have here two verses which flatly contradict each other, and we must weigh them carefully and abide by the balance of truth. Have you not read in the chapter entitled, 'Jonas,' when Mohammed was in doubt and trouble that these words were commanded him, 'If thou art in doubt concerning that which we have sent down unto thee, then ask those who read the book before thee.' So that the only persons qualified to settle your doubts upon these two passages are the Christians who read the law, the Prophets, and the Gospel, and the only source of explanation of these hard matters in the Koran is to be found in these books. Now what does the Gospel say upon the subject?" and, turning to the Gospel of Luke, we read together the whole account of the trial, crucifixion, and ascension of the Lord. After we had finished, the company were silent, and the features of all testified that the truth had deeply impressed them.

At this juncture a messenger brought a young scholar, clever, eloquent, and quibbling, who poured upon us volumes of Arabic in praise of Islam, and contested with a determination not to be convinced to the contrary for the supremacy of the "False Prophet." After a very long discussion with him we broke up, all the company glad of having found someone who had valiantly fought for their faith.

Upon this Dr. Churcher came into the city, and several of our audience suffering from sore eyes, etc., he kindly treated them free of charge, and by this beneficent ministry, and his own corroboration of the truth we had been preaching, soothed the ruffled tempers, calmed their prejudice, and by practically demonstrating the loving solicitude for their welfare resulting from believing the fact of the Crucifixion, made our argument practically unanswerable.

WHAT IS TO BE DONE FOR KAIROUAN?

It has not a single Christian missionary to preach the Gospel of our Lord and Master. Are we so indifferent as to fail to enter the door which has by the providence of God been opened to us after twelve hundred years of entombment? If any of God's children are led to move in this matter, two things will be necessary:

I. Money sufficient to open and maintain a branch medical mission and Scripture depôt.

II. Money sufficient to purchase and feed a mule to enable us to reach it from our station at Susa.

And then that we, being endued with the Omnipotent power, and taught by the unerring wisdom of the Holy Spirit, may be used to liberate some of the one hundred and seventy millions of enslaved Moslem souls, who "sit in darkness, and in the shadow of death."

Any communication upon this matter may be made to Mr. E. H. Glenny, hon. sec. North Africa Mission, 21, Linton-road, Barking, London.

JOSEPH J. COOKSEY.

North Africa Mission, Susa, Tunisia.

On the Pacific Coast.

WE arrived in San Francisco from Melbourne on Jan. 14, and after a brief stay went south, where at Los Angeles, Redlands, and San Barbara we were engaged in teaching and preaching the Word. Thousands came to hear the testimony of Christ in Los Angeles, and our hearts were filled with joy with the evidences of blessing received, especially among the Lord's people. The three days' conference at the close of our mission at Los Angeles was a time of Divine revival.

On return to San Francisco we had a memorable month's campaign in the Metropolitan Temple. It is no use in that centre to deal with anything less powerful than the Word of God. In truth we found here the effective weapon, and though the fine hall was seldom full, the meetings were "mighty through God to the pulling down of strongholds." What a defenced entrenchment sin and iniquity had in this city!

But we had some exorcisms worthy of apostolic days. The drifts and currents of wickedness remind of the Niagara River just above the Falls, and thousands are being hurried over the cliffs into the eternal depths below. It is hardly possible that the old Grecian or Roman cities exceeded in iniquity some of these modern Western centres. The Lord Jesus is to be "revealed from heaven with the angels of his might to yield vengeance upon them that know not God, and that obey not the Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ," and it would seem that nothing less than the supreme and supernatural intervention in great wrath could meet the case, and put down the wickedness.

And yet we were profoundly thankful to be there. The Lord has much people in that city. Many of them are out and out for Christ, and it has been a real joy to stand with them in the defence of the Gospel and the confirmation of their trust and joy in God. The churches show great weakness. How can it be wondered at? Worldliness, error, and formality have been welcomed, and lukewarmness holds them in its deathly and chilling power. Take one example, there is an honoured name which for a quarter of a century has been identified with a large Congregational church. In connection with the anniversary of this minister's pastorate two Unitarian preachers were invited to take part, in face of the fact that Unitarianism is not only lifeless itself, but has brought into coldness and extreme weakness other so-called churches beside. The servant of Christ cannot do less than speak out strongly against these associations, as also some of the false positions of "the Higher Criticism."

There is great cause for fervent prayer, and I would earnestly ask constant remembrance for our fellow-believers in Christ right along the Pacific coast.

A great difficulty in the work of the evangelist is, what to do with those brought to Christ. To teach them carefully and intelligently the truth of union with Christ, his indwelling presence by the energy and increasing power of the Holy Ghost, is the principal as it is the comforting truth in the work.

The work in Salt Lake City, Helena, Minneapolis, and now in St. Paul, has also been very encouraging.

HENRY VARLEY.

Martyrs in Madagascar.

THE French Protestant Church has received a terrible blow in the death of two of her devoted and efficient pasteurs, M. Escande and M. Minault, cruelly massacred on the road from Antananarivo to Fianarantsoa, the post which the latter was about to occupy as missionary in the disturbed district of Betsileo. M. Escande had already been established in the island as pasteur and missionary for nearly a year. When, on Pasteur Lauga's return to France from Madagascar, the French Société des Missions appealed for someone to take his place, M. Escande, although he had but just arrived from Senegal with his wife and children in order to recruit their health, without hesitation offered himself for the difficult and responsible post.

M. Escande left Marseilles on the 25th May, 1896. During the past year, what he suffered from anxiety, from physical fatigue, from distress of mind, what acts of heroic faith and Christian sympathy he accomplished on behalf of the poor bewildered natives, and the persecuted English and Norwegian missionaries, they and his letters, so simple in their humility, so fervent in their piety, so full of living interest in the great missionary work, can alone now give us an idea. There was no boastfulness about his work; no success ever seemed to elate, no difficulties ever utterly to discourage.

In what esteem he was held by General Gallieni may be gathered from the General's letter to him on his being appointed pasteur at the Palace, and his dispatch at this sad juncture to the Colonial Minister in Paris. He did much to influence General Gallieni in his decision, backed by the approval of the French Government, of restoring to the Protestants the churches which had been so unjustly and ferociously, even to the shedding of blood, wrested from them by the Jesuits. To the honour of General Gallieni be it said, he never dreamt of such infamy as was shown by the Jesuits, when he promulgated his first measures, which he has since so loyally and justly reversed.

Pasteur Minault was born in Paris, and formerly employed in the well-known Magasin du Bon Marché. He took his degree in later years, and, entering the Theological College of Montauban, decided on serving God according to his conscience. As a pasteur he was much beloved, and his loss was greatly felt by his people when he left Gensac in the south-west of France, in response to the appeal for missionaries for Madagascar.

He was a man of great energy and decision of character, united to an amiable disposition, one full of love to the brethren, and to humanity in general, a sincere Christian, and one of no mean talent. His life seemed necessary for the work to which he had devoted himself. His arrival at Madagascar was hailed with joy, and little more than a month had elapsed since he, with his fellow missionaries, five in all, landed at Tamatave.

M. Escande, writing to his brother, in Bordeaux, a letter in which he announces his return to France in July, says: "On Monday, May 17, we, M. Minault and self, intend setting out for Fianarantsoa, M. Minault in filanzane (sedan-chair), myself on horseback. Mr. Standing will accompany us part of the way, as we shall take advantage of being in his district to pay him a visit. On Saturday, the 22nd, we arrive at Betafo, and preach there the following day."

They never reached Betafo. On Friday, the 21st, they were cruelly assassinated. Their bodies were found three days afterwards in a small wood some distance from the main road. Nothing as yet has been said of the bearers of the chair in which M. Minault, whose health had been weakened by fever since his arrival, was carried, nor of M. Escande's horse. What further details may be given than the bare supposition that they were murdered by highwaymen we do not know; or must we wait the time when all mystery shall be revealed by Him whom they served, and for whose cause they died? M. Escande, who was only thirty-three, has left a widow, a Swiss lady, and two young children. M. Minault, not yet forty, was expecting his wife and four children shortly to join him in Madagascar.

Bergerac, June 21. M. A. P.

At Mr. Moody's Home.

SAID a farmer to me, in response to a question, "Where shall we find Mr. Moody?" "Oh! 'D. L.' you mean! Why, he is down that hill feeding his chickens!" And there we found in a little enclosure the beloved evangelist feeding a brood of some two hundred chicks with the same glad spirit as when breaking the Bread of Life to his seven hundred students.

The "Northfield services" commenced yesterday (June 12) in the auditorium with a sacred concert, the two schools rendering the classic music of Mendelssohn, Handel, as well as pieces by Sankey, Stebbins, and other modern hymnologists, with a precision and harmony that were surprising. It was a fitting close to the school year and a fine preparation for the Sabbath, when Mr. Moody was to preach the Baccalaureate sermon to the forty-five graduates, twenty-eight being from the Northfield Seminary.

There is a freshness and buoyancy about the service at the church, the home of Mr. Moody's boyhood, where the boys and girls from the farms and the busy workmen from the hayfields, meet with professors and students, and with them join in the songs which are an important element in the Sabbath service. "You know I have a great capacity for music," the farmer evangelist would remark as he gave out at frequent intervals a hymn. "Now, let the Seminary girls sing the verse, and the Hermon boys come in on the chorus." "Boys, you sing one verse, and the young ladies the other"; or "Let my favourite choir, the children, sing for us." To-day Major Whittle aided in the devotional service. The sermon was direct and helpful, not only to the graduating classes for whom it was designed, but for the large congregation present. Two words comprised the text, "Word, work," illustrated with Mr. Moody's usual force and power. The struggles of forty years ago, as he began to work in the slums of Chicago, in face of discouragements, were recounted in a simple manner, but with a pathos and tenderness that reached every heart. Here are

SOME OF HIS BITS OF ADVICE.

Take the Bible, study it; leave criticism to the theologians; feed on the Word, and then go out to work. Combine the two if you would be full-orbed Christians. The Bible is assailed as never before. Infidels cast it overboard, but it will always swim to the shore. The doctrines, the promises, the messages of love are as fresh to-day as when first spoken. Pass on the message; be obedient to the command. Waste no time in discussion; let speculation and theorising pass into the hands of those who like that kind of study. Be willing to do little things for the Master.

To meet Mr. Moody at his home is to see him at his best. While he sees with sorrow the Sunday newspaper, the bicycle, and the trolley breaking down as never before the sanctity of the Sabbath, while he laments the lack of grip and vitality in the Church, yet he recognises the advance made in spiritual things, and says he never had such sympathy from the churches as now. The schools were never more prosperous than in the year closing. Not one in five of the applicants for the night class can be received. Some twenty nationalities have been represented the last year.

The World Student Conference, which commences June 25 and closes July 4, is becoming more and more a spiritual power, and the colleges are receiving in many cases through their delegates a spiritual uplift. The whole summer is one full of blessed experiences for body and soul, and no one can spend a vacation to better advantage than at Northfield. S. E. B.

Moravian Missions and Vivisection.—The members of the Moravian Mission Board at Herrnhut, in a recent circular, regret the great increase of the practice of vivisection in the medical schools of Europe and America, which practice, they believe, tends to blunt the hearts of those who engage in it. They therefore resolve: That candidates for medical missionary service shall, in attending any such schools, keep clear from such practices as far as ever possible; that their medical missionaries shall be distinctly informed of their views on the subject, both before commencing their medical training and subsequently on entering on service in the fields; and that the teaching and practise of Vivisection shall be strictly prohibited in any hospital, college, or other medical institution connected with our mission.

A Message from India.

WHEN passing through London last November we had the privilege of attending a noon prayer-meeting, and asking prayer for Juneau, Alaska, the field we had left, and for Bombay, India, the field of work for Jesus to which we were going. I take this opportunity to send a note of praise. First—for Alaska, every letter from there has told good news. The work has steadily gone forward, and several hardened sinners turned to be bold followers of Jesus. Many of the thousands rushing into the goldfields have been obliged to hear yet of the God they are forgetting.

Then from India. We praise God that we are here in a time like this, and for the faithful preservation of health amid all the dangers of this season in Bombay. Our work is necessarily limited while studying the language. We rejoice that the ministry of prayer is still ours, and that as we wait at Jesus' feet we have had guidance at each step of our way, and assurance of blessing to many others.

We covet for the souls about us, and specially in the famine districts at this time, Spirit-born prayers, and travail of soul for the opening of hearts to the Word of God.

ANNA M. LEACH,
Bombay. R. A. RODABAUGH.

In a private letter to a friend in England Miss Leach, one of the signatories of the preceding note, writes:—

I think we have realised in the last month that the dark places of the earth are full of the habitations of cruelty. Some things that we have long heard of as happening oft in India have come to our notice and seem much more dreadful than when heard of in the home land. The strife about caste seems so senseless, but it is a horrible nightmare that has taken possession of the Hindoo mind in a mighty way. One servant has a spite against another, and one of the worst things they can say is "you belong to the sweeper caste." That means heaping upon them all sorts of abuse and scorn. In common terms, there are three castes of Hindoos, and still lower than the lowest caste comes the sweeper caste. So strong is the feeling that nothing but the perfect love that casts out all things unholy can uproot it, but how glad we are that we know it can.

A few weeks ago our cook came in with a woman and little girl (about seven years old) and said, "This is Kisin and Bagoo." The child was a very bright, impulsive, loving little creature, remarkably clever. We longed to take her then and hide her somewhere, for we had been told that she had been sold to her future husband. I thought it would surely be some time before they took her away, but this week, "Kisin," Bagoo's cousin, came again. I said, "Where is Bagoo?" The story in Hindustani and the manner in which she told it impressed it on me as I can never tell, much less write. "Bagoo is not ours any more. Her husband came and took her away. He has father and mother, brothers and sisters, and they will give her food and clothes and take care of Bagoo."

I was dazed, and declared that I wished we had stolen her. We never felt so like kidnapping as we do here in India. They tell me her relatives would have brought me into court if I had taken the child. I cannot think the English Government would have denied me the privilege of saving a child for a little bit longer in childhood, that I might give her a knowledge of our Saviour that she is not likely to get. Oh, the wrongs to the innocent! My heart bled, and I wept as for one dead. I could not help it, and my cry is, Lord, what can we do for India's girls?

Italian Military Church.—This year, under great difficulties, the Military Church observed the Whitsuntide Holy Communion. It occurred on the first Sunday in June, when the "Statuto Feast" is always held—a great review in the morning and a display of fireworks at night. But the soldiers came in as great numbers as they could, though there were extra guards on account of the visit of the King of Siam, and the Vatican ceremonies for the sanctification of two new saints, made extra work for the Italian army. The church was full, whilst those who could not come, attended the service on the following Sunday.

OUR DAILY HOMILY.

SUNDAY, July 4.

"It is the day of the Lord's vengeance, the year of recompense in the controversy of Zion."—Isa. xxxiv. 8.

THESE chapters remind us that there is a God that judgeth in the earth. The tendency of the present day is to reduce all things to the operation of natural law, and to crowd God out of his own world, as though He had no longer as much power as a judge or magistrate to inflict punishment. Here He comes out of the silence of eternity to avenge the wrongs of his people perpetrated upon them by Edom. The Jews could never forget that when they were in the extremity of their conflict with Babylon, Edom rejoiced and said, "Rase it, rase it, to the foundation thereof." Now, at length, God would vindicate his people, and punish the proud land whose sins cried to Heaven.

Let us remember that God works not only through natural law, but by sudden manifest interpositions of his providence, and when He arises on behalf of the meek the result is not only terrible but lasting. It seems as though God's judgment on Edom and other peoples which has left them desolate scars on the face of the earth, are instances of the permanence of God's decrees, and of their irreversibleness: "The smoke thereof shall go up for ever; from generation to generation it shall be waste; none shall pass through it for ever and ever." O rebellious soul, if God kept his word against Edom, is it not a mistake to dare to reject his Gospel?

MONDAY, July 5.

"The way of holiness."—Isa. xxxv. 8.

It is a way. Our holiness is progressive, is perfect up to the limit of our capacity, but that capacity is ever on the increase. We go along the path marked out by the footsteps of Jesus, climbing from strength to strength.

It is a highway. That is, it is for everyone that will. It is kept in repair under the King's own orders. There are no toll-gates on its straight line of route. It is like those Roman roads which traversed countries from end to end, and remain to-day imperishable monuments of the skill of their constructors.

It is closed against the unclean. The leper of old was forbidden to obstruct the thoroughfare. The unclean soul is equally forbidden to taint that holy way. God's first requirement of us is separation from uncleanness; if only that is granted, He can do anything with us.

This way is often trodden by Jesus. "He shall be with them" (R.V. marg.). The holy soul has a Divine companion. For the most part those who tread this way do so as part of a great host, but when the path seems lonely He goes beside who walked to Emmaus.

It is plainly defined. Wayfaring men, though fools, need make no mistake. Be true to the Bible, to the holy instincts of your soul, and, above all, to the Blessed Comforter who guides all.

TUESDAY, July 6.

"They held their peace, and answered him not a word; for the king's commandment was, saying, Answer him not."—Isa. xxxvi. 21.

It was very bitter for Hezekiah and Isaiah that these words of vituperation and abuse were spoken in the open-air, the voice travelling far enough to be heard by the whole population in Jerusalem. Rabshakeh argued aloud against any possible policy of resistance, and in doing so threw contempt upon Jehovah. First, he reminded them that Egypt was a broken reed; then, suggested that Hezekiah's recent raid against the idolatry which had grown up in his country must have alienated the God of Israel; then he suggested that God Himself had sent him to destroy the land; and lastly, he quoted the long list of conquests that had fallen to the share of his master. To all of which the king ordered that they should give no reply.

Silence is our best reply to the allegations and taunts of our foes. Be still, O persecuted soul. Hand over thy cause to God. It is useless to argue, even in many cases to give explanations. Be still, and commit thy cause to God. He has heard every word and will answer. He will surely deliver thee.

But, before going into this conflict, be sure that, like Hezekiah, thou hast put from thee all that is false and evil. The iconoclasm of the good king which Rabshakeh so curiously misinterpreted was, after all, his main security. It is necessary that there should be no controversy between God and the soul which He is to defend.

WEDNESDAY, July 7.

"And Hezekiah went up unto the house of the Lord, and spread it (the letter) before the Lord."—Isa. xxxvii. 14.

Probably he literally handed in the letter to God, opening it and laying it down before the Ark, as though the responsibility of dealing with its contents no longer devolved upon himself.

The post and telegraph are great factors in modern life. They are perpetually bringing to us documents of one kind and another, which involve anxious thought. Sometimes a heavy account for expenditure which has been necessarily and righteously incurred, or a story of wrong-doing on the part of some near relative, or some piteous appeal for help. Indeed, not unseldom, letters like this that Rabshakeh addressed to Hezekiah may fall into our lap. We read with beating hearts, and know not what to say, and finally go into the presence of God and spread it out. Answer it for us, great God, we entreat Thee!

The divine reply came first in the blessed assurance sent through Isaiah, and next when the angel of the Lord "spread his wings on the blast, and breathed on the face of the foe as he passed." Let us oftener hand over our anxieties and cares to God. "Doth God take care for oxen," and will He not care for his children? Hath He brought us so far on our journey to put us to shame? We must only be sure that we have given no just cause for the unkind tone of the letters, or brought ourselves into a false position with respect to those who hate God. Daily exercise yourself to have a conscience void of offence: then with God on your side, you can face a world in arms.

THURSDAY, July 8.

"In love to my soul."—Isa. xxxviii. 17.

The R.V. margin is very beautiful. "Thou has loved my soul from the pit." As though from the pit's mouth and onward, there had been one long succession of loving thoughts and words. Or it may be that the love of God has loved us out of the pit of corruption. Let that pit of corruption stand for the evil of our own hearts, the abysmal depths of our selfishness, the lustings and fightings of our flesh. What could have saved us from all these, but the love of God?

The Patience of God's love has been greatly magnified in us, that He has borne with us so tenderly. If God had been less than infinite, He must long ago have renounced us in despair. Oh, the riches of his long-suffering! He has lingered near the pit of our corruption, drawing us from it with untiring solicitude, even after we have repeatedly cast ourselves back into it, with ungrateful persistence.

The Sacrifices of God's love.—How much He has borne and suffered! The cross, with its shame and spitting, seems to be but a revelation, in terms that we can understand, of the pain that lies always on his heart, through the great cost our sin involves. It is this divine sorrow which purifies us, as we consider it.

The Purity of God's love.—What a contrast between some fetid pool and the over-arching blue of heaven! That is an emblem of God's love contrasted with our hate, his sweetness with our chidings, his holiness with our corruption. But his love conquers our sin, and draws us out of the pit.

FRIDAY, July 9.

"There is nothing among my treasures that I have not shewed them."—Isa. xxxix. 4.

In the Book of the Chronicles there is a suggestion which shows the hidden evil that lurked beneath Hezekiah's attitude to these Babylonish ambassadors. "Hezekiah rendered not again according to the benefit done unto him, for his heart was lifted up, therefore there was wrath upon him." Beyond all other sin, pride is abhorrent to God as the parent of other sins, and it was this accursed principle that prompted Hezekiah to that outburst of ostentation. He does not seem to have cared to remember that he had nothing which he had not first received. You will remember that by this sin fell the angels. It was when Nebuchadnezzar surveyed Babylon from the roof of his palace, that he was suddenly smitten with madness.

Be very careful to watch against ostentation and the pride from which it springs. The best antidote is the habit of looking from the gifts to the Giver, and to accustom yourself to the position of a steward of God's wonderful bestowments. Oh for more of the spirit of praise and thanksgiving, of adoring gratitude, of grateful love. Not unto us, not unto us, but unto Thy name be all the glory, O Lord God. All things come of Thee: wealth, and the power to get it; love, and the qualities that earn it; success, and the health of body and mind so needful to its acquisition. No doubt Hezekiah's sad lapse is intended as a warning to us all. It is so minutely recorded that we should be made wary of coquetting with the Babylon around us. It is impossible to do so without becoming ultimately carried into captivity to its corruption.

SATURDAY, July 10.

"Comfort ye, comfort ye my people, saith your God."—Is. xl. 1.

There is a considerable interval between the preceding chapter and this. The Jews are now nearing the term of their long and bitter sufferings, the fires of which have done their work; and God is prepared to extend comforts to them and to their mourners. "Her warfare is accomplished, her iniquity is pardoned."

Comfort because sin is forgiven. "Look to the wounds of Jesus, brother," said Staupitz to Luther. Thither we must all look, there we must all rest. At the foot of the cross alone can sinners be comforted, because there is no more guilt on the conscience or fear of the consequences of transgression.

Comfort because God is on his way to deliver. See the mountains become a way; the crooked is made straight and the rough places smooth. The glorious Lord comes to deliver the afflicted from his strong oppressor, and all flesh shall see it together.

Comfort, because the Strong Deliverer has a tender heart. He comes as a mighty one, but He feeds his flock like a shepherd. Strong, sweet, mighty and merciful. The Everlasting Father, but the Prince of Peace. Those arms sustain the universe, but they gather lambs.

Comfort, because He faints not, neither is weary. Others may tire after a while. Physical strength droops and declines. The current may sweep lovers and friends out of our reach; but Thou remainest! "The Creator of the ends of the earth fainteth not, neither is weary." F. B. M.

Conference in Epping Forest.—A two-days Christian Convention at this beautiful suburban retreat has again been arranged for, and will take place to-morrow and Saturday, July 2 and 3. Meetings will be held each day from 11 a.m. to 7.30 p.m., with intervals. There are frequent trains from Liverpool Street and Gospel Oak to Chingford Station. Tickets at special fares can be had through Mr. Garstin, Queen Square, Aldersgate-street, E.C.

The Edifying of the Church.

By Rev. Dr. PIERSON.

In an address on the second day of the recent Mildmay Conference, Dr. Pierson expounded at length and applied some of the most profound words in St. Paul's most profound Epistles to the Ephesians and the Colossians. The subject was "The Results of Undertaking this Work"—the Evangelization of our Generation—with special reference to "the Edifying of the Church by the 'Increase of the Body'" In some preliminary sentences he spoke generally of the unity of believers with each other and with Christ, referring to the seven forms in which this truth is set forth, in noticeable progress of doctrine. First, there is the figure of the sheep and the shepherd (John x.); second, of the vine and the branches (John xv.); third, the one body (Rom. xii., 1 Cor. xii.); fourth, the one spirit (1 Cor. vi. 17). Next, we have the one man—"make in himself of twain one new man" (Eph. ii.); sixth, the household or commonwealth; and lastly, the temple (likewise in Eph. ii.). In Eph. iv. the body is more completely presented—the one body and one spirit (verse 4). The progress of doctrine is thus very remarkable. In the Epistle to the Colossians the figure of the body and its relations to the head is still more fully brought out. Thus the group of passages in Ephesians and Colossians brings before us the increase of the body, as a result of the work both of evangelization and edification.

Notice, first of all, that this conception of the increase of the body is absolutely unique. There is an increase of the flock, by adding sheep; of the vine, by the outgrowth of branches; of the temple, by the bringing of new stones from the quarry; and of the household by the birth or adoption of new members. But in the increase of the body there is something peculiar, for, from birth, the body is complete in all its parts; it increases, not by accession from without, or even by the putting forth of new growths from within, like a vine, but of the already existing members. How far any Biblical figure should be used as an analogy I am not sure, but it seems to me, that there is no figure in the Bible that comes nearer to an analogy than this of the Body. It has been thought that the other several figures are used because no one of them is adequate to express the full truth; that so, by a combination of them all, we may learn a complete truth, which we could not derive from any one of them singly. I have been much profited by combining the three passages about the body together in a consolidated form, thus: "The Head, even Christ; from whom the whole body fitly joined together and compacted by that which every joint supplieth" (Eph. iv. 15, 16); "by joints and bands, having nourishment ministered, and knit together, according to the effectual working in the measure of every part, maketh increase of the body unto the edifying of itself in love; and increaseth with the increase of God" (Col. ii. 19), who "gave Him to be the Head over all things to the Church, which is his body, the fulness of Him that filleth all in all" (Eph. i. 22, 23). That exhibits the relation which these three passages sustain to each other, and, taking them together, let us notice some marvellous things as to the laws of the increase of the body.

First, the body must have life. "One body" and "one spirit." In a corpse all the parts are present; it is only in a corpus, or body, that the spirit of life is found pervading the parts.

In the second place, this life must be maintained and sustained. How is this done? By a marvellous process, outside material is introduced and incorporated into the substance of the body. "Having nourishment ministered." Air and food must be received into the body; and is it not marvellous that these means of sustaining life—the atmosphere and food—are in Scripture symbols, the former of the Holy Spirit, and the latter of the Word of God? Take the idea of the atmosphere as our element. In Rom. viii. 9, we read, "Ye are in the Spirit, if so be that the Spirit of God dwells in you." This language is true only of what we call the element; the element is both in us and we are in the element. The bird is in the air, and the air in the bird; the fish is in the water, and the water is in the fish; the poker is in the fire, and the fire in the poker. Then consider the idea of food. The Word is milk for babes and meat for those who have grown in grace. Milk has undergone, in another, the process of digestion before being received by the babe; strong meat must be digested by the person who partakes of it.

Third, having seen that there must be life to constitute a corpus, and that this life must be sustained by the introduction of outside material, let us now notice that it is that the body receives nourishment. Both air and food enter the body through the head; the former by the nostrils, the latter by the mouth. So we can never appropriate Divine Truth or assimilate it, except as connected with the Head; nor shall we ever know anything about the Holy Spirit except as we know Him through the Head. Again, all the senses are located in the head—sight, hearing, smelling and taste, while the most delicate organ of touch is the lips, as many a blind man has shown by kissing the raised letters which his callous fingers could not distinguish. It is when connected with the Head that all these blessed spiritual senses get their exercise and development. Substances that are in themselves indigestible are changed in nature by the action of saliva and gastric juices, as when starch is turned into sugar. The Psalmist said of the words of God that they were sweet unto his taste. It is by a process corresponding to "chewing" that the Word becomes delicious, and is digested. "Thy words were found, and I did eat them."

Notice, fourth, that the increase of the body is dependent on the action of the members. This is clearly shown in Rom. xii. and 1 Cor. xii. For instance, the feet bear the body to the place of supplies, and the hands bear the supplies to the place of reception, the mouth. If we are in foul atmosphere, our feet must take us where there is pure air; and, if hungry, to the place where the banquet is, and so forth.

Fifth, observe that the increase depends on the action of every part, not only the great members being needful, but every minutest organ of the body. The air cells of the lungs are numbered by millions, and thither the blood is sent to be aërated. If there is one air cell that does not perform its duty, disease may result. In their own way also, the pores of the skin and the capillaries exercise functions of great importance for the preservation of bodily health and the increase of the body.

The sixth and concluding principle of increase is that the body becomes the fulness of Him that filleth all in all. Christ is the fulness of God, and we are the fulness of God in Him. A striking thought it is that

THE BODY IS THE FULNESS OF CHRIST.

Suppose a brain capable of projecting a great picture, how is it to be painted? The hand has to take the paint and brush, and thus the hand's work becomes the fulness of the brain. Suppose the mind projects a great oratorio, the hands have to perform it; a great piece of mechanism, the hand must construct it; an inspiring epistle, the hand must indite it. So the body becomes the fulness of Him that filleth all in all. How is it to be? You have to do your duty, and thus execute the purpose and plan of God.

What connection, you say, has this with missions? A great deal, for it is inseparable from the growth of the body and its edification. Let us look at three forms of dependence. All growth in the body is from the head, and, in a sense, unto the head. There is organic dependence on the head in all cases. Compare these passages:—(1) Acts ii. 47, "The Lord added those who were being saved," were in a saved state; the best MSS. omit the words, "to the church." The Lord does not care so much about additions to the church. Again (2), Acts v. 14, "And believers were the more added to the Lord." And then (3), if you want to see God's mathematics, look at Acts vi. 1, "And the number of disciples was multiplied." The Lord was not satisfied with additions, so He went on to multiplication.

In the second place, notice the mutual dependence of the members, expressed in 1 Cor. xii. in these words:—"If the foot shall say, Because I am not the hand I am not of the body; is it not therefore of the body? And if the ear shall say, Because I am not the eye, I am not of the body; is it therefore not of the body? If the whole body were an eye, where were the hearing? If the whole were hearing, where were the smelling? But now hath God set the members every one of them in the body, as it hath pleased Him. And if they were all one member, where were the body? And the eye cannot say unto the hand, I have no need of thee, nor again the head to the feet, I have no need of you." All the members depend on the head; from the head they come, into the head they grow, and there is a mutual dependence of all the members. Sometimes we have been dissatisfied with our spheres, but there is no one of us who is not dependent on all the rest. If I get a thorn in my foot, all my body bends to get it out; the entire body—eyes, hands, &c.—helps in the process.

In the third place, notice the organic dependence of the head on the members. "The head cannot say to the feet, I have no need of you." Yes, even the head is dependent on the members; and with reverence be it said, Christ cannot say to any of his members, "I have no need of thee." He might have said it, had He not chosen to be organically connected with the lowest disciple, but when He made that choice He chose organic dependence. I think that is most marvellous. If the eye cannot say to the hand, I have no need of thee, neither can the head say to the feet, I have no need of you. How does the head move from place to place except the feet carry it? The whole body must co-operate, otherwise there cannot be effectual activity. Here are some

PRIMARY TRUTHS ABOUT MISSIONS.

First, all true additions are to the Lord and from the Lord. We are to bear our witness and leave the results to Him. Noah preached a hundred years and never made a convert, but he was just as faithful a preacher of righteousness. Paul tells us that he was a sweet savour of Christ not only in those who are saved, but also in those who perish. The Gospel makes you better or worse, and in either case the preacher is a sweet savour unto God. It is a perilous thing to put faith in visible fruits instead of in the promise of the invisible God.

Secondly, inasmuch as all true members of the body, working in their own sphere, are necessary to the body and to one another, in God's sight it is not of so much importance what you are doing and where, as how you are doing your proper work. We carelessly ask God to bless us in our avocations; but an "avocation" is something that calls you away from your "vocation." While Livingstone was in Africa, a Scotch lady, Mrs. McRobert, requested him to get a body-servant, for whose support she paid. Livingstone used the money in the hire of his faithful servant, Mebalwe. When at Mabotsa, a lion seized the missionary, and would have killed him but for the prompt action of the servant, who at the risk of his own life diverted the lion's attention to himself. The missionary's life was spared for another term of years; and those years of service belong to Mrs. McRobert.

In a quiet town in one of the New England States of America there lived a poor seamstress, Sarah Hosmer, who, having heard that a young man might be educated in the Nestorian Mission Seminary for a certain amount, saved the money, contributed it, and sanctified it with her prayers. She did the same, again and again, for the education of native preachers in the East, and when at a mature age she was borne to her burial there were six missionaries at work whom she had helped to qualify. All true members are necessary to the head, and required in the spheres in which He places them. Of "the foal of an ass" it was said "the Lord hath need of him." God needs and wants all of us to help in the work of the world's evangelization.

I will conclude with three paradoxes:—(1) Man adds members to the organised church, but God adds members to the organic body; (2) all members are not equally important in the body's action, but all are necessary to the body's completeness; (3) Christ only can save the world, but he cannot save it alone.

The Late Dr. John Pulsford.

THE remark is often made, "Why do so many sons of ministers turn out badly?" The reply might be made, "How is it that so many men who fill front places in the ministry and among devoted laymen are ministers' sons?" The latter is a fact which can be traced among any religious society's officers, or in any handbook of the churches; the former, we believe, is an impression resting on few facts. JOHN PULSFORD, born at Torrington, in Devon, in 1817, was the son of a Baptist minister. Mr. Wm. Pulsford, a younger brother, also became a distinguished minister. William has been called Aristotle, and John Plato. They were as different from their father, himself a man of mark as a pastor and a revival preacher, as they were from each other. They were lively lads, and were scarcely expected to follow in their father's steps. They also had a good mother, who greatly influenced them. In that home there must have been revelations of heavenly things, or John Pulsford could not have become the Divine interpreter he was in later years.

His first step from home was into a draper's shop, but he soon left that for the Baptist College, Stepney, and from thence he went to his first charge at Southampton. This small church has been privileged to have the earliest services of two remarkable men, the subject of this sketch and Alexander Maclaren. The latter has recently said of this place:—

> I thank God that I was stuck down in a quiet little corner of the land to begin my ministry. Young students often get pitchforked into prominent positions all at once, and fritter themselves away in all manner of little engagements, which they call duties, instead of stopping at home with their Bibles and getting near to God.

There could not have been much except the work to attract a young man, for if the place could only give £70 a year to Dr. Maclaren, it could not have given much to his immediate predecessor, Dr. Pulsford. Pulsford was three years at Southampton, Maclaren twelve.

From Southampton the young preacher went to Hull, a place which was the last in the world he would have chosen, yet he lived and laboured there for twenty happy years. It was the place where he published the book by which he will probably be best known, "Quiet Hours," which is one of those books that can be taken up for five minutes and a section read and finished—finished as to the reading; when the thinking which it provokes will cease you cannot tell. Open the book at almost any page, and you will come upon something worth remembering. Thus of spiritual darkness he writes:—

> The tree that waves its branches so freely in the great expanse, and spreads out its leafy surface towards heaven, so eager for light and for heat, struck its root in secret underground, in great darkness and bondage. Take heed that you do not undervalue your time of spiritual darkness and conflict. The joy of eternity often strikes its root in very bitterness of spirit. Meekly fulfil all your groaning, and patiently abide your time in darkness —"looking unto Jesus." Do you know that you would not so painfully feel your darkness if the Holy Sunlight did not underlie it? The Diviner the Sunlight at the centre, the painfuller is the encompassing night.

Dr. Pulsford was an interpreter who knew the deep and secret things. Experience had a meaning which he could unfold, and so turn the dark ways of God into light. He had the power to assure the tried and troubled that they were in the Father's hand, and to show them that salvation was at the heart of their distresses.

His earliest teaching evidenced the great power that eternity and eternal things had over him; indeed, the present was part of the Eternal, the life of to-day would run into the Unseen. So profoundly did he believe in inner light and guidance that you might suppose he attached small importance to the written word, and yet it was not so, for he says:—

> Only those who wait upon the Bible through a life-time of prayer, study, and patience can be rewarded with an intelligent and beautiful reverence for it as for the wisdom of God in a mystery. Think! it is not simply wisdom, but the wisdom of God, and not simply the wisdom of God, but the wisdom of God in a mystery.

The aloofness of the man strikes you at once, and yet his singular nearness is as the shadow of yourselves; he speaks often as if he were reading your heart like an open book. He may say much of which you cannot see the drift, but he says more that opens the heavens above and the depth beneath, and shows new worlds of the works and ways of God. So greatly is he impressed with the marvels of Nature in every phase of her operations, that he makes the world a temple and life a service, and you might think he was a kind of mystic naturalist; but you have not read far before the glories of the Son of God and Son of man flash upon you as if from the very throne. The drift of his teaching is so spiritual that he might be supposed to know little or nothing of this workaday world, when suddenly you come upon a passage which tells you that he has seen through all its hollowness.

> I read too much, I think too much, I do too much, I am too much. In this muchness the devil has his castle. God is for quality: the devil for show and quantity. God commends me to the "little child"; the devil commends me to the great man, the learned man, the talented man. God commends to me the "little flock"; the devil tempts me to join my soul to some great Babylon, reformed or unreformed, he cares not which, so that it be Babylon, and not the little flock.

It was with this kind of mystical, yet plain teaching, this lofty yet lowly message, Dr. Pulsford came to men. And men came to him, for they found truths about man and God which they longed to know. His prayers were marked by great openness, as of one who walked before God with "a naked heart." The whole influence of a service conducted by him was as a breath of the Spirit of God. Many walked long distances to hear him, and they would testify that "had the service closed before the sermon, the blessing of it was well worth any long walk."

At Hull Dr. Pulsford changed his views on baptism, and passed over from the ranks of the Baptists to the Congregationalists. From Hull he came to London in 1863, and was pastor for four years of a church at Offord-road, Camden Town; then in 1867 he went to Edinburgh to succeed his brother, Dr. William Pulsford, in the pastorate of the Congregational Church, Albany-street. Here he wielded a large influence over great numbers of very intelligent persons. He was, in Scotland, another illustration of the truth that all forms of teaching are wanted to make a complete ministry, his informal, poetical, intuitional method being a happy complement to the more methodical and logical style which has generally obtained in the North. No doubt his analogies were sometimes fanciful, and his speculations vague, as we remember a long-headed "Writer to the Signet" saying in the sixties, but there was also true nourishment for souls.

One of his most dearly cherished ideas was that in the nature of God was the truth of motherhood; man as composed in his full nature of the masculine and feminine qualities is made in "the image of God," therefore in God you find man and woman, father and mother. His remarkable book "Morgenröthe," is devoted to the unfolding of this conception. The speculations in it might repel some, but who that has ever felt the attraction and grace of God in Christ, what widow in her loneliness, what father in his grief for his dead first-born, what sobbing orphan, has not realised that God has in his nature the very element which corresponds to his needs? Is not Jesus, who is "touched with the feeling of our infirmities," touched with the inmost feeling of our being?

It had been a strong desire of Dr. Pulsford's to have some years of quiet repose and devout fellowship with God at the end of his life, and in order to enjoy this holy dream he lived in the most frugal manner all his life, and put his modest savings away. The failure of the City of Glasgow Bank robbed him of all; but friends came to his aid. In 1886, being then in his seventieth year, he left Edinburgh, and went to Hampstead to live with a daughter. He had a quiet eventide, and the end came at Huntly, near Teignmouth, South Devon, in May, 1897. At Teignmouth his body lies buried. His humble spirit appears in some words spoken about three weeks before his death, when a relative asked him if he ever preached now. "Oh, no; I wish I could. There was a time when I was unfit to preach—too carnal; but now there is absolutely nothing between me and Christ—but I cannot preach now." The crown of white and crimson blossoms which his children laid on his grave bore an inscription which well sums up all that can be said about him, "Promoted to the crown of his life. A tribute from his children. Gone from love to Love."

How Gerty became a "Sunbeam."

"OH, Gerty, don't do it, please don't," said a little sick child, who was lying on a couch, and a blue-eyed child of eight years was busily occupied in making paper boats out of a pretty picture magazine she had long since grown tired of. "Why not, Chrissy? I am sure I don't want this old magazine any more. I am tired of it." "Auntie told me," said Chrissy, "there are lots and lots of poor little girls and boys, some of them always lying down, ill as I am, who never have a picture magazine, or a toy, or a flower—and some of them live quite away in underground kitchens, so they never even see the bright sunshine; and then Auntie said there was a mission called The Sunbeam Mission, and if I wrote to the secretary she would send me the name and address of a little girl or boy to whom I could send my magazine every month. My little girl's name is Nellie King, and I write to her sometimes, and I have such nice letters from her. And what do you think she told me, Gerty? She had never in her life had anything by post before my first magazine reached her, and never had a doll in her hands till I sent her one. Then Auntie says there are hundreds of little children on the lists waiting for a friend, so dear Gerty, don't you think you could write to the secretary too, and have the name of some poor little child who would like to have your magazine?" Gerty looked thoughtful for a few minutes, then she ran to ask mother's leave, which was easily obtained, and that was how Gerty became a "Sunbeam" and tried to do her first real work for the Lord Jesus Christ, who gave his life for children. Will some of my young readers become "Sunbeams" too? If so they must write to the hon. secretary, Central Branch Sunbeam Mission, Eastwood, Weston-super-Mare, who will give them the name of some poor child.

A Good Example.

Miss Thompson writes:—Little Pollie had come with her mother to live in a new town. Poor little Pollie felt very lonely, for she knew no one to speak to or play with, and when she thought of the little friends she had left behind she became very sad.

On Sunday afternoon she was looking out of the window and saw two bright happy-looking little girls come to the door, and heard them ask her mother if she might go out with them. Pollie ran out at once, saying, "How glad I am! I was wishing so much I knew someone." "Perhaps," said the little girls, "you would like to come to Sunday-school with us, we are going there soon." And Pollie went, and had a very happy time there, for the little girls made her feel quite at home, and introduced her to their little friends, so that Pollie never had to complain of feeling lonely again.

Was not this a nice way of showing kindness to a little stranger, and well pleasing to Him who said, "Suffer the little children to come unto Me"?

Our Prize Competition

has come round again, and although the weather is hot, I hope a large number of papers will be sent in by those who are eligible. It will be no hotter for you to write them than it will be for me to correct them. Mind you observe carefully all the rules.

Will parents and teachers kindly see that each of the following Rules is strictly observed, especially No. 7? The only help permitted is to explain the meaning of the rules or questions if necessary.

1. Only those may enter whose names appear in the list below as having been right nine times out of twelve.
2. Competitors will be divided into Four Divisions:—
   I. Those under ten years of age.
   II. Those over ten and under thirteen.
   III. Those over thirteen and under fifteen.
   IV. Those over fifteen.
3. Write outside your envelope in large letters the words "Prize Competition," and the Number of the Division to which you belong; and address it to "Uncle Tom" as usual.
4. At the top of your answer paper write very clearly your Division, your Full Name and Address, and your Age last birthday.
5. Number your answers exactly to correspond with the questions.
6. Every paper must be signed by a parent or teacher to testify that Rule 7 has been observed.
7. No Concordance and no help allowed; only the use of a Reference Bible. Competitors must not help each other.
8. Answers must be posted not later than Monday, July 12. The results will be announced on July 22.
9. Marks will be given for accuracy, neatness, writing, spelling, etc., the rewards being: First Prize, Second Prize, First Certificate, and Second Certificate.

Every answer will be examined separately by three persons; and no papers can be re-examined after the lists appear.

Those who cannot do all the questions set for their division must do as many as they can, and will receive marks accordingly. Although the questions may take longer to do than the usual weekly ones, remember that you are working for a prize, and have more time than usual for doing them.

Division I.

In St. Mark's Gospel (xii. to xvi.):—

1. What was done with a penny?
2. What lessons were taught by it?
3. What lesson was taught from the cock crowing?
4. Who first came to the sepulchre?
5. To whom did Jesus first appear after He rose from the dead?

Division II.

Write an essay upon Temptation, giving from the Bible as many texts and incidents about it as you can.

Division III.

1. Give the best account you can of Nebuchadnezzar from what is recorded of him in the book of Daniel.
2. What great lesson was taught him?

Division IV.

1. What was Amos? In whose reign did he live?
2. Against what nations or peoples did he prophesy judgment? Give the reason in each case.
3. To whom is chapter iv. addressed? What effect had the prophecy upon them?
4. What worship or sacrifices were offered at Bethel, Dan, and Beersheba? (Answer from any book.)

The following are eligible for the competition:—

Personal.

I must thank my young friends for their gifts of flowers, which have given much pleasure to many poor children in the poorer parts of London. Blanche Lindup.—You must have no blots, and you must take great care with your writing and spelling. Frank Stalker.—Very glad to hear of your success. Harold Tyson.—Try and do the right number of answers. Frederick Edward Short.—It would be better for you to sign your second name (Edward) next quarter, as there is another Fred. Short. Jessie Gray.—Glad you are joining the Searcher. Rex Hatchett.—It seems a pity to give up doing the Searcher; you have done it so regularly in the past.

The Mildmay Conference.

THURSDAY EVENING, JUNE 17.

THE closing session of the Conference was to have been presided over by Rev. J. Hudson Taylor, but, to the regret of many, he was unable to be present. Lord POLWARTH filled the chair. The first address was by Dr. WILSON, of the China Inland Mission, who took the place, as a speaker, of Mr. Hudson Taylor. He described a great and gorgeously-appointed altar, erected outside the city of Pekin, where for thousands of years past sacrifices have been offered to heaven by the reigning Emperor, as the representative and official high priest of the whole nation. We Christians have a knowledge of Him who is the one High Priest and Mediator between God and men, yet we have not gone in any measure to tell the vast Chinese people of it. The speaker made an earnest appeal to young Christians in the audience to devote themselves to this great cause of missions, if the Lord should lead them in that path of service. The difficulties may be great, but if the enterprise is a Divine one, these difficulties will be overcome, and the needed strength provided. Dr. Wilson told also of wonderful triumphs of the Gospel in China in the past, and gave some illustrative cases from his own knowledge as a worker at Hang-Chung-fu.

BISHOP RIDLEY,

of British Columbia, had a deeply encouraging story to tell of the progress of the Gospel among the Indian peoples in the far-away North-western territory of Canada. Nothing, he said, is so likely to deepen the spiritual life of Christians as being in harmony with the purposes of God towards this lost world. Christian parents spend much money on their children at home; why not spend it in sending them abroad as workers for God? If we only look at the difficulties, we shall be discouraged and appalled; but these difficulties are intended to make the Church more Christ-like and to increase its power.

In former days, the intervening seas and mountains were barriers between the peoples of the earth; now they have been turned into channels of communication. To some the time of silence when they are learning the language is a terrible discipline; but it enables them to get an insight into the ways and needs of heathenism that they would not otherwise secure. The worker's life will speak to the people when he is unable to reach them by words. We must not make too much of the difficulties. In what part of the field have we retreated? God has been better to us than our expectations. Christians may learn many things in the mission-field that they cannot learn at home, where there are so much ease and comfort on every hand.

Going on to speak of his particular part of the great world-wide field — British Columbia — the bishop said that when he first knew it the people were almost entirely heathen of a very degraded type. They are a very fine race physically, and in their heathen state were fierce and brave. The only way to reach them in the villages of the interior by way of the great rivers that flow into the Pacific. For a time they stoutly resisted the Gospel, and the early workers had serious risks to run. Now, by the blessing of God on the labours of his servants, the whole of the Indian peoples of this great territory have virtually been turned from heathenism and savagery to the Christian faith. On one occasion, said the speaker, he baptized eighty-four and confirmed seventy-nine in one day; next day they had the Holy Communion with ninety-two communicants, and a very happy time it was. When the bishop first ascended these glorious rivers the villages were inhabited by a barbarous people; now there is not a village without its church and school, and the great majority of the people are Christians. They have been won to the Saviour one by one, and the converts are instrumental in reaching others with the Gospel message. Last October the bishop went up one of the rivers to open a new church at a place where they were all savages when he first knew them. The church seats 400 people. At the opening the offertory amounted to £250, all given by the Indians; they had been saving up their money for the occasion all the year. In closing his stirring narrative the bishop told how at one time he had been prayed back to life by these simple-minded people. They met in hundreds at three o'clock in the morning, in the midst of a storm of wind, to pray God to spare the life of their leader. The last thing he heard when he left at the end of January was the voice of one praying for him, and they have been praying for him ever since.

the famous lady traveller, gave the closing address. She said:—Eighteen years have passed since I was at a Conference in this hall. It is impossible not to think of those who took a leading part in the meetings of that day, and of the hearts that have ceased to throb, and of the voices that are silent. But I can go back forty years to the first Conference held at Barnet, when a hundred and twenty met together, and when the subject of the Lord's coming was brought very prominently forward. There were present such men as Dr. Horatius Bonar and Mr. Pennefather, to whom the subject was of vital importance. I suppose the subject is of equal importance in the Mildmay Conference to-day, but possibly the aspect from which it is regarded may be a little different. In that day the coming of our Lord was put forward (as no doubt it would be to-day) as the strongest incentive to personal holiness—to the growth of the spiritual life in the individual. Aspects of truth vary at different times, while the fundamental truths themselves remain the same. It seems as if now those who hold strongly the view of the second coming of our Lord do it more with the view that the Gospel of the Kingdom must be preached throughout all nations before that event comes.

The subject of Foreign Missions has gained a much greater hold on the churches of this country than it had forty years ago, and I think that probably there are various reasons for this. It is impossible not to see and feel that there is a wider interest in the work. Statements by missionaries themselves are much more widely diffused by the Press than they were. Prejudice against missionaries is softened down to some extent outside the churches. Rapid communication has done much. I think certainly that the rise and progress of the China Inland Mission has given missionary interest in this country a great impetus and has linked missionary work with all classes of persons in this country. The Student Volunteer Movement, with its enthusiasm and the aim it puts forward as to the Evangelisation of the World in this Generation, has stirred up a much stronger feeling than before. Then there are Missionary Loan Exhibitions, in which actual idols discarded by the heathen are shown. And last, but certainly not least, there are the testimonies of great travellers; especially the testimony of the late Mr. Darwin, which is not so widely known as it deserves to be, as to the wonderful triumphs of the Gospel in the South Seas. The testimonies also of Mr. Stanley, of Miss Gordon Cumming, and others, have evidently reassured those who are interested in missions as Christians, and have also led the world to know that missions are not the chimerical enterprises they were formerly regarded as being; and that there is a substratum of fact at least in the accounts which missionaries send home of the work of God among the heathen.

All this has combined to assist the greater interest in missions which has arisen. Even now, on returning home from a three years' journey, I think I see that during those three years the interest

HAS BOTH RIPENED AND DEEPENED.

It is not from reaping in joy that I have come from earth's dark places in the East. Nothing is more delightful and encouraging than to hear such a story as Bishop Ridley has told us, and such as I have heard him tell before. Once only in three years of travel — I may say in seven-and-a-half years' Asiatic travel—did I see anything of the same kind. That was in Western Korea, where the American Presbyterians have a large Mission work. Here in one of the most wicked cities in Korea there was a living church which had erected a church edifice, had built a number of schools, and was at that moment paying a number of evangelists and catechists out of its own poverty. Many persons come in from villages at a great distance to receive instruction in Christianity, having learned something of the way to life from those scattered abroad at the time of the battle of Ping-Yang. At a meeting where I was present the room was crowded, and the feeling was something wonderful. One felt that there was a power present which was not of this world. As I looked on those faces in which the new light was shining, and heard the stories (interpreted by one of the missionaries) of the spread of the Gospel in the villages before any European teacher had been with them, I was convinced that the old Gospel, with its truths concerning the Son of Man, the judgment to come, the love and justice of God, the atonement of Christ, the work of the Holy Spirit, is still as powerful as in the first days—that the Gospel is still the power of God unto salvation to everyone that believeth, and that its transforming power is no less than of old. Some of these people, living in a wicked city, had been notorious for their wickedness, but they were washed and sanctified, and were walking in the faith of the Lord Jesus Christ, and doing honour to their Christian profession.

If one speaks of the darkness of the heathen world—and I have a most vivid realisation of it—we must also realise that in the hands of those who have gone forth to preach there is the old strength —not the power of man but of God—and that though the difficulties seem so enormous when looked at from the human point of view, they are not insurmountable by any means. It may be that when those who come home speak of the work, unconsciously an impression is produced that the results are larger than they really are. I have heard more than one person say, "The world is almost converted, isn't it? There is no need of many more missionaries, is there?" Well, my view of the matter is that there is but a glimmer of light here and there—a feeble glimmer, enhancing the darkness that surrounds us. While those to whom missions are dear may be very grateful to God for the success which has attended the efforts put forth, and for the souls led from darkness to light, the fact that the Gospel has been preached seems actually to make it more fearful that there should be which extends everywhere around these small centres of light. It is possible that a traveller spending some years in those countries, and living there, might see more darkness than those who are engaged in the spread of the Gospel, but the fact remains that everywhere there is a darkness that can be felt, and of that element of the case it seems to me the people at home have little conception. The dayspring from on high has visited us and has guided our feet into the way of peace; and the very heritage of light and blessing which we have, may blind our eyes to that darkness which is the heritage of the larger part of the world.

When we put the thing into plain figures, and see that 1050 millions of our race are in practical ignorance of the Lord Jesus Christ, it is impossible to realise the enormous number of human souls who are without God in the world; and when we think that our Lord has ascended into his glory for nearly 1900 years, and the world for which He died is yet in a great measure ignorant of his Name, how great is the reproach to the Church, and, so far as we are not hearty in this matter, to ourselves. When one reflects what the want of knowledge of Jesus Christ really means, the consideration becomes more awful. Of the darkness of heathenism only those who have been there can know. When we think of the fact that thirty millions of the race are passing annually into Christless graves, with no light as to their future, surely it is for us to consider what is our part in removing this darkness, and in fulfilling our Lord's last command to go and teach all nations, and so prepare the way for the Lord's return. For we may be delaying his coming. It is a question for every one of us; perhaps not to be asked so much here in the Mildmay Conference as in other and more mixed gatherings of people; because I suppose all or most of those here are Christians, and are doing much to advance the cause of Christ. I think it was Bishop Ridley who used the phrase, "to the utmost of our ability." Should we not, each one of us, as it were reorganise our lives and see what is really the utmost of our ability, lest our light be found to be darkness?

I would like to say a few words on the kind of work which recommends itself as work to be done for the heathen, and pass on some of the thoughts that have suggested themselves to me on solitary journeys in heathen and Mohammedan countries. I should divide the work to be done into two classes. The first work, it seems to me, for Christians to do is to pray. Greater things are accomplished by prayer, it has been said, than this world dreams of. The hands of those who are fighting the battle abroad need to be upheld by the prayers of those at home. One hears, perhaps, in prayers in our churches, a solitary allusion to foreign missions: "Lord, do Thou hasten thy work." Even in the Church of England service there is little enough mention made of those who lie in utter darkness outside the pale of Christianity. We need more agonising in prayer; more of the spirit of those who in old times kept vigils through the night, and prayed for those in the field. One reason for our lack of this zeal seems to be our callousness as to the actual state of the heathen world. We hear of it again and again till it seems to lose its power over us. Our imagination does not go out to realise what it is to be utterly without God in the world.

CALLOUSNESS AND EXTRAVAGANCE

are the two things that make most impression on me now on returning home after three years' absence. Our prayers are cold; we seem to have so little of the spirit of Jeremiah, who said, "Oh that my head were waters, and mine eyes a fountain of tears, that I might weep day and night for the slain of the daughter of my people." We know how Paul wept when he wrote to the Philippians of those who were enemies of the Cross of Christ. May we not ask that the Giver of all good gifts would give us this tenderness and sympathy, this anguish of spirit, as we think of the heathen for whom Christ died. Prayer is work which lies within the reach of everybody. No one is too weak or too unlearned to pray that God would pour out his Spirit upon all flesh and bless every instrumentality used for spreading the knowledge of his Son.

Then the cry is for more men to go forth. Everywhere the complaint is that there are so few men. There are certainly many women going, but the paucity of men is one of the great distresses of those whose duty it is to select and send forth. There must be many young men who are strong, who have overcome the wicked one, and who should give themselves to this greatest of all works—to be fellow-workers with God in this field of service. I would not discourage any work at home. In the Church of Christ there are no home and foreign missions, properly speaking. The field is the world, whether at home or abroad. In the city of God there is no stranger, alien, or foreigner. But the call is imperative, surely, that those who are in dense darkness and who have never heard of Christ should have this blessed Gospel carried to them, and that they should be brought to know Jesus Christ. How shall they hear without a preacher? This call seems to be emphasised in the case of those who are free to go, who have not yet become entangled by the choice of a profession or business. Should they not sacrifice any possible prizes of a profession at home, to win the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus, which is, as it were, dangling before the eyes of those who go to seek the lost sheep in a foreign land. Of course all, or the majority, cannot go.

I scarcely like to venture to speak in this assembly of the thing that seems pressed upon my thoughts very specially on returning home. It is the work of in the first instance, and next for the sake of perishing souls. What are our self-denials compared with the self-denial that we read and hear of? I have heard of two paupers living without their one little luxury in life—sugar and tea—in order to be able to pay twopence a week for the spread of the Gospel. That seems to me true self-denial—not touching men's burdens lightly with the finger, but carrying them on our own shoulders till they eat into the shrinking flesh, and thus fulfilling the law of Christ.

Self-denial presents itself in so many different ways. What is self-denial to one is not so to another. But there are possible self-denials within the reach of all—even those of us who have given, as we say, "to the extent of our ability." Many things may, perhaps, occur to those who are here as things, which they may very likely practise themselves, but the denial of which they would urge upon others. Is not Christ urging us all to dissociate ourselves from the terrible extravagance of this day—extravagance in dress, in houses and equipages, in holidays, and in every possible way. The world seems to be growingly given to selfish extravagance, and in bondage to the despotism of fashion. Those who have received the higher revelation and who know for themselves the grace of the Lord Jesus Christ have surely much in their power in urging the claims of Christ on any who are given to this extravagance of life. For He claimed that self-denial and nothing else should be the rule of life, for the sake of our brethren and sisters. In that way we may surely all take up our cross and deny ourselves daily. It is quite possible for us to interest people in missions who have never been interested before; not by bringing them to missionary meetings, so much as by telling them of the wonderful things we have heard or seen, revealing a new world of interest to those who have never heard of it; interesting them to that extent that they will become contributors to the spread of the Gospel, and perhaps through this means receive it into their own hearts in the love of it. Too many of us are accustomed to think that the Gospel may have grown old, and may have lost its power in coming down through the centuries. Such missionary narratives of the fruits which the Gospel has brought forth may prove to men that it is still the power of God unto salvation, and has lost nothing in its progress through the ages.

Surely all of us may readjust our expenditure in the light of the example of Christ. There are so many things that we could give up if we would. When we look back and consider what our forefathers considered necessaries and comforts, and then look at what we deem necessary to our comfort, there are certainly things which could be dropped even at the risk of being called old-fashioned, giving up a week of our summer holiday, or taking a house in an unfashionable situation when it would be possible to take one in a fashionable situation, or in the sacrifice of the desire to fill our rooms with objects pleasing to the eye, or the lessening of the number of the periodicals we take, we must feel that there are numbers of things—if we review our expenditure in the light of the grace of Jesus Christ—that we can and must sacrifice for his sake and in order to be conformed to his image.

I cannot help remembering that during the time we have been together in this conference singing hymns and praying to God, at least 6000 human beings who have never heard of Christ have passed into the other world. Can we be indifferent to the fact that men are passing in a ceaseless procession from Christless lives to Christless graves? We speak of the world being evangelised within this generation. We seem to be almost content to let people pass away at the rate of eighty-four a minute without a knowledge of the Lord Jesus Christ, because we will not relinquish that which might interfere with the enjoyment of the good things which we owe to Christianity. Let us all seek to pay something of the debt which we owe to our Lord. Let us strive in every part of our expenditure to act so that we shall not forget the question, "How much owest thou unto thy Lord?" Many voices are calling us to increased self-sacrifice and increased effort to spread the Gospel of Christ. The shadows of earth are deepening for many of us as we journey to the sun-setting; our increased knowledge of the misery of the heathen world, increasing daily; these and other voices call to us; most of all the Master's voice as He asks "Lovest thou Me more than these"?

AFTERNOON GATHERINGS.

CHRISTIAN POLICE ASSOCIATION.

Room No. 5 was nearly filled on Tuesday afternoon, June 15, to hear particulars of work among the police. The chair was taken by Mr. J. H. Tritton. Miss C. Gurney told of the spread of the association in the Colonies, and of good news received from Japan and Ceylon, where three missionaries are labouring, supported by the policemen of Great Britain and Ireland. Miss Gurney also spoke of the Police Seaside Home, the Provincial Police Orphanage, and the Police Institute at Adelphi-terrace. The Lord has greatly blessed the work of the hon. secretaries, Mr. and Mrs. Small, and their helpers at Adelphi-terrace, in bringing many from darkness to light, and helping young policemen on their first start in the force to take a bold stand for Christ among their comrades. The institute is in a central situation, but it is subject to a very heavy rental, and the workers are devising the means for a new home, which shall be entirely free from encumbrance.

The Chairman appealed to all present to pray that the needed help might be supplied, and especially that guidance might be given at this time. After prayer by several policemen and others, Rev. E. W. Moore addressed the meeting on Paul's prayer for the Thessalonians, "The very God of peace sanctify you wholly," etc. (1 Thess. v.). This was followed by a number of testimonies from Christian policemen of various ranks, all bright, real, and full of joy; praising God for the blessings received at the seaside home, the institute, and the annual meetings at Exeter Hall. The sight of their beaming faces was in itself a witness to the power of God in the lives of these stalwart men. Miss Johnson (secretary of the Willing-Hearted Helpers' Band) invited all present to join this union for prayer, the members of which promise (1) to pray for the police, (2) to give at least a shilling a year towards the work, and (3) to interest others, as they are led, in the welfare of the police force. Any friends wishing to become members of the Willing-Hearted Helpers' Band, or to help in providing a permanent institute for our police, are invited to communicate with the hon. secretaries at 1A, Adelphi-terrace, Strand, W.C.

We are glad to know that since the meeting the Lord has inclined the heart of one of his servants to start the Police Institute Fund with a gift of £500. Will all our readers unite with them in prayer that the whole sum needed may be realised?

COLPORTAGE WORK.

A deeply interesting meeting on Colportage was held on Tuesday afternoon. Mr. W. H. Seagram, who presided, called attention to the terrible evils of pernicious literature, the circulation of which is on the increase. Determined efforts are also being made to increase the circulation of infidel literature.

A number of the colporteurs, connected with the Christian Colportage Society for England, were present, and gave brief incidents out of their actual experience, showing how greatly the Lord is blessing their efforts. In the limited space at our disposal, it is only possible to give one or two of these stirring experiences. Mr. Evans said that nineteen years ago when he began work at Harrow he felt that the whole town was closed against him. Now he had a welcome everywhere. In one household five souls had been saved through the reading of "Life in a look." To some servant-girls who had at first jeered at his offer of a tract he had ultimately been enabled to sell this book, and the reading of it had been blessed to their conversion. Two years ago he met a tramp on the wayside. He spoke to him of Christ, and prayed with him. Some time since he came across a dying man, and found him trusting in the Lord Jesus. It was the tramp he had met and prayed with two years before.

Mr. Kitcher, the colporteur at Hampstead, sold a book to a servant-girl, and at the same time spoke to her of her need of a Saviour. He had the joy of leading her into the light. At once she thought of her two sisters in service, and asked him to see them. He did so, and the Lord blessed his visit to their salvation.

Mr. W. R. Moore, a member of the committee, spoke very earnestly of the great need of the villagers. If it were not for some agency such as this, the Gospel would perhaps never be heard by many of these out-of-the-way people. He pointed out the power of a good book, and told a moving story of how a tract had been blessed to the conversion of a man who had fallen very low in sin. This work was specially adapted to the needs of the villages, and he trusted the result of this meeting would be that more colporteurs would be sent out into these dark corners of our land.

Mr. H. D. Brown, the secretary, remarked that if there was one thing more than another they must all have felt whilst listening to these testimonies, it was that this work was an intensely earnest one. It is no effort simply to purify the public taste by a healthier kind of literature. It is to reach the unconverted and bring them to Christ that these servants of God, and the books they carried from door to door, were sent forth. Since the formation of the Society, twenty-three years ago, 800,000 Bibles and Testaments had been sold, and 14,000,000 of books and magazines, while 10,000,000 of tracts had been distributed. Mention has been made of the need in the villages, but this agency was needed everywhere. The Society's great aim was to have the whole land so covered with a network of colporteurs that every house might be visited, and, if possible, every soul reached with the Gospel message at their own homes.

Rev. Dr. Williamson, of Belfast, Mr. Fowler, of Dublin, Mr. Hamilton, and Mr. Budd, representing the Irish Colportage Society, followed with earnest words as to the need of this work in Ireland, where a great change has come over the people in recent years. The Irish peasantry are not now nearly so subservient to the priests as formerly, and are more open, therefore, both to read the Bible and to listen to the Gospel.

SOUTH AMERICAN MISSIONS.

On Wednesday afternoon a meeting was held in Room No. 5 on behalf of the Forward Evangelistic Movement of the South American Missionary Society. Mr. T. A. Denny, who presided, alluded to the dense darkness of the millions of South America, and urged upon the meeting the duty and the privilege of taking a great share in the work of their evangelisation.

Mr. William C. Morris described some of the prominent evils of the papal system in South America. It is the enemy of education; it undermines the independence of the human soul; it rejects and destroys the Bible; it teaches mariolatry; its spirit has always been selfish, mercenary, and despotic. He showed how wonderfully all the countries of South America have been opened of late years to the Gospel and dwelt upon the readiness of the people to hear the message of salvation. He told of the Forward Movement which the society is undertaking, and pleaded that much prayer and support might be given for this important enterprise. The broken-down barriers, the open countries, the spirit of religious inquiry among the people, these are a call from God to us at home.

A few words of sympathy from Mr. Ridings, who has lately returned from Chili, and from Mr. Maxwell Wright, late of Brazil, brought the meeting to a close.

NORTH AFRICA MISSION.

At a meeting on Wednesday under the Mulberry Tree, Mr. A. C. Coote presided. Mr. E. H. Glenny said it was a great joy to realise that God Himself was working in North Africa. He told of the origin and growth of the Mission. Now there are about 120 or 130 workers in Algeria, the greater part belonging to the Mission. Mr. Glenny briefly ran over the various countries in which the Mission is working, showing what God had done. At the majority of the stations there had been more or less blessing.

Rev. C. F. W. Flad, of the London Jews Society, labouring in Tunis, was introduced, and with him Salim, a young Tunisian Arab, now converted to Christ, who appeared in native costume. A sketch of the lad's early history and subsequent conversion when on the Niger with Mr. Robinson having been given, Salim was asked to say a few words, which he did in Arabic. This was translated by Mr. Marshall, of the N.A.M., who also rendered the funeral dirge chanted by Moslems on their way to the grave.

Miss Grissell, from Tunis, having spoken a few words, Mr. Wm. Summers, from Alexandria, said that the work in Egypt differs from that in the Barbary States of North Africa, in that the political, educational, and material conditions under which the Egyptians lived are more advanced; and also in the fact that Egypt is one of the principal religious centres of Islam. He then described the inception and growth of a series of weekly lantern services extending over a period of six months, which were largely attended by Moslems, including all classes of the community. This popular method of reaching the people has been followed up by nightly evangelistic meetings, which are attended by congregations ranging from ten to over one hundred Moslems. He told of the very interesting discussions which followed these meetings. Among the incidents of the work was a cheering case of a young school teacher converted under Medical Mission influences. A year ago he confessed the Lord Jesus, and is now leading a good Christian life in Alexandria, doing much service for his Master and rejoicing in the midst of daily persecution.

THE Y.M.C.A.

A large company of friends mustered under the Mulberry Tree on the last afternoon of the Conference for a combined meeting, in the interests of the Y.M.C.A. and the Y.W.C.A. Sir George Williams, who presided, said he had always considered that one of the great ends for which the Young Men's Christian Association had been called into being was the training of men for foreign missionary work. He also spoke happily of the co-operation that exists, and ought to exist, between the two Associations.

Lord Kinnaird having spoken some appreciative words, Miss Reynolds, secretary of the International Committee of the Y.W.C.A., told of the working of that organisation in different parts of the world, and how it was a bond of union among the branches everywhere. Miss Hill had many interesting things to say of the work in India, and the need for it. European young women, as well as Eurasians and natives are reached and helped. There is a loud call in India for consecrated women who will exhibit the Christian life among their native sisters, and seek to win them to the Saviour.

Mr. J. Stokes, of New York, and a great friend of Y.M.C.A. work in Paris, gave some interesting details of a recent tour round the world, and spoke of openings for effective work, especially in India, Japan, and China. Sister Lucy pleaded for more workers among the women of Ceylon. Dr. A. T. Pierson, in answer to interrogatives by the chairman, expatiated on the splendid services the Y.M.C.A. had done and was fitted to do throughout the world. In a few closing words Mrs. Herbert Tritton urged the need of continued earnest prayer, as well as organisation.

Johannesburg.

DEAR SIR,—Several advertisements have lately appeared in the public papers saying 200 young women were wanted in Johannesburg as barmaids. Fortunately, some of them, knowing that reliable information about women's emigration is to be found at the Office of Emigration at the Imperial Institute, South Kensington, have been prevented from starting. But our association cannot altogether prevent young women, both in situations in Cape Colony or out of situations in England, being attracted by dreams of high wages in the land of gold.

At the present moment there is no place in the whole world more unfitting for a single woman than Johannesburg. Hotels and lodgings are ruinously expensive, and the moral fibre of the population is terribly relaxed, as is indeed always the case in the first rush of gold discovery.

There is an old saying especially dear to the heart of a Christian, "Man's extremity is God's opportunity." Most providentially a lady of high Christian character (with some means of her own so that she requires no salary) has volunteered to start at once for Johannesburg to set up a boarding-house, where the terms would be moderate, and where only young women of good character will be admitted. There is no doubt that it will become self-supporting, but a sum of £300 is needed for the initial expenses. This lady will work in direct communication with the British Women's Emigration Association and with all societies both here and in South Africa who have at heart the welfare of women and girls.

Your readers have so often generously responded to my appeals for help to outfit women for the Colonies that I venture to ask you to let me speak to them through you, and to ask them to send through me some help to enable our Association to rescue young women from the perils of ignorance and misleading advertisements, and to give them the shelter of a Christian home. Nay, more, if we can safely recommend Johannesburg, who can estimate the value of a nucleus of God-fearing, virtuous women in the centre of Africa?—Yours faithfully, Mission Work at Barnes.

DEAR SIR,—I should like to call the attention of your readers to the spiritual needs of Westfield, a comparatively isolated district of Barnes. An undenominational mission has for years been conducted at the Welcome Mission Hall in Railway-street and has been largely blessed, holding Gospel services, mothers' meeting, Sunday-school, temperance club, band of hope, missionary working party, etc., etc. The London City Mission has one of its agents using the Hall as his centre, and his services are proving acceptable.

The difficulty of the situation is the lack of workers within easy reach of the district. The missionary's district comprises about 1200 families, mostly of the labouring class, but with some artisans, a district such as may best be reached by an undenominational hall and mission. If any readers are willing to co-operate, they would find me at the Hall, any Sunday evening or any Monday afternoon.—Yours faithfully,

E. WILKINSON,

The Welcome Mission, Westfield, Barnes, S.W.

Letter from Oxford.

[FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.]

THOSE who attended the meeting of the Oxford and District Christian Endeavour Union on Tuesday evening, must have been much impressed with the influence the movement is exercising upon the churches. The meeting was convened to receive the reports of the delegates who represented the Union at the recent Conference in Liverpool. Their testimonies were full of inspiration.

The Bishop of Calcutta, a former student of Wadham, addressed a meeting on Sunday week in the College Hall. As an undergraduate he exercised a powerful influence, and his earnest words on Sunday were listened to with deep interest. The particular work of the Mission, he said, was bringing religious truth to bear upon the intellects and hearts of the natives, and as the quality of the Christian was of the utmost importance, they confined their attention mainly to the native Christians.

Sermons on behalf of the Irish Church Missions were preached on Sunday week in four of the Evangelical Churches of Oxford. The annual meetings were held on Monday, in the afternoon at Wycliffe Hall, and in the evening at the Rectory Room, St. Aldate-street. Rev. G. C. Bowring presided over the latter gathering, and in introducing the speaker for the evening, Rev. N. F. Duncan, he made an earnest appeal on behalf of the Roman Catholics in Ireland. The objection that the Church of Ireland should do the work itself would be best met, he said, by the objectors spending a month in the middle or south of Ireland. Here in England we have no conception of what Roman Catholicism is when in the majority.

In connection with the work of the Mission, it is interesting to note that 2,000 children are being trained in Protestant schools, and that no opportunities of preaching the Gospel of God's grace are lost. There are no Roman Catholic hymns, and so the people flock to hear the singing. A branch of the Shamrock League has been formed in Oxford, having for its motto, "Sympathy," "Supplication," "Support."

At a time when Romanism is aggressive in Oxford, it is well the mask should be torn aside, and the system revealed in its true light. "If the corruption of good is the greatest evil," then Romanism is indeed the Devil's masterpiece.

Mansfield College held its eleventh annual meeting on Tuesday week, Dr. Mackennal presiding. The report stated that while no event of exceptional interest had to be noted, there had been in all the departments activity and progress. Dr. Berry, in moving its adoption, said they were expecting greater things than they had seen, but considering the youthfulness of the College in its present home, considering the great difficulties that had to be met and vanquished, it was to him a matter of the greatest marvel and a cause of the deepest thankfulness that so much had been done. The influence of Principal Fairbairn, through his books, sermons, and speeches, was ever telling on the life of the churches. The Principal, in reply, said there was in the College an active, generous, noble desire to bless England and the Free Churches. Mansfield had surely no need to be ashamed of the men to whom she had confided the teaching of her sons. It was pleasing to them to think that they had contributed something to the collective learning of a University so venerable and so famed.

The Jubilee celebrations passed off very happily. The friendly societies held a thanksgiving service in the Cathedral at half-past eleven, the preacher being Canon Ince. The children's treat in the Park was a delightful gathering, the arrangements having been carefully made and admirably carried out.

Tunis.—We have again got an excellent and finely situated hall for the work here. It became ours on June 20, and so we naturally call it "Jubilee Hall."

The Walworth Creche.—"The Jubilee has made everybody happy, but some have been forgotten." So writes the hon. supt. of this institution, who earnestly pleads for her slum babies. In perusing the second year's report we are struck by the usefulness of this little work of the back streets, the only one of its kind for many miles round. We note a large increase in the number of children admitted. Mrs. Kinghorne, of 18, Wilson-road, Camberwell, will forward a report on application.

Caledonian Christian Club.

THE tenth annual meeting of this useful Club was held in Stafford House on June 24. The Archdeacon of London presided. Although it was Jubilee week, the superb staircase hall was well filled with an audience that included a number of London ministers, and friends from Scotland.

Mr. Hugh M. Matheson spoke warmly of the necessary work that had been done by the Club these ten years, and said the chief object of the present gathering was to consider a project for increasing the existing accommodation for young men and women coming from Scotland, Wales, and the English provinces to London. About thirty persons at a time could be accommodated in the present house, but if they obtained £800 for fittings and furniture they could provide a second house for the overflow, where the inmates would lodge permanently, and where the income would cover the expenditure.

Archdeacon Sinclair said the work done by this Club was most practical. The difficulty of making their present club-house self-supporting was easily understood: so many of the inmates were beginning life in London, and had small salaries, that until the work was on a larger scale it must look for a measure of support from outside.

Mr. Arthur Robertson, secretary, gave a résumé of the past year's report, including a sketch of the origin of the Club in Jubilee year, 1887. Over 200 young men, mainly Scots, annually found here a temporary safe and helpful home, while over 100 others were guided to safe quarters on arrival.

Mr. H. L. Millar having submitted the financial report, Sir Robert Pullar, Perth, made a speech glowing with warm appreciation of the work, and was followed by Rev. A. Connell, of Regent-square Church. A resolution in favour of establishing a second house, and raising funds for the purpose, was adopted.

Mrs. Burnett Smith with great charm expressed her appreciation of the work, and conveyed to the Duchess of Sutherland the thanks of the committee for the use of Stafford House, and for her Grace's helpfulness to the club, especially in its recent time of trial.

The Duchess of Sutherland received quite a Highland ovation as she rose to reply. She spoke in cordial terms of the good work the club was doing. It was truly a pleasure to her husband and herself to lend their house for such a good purpose. All thinking people wished to break down class distinctions. Rank was but an extra tool in the hands of those who had it to be consecrated to God in the service of man. Her Grace's speech was marked by enthusiasm and earnestness, and was delivered with a charm which made a great impression.

The address of the Club is 52, Upper Bedford-place, Russell Square, W.C.

Princess Mary Village Homes.

Some months ago we had, with sorrow, to record an outbreak of scarlet fever among our family of 200 girls. We can now report, with great thankfulness, that after lingering amongst us for a considerable time, this disease has altogether left us. Although some of the cases were very severe, and caused us great anxiety and careful nursing, God in his great mercy has restored all our little ones to health again. This epidemic has been a great source of expense, and about £120 is still required to meet this extra strain on our funds. We have felt the benefit of our temporary seaside cottage, and we hope soon to be able to have one which we can call our own.

Two great needs have been specially brought before us at this time. Isolation wards must be added to our small infirmary, and more playground must also be provided. The former will cost at least £500, towards which we have £300, leaving £200 still to be raised. With regard to the playground, two acres of land have been acquired on advantageous terms, but a large sum is still required for this purpose. Both these needs we wish to supply this year, in commemoration of Her Most Gracious Majesty's Diamond Jubilee. We feel sure there are many who will help us to carry out these much-needed additions. (Mrs.) S. Merldith.

Bible Training Institute, Glasgow.

THE closing meeting for the session was held in the Christian Institute, Glasgow, on the evening of Friday, June 18. There was a large and enthusiastic audience, composed in great part of young Christian workers, who seemed deeply interested. Mr. James S. Napier, chairman, said, as the years go by and experience is granted, the sessions increase in blessing, and the efficiency of the students grows accordingly. The more closely one looks at the state of our country the more we are impressed with the wisdom of giving such training. The Institute supplies a want felt by ministers of the Gospel, who have cordially given it their commendation.

Mr. John Anderson made a brief statement of the work of the session, showing that the resident students had numbered fifty-four (forty male and fourteen female), outside students fifteen, and members of evening classes 481. In the class work of the session more ground had been covered than before. The students had conducted 1395 meetings (in addition to at least a thousand in the open air), at which the aggregate attendance had been 146,000 persons, whilst 3076 inquirers had passed through their hands. Tidings has just been received of the death in China of the first former student (so far as is known), Mr. Otley.

Rev. John Smith, D.D., said his interest in such institutions had been first aroused during a visit to America some years ago. He came back with a strong desire that an institute similar to that at Chicago might be set up in Scotland. Its existence now is a symptom of progress, and an indication that the kingdom of Christ is going forward. There are men and women who would make splendid missionaries if they could only receive sufficient training in Christian truth; and just as this great need is emerging in the kingdom of God, there is rising among our young people a wonderful wave of interest in foreign missions. We are living in a day of wide opportunity, when God is opening the world to the kingdom of Jesus Christ, but where is the imperial intellect?

Rev. Donald Macleod, D.D., said that speaking as Convener of Home Missions in the Church of Scotland, he wished to get impressed upon them the problem of dealing with the degraded masses at our doors, who are almost the despair of the Christian Church.

After the diplomas had been presented to the students who had completed the curriculum, eight of their number expressed in a few words their feelings of gratitude to God for the opportunity of training for his work which had been afforded them, and for the spiritual and helpful character of the teaching.

A Flock Without a Shepherd.

Dear Sir,—Will you kindly allow me space in your paper for a short statement of facts which have just come to my knowledge?

"Olympia," under the management of Mr. Kiralfy, has just been opened in Brussels, and will remain open for about four months; part of the troupe consists of about 120 English girls, who are boarded out in twos and threes in the neighbourhood of the Gare du Midi, which, as anyone who knows Brussels can testify, is a quarter in which they are daily and nightly exposed to all kinds of temptations.

My object in writing is to make known through the medium of The Christian this neglected flock, and to ask if there is any lady, filled with love for such, who will come and work amongst them, and seek to win some to the Lord who otherwise must sink in this great city, where ungodliness and sin are so manifest. The facts given above are from Mr. Kiralfy himself, who is favourably disposed towards any movement which has for its object the safeguarding of these girls.

This is essentially women's work. I know of no one in Brussels to undertake it, though a certain amount of help could be reckoned upon if the general management and supervision were undertaken by some devoted Christian lady, who would be willing to live near and give her time to the work.

—Yours faithfully, W. G. Kemp, M.D.

A Foreigners' Fete.

BY the kindness of Mr. and Mrs. R. Barclay, about 150 foreigners were recently entertained in their beautiful grounds at High Leigh, Hoddesdon. They represented the following nationalities: Italians, Danes, Swedes, Norwegians, Germans, Dutch, Austrians, Roumanians, Hungarians, Poles, Russians, Indians, and Africans.

A very pleasant time having been spent in the grounds, a substantial dinner was served. Subsequently a meeting was held, so that the united friends present might hear something of the work of God among the foreigners in London, carried on by the London City Mission. It is estimated that there are over 150,000 foreigners from various parts of the world residing in the metropolis. These are visited, as far as practicable, by fifteen missionaries specially appointed to the work, and speaking more than twenty different languages. Mr. Barclay, the host, spoke some words of welcome. The rector of Whitechapel told of the great need for this work, and gave some stirring incidents of usefulness. Mr. Challis, missionary to Asiatics, gave an account of his work.

Tea was thereafter provided, and as the rain came on rather heavily, the foreigners were conducted into the large conservatory, where some time was spent in singing, speaking, and prayer before the return journey was made.

A Good Record—and a Sad One.

Dear Sir,—In a letter just received from my friend, Rev. J. S. Adams, of A.B.M.U., Hankow, the following passage may interest your readers:—

"In my last I referred to the death of Dr. Mackay. A marble slab has been put on his grave by a Chinese lady of high rank, to whom his skill brought healing, and his testimony brought blessing. The English reads:

Alex. M. Mackay.
Died September 21st, 1896.

"'This stone is erected by the wife of the Governor of Hupeh, in memory of one whose skill and gentleness endeared him both to the very high and the very lowly.'

"The Chinese inscription reads:—

"'Dr. Mackay, because of the love he had for Chinese people, day and night, hastened like a swift rider to help. Alas! This good and learned man has so early passed away! It is the will of God! Dr. Mackay healed my sickness, not begrudging pain and labour to relieve my suffering. Therefore I, the wife of the Governor of Hupeh, have erected this tablet. Matt. xxv. 40.'

"I am reminded of a Chinese fellow-student of Dr. Mackay at Edinburgh. The son of a wealthy idolater, he became a Christian, much to the parental anger. This was in China, where every possible coercion and temptation were used to induce the young man to forsake Jesus. In despair, the father consulted a friend, who advised: 'Send him to England for his education. He will soon lose his religion.' The son was sent to Edinburgh, after a time lost his earnestness, then his faith, despite all Mackay could do to help him. He came back, after thorough study, with many honours, but his life soon convinced his father that he had lost his religion. A sorrowful story, which suggests many thoughts."

Does not this word of encouragement and of warning sound a trumpet call to prayer alike for our seats of learning and for native converts?—Yours faithfully, G. D. Hooper.

Luton, Beds, June 19.

Tract Depot, Stirling.—In connection with the Queen's Jubilee, the Stirling Tract Enterprise furnished over half a million tracts and booklets for circulation in London. These were distributed by a large number of missionaries and Christian workers.

Soldiers' Christian Association.—A conference of members belonging to the Aldershot district was held on Friday evening last in the rooms of the Y.M.C.A., Aldershot. Between seventy and eighty were present, the chair being taken by Col. G. Philips. With the exception of a few words from the chairman at the commencement, the whole time was taken by the soldiers themselves in discussing the work of the association. Many suggestions were made and testimonies given to the value of meetings in barrack, and to the need of regimental organisation.

Sandgate Home and Hospital.

THERE is nothing in all the long tale of progress we have made, socially, during the Queen's reign, more calculated to awaken honest pride than the increased care bestowed on the sick and helpless members of the community. We have, at any rate, begun to realise the duty of the strong to bear the infirmities of the weak, if we would conscientiously fulfil the law of our Master, Christ. For nearly a quarter of a century the London Samaritan Society has had a share in this kind of good work, through its varied agencies, and chiefly through its fine convalescent home at Sandgate. Year after year relays of men and women, broken down in health and spirit, have sojourned for a time within its walls, and have been restored to health and to the daily occupations of life. If one could transfer to the printed page the emaciated and bloodless countenances of many patients on arrival, and contrast them with the same faces flushing with pulsating health on departure, the most powerful argument for such an institution would be furnished. As our readers have often been told, all the appointments of "Beach Rocks" are of a very superior kind, and the situation—on the very edge of the English Channel—is perfect.

Of late it has been found necessary to devote more attention and give greater accommodation to cases requiring hospital and surgical treatment. Convalescent Homes, as a rule, will not admit such cases, though they ought to command the readiest sympathy. In "Beach Rocks" a "sick ward" has for some time been in use in both the women's and the men's divisions of the house, and they have proved of untold benefit to those brethren and sisters who have been struck down and wounded in life's struggle. The best medical and nursing skill are at their disposal; and of course the fine fresh reviving sea air makes full recovery more rapid and sure than in the vitiated atmosphere of the town. The terrible scourge of consumption is responsible for many of the patients that are sent to Sandgate, and even in cases where ultimate recovery is hopeless, the treatment and the health-giving surroundings help to prolong lives that are so precious to those dependent on them. The feeding and all the arrangements are on a liberal scale, for which the payments asked are insufficient, so that the support of the public is a necessity for the adequate maintenance of the institution. Due provision is made by meetings on Sunday, as well as during the week, for the spiritual health and comfort of the patients.

Like most other charitable institutions, "Beach Rocks" has suffered considerably through the diversion of funds into special channels at Jubilee time. We trust now, however, that such steady-going works, with a constant outflow of expenditure, will be remembered by the giving public, and that means will be forthcoming for meeting the growing demands of institutions like this, which are a public boon of the most valuable kind. The offices of the Society are at 98, High-street, Homerton, London, N.E.

Christian Succour to India.

DEAR SIR,—To our Bombay Presidency Committee (of which Mr. Conder is chairman) we have already sent £11,000, besides what we have sent to a good many missionaries direct, and what we have sent to our Bengal committee and North-West Province committees. The secretary of the Bombay committee writes: "Would that the money were coming in much more quickly. The needs are terrible and the help is so small in comparison."

The worst three months are before us. The rains so sorely needed will bring no increase of grain till the end of September; while they bring an enormous increase of disease and death from fever, dysentery, small-pox, and cholera. At the same time, as many roads are impassable from the rains, the difficulties of transport are greatly increased, and the stocks of grain must go on diminishing. The missionaries more than ever need all the help they can get, and should be adequately sustained by effectual prayer and help.—Yours, for Christ's sake, RADSTOCK.

"Primitives" in Conference.

[BY ONE OF THE MINISTERS.]

THE seventy-eighth annual conference of the Primitive Methodist body has been held this year in Ardwick Church, Manchester. Rev. Jas. Jackson, of Barnard Castle, co. Durham, was elected president, and Alderman McNeill, Mayor of Crewe, vice-president. Rev. J. P. Langham, of Grimsby, acted as secretary.

There has been more than the usual amount of thinning out from the ranks of the ministers by the angel of death. Nineteen men have "gone home" during the year. Of these the most distinguished is Rev. C. C. McKechnie, for many years the editor of The Quarterly Review, of which periodical he was also the founder. The vacancies caused, however, are all filled up. Twenty-five men made application for the "approved list"; having served their probation and successfully passed their examinations, they were received. Seven new circuits were made, being practically the result of dividing existing circuits; and five mission stations were elevated into independent circuits, having become self-supporting.

The deputation from the Bible Christians had for its object the furtherance of the proposed union between the two denominations. Rev. F. W. Bourne and Mr. W. P. Luk, J.P., were accompanied by Right Hon. James Way, Chief Justice of New South Wales. The last-named won all hearts at once. There was so much heartiness in his speech, it was so brimming over with kindliness, that we feel the cause of union was considerably forwarded by it. The question has now gone a little further; the scheme of union as based upon a submitted constitution is to be laid before the lower courts, and then to each circuit. The findings of these are to be submitted to the Conference of 1898.

It was fitting that the Conference should meet in close proximity to the College; for perhaps the chief event of an eventful fortnight was the opening of the new wing which has been built at the cost of over £10,000 by Mr. W. P. Hartley, J.P., of Aintree. The College buildings are now complete, and with the clock tower form a handsome and prominent feature in the Alexandra Park district. In connection with the opening a magnificent meeting was held in the Free Trade Hall. This large hall was filled in every part with an enthusiastic audience, who listened with rapt attention to Dr. Fairbairn and other speakers. The culminating point was reached when an oil painting of Mr. W. P. Hartley was unveiled and presented to him. The portrait will hang in the library of the College.

The report of the missionary secretary (Rev. J. Smith) as to work in his department was of a most encouraging nature. Three men offer for Central Africa. Mr. S. O. Hatherly, M.R.C.S., Mr. Archie Kidwell, whose father is a settler in Aliwal North, and Mr. T. E. Smith, son of the missionary secretary, were accepted, and will proceed in due course to their work. Reference was made to the return of Mrs. Buckenham, whose husband has died at Kazangula, a martyr to his zeal for Africa.

The principle of a Sustentation Fund was unanimously accepted, and the necessary proceedings will of course be taken.

The Sunday-school and temperance work has been marked by considerable progress during the year. The senior department showed over 100,000 young people as being numbered in connection with the church. The Christian Endeavour movement is a growing concern, 587 societies having already been formed. The general secretary reported that "increase" was the order all round.

The first "Hartley lecture" was delivered by Dr. Ferguson, on "The Relation of the Holy Spirit to the Work of the Church." There was a large attendance. The Conference closed its sittings on Friday evening after having decided that the next session shall be held at Leeds, to commence on June 8th, 1898.

Tent Work in Argentina.—An experiment in tent Gospel work has lately been made at Quilmes, Buenos Ayres, with good results. Large crowds were present, and with the exception of some little disturbance at first, great attention was paid to the preaching. Mr. C. K. Torre and Mr. W. Payne, the evangelists, are greatly encouraged and they are hopeful that by this agency, novel to the people, the way may open for the proclamation of the Gospel in many neglected parts of the Argentine Republic.

West Holme, Hounslow.

MANY moving records of merciful endeavour, on which God smiles, are hidden away in annual reports that seldom get read. A quiet but beautiful work of uplifting women who have been pulled down in body, mind, and estate by the dreadful drink, has for years been going on at West Holme. It is only an ordinary-looking residence on the highway side, but within its precincts the miracles of transformation wrought by loving care and tender sympathy are constantly seen and experienced. The unpretending little report, which is issued to the friends of the work, says:—

In caring for a household such as we have at West Holme, one of our greatest encouragements is to feel that the very fact of its shelter being sought betokens a touch from Christ. For most of our inmates, someone is praying: some child of God, moved with compassion, has laboured to send the wanderer to us; and as each weary, wandering foot crosses the threshold, we feel that Jesus brings that one. When we think of all his unsearchable riches placed at our disposal, we humble ourselves in his sight for our many hours of discouragement and almost despair; and yet we believe that He who knows the terrible resisting power that his love meets here, will not think that it is all faithlessness on our part to recognise the heavy odds the enemy has gained against us and Him by the physical injury added to the moral wreck.

To outsiders, the story of each year's work must seem very much like the one before it, Our matron observed: "Ours is a very difficult report to write, because all that is most interesting (and it is intensely interesting work) is the very part that one cannot tell." During the year 1896 thirteen fresh patients were received, and eleven left.

Where the full time is taken, and friends are in sympathy, our cases of complete reform are most cheering. We can think joyfully of homes where the husband has become an abstainer for the wife's sake, and seeking the Lord together, they and their children are actually on a higher level than before her fall; but where husband or family continue to use alcoholic drinks, only a miracle of grace can save the rescued one from falling back. Nothing gives one so awful a sense of the hold that intoxicating drink has upon human nature, as this persistence of relatives, spite of all warnings, in doing what is all but certain to bring back the old scenes of horror and degradation.

Many interesting details are furnished in the report, and we hope the extracts we have given will induce some friends not only to read the whole, but to lend a hand in the maintenance of a very good and praiseworthy, if difficult, work. Copies may be had of Miss H. S. Pollock, Woodlawn, Hanworth, Middlesex, to whom all applications for admission ought also to be addressed.

Evangelistic Notes.

A TENT united mission has been held in the village of Hillmorton, conducted by Mr. Charles Noakes, of the Evangelization Society. The meetings have been well attended. The mission is being prolonged, as there are anxious ones.

Mr. Richard Spragg, widely known as "Happy Dick," has held encouraging tent missions at West Bromwich and Hill Top. Having formerly worked in the coal mines of South Staffordshire, Mr. Spragg has a local reputation, which has caused many to attend the meetings. The Word was preached with saving power, and steps are being taken to place halls at the evangelist's disposal in other towns of the district. R. A.

The unexpected visit of the well-known evangelist, "Tamil David," to the Straits (says The Malaysia Message) has been a means of great blessing to a number of persons. He was accompanied by Mr. Stanes, who assisted in all the English meetings. They remained four days at Penang, and worked there exclusively amongst the Tamils. Thence they proceed to America on a missionary tour, for which they ask earnest prayer.

Woman's Work Association.—This Society in Dublin sends Biblewomen who visit the poor in their homes. It also pays nurses for the poor. There are only five Biblewomen at present, as the Society cannot afford more unless immediate help is given. The secretary is Mrs. F. W. Leeper, 42, Pembroke-road, Dublin.

Riots in China.—The Shanghai correspondent of The Daily Mail telegraphs on June 19:—"A renewal of the anti-foreign riots is reported from the province of Kiang-Si. An English mission in the city of Wu-chen, on Po-Yang Lake, in that province, has been attacked and destroyed by a mob, led by a 'literate,' who ordered the miscreants to kill five English ladies who had taken refuge in a barn after flying from the house of Rev. E. J. Blandford, an English missionary. Mr. Blandford's house has been destroyed."

Letter to the Editor.

HOSPITAL VIVISECTION.

DearSir,—The above question, embracing as it does such widely varying practices, is one which cannot be settled by a single verdict either of "guilty" or "not guilty." The fiendish and wanton brutality of some "observers" differs widely from the almost insignificant researches of others.

I would briefly combat, from the standpoint of a Christian medical practitioner, some of the inferences of Mr. R. Somerville Wood, and, firstly, would express my doubts as to whether the "successful" inoculation of cancer by injection under the skin has yet been carried out, although it may be transplanted.

To illustrate the immense value of hypodermic injection of animals as an aid in diagnosis—nay, as an absolute settling of knotty and urgent points—let us briefly consider the following case: A patient is afflicted with a deep-seated disease, and it is of the utmost importance, if we are to save the patient's life—and that, perhaps, only by a serious operation—to know whether, say, the disease is tuberculous or not. Not uncommonly the process of injecting an animal hypodermically may alone decide the point. Are we, therefore, to throw away this invaluable test even though it may cause the animal some pain, and certainly will kill it? If any can prove that such a method is contrary to Scripture, I trust that I have a mind sufficiently open to conviction to submit.—Yours faithfully, M. B. (Cantab).

Remarkable Conversion of a Japanese.

THE American papers have reported the conversion of a Japanese gentleman through reading a Bible found in his room at Sturtevant House, in New York. The incident is a remarkable illustration of the good that results from the placing of Bibles in hotel bedrooms.

The gentleman in question, Mr. Akiyama, is the second secretary of the Japanese Legation in St. Petersburg. He had lately obtained a long leave of absence, which he devoted to travelling. On Jan. 14 of the present year he arrived in New York, and took up his abode in Sturtevant House with his suite. Finding a Bible, he was soon absorbed in its contents. Mr. Akiyama has received an excellent education, and speaks several languages with ease.

Something in the good book charmed the reader, and he never tired of the page. The more he read, the more convinced he was of the truths. Not caring to trust his thoughts to his compatriots, he sent to ask for Mr. Frank Bang, one of the proprietors of the house, and spoke to him of the great trouble of his mind. Mr. Bang soon gathered that his visitor desired to embrace the Christian religion, and he sent for a friend, Pastor L. Clark, of the Marble Collegiate Church. For three days the pastor spent much time with the Japanese, and gave him all desirable information on the Bible and the Christian religion.

Mr. Akiyama expressed a desire for baptism, but Mr. Clark advised him to take all needful time for serious thought. The Japanese remained firm in his intention, and said he wished to receive baptism before his return to Japan. Mr. Clark finally acquiesced, and baptized him. The ladies of the missionary committee presented the convert with a beautiful copy of the Bible, and at length he returned to Japan.

Torquay People's Mission.—Special evangelistic services were held in the Chelston Assembly Rooms, and on the beach, on Sunday, June 27. There were large congregations in the rooms, and quite a crowd on the beach. A London evangelist who is on a visit to Torquay gave an earnest address and sang several solos, and a decided impression was made on the audiences. Mr. Levi Powell is the missioner. He has been labouring hard for ten years among the working classes.

Rev. Dr. J. E. Clough, Ongole, India, writes us on June 7:—"I read The Christian, which comes to me week by week, with a great deal of interest. I also receive several copies, sent by kind friends in England: hence I am able to furnish good reading to all the English residents at my station. My health is very good, and you will be very glad to know that since January, I and my Telugu Christian assistants have baptized, upon profession of faith in Jesus, 634. To God be all the praise!"

The Y.W.C.A.

A JUBILEE THANKSGIVING.

Dear Sir,—The present opportunity has been thought by the National Young Women's Christian Association a fitting one for a gathering of their members and associates to present an address to Queen Victoria in token of their loyalty and affection, and of their gratitude to God for so long sparing her to be Sovereign of Great Britain and its Dependencies. Her Majesty has graciously consented to receive the address personally at Windsor. It is during Her Majesty's reign that the Y.W.C.A. has come into existence, and during the past year the committee has secured freehold premises at a cost of £20,000, and an additional expenditure of £6000 for alterations. Towards this £20,000 has been contributed. This is not only a national centre, but the centre of the world's associations, and branches have been formed in all the principal cities of Her Majesty's dominions.

On Thursday, July 1, this thanksgiving meeting will be held in the Royal Albert Hall at 8 p.m., this hour being chosen to suit the business houses of our great city. One thousand of our members will form the choir, and six hundred will be formed into a procession, representing such departments of work as branches for teachers and juniors, hospital nurses, waitresses, and servants, foreigners in England, factory girls, and also the work of the emigration, foreign missions, and travellers' protective department. Our speakers also represent this world-wide work. The Bishop of Sierra Leone, Dr. A. T. Pierson, and Mr. James Stokes (America), Lord Overtoun (Scotland), the Dean of Norwich (England), Canon Fleming (London), and Dr. Harry Guinness (Foreign Lands). Tickets can be obtained, and all further information, from the hon. sec., 26, George-street, Hanover-square, W.—Yours faithfully, Kinnaird.

BRIEF NOTES.

A new Holiday Home, in connection with the Association for lady workers, teachers, nurses, young women in business, etc., has been opened at Sowerby Crescent, Bridlington Quay, Yorkshire. Details as to terms can be had from the lady superintendent at the Home.

The Jubilee hymn by Miss Lucy Bennett, which appeared in our issue of June 17, was written expressly for the Y.W.C.A. thanksgiving service in the Albert Hall this evening, when it will be sung. Copies with music can be had, as a leaflet, from the headquarters of the Association, 26, George-street, Hanover-square, W., at 2s. per 100.

The Y.M.C.A.

A largely-attended summer conference of the Associations in the North Midland District was held at Wakefield on June 15. At the morning session a very interesting conversation on "Bible-class Work" was introduced by Mr. W. Jervis, of Sheffield. This was followed by an address from Mr. W. R. Lane, on "Methods of Spiritual Work." A successful gathering was brought to a close by a meeting addressed by Mr. Lane and Mr. W. Hind Smith.

Scandinavians in London.

When in London for the International Congress of Young Men's Christian Associations (when the jubilee of these associations in Europe was also held), Prince Oscar Bernadotte of Sweden expressed a hope that Scandinavians in London would soon be able to establish a branch for themselves, but it was not until January in this year that a commodious and suitable building could be obtained in the midst of their busy community. Such a building has now been sumptuously fitted up at 17, Percy-street, Tottenham Court-road, and last Sunday his Royal Highness Prince Eugen of Sweden and Norway, with the Swedish Minister and several members of his suite, paid it a formal visit. The society takes the name of the Scandinavian West-end Mission. It is estimated that nearly a thousand Scandinavians reside in the neighbourhood, mostly artisans of the better class, to whom the temptations of London involve many spiritual perils. The house includes a spacious mission room, club rooms, and kitchen, all of which have already become popular. Rooms on the first floor are set apart for the Young Men's Christian Association.

At a brief meeting in the hall Mr. T. A. Denny presided, and Mr. C. J. Ekman, president of the mission, the Rev. C. J. Engvall (missioner), and others spoke, the Prince himself expressing his satisfaction with the arrangements. There are hundreds, and possibly thousands, of Swedes in London to whom the mission will be useful. On Sundays and Wednesdays religious services are held; and once a week there is a social gathering for tea and music.

Temperance.

CELEBRATIONS come and go; commissions sit and disperse, but the great foul stream of wretchedness, vice, and premature death caused by strong drink seems to flow on for ever. As noticed in one of our leaderettes, Rev. M. Guy Pearse has written a pamphlet, calling on all who love Christ and their fellow-men to take rank among total abstainers, and help to fight this foe of the national life. Would that his stirring words might sink deeply and effectually into the hearts of all our readers.

It is gratifying when those in high places of social influence range themselves in the temperance ranks. We note that one member of the United States Cabinet is an abstainer, and all the others, it is said, "use liquor very sparingly." How easy, therefore, it would be for them to give up that little for the sake of a good example. One of the first acts of the President was to exclude liquor from the White House; though on one occasion since he provided it for some foreign guests. Col. Higginson, an American publicist, never uses alcohol, and expresses the cheering opinion that drinking is on the decline among literary men both in the States and in Great Britain.

The Paris correspondent of The Leeds Mercury gives an account of what is being done through Government action to promote temperance among the French people. A "Society Against the Use of Spirituous Liquors" has been set on foot. The drinking of wine and beer is almost universal, and at present they are not tabooed in the pledge, though their moderate use is inculcated.

The British Government are said to be proposing to France and Germany and the Liberian Republic a mutual conference to discuss what can further be done to restrict the liquor trade in West Africa.

A member of the Swedish Parliament declares that the Gothenburg system is a grim failure. The scandal growing out of its administration has compelled a reform. Out of 2488 communes in Sweden the system is said to be now in force in only eighty-nine.

The Liquor Commission continues to hear evidence on what has long been proved to all disinterested and unbiassed minds. If existing laws could only be strictly and impartially enforced, and temperance advocates would agree as to further reforms, there would be hope of some sensible improvement.

In a pamphlet written by Dr. A. Stoddard Kennedy on "The Medical Treatment of the Drink Habit" (Simpkin, Marshall & Co.), he gives particulars of a remedy he says he has successfully used in the case of dipsomaniacs.

On the occasion of the great United National Temperance Fête in the Crystal Palace on July 13 all the liquor bars in the Palace and grounds will be closed.

The cause of temperance sustained a heavy loss in the recent deaths of Mr. Raper and Dr. Lees. It is interesting to know that the stories of their useful lives are to be written—in the case of the former by Mr. J. Deane Hilton, and of the latter by his son, Dr. F. A. Lees.

A Gospel temperance mission is in progress this week in a tent at West Norwood.

Mr. Mountain's Jubilee Ode.—Rev. J. Mountain has received a letter from the Queen's private secretary, conveying Her Majesty's thanks for the Diamond Jubilee verses and music which appeared in our issue of June 17.

Purity Literature.—Two weighty additions to this class of literature have been made by Mr. A. S. Dyer, of The Bombay Guardian. One is a trenchant article on "British Soldiers in India in relation to morals and health." The other is an address given to young men in Bombay and is entitled "The Knight of the White Cross." Its faithful and much-needed testimony against all that would tarnish purity of heart and life ought to be studied and heeded by young people. Both pamphlets can be obtained from Messrs. Dyer Bros., Paternoster-square, E.C.

"Northfield Echoes."—We have received the first number of the present season's issues of this deeply interesting and attractive record of doings and utterances at Mr. Moody's Massachusetts home. It contains among other excellent material, a telling discourse by Pastor Archibald Brown; an account of the Chicago Bible Institute; a hitherto unpublished address by the late Professor H. Drummond, and an address by Mr. Moody. It is finely illustrated. The four succeeding monthly numbers will give reports of the various conferences held at Northfield this summer. The British subscription for the complete set, including postage, will be 5s., which may be sent by foreign money order on East Northfield, Mass., U.S.A., addressed to Mr. A. P. Fitt. Those who wish to keep in full touch with Mr. Moody's work should secure copies of this periodical.

First Converts in Europe.—Acts xvi. 6-15.
Golden Text.—"The entrance of thy words giveth light."—Psalm cxix. 130.

THIS story teaches us that the "steps of a good man are ordered by the Lord," and blessed are they who walk according to God's orders.

I. The Leadings of the Spirit. Paul and Silas wanted to go to Asia, and afterwards to Bithynia, but they were "forbidden of the Holy Ghost." (6-7). In what way they were forbidden we are not told. It is not always possible to give a version at the time why we are led one way rather than another, but humanly speaking, in this case, if Paul had carried out his intentions he would not have met Luke, and so we should have been deprived of the Gospel of Luke, and the Acts of the Apostles. The reasons may lie in another direction, viz., that the people in Asia, etc., were not ready to receive the Gospel. The work of God in us and around us is often delayed by our infirmity. "I have yet many things to say unto you, but ye cannot bear them now."

II. The Spirit's Call.—Elijah had to be taken away to Horeb before he could hear the still small voice, and Paul had to be called far away from the direction in which his desires lay before he could hear the Spirit's call to his proper sphere of work. He is led down to Troas (8)—Troja or Troy—(the war in which the siege of Troy took place is the most famous in ancient history).

In the night, Paul thought he saw a man standing by his couch, who, from his speech and dress, appeared to be a Macedonian, and this man cried, "Come over and help us." We must not reject the guidance of the Spirit because it comes through men or circumstances. We may have no dream, no call like Samuel's, yet our call to work may be just as Divine coming through a sermon, or a book, or the advice of a friend.

We should always be on the look-out for the direction of the Spirit. There are three channels through which we may know the Spirit's will concerning us: (1) As revealed in the Bible. (2) Our own ability. (3) As revealed in our circumstances. When these three point in a straight line we may be sure that the Spirit is directing us.

It is not always easy to obey the Spirit's call even when we hear it, but the shores of time are strewn with the wrecks of those who persist in going to Asia when God is calling them to Troas and Macedonia. "Take heed that no man take my crown."

III. The Blessing of the Spirit.—Paul, Silas, Timothy, and Luke (note that the They is now changed to We, 10) at once set sail to Macedonia, and they do not stop until they arrive at the chief city—Philippi (so named after Philip, King of Macedonia, father of Alexander the Great). At this time Macedonia was a Roman colony—the city was agricultural rather than commercial, and so would contain but few Jews. The Apostles arrived in the middle of the week, but finding lodgings and employment, they did not begin their religious work until the Sabbath. On that day they went along the bank of the Gangites to look for the meeting-house (13). (The Jews usually chose a site near to a river for their synagogues, because of the need for water in cleansing their sacrificial animals: compare Psa. cxxxvii. 1); there they found certain women among whom was Lydia (a Lydian of Thyatira—she probably found the wealthy Romans good customers for her rich dyed fabrics). Was Paul disappointed? How cold was this welcome. Where was the man who had appeared in the vision? So must we all learn that the actual is often far less attractive and romantic than the ideal. Lydia was a convert to Judaism, or at any rate a worshipper of God, and so was prepared to hear what the Apostles taught. Hearing, she believed, and was converted. How small seems the triumph, and yet this was the rise of that stream which was to flood Europe with its life-giving influence.

How calmly was the change wrought in Lydia—quite a contrast to the conversion of the Philippian jailer. Yet it was none the less real. If you cross the Thames at its source, where you could stop the water with your hand, you will have no difficulty in doing so. You may step over it and not be aware you have done so. But if you try to cross the same river at London it means a great struggle. So there are children whose conversion is such an easy, quiet event that they cannot give any date when it occurred, but when men have lived without God for many years, perhaps been very sinful, then the struggle and the tumult is such that it forms an epoch in their career and a revolution in their conduct. We must not demand the same experience of all. It is best to step out of the innocence of childhood into the kingdom of God, for it is not needful to serve an apprenticeship in the work of the devil to do God's bidding well.

Obituary.

REV. J. S. COLLINS.

Much regret is felt in Ireland at the death of Rev. J. S. Collins, of the Dublin University Fuh-Kien Mission, who has lost his life in China. Deceased was travelling on the Min River in a native boat; this craft struck a rock and went to pieces, with the result that Mr. Collins, his servant, and some others, were drowned.

MESSRS. COX AND WOOD.

Tidings have come of the death, on June 12, of Rev. W. S. Cox, of the Church Missionary Society. The rev. gentleman, who was a resident of London, was brought on board the Bathurst at Sierra Leone, homeward bound, in a dying state. The body was buried at sea, by Archdeacon Crowther. The death was also reported from Lagos of Rev. J. B. Wood. Mr. Wood went out to Lagos as far back as 1857, and at the time of his death he was secretary and superintendent of the Yoruba Mission. He trained many African missionaries at Fourah Bay College, including Bishop Oluwole. Mr. Wood laboured chiefly at Abeokuta, where he died on the 26th ult.

REV. D. C. INGRAM.

On Saturday afternoon the death took place of Rev. David C. Ingram, of the Riverside Methodist Church, Blairgowrie. He had only been ill for three days, death being due to congestion of the brain. Mr. Ingram received his training at Didsbury College, entered the Methodist Church in 1860, and has been successively at Weston-super-Mare, Bristol, London, Cardiff, Manchester, Southport, Clifton, Birmingham, and Newcastle-on-Tyne, from which he came to Blairgowrie about three years ago. Mr. Ingram was of a most happy and lovable disposition, and was held in the highest respect by all. He was fifty-eight years of age, and leaves a widow and eleven children.

REV. G. RENNY, WICK.

Rev. George Renny, minister of Wick Free Church, died on Friday last at Strathpeffer, to which place he recently went for the benefit of his health. On Wednesday he had an apoplectic seizure, from which he did not rally. Mr. Renny was a native of Arbroath, where he was born sixty-seven years ago. In the early period of his ministry, he was for six years in charge of the Presbyterian Church at Port Elizabeth in South Africa. Returning to this country, he became pastor of the Free Church at Strathblane, and in 1871 he was called to Wick Free Church. Mr. Renny was an able preacher, a man of excellent business capacity, and a ready debater. He took an active interest in public questions, and was, for a number of years, Chairman of the Wick Landward School Board.

MRS. OLIPHANT.

By the death of Mrs. Oliphant, a notable author has passed from the present scene. She wrote many stories, but her literary activity did not end there. Her life of Edward Irving, and her biography of "Dr. Thomas Chalmers, Preacher, Philosopher, and Statesman," are notable contributions to religious biography; and another important work is her life of Laurence Oliphant and of Alice Oliphant his wife, which passed through many editions. Among her best known contributions to general literature were:—"A Memoir of Principal Tulloch," "Historical Sketches of the Reign of George the Second," "St. Francis of Assisi," "Jerusalem, its History and Hope," "Historical Sketches of the Reign of Queen Anne," and her beautifully-illustrated volume on "Royal Edinburgh, her Saints, Kings, Prophets, and Poets."

MR. LEWIS MUNRO, DINGWALL.

We deeply regret to announce the death of Mr. Lewis Munro, which took place at his residence in Dingwall, N.B., on Wednesday last week. The immediate cause of death was the rupture of a blood-vessel which occurred about three months ago, and though the deceased made several rallies, a complication of adverse symptoms set in about a fortnight ago, with the fatal result stated. Mr. Munro went to Dingwall about twenty-three years ago, and in 1875 started The Ross-shire Journal, which he conducted with spirit and enterprise. During last winter, however, with the view of pushing the sale of a folding machine which he had himself invented, he disposed of his business to a company. Mr. Munro had many friends, to whom his sterling qualities were well known. He took an active part in religious work; he was one of the Scottish delegates to the Y.M.C.A. jubilee in London some years ago. His death at the age of forty-six is greatly mourned, and much sympathy is felt for Mrs Munro and her young son in their sore bereavement.

Requests for Prayer.—For a rich blessing on the convention at Kingswood, Warwickshire, July 6 and 8.—That the Lord will "thrust forth" the workers so greatly needed by the Female Education Society for Singapore, and for Japan.

Personalia.

Rev. F. C. Spurr has left for North Africa, and will not return until September.

Rev. David Baron's address is altered (by the re-naming of the street) from 23, Grove-road to 23, Boscastle-road, Highgate-road, N.W.

Prediger C. T. Lipshytz, secretary of the Barbican Mission to the Jews, started on Monday for a two months' mission tour among the Jews of Poland, Roumania, Southern Russia, and Hungary.

Rev. T. B. Pandian, evangelist and Christian reformer of Southern India, is paying a second visit to Great Britian. He comes to excite interest in his people, the outcast Pariahs, among whom he has laboured seventeen years. He may be addressed at the House of Rest, 10, Finchley-road, N.W.

Mr. and Mrs. Innes-Wright sailed from London last week by the s.s. Matiana for Calcutta, and intend beginning work on the border of Nepaul on their arrival. They will value prayer for blessing during the voyage, and on their work among the hill people. Their address will be Ghoom Post Office, Darjeeling Railway, India.

Wu Ling Fang, the new Chinese Minister at Washington, is a Christian, and a member of the Church of England. He was educated in London, and called to the English bar in 1877. Viceroy Li Hung Chang became early impressed with his ability, and selected him as his legal adviser. Wu was aftewards made director of Chinese railroads, and was connected with the negotiations for peace with Japan.

Rev. K. Behesnilian, during his stay in Scotland, has had many opportunities to plead the cause of his Armenian fellow-countrymen. In Edinburgh and Glasgow, Mr. Behesnilian met with much encouragement; and he also spoke at the Convention at Bridge of Allan, where he was enabled to interest Christians in his evangelistic work, and the rescue of fatherless girls. The latest news from Mrs. Behesnilian respecting the orphanage at Marash is satisfactory.

Bishop Thoburn had an unfortunate accident, his right arm being broken at the wrist. On May 1, two marches (twenty miles) out from Naini Tal, on his way to Pithoragarh, he started in some haste to a village to secure an additional coolie needed by the party. His horse suddenly stopping, the Bishop was thrown over the animal's head. Fortunately, Mrs. Thoburn was near at hand to dress the wound as best she could in the jungle. Bishop Thoburn returned to Naini Tal, and his tour in Eastern Kumaon is therefore abandoned for this season. Mrs. Thoburn reports that her husband did not suffer as much as they expected, and is now doing as well as possible.

From Inland China.

Dear Sir,—Receipt of several numbers of the Christian, reminds me that I owe you a letter of thanks for so kindly and constantly sending me your paper. It is now eleven years since I commenced reading the Christian, and I am more interested in it than ever. Though there are many good religious periodicals published, I haven't yet seen one that is so welcome to me as this.

I last wrote to you in May 1896, when on the Yangtse in Sz-chuan. Since July 31st, I have been living in this city of Hsing-i, my colleague being Mr. C. G. Lewis, from U.S.A. Till latterly almost all his time has been given to study, so I have been confined to the city. But now, thank God, I am able to go out to country markets, and have been much encouraged by the willingness of the people to hear the message, and to buy books and tracts. Very many of the country know me because they have been over to our house for medicines. Here one sees the practical value of dispensing simple medicines. Apart from the physical benefit to the sick (sometimes very doubtful benefit, as they go round the place buying and eating all kinds of medicines after taking ours, on the principle that it is quantity and variety that works the cure), we make many friends in the city and country, and a way is made for the Gospel.

We have now two women inquirers accepted for baptism, but they have to wait till a baptistery is made, and so far we have not succeeded. Every Lord's Day we have good numbers of men at our public service (2 p.m.), who give good attention to the sermon, but so far no one is inquiring the way of life. On April 2nd, we open (D.V.) a school for boys. A number of people have at different times expressed a wish that we should do so, as they think we would be more firm and yet mild in controlling the lads. A generous offer by a well-known friend of the C.I.M. has enabled us to meet this wish. May God grant that it shall mean soul-blessing to many lads and their parents! Cecil Smith.

C.I.M., Hsing-i-fu, Mar. 29.

THE BOOK WORLD.

A RE-STATEMENT OF THE FAITH.

While there is often ground for fear that the Christian faith is ill-represented (if not misrepresented) by those who are set for its defence, every now and then there is reason for rejoicing that God does not leave his Church without servants who are able to counteract such evil, by putting the old truths in modern language, and expounding the primitive faith in terms of present-day thought and experience. A book that answers this description has been issued by Messrs. T. & T. Clark with the title, The Ancient Faith in Modern Light. (10s. 6d.) The work is a series of essays by well-known members of a society of London ministers accustomed to meet for free and brotherly conference. It supplies an obvious need of the times by reasserting fundamental verities of the Christian faith, and indicating some of their varied applications.

The preface rightly points out the importance of distinguishing between the permanent and the transient in religion, between that which is essential and that which is merely accidental. In every age there is a "removing of those things that are shaken, as of things that have been made, that those things which are not shaken may remain." In the eager desire for progress there is danger of the distinction being overlooked; and in the criticism of human theories and systems the underlying realities of Divine thought and eternal truth may unconsciously be left out of sight. To avoid this error (in the words of the préface) "has been the great aim of the essayists, whose long experience as Christian teachers, with much close observation of the thoughts and tendencies of the time, has led them to cling with ever-increasing confidence to the truths which are unchanging and essential."

The opening essay on "Christian Theism" is by Dr. T. Vincent Tymms, principal of Rawdon College. It is rich in thought, and will prove of great service to students. Dealing with anthropomorphic expressions as used of God in the Old Testament, he says: "Some may think it wiser to speak of the Eternal Being in abstract terms, and for safety may deal only in negations; but nothing impersonal can express personality, and thus anthropomorphic language is the only form of speech in which Theism can utter its thoughts." "The Permanent Significance of the Bible" is treated by Professor E. Medley, of Regent's Park College. It is concerned with facts rather than theories, and should prove helpful to those whose minds have been disturbed by extravagant critical statements. The third essay, "The Bible View of Sin," by Principal Cave, of Hackney College, is of great value. It is the work of one who is intimate with philosophic speculation, historical theology, and Scripture teaching. A study of Dr. Cave's pages should be pressed wherever there is a tendency to overlook the exceeding sinfulness of sin and its grave and manifold consequences, physical, moral, spiritual.

The two sections that follow are upon the deep themes of Christ and his work. Dr. Samuel G. Green, of London, writes on "The Deity and Humanity of Christ," touching reverently on points of sublime interest that have been the subject of dangerous theorising. Principal R. Vaughan Pryce, of New College, follows on "The Redemptive Work of the Lord Jesus Christ," and he is careful to show where revelation ends and interpretation begins in the competing theologies. He holds that the Christian doctrine of atonement cannot be rightly interpreted by any who obscure its moral purpose; its great aim is to produce holiness. The remaining essays are:—"New Testament Witness Concerning Christian Churches," by Dr. Samuel Newth, late Principal of New College, a wholesome plea for organisation on lines of Scripture simplicity; "The New Citizenship," by Dr. Joseph Parker, who presents eclectic definitions of Church and State, and asks many perplexing questions; "Christianity and the Child," by Rev. Wm. Brock, of Hampstead, a very useful paper on influencing the young; "The Pulpit and the Press," by Dr. Guinness Rogers, who is alike eloquent and instructive. An appendix gives a fragment, by the late Principal Reynolds, of Cheshunt, on "The Witness of the Spirit." The lamented writer was to have dealt with the subject at length. On his death Dr. Tymms embodied in his essay other aspects of the doctrine of the Holy Spirit.

The volume is not a complete survey of religious thought, nor is it an answer to the demands and challenges of conjectural and destructive criticism. It is a positive and constructive work. In addition to a statement of the faith in language which the most methodical must respect, it deals with Christianity in social, domestic, and public life. The syllabus of each lecture given in the table of contents is full and very valuable. To commend such a book does not imply agreement with all the opinions expressed. In our judgment, however, the essayists have a message for their time, and their pages deserve to be carefully read and digested.

The Coming of the King. By Richard Hayes McCartney. (Fleming H. Revell Company, New York.) In over 200 pages of vigorous verse the author of this volume sets before us the blessed hope of the Church, the coming of her absent Lord; and also deals with the important matters which, as he believes, will lead up to and usher in that supreme event. Whatever may be the reader's attitude with regard to questions of interpretation, everyone who truly loves Him can make his own the loyal language of the closing lines:—

Oh, happy, blessed, glorious day,
To all my best thoughts ever dear!
Ah! how I wish to-morrow's sun
Would bring the blessed Christ anear!
Ay, even now to hear the cry
That shall make heaven and earth to ring—
Just now to lift mine eyes and see
The glorious coming of the King.

Mr. McCartney's style is particularly robust and hearty throughout, and he gives no quarter to what is often euphoniously described as "advanced thought."

Table Mountain: Pictures from Pen and Camera. By Arthur Vine Hall. With illustrations. (J. C. Juta & Co., Capetown, and 36, Basinghall-street, London.)

This poem, modestly called "an attempt in verse," is far beyond average merit. Those who have ridden up and over Table Mountain, and still more those who, like the author, have climbed up and down it by night or by day, or both, will live their enjoyment over again, as they read these vivid descriptions. And they will enter into the enjoyment of one who has eyes to see more than many see of natural beauty, and who has a heart to perceive spiritual realities through earthly shadows. He thus describes the descent of the mountain:—

Oft did we pause to rest or to behold
Th' enchantments ever at our feet unrolled,
Or strain an upward glance, then downward still,
By help of branches, roots, rope-climbers, till
The lower slopes we gain, and from the leaves
Into the sunlight step. The sweetest thieves,
Half-bird, half-butterfly, sip nectar up
From many a great Protea's painted cup,
And all is gay and beautiful as bowers
Of Eden; when in cool of evening hours,
The Lord God walked therein. Alas! 'tis true,
This paradise has lurking serpents too:
The hooded death with dark and mottled skin,
And yellow cobra, horrible as sin,
And nigh as beautiful.

We know not whether to give the meed of praise to the verse or to the illustrations. The photographs are excellent, and the coloured pictures of mountain flowers are exquisite.

Midsummer Volumes.—The parts of Home Words, The Day of Days, and Hand and Heart for the first half of the current year, have been stitched in handy form, and will be widely welcome as holiday reading. (6d. each. "Home Words" Office.)

Castle Meadow. By Emma Marshall. (Seeley & Co.) This finely-flavoured "story of Norwich a hundred years ago" is in Mrs. Marshall's best style. There is plenty of local colour and of human interest in the tale, which enchains the reader's attention and sympathy to the very last page.

Chips from my Log. By John Burnham. (3s. 6d. Baptist Tract and Book Society.) In this volume Mr. Burnham has collected many incidents of his life, and of his career as an evangelist. He wields a facile pen, and his numerous friends will be interested in these reminiscences. Pastor Thos. Spurgeon contributes a preface.

The Book of Daniel in the Light of the Higher Criticism. By I. D. Steele, Nashville, Tenn. Edited, with additions, by H. L. Hastings, of Boston, Mass. (3d. Marshall Bros.) This issue of the Anti-Infidel Library should be read by all who have been regarding the Higher Criticism as just and its findings as reliable. Its facts, given in these pages, are sufficient to demolish any theory of a merely critical origin.

The Burden of Life. By J. Hain Friswell. (3s. 6d. T. Fisher Unwin.) These trenchant essays on social themes show a very reflective mind, and a wide range of knowledge. Mr. Friswell's pen may be called a scalpel, which makes mince-meat of human follies. Here and there we are unable to endorse his criticisms, but for the most part he treats his subjects with a wise as well as vigorous hand.

Creed and Conduct. Selected and arranged by Rev. George Coates. (3s. 6d. C. H. Kelly.) It was an admirable idea to prepare a compilation from the published utterances of Dr. McLaren, of Manchester, of a series of short weekly studies on great themes, and in this book the plan has been well carried out. Those who find or make an opportunity to be in the famous preacher's company for fifteen minutes each week will reap benefit far in excess of the time spent. A splendid portrait of Dr. McLaren forms a frontispiece.

The Story of a Busy Life. Edited by J. R. Miller, D.D. (3s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton.) These recollections of one who was turned from life's vain ambitions to the service of Christ and her fellows, constitute an epistle that all aimless Christians ought to read. "Redeeming the time," was the fruitful motto of Mrs. Paull's consecrated though short career, and no one can surely scan this beautiful record without at least desiring to follow in her steps.

The Marvels of Metals. By F. M. Holmes. (1s. 6d. S. W. Partridge & Co.). "Marvels" is certainly the correct word to use in this connection, as anyone must admit after reading Mr. Holmes's description of how iron, silver, gold, copper, and other elemental substances are treated and manipulated so as to serve the purposes of commerce and daily life. Besides the fascination of the process, there is the wonder that comes from the thought of Divine provision for human use and need.

India; or, Bombay the Beautiful. By Rev. G. W. Clutterbuck. (19, Memorial Hall, E.C.) This is a very live book. Mr. Clutterbuck's immense enthusiasm is tempered, however, by fulness of knowledge, so that the readers get an unusually vivid and intelligent view of the many important Indian topics discussed. There is a not a dull page in the volume, and every chapter is brimful of present interest. We should like to quote freely, if we had space; as it is we warmly commend the work for careful perusal.

Norman MacLeod. By John Wellwood. (1s. 6d. Oliphant, Anderson, & Ferrier.) Few "Famous Scots" of modern times have had a career better worth embalming in the nation's memory than the Barony pastor and friend of the Queen, Norman MacLeod. In this singularly readable monograph, Mr. Wellwood has written with much freedom and fearlessness, quite in keeping with the character of the man whose life story he tells. The reader's religious convictions, or it may be his ecclesiastical prejudices, will sometimes protest, but in the interests of historical accuracy, the author will, on the whole, receive a meed of thanks.

The Prayer Book, Articles and Homilies: Some Forgotten Facts in their History which may decide their Interpretation. By J. T. Tomlinson. (5s. net. Elliot Stock.) A series of papers by an expert on liturgical topics and ritualistic practices. On several important points Mr. Tomlinson examines early editions of the Prayer Book, and official documents relating thereto. He is at home in matters of rubrical distinction, and familiar with the homilies and literature explanatory and corroborative of the definitely Protestant elements in Church of England principles and foundations. The pages will not only provide arrows for the controversial quiver, but also interest all students of ecclesiastical history, especially as regards the past three hundred years.

Alpha and Omega: or God in Human Life. By Rev. William Middleton. (2s. 6d. Morgan & Scott) Volumes of sermons are plentiful, and of studies and meditations there is no lack. But meditative discourses such as these of Mr. Middleton are of the kind that, as often we read them we pray God to increase their supply. Though intensely spiritual, these thoughtful chapters are never mystical. They are expository and illustrative, always clear and practical. Between "God the Alpha" and the concluding "Omega" there is, with other good things, a singularly helpful treatment of the words "The Holy Ghost this signifying" (Heb. ix. 8), and a study of the life of Stephen, who is regarded as a New Testament type of consecration. The book has its earnest word for young and old, and should have many readers.

Marie Hilton: Her Life and Work. By her son, J. Deane Hilton. (7s. 6d. Isbister & Co.) This memoir is a very fitting product of the Jubilee time; the beautiful work of which it tells relates to one of the happiest social features of the Queen's long reign. Mrs. Hilton herself was a woman of queenly bearing, and she had a right royal heart of sympathy. Needless to say, this biography, coming from a filial pen, shows its subject in the most favourable light, but no reader who personally knew Mrs. Hilton will say that the account is in the least marred by exaggeration. As the founder in this country of the now popular Créche system, Mrs. Hilton earned a good degree among our national philanthropists, and her life work deserves to be remembered by a grateful country. Besides graphically relating his mother's personal career and philanthropic work, Mr. Hilton gives very vivid glimpses into the social condition of the East of London, when the work of the Créche was begun. This part of the book is a bit of literary realism of the best kind, and gives scope for the author's ample powers of description. Even those who are most familiar with the splendid service Mrs. Hilton did in so many directions will greatly enjoy this ably-written and deeply-interesting memorial of her.

AMONG THE CHURCHES.

Church of England.

The Bishopric of Ossory is about to become vacant by the resignation of Dr. Walsh.

In Wales a lady has been chosen as one of the representatives at the diocesan conference.

The Bishop of London has laid the foundation stone of a new parish church for West Hampstead.

The Church Congress will be held at Nottingham this year, during the last week in September.

Canon Garry's successor at St. Mary's, Reading, will be Rev. Wm. Neville, until recently Vicar of St. Mary's, Monmouth.

Dean Farrar has assigned seats to leading Nonconformists for the Augustine Commemoration service in Canterbury Cathedral on July 3.

The Dean and Chapter of Durham have elected Rev. Samuel McKinnon Thompson, M.A., Vicar of Tudhoe, Durham County, as Vicar of Northallerton.

The Bishop of London has admonished the vicar of St. Columba's, Haggerston, for conducting a requiem mass in his church for the victims of the Paris fire.

Dr. Mojola Agleebi, of Lagos, West Africa, recently baptized thirty-three persons and ordained a deacon and deaconess for church work. A Young People's Society of Christian Endeavour in the period of one year has grown from five to 180.

The new church of St. Luke's, Maidstone, will be completed in about two months' time. It is in a needy working-class population, and assured of a sound Protestant ministry. Nearly £3000 is required to meet the cost. All particulars may be had from Colonel H. B. Urmston, Ardenlee, Maidstone.

An interesting ceremony recently took place at Weston-by-Runcorn, when twenty of the choir boys laid stones in the church which is being built there, and which the Dean of Chester at the foundation-stone laying some little time ago said would probably be known to posterity as the choir boys' church in consequence of the efforts of the lads.

The Bishop of Southwark, presiding at the annual meeting of the Curates' Augmentation Fund, said the society dealt with what was perhaps the most crying of all the Church's needs—namely, a bettering the condition of the old curates. The want of the Church was money to pay men rather than to build churches. It was a question of starvation.

The trustees of St. Martin's, Birmingham, have offered the living to Rev. A. J. Robinson, rector of Holy Trinity, Marylebone. Mr. Robinson was for six years vicar of St. John's, Waterloo-road, and for eleven years rector of Whitechapel. He has been rector of Holy Trinity since 1891. As a hard parish worker, a warm friend of all Evangelical organisations, a sincere believer in their principles, and a strenuous defender of the Protestant position, Mr. Robinson has long merited any distinction which Evangelical Churchmen can add to that he has already won. He has not yet, we believe, formally accepted St. Martin's, but will doubtless do so.—The Record.

Congregational.

The foundation-stone of a new manse at Ingatestone has been laid.

Rev. J. Sellicks, of Leamington, has declined the call to the English Congregational Church, Johannesburg.

Rev. H. H. Scullard, M.A., formerly pastor of York-street Church, Dublin, has commenced his ministry at Howard Church, Bedford.

During the three years' pastorate of Rev. H. J. Shirley at Fulham, 237 members have been admitted into fellowship; the roll now numbers 384.

Mr. Bernard G. Theobald, B.A., has been appointed by his fellow-students to the general secretaryship of the Lancashire College Settlement in Hulme for the session 1897-8.

The new church at Kirkham, with sitting accommodation for 500 persons, which was erected at a cost of about £5000, has been formally opened by the pastor, Rev. J. S. Langley.

After nearly seven years' ministry, Rev. A. Laishley has preached his farewell sermons at Brigstock. He has accepted a unanimous invitation to the vacant pastorate of Fritchley Church, Derbyshire.

Sir John Forrest, K.C.M.G., Premier of Western Australia, on the eve of his leaving for England, laid the memorial stone of the new Congregational Church at Bunbury, of which Rev. G. Harrington is pastor.

The first Protestant church in Gwelo, Rhodesia, has been formed by Rev. Arthur Giles, formerly of Hackney College. Gwelo is likely to be the centre of an important gold field, midway between Bulawayo and Fort Salisbury.

Rev. J. W. McEwan, M.A., B.Sc., late of Berkley-street Church, Liverpool, hopes to be in England again shortly. His health has been completely restored by his lengthened holiday, spent for the most part in Australia and New Zealand.

A new Sunday-school has been opened in Every-street, Nelson. The building, which is situated at the rear of Carr-road Chapel, and has cost £5000, provides accommodation for 800 scholars, and includes lecture-hall, classrooms, and vestries.

More than usual interest attached to the recent breaking up of Nottingham College. The event marked the close of Dr. Paton's principalship. In addition to this, the Rev. J. Bufton, F.L.S., F.R.G.S., of Tasmania, an old student, was ordained at the college.

A series of gatherings have been held to commemorate the centenary of the first Nonconformist church established in Battersea. Dr. Guinness Rogers, the principal speaker, said the vast increase in suburban London was a matter which required the deepest thought and prayerful consideration from all Christian people.

The cause of religious equality has received yeoman support during the last fifty years from Mr. Carvell Williams, and his friends propose, by means of a suitable testimonial, to recognise his marked services. Mr. Williams fought in the front rank for the abolition of Church rates and University tests, and has always raised his voice in protests against the fetters which gall Dissenters of all shades of opinion. The treasurer of the fund which it is desired to raise is Mr. H. J. Wilson, M.P.

Calls.—Mr. Robert Reid, of the Congregational College, Nottingham, to Eastwood, Notts; Rev. C Mason, as assistant to Rev. Wm. Gooby, Burgess Hill, Sussex; Joseph Williams, to English church, Maesteg, Glam.; Rev. David Evans, to Swan-hill, Shrewsbury; Rev. J. G. Evans, to Winslow and Great Horwood churches.

Resignations.—Rev. A. H. Sayers, of Frodsham Union Church; Rev. M. G. Astbury, of Clemens Church, Leamington.

Baptist.

Rev. T. Phillips, B.A., pastor of Fuller Chapel, Kettering, has declined the invitation to Bloomsbury Chapel.

Mrs. C. H. Spurgeon will lay the memorial-stone of the larger chapel which is to be erected at Bexhill on July 7.

At Major-road Chapel, Stratford, sixteen persons were recently baptized, for the most part fruit of the mission lately conducted by Rev. Dr. Usher.

The first anniversary of Rev. Fred. H. King has been celebrated at Bow-road, E. During the year forty-nine members have been added to the church.

The anniversary services of Union Church, Hanwell, have just been held, having been conducted by Revs. G. R. Lowden, Dr. Newman Hall, and E. G. Gange.

The fourth anniversary of St. Paul's Church, Skegness (Rev. G. Goodchild, pastor), has been celebrated with many tokens of blessing. The church has 122 members.

Memorial-stones of a chapel have been laid in Tump-road, Blackheath, by Rev. Rev. F. O. Yates and Mr. J. W. Tipstaff, of Birmingham. The chapel will accommodate 500 persons, and the cost will be about £1200.

The Western Association has 3100 members, an increase of forty-four during the year. At the annual meetings Councillor James Baker, of Ottery, the new president, gave an address on "The Influence of Religion in Everyday Life."

The annual meeting of the "Poor Ministers' Clothing Society," in connection with the Metropolitan Tabernacle, has been fixed for Monday, July 5, at which parcels of clothing are received from friends, for distribution among poor ministers who apply for assistance.

Pastor Owen Tidman, of Abersychan, South Wales, finding that a great of gambling is practised in the woods and other places, is visiting these resorts in company with other Christian workers, with a view of leading the gamblers to Christ. He would be grateful for any tracts on gambling.

At the Bristol Association, Mr. J. Swaish presented the report of the committee on civil and religious affairs. He spoke of the advance which Nonconformists had made during the Queen's reign in numbers, in social influence, and in general usefulness. Now they comprised the greater portion of the population of this country.

The reports of the county secretaries of the East Midland Association, held at Burton-on-Trent, were encouraging. Derbyshire has 4165 members, an increase of fifty-two. The membership in Leicestershire is 8285, an increase of 115. Lincolnshire has 2920 members, an increase of seventy-seven. Nottinghamshire reports 5500 members, a decrease of thirty-two.

Methodist.

At the conference of the Primitive Methodists at Manchester three young missionaries were accepted for the foreign field.

News has reached the Wesleyan Mission-house of the death from fever of the Rev. Samuel Gifford, who left England six months ago for service in South Africa.

A large proportion of the colonial troops who have come for the Diamond Jubilee celebrations are Wesleyan Methodists. This led to a unique and deeply interesting gathering at the Mission House, Bishopsgate-street, London.

The London Central Mission, of which Rev. J. E. Wakerley is in charge, is to have the advantage of the services of Mr. G. H. East, who has for four years been connected with the Blenheim-street Mission, Newcastle.

The programme for the forthcoming annual U.M. Assembly contains, amongst other special points of interest, a consecration service and roll-call of C.E. societies, a missionary conference, and a new college and endowment fund celebration meeting.

It is probable that Rev. Dr. Swallow, who has spent a quarter of a century in successful mission work in China, and is now home on furlough, will be nominated for the presidency of the United Methodist Free Churches at the forthcoming Annual Assembly.

A plot of land has been purchased at Wadebridge on which to erect new Sunday-schools and a lecture hall as a memorial to the late Mr. Samuel Willis, who had filled all the offices open to a layman, and was for twenty-eight years superintendent of the Sunday-school.

This year, for the first time at the annual meetings of the missions in North China, the English missionaries had the natives associated with them in discussing the conditions and prospects of the churches. Rev. John Hinds writes that the native delegates from the circuits exhibited considerable debating power, and that the meetings were a great success.

In connection with the meeting of the Hull, Grimsby, and Lincoln P.M. Ministers' Association, Rev. R. W. Keightley preached the official sermon, and the subjects discussed included Professor Caird's "Philosophy of Religion," "Progress of Primitive Methodism during the last Sixty Years," "George Fox and the Early Quakers," and "The Nurture of the Christian Life."

The Leeds Conference plan is printed. The two Conference Sundays are July 25 and August 1, and, as usual on those days, all the principal pulpits in the Leeds District will be occupied by distinguished connexional preachers. The Conference special services include the induction of the President and the Conference prayer-meeting, the latter to be held at the opening of the Pastoral Session on Tuesday, July 20.

The Irish Methodist Conference met last week in Cork under the presidency of Rev. Dr. Randles, and was largely attended. An increase of nearly 400 in church membership was reported; seven young men were ordained to the full work of the ministry. Open-air preaching in the south and west of Ireland occupied much attention, and a minister was specially set apart for this kind of work in the midland counties.

Presbyterian.

It has been decided to erect a new church in Victoria-road, New Swindon, in connection with Trinity Church (Rev. J. H. Gavin).

The Reformed Presbyterian Synod of America has decided to withhold aid from the benevolent fund to students who use tobacco or indulge in any other extravagant habits.

In the past year the Free Church Home Mission Fund had an income of £1,700. An effort is to be made to increase it to £3000, to employ licentiates and sixth-year students.

Rev. Dr. Lorimer, of Boston, U.S.A., who was in the habit of exchanging pulpits in the summer with Dr. Pentecost, will preach at Marylebone on July 13 and six following Sundays. In the meantime the pulpit will be occupied by Rev. Dr. Pierson.

Rev. W. Murray, of Brunswick-street Church, Manchester, has completed the twenty-fifth year of his pastorate. At the commencement of his ministry there were 140 members, now the number is 490 and in all departments of work there has been a gratifying success.

The Mayor of Middlesbrough has laid the memorial-stone of the new premises for Sunday-school and other work in connection with the Trinity Church.

An interesting service was held a few days ago at Regent-square Church, London, when Mr. W. M. Christie, formerly Free Church missionary teacher at Safed, and now of this church's Jewish Mission at Aleppo, was ordained by the Presbytery of London North, acting under the instructions of the Synod. Rev. James Mackintosh, Moderator of Presbytery, conducted the ordination service, whilst the Rev. Robert Taylor, convener of the Synod's Jewish Mission Committee, gave a touching and appropriate charge to the newly-ordained missionary. Dr. Piper, the church's medical missionary to the Jews, has begun work in Aleppo, and will be joined at once by Mr. Christie.

Calls.—Rev. R. Roberts to Rehoboth Church, Llandudno.

Society of Friends.

The Whitsuntide gatherings of Old Scholars at York were times of extreme interest and pleasure. The president, Dr. Robert Spence Watson, made happy reference to the "Diamond Jubilee;" 370 sat down to tea on Whit-Monday.

New York yearly meeting, which ended on the 1st inst., was a favoured time. New York Friends have become active as missionaries, and are now a growing body. Their programme is large and far-reaching, including evangelistic, temperance, peace, educational, and home and foreign mission work.

California Friends have just equipped and sent out three missionaries to the Esquimaux Indians of Alaska. A request had come for help to the Presbyterians, who were unable to respond, their hands being so full, and the request was passed on to Friends, with the result named. Such brotherly intercourse between Churches deserves to be copied far and wide. "It will be an inspiration to the whole of California yearly meeting."

The demand for tickets and room for the Scarborough summer schools, has far exceeded all expectation; 500 or more have already signified their intention to be present in August, at the whole or part of the gathering. Probably no previous "summer school" has reached this figure, and it is yet several weeks before it opens. A list of experts in knowledge and very able speakers has been published. "The Fragment of 'The Sayings of Jesus'" is to be lectured on by Richard S. Grenfell.

Alfred S. Dyer and wife, most devoted workers in Bombay, the former editor of The Bombay Guardian, lately celebrated their silver wedding. The Christian native helpers, who had stood at their posts during the plague scare, and English and American missionaries, joined in the rejoicing. The labours of Alfred S. Dyer and wife in every kind of work calculated to bless India have been incessant, and nobly unselfish. Friends at home will join their Indian compatriots in wishing our friends blessings manifold.

Salvation Army.

Mrs. Booth's recent meetings at the Steinway Hall have been productive of much benefit. Chief Justice Way, of South Australia, who presided at one of these meetings, gave testimony to the work of the Army in the colonies he represented.

The Army is celebrating its thirty-second anniversary by a field day at the Crystal Palace, on Tuesday, July 20. Great preparations are in hand to make it a fitting representation of the many branches of the Salvation Army work as a movement having its birth in the present reign.

Commissioner T. H. Howard, the Army's foreign secretary, was selected by the General to represent the Salvation Army at the Queen's Thanksgiving Service on the steps of St. Paul's, and a further detachment of representative officers, by invitation, occupied places upon the Cathedral stand.

The Salvation Army annual report, with balance sheets, has lately been issued. In view of the multiplicity of matter circulated by the various societies during this year of Jubilee, General Booth has confined himself to a comprehensive letter, which refers to the various points in the year's work, and sets forth very particular proposals that are under consideration for extension in the coming months. Copies can be had from International Headquarters, 101, Queen Victoria-street, London, E.C.

General Booth's representative has been accorded interviews at the Hotel Cecil with various of the Colonial Premiers. The Hon. C. C. Kingston, Premier of South Australia, expressed himself as gratified and pleased with the various phases of Salvation Army work that had come before his personal observation in South Australia, foremost among which stood its work on behalf of discharged prisoners. Sir Hugh Nelson, K.C.M.G., Premier of Queensland, contemplates paying a visit to the Salvation Army Farm Colony at Hadleigh, and also spoke of his own and his colleagues' recognition and esteem for the Salvation Army, and the work it is doing.

Fallen Asleep.

Mr. Chas. Pinnell, at eighty-five years, during over sixty years of which he held the office of deacon at the Congregational Church, Mortimer West, near Reading.—Rev. Roderick Morison, of Kintail, one of the best known and most widely honoured Highland ministers.—Rev. Thomas Wilkins, incumbent of St. Michael's, Neepsend, Sheffield.—Mr. J. P. Beel, formerly Baptist minister in Sunderland, who has been engaged in the work of the Sunderland Town Mission for the last twenty-one years.—Rev. R. H. Hutton, formerly Congregational pastor at Rothbury, Northumberland.—At Ballynure, co. Antrim, Mrs. Beatty, an earnest and devoted Christian, aged eighty-two years.—At Durrus, co. Cork, Mr. Alex. Jas. Cole, brother of Rev. R. Cole, of Armagh, in perfect peace, aged thirty years.—Rev. Jas. M'Askie, senior minister of the second Presbyterian church, Clontibret, aged seventy-five years.—Right Rev. John Sugden, D.D., Bishop of the Reformed Episcopal Church, aged seventy-seven.—Rev. T. S. King, for more than twenty years minister of the Congregational Church in Cemetery-road, Sheffield.—Rev. D. C. Ingram, Wesleyan minister, Blairgowrie, who had laboured successively in circuits in Bristol, London, Cardiff, Manchester, Southport, Clifford, Birmingham, and Newcastle-on-Tyne.

From Dingy Streets to Country Fields.—Our Seaside Holiday Home at Hastings is now in full working order. It has already been of immense benefit to hundreds of sickly children who needed a purer atmosphere, and a more liberal and nutritious diet than their own poor homes could provide. We have also been able to receive at Hastings a considerable number of hardworking but weakly men and women, who imperatively needed rest and a change of scene and air. We have many applicants and have suitable accommodation, but not adequate funds.—Wm. Wheatley, Superintendent, St. Giles' Christian Mission, 4, Ampton-street, Regent-square, London, W.C.

DONATIONS
Received by Messrs. Morgan and Scott to Monday, June 28, 1897.

 Donations should be sent by Cheque or Post Office Orders, not by stamps.

 Will donors oblige by stating explicitly and fully the titles of the institutions to which they wish their donations to be applied? Further correspondence will thus be obviated. Will they also bear in mind that the Donation List is made up for the Printers on Monday morning? Any amounts received afterwards will be acknowledged in the subsequent week's number of The Christian.

 Cheques, Money Orders, or Postal Orders should be made payable to Messrs. Morgan & Scott, 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C., and crossed "City Bank"; this will effectually prevent loss.

☞ Donors are particularly requested to fill in "Morgan and Scott" on Postal Orders, in accordance with the Post Office regulations.

HOLIDAY HOME FOR POOR AND SICK CHILDREN

This home, situated in a most charming part of Epping Forest, which has for several years past been of incalculable benefit to many hundreds of poor little waifs and strays, many of them half famished and pent up in the narrow and stifling courts and alleys the whole year. To continue this much-needed work during this season, an earnest appeal is hereby made for help to the Christian public. Last year, over 500 were taken for one or two weeks, and over 3,000 for a day. Donations in any form will be gratefully received, and can be sent to the treasurer, at the Bank, 54, Lombard-street, E.C., to the Office of The Christian, or to the Secretary, 25, Brighton-road, Stoke Newington, N. JAMES ATKINSON, Secretary.

THE
MISSIONS TO SEAMEN.
Patron:—
Admiral of the Fleet H.R.H. the Duke of Saxe-Coburg and Gotha, K.G.

No more fitting way could be found of celebrating the Diamond Jubilee of our beloved Queen's glorious reign over the greatest maritime Empire of the world than by generously helping to extend to our sailors, on whom the very existence of that Empire depends, a share of the religious and social privileges which we ourselves owe in a large measure to Her Majesty's noble life and influence.

THE MISSIONS TO SEAMEN has one hundred and forty Chaplains, Readers, &c., working amongst seamen, afloat and ashore, in sixty-eight seaports in every part of the world, including the Port of London, San Francisco Harbour, China, Japan, and Australian waters.

Sixty-seven Mission Vessels and Boats and Eighty-five Seamen's Churches and Institutes, are in constant use winter and summer.

INCOME, £38,294 : 9 : 10.

Increased Contributions, Offertories, Drawing-room Meetings, Collections, &c., are urgently needed to maintain the existing work and to extend it to other Ports. They should be sent to Commander W. DAWSON, R.N., The Missions to Seamen, 11, Buckingham-street, Strand, London, W.C.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

MANY homes will be darkened by the wreck of the Aden. Our deepest sympathies are peculiarly with the relatives of the lady missionaries whose labour for Christ was brought to so sudden a close. Miss Wells and Miss Lloyd were both connected with the C.M.S., and were on their way home for furlough. No news has yet been received of the boat which contained Mrs. Smythe and Mrs. Collins, and it is feared that it was overwhelmed by the rough sea. The case of Mrs. Collins is specially sad. Her husband (Rev. T. S. Collins) was drowned in a Chinese river only four months ago, and the widowed lady missionary was bringing her two children back to England.

The perils of the deep are thus rudely brought before us; but, as in almost all similar calamities, the shadows are lightened by the story of heroism on the part of the passengers and devotion to duty on the part of the crew. We are told by survivors that the officers who were drowned lost their lives by manfully sticking to their posts in the hour of danger. This lesson of discipline and self-sacrifice is almost a commonplace in the story of our mercantile marine, but each added instance fills the heart with grateful pride in the traditions of our people. It ought also to insure that all the institutions whose care it is to provide for the families of those who lose their lives in the performance of their duty at sea should be well supported.

The Jubilee programme for Sunday week was summarised in the official list in the significant word "Repose." It is well known that this was by the distinct injunction of the Queen, whose notions on the subject are delightfully Old English. There is probably not a Court in Europe, save our own, where the Lord's Day would have been permitted to interfere with royal festivities. But we have a Sovereign who still believes in the day of rest, and who acts on it as Queen as well as woman. It would be well for us as a nation if this word were written up so that everyone's eyes could see it on awaking every Sunday morning. "Repose"—that is what is wanted right through modern life; and those who are working to transform the day into one of ceaseless and feverish pleasure are fighting against one of the deepest instincts as well as one of the most crying needs of the times.

We were glad that the children played so important a part in the Queen's Jubilee programme, Her Majesty receiving large numbers of them both at Buckingham Palace and Windsor. They are just the ones to whom a sight of the Queen means most and will be remembered longest. But it also shows that Her Majesty appreciates the trend of present-day thought and feeling respecting the little ones. They are no longer commanded everywhere to be silent, but every effort is made to bring out their latent faculties. The growth of education, both in Sunday and day-schools, is a fact which will have more beneficial influence on the destiny of Britain than many of the matters so loudly praised of late.

It was a gracious and characteristic act of the Queen to remedy the lack of management of the Court officials at the recent reception to the Houses of Parliament, by inviting the Commoners and their wives to a special reception at Windsor last Saturday. She had heard of the fiasco, not from her Ministerial advisers, but from the newspapers, and she immediately sent a message to Parliament to that effect. The Queen has always preferred to act impersonally and behind the scenes, and this exception proves how deeply she felt the lack of courtesy shown to the people's representatives. Her action illustrates that fine tact and thoughtfulness which go so far to make the relationships of life work smoothly in little things as well as great. What is courtesy but thought for others in little things?

The annual meetings of the Welsh Congregational Union, which have been celebrated with much enthusiasm at Liverpool, betoken spiritual progress in many directions. The new communicants during the year number 3681. There are now 1040 Welsh churches in the Union, and 142,123 members, with an equal number of adherents. It is a noteworthy sign that only twenty removals took place in the ministry during the year, while twenty-seven new ministers were ordained. Sunday-schools are more flourishing than ever, and are remarkable for the number of adult scholars. There has also been a great increase in the missionary collections. It is forty years since there was such a high tide of interest in foreign missions in Wales.

When a tremendous storm of hail strips the blossom and the young fruit off the trees in the amateur's garden, as it did this spring, he might well have asked himself how he should bear such losses and disappointments every year? Amid the many who have a claim for public assistance on account of unavoidable calamity, the farmers and fruit-growers in Essex, who in a short quarter of an hour saw the labours of a year swept away, should have a place. Money help wisely given will cheer brave men, who have had more of the rough than the smooth for many years past. The distress in the parts of Essex affected by the storm is very acute. We are glad to see that a meeting has been held at Colchester, and £3000 subscribed for the sufferers by this sudden and terrible storm. We shall be pleased to remit any subscriptions entrusted to us for this fund. We regret to learn that a brother of Mr. George Clarke is among the sufferers.

Amid the present outburst of universal goodwill and brotherhood, there is rising in the industrial sky a cloud as small as a man's hand, which may, if not dissipated, cover the whole heaven. The engineering trade is starting on a struggle with the employers for an eight hours' day. So far there is little bad feeling. The masters simply say that such a movement will put the country out of the running with foreign competition, while the men make their demand in the belief that they are entitled to it. This being so, is it not clearly a case for arbitration at the outset, instead of waiting till both sides have exhausted their resources in a battle during which feelings are sure to be embittered, and which will cause widespread distress? The question at issue is one of ways and means, and the interests of masters and men are fundamentally identical. It seems lamentable that a vast and precarious struggle should be started without every effort being made to settle such a dispute amicably.

The riots in India seem in a fair way to be suppressed, but there is a good deal of anxiety still felt in high quarters. The lessons of the Mutiny need to be well kept in mind. Two great mistakes were then made by the Government—the "religious susceptibilities" of the people were ignored, and it was taken for granted till too late that the insurrection was too insignificant to be firmly and wisely dealt with. The same perils are in the air now. The root of the trouble appears to be the old inability of our rough, practical nature to understand the points on which the natives are sensitive and easily roused. The well-trained official learns in course of time what they are, and avoids them, but how can raw young soldiers know anything of them? It may be a good thing to have Western sanitation, but it is too great a price to pay if it cannot be introduced without entering houses and temples, and handling men and women in a way which humiliates and irritates them.

It will certainly need much wisdom and self-possession on the part of those responsible for good order to steer the Indian Ship of State through these troubled waters. Kindness and firmness are the weapons likely to be most effectual. We only hope that the native press will not be gagged, so that the real grievances will be known, and that tact, instead of force, will be used in dealing with the causes of trouble. At the same time, irresponsible journalists, native or not, should be brought under the rule, "He that speaketh lies shall be stopped."

There seems to be a remarkable consensus of disinterested public opinion that the South Africa Committee is making a great mistake in not resolutely probing to the bottom everything connected with the Raid. This is not caused by any desire to find a victim; it springs purely from the wish to know the truth, and to apportion the blame according to demerit. There is a healthy dislike in this country of hushing things up, especially when a special tribunal has been created for the very purpose of finding them out. Any want of thoroughness in the investigation will draw a cloud of suspicion over the persons spared, and over the things unexplained. There is still time for the Committee to do something bolder and more impartial than they have yet attempted, and men of all parties will be glad to see them making good use of it. Goaded by the Press they last week moved a little, but they must move a good deal more if their proceedings are to give satisfaction.

The picture drawn by Mr. E. J. Dillon of Greece preceding and during the recent war is melancholy reading, especially as it comes from a friend, and not a foe. Corruption, intrigue, and incompetency among the members of the Government are among the least significant of his charges. The war was incurred without any real thought of consequences, and the state of the army made the result a foregone conclusion. Since its conclusion the nation has been sunk into profound dejection. All this may, however, become the beginning of a new era for Greece, if she learns her lesson. Nations, as well as individuals, are sometimes brought to themselves by great shocks of calamity, and the lesson of self-governance is often learnt amid the fiery trial of defeat. The best friends of Greece have had a shock in discovering her condition. Her future will depend not on the "Concert of Europe," but on her power to profit by her misfortunes.

Mr. Macnamara contributes an interesting, though somewhat scrappy article to the Daily Chronicle Empire series, on Education. He tells of a schoolmaster in 1837, who, on being asked if he taught "Morals," replied, "No, that question does not belong to my school, it belongs to the girls' schools." The idea which underlies his reply is rapidly becoming a thing of the past, thanks to the women who have wrought for women. We are approaching the time when a common standard of morality will be set up for both men and women.

It seems incongruous that the Archbishop of Canterbury and the Bishops, while desirous of maintaining the continuity of the ancient Anglican Church, should take part in a service to commemorate the landing of St. Augustine. Through Augustine comes the attachment of Britain to the Papal see. Had it been the introduction of Christianity, we could understand the desire to commemorate so glorious an event, but there was a British church on the island long before Augustine came. The service and pilgrimage of last Friday can do nothing more than accentuate the tradition of Britain's fidelity to Rome. We cannot be too emphatically reminded that the monk Augustine who came on a Romish mission to England in 597, was not the great St. Augustine, Bishop of Hippo, and author of the celebrated "Confessions," who flourished 150 years earlier.

One of our popular preachers, a good and true minister, is said to have correctly gauged what "the man in the street" wants—something not too deep, and not too long. And is it not wise to think of that man, and to do something for him? Without bating anything of fidelity to the message to be delivered, the preacher should ever have regard to the capacities of his hearers. Said the Apostle:—

> I have fed you with milk, and not with meat; for hitherto ye were not able to bear it, neither yet now are ye able. For ye are yet carnal.

More attention may be given to the fashion in which the truth is presented than to the truth itself, but so long as this temptation is avoided, adaptation is a wise and even necessary thing, which no thoughtful preacher should neglect. It must be remembered, on the other hand, that "the man in the street" is not to be the gauge of everything done. Preachers must go deeper down and higher up than he can follow them, and must declare the whole counsel of God.

Dr. Barrett, of Norwich, who has great opportunities of seeing the true state of the Congregational churches, finds a growing desire on the part of ministers, and especially of the younger men, to be faithful to the Lord Jesus Christ. He does not find as much flirting with Unitarianism as was the fashion a few years ago, nor Unitarian language in Congregational pulpits. The younger men are giving themselves with whole-hearted devotion to the work of saving souls. Assuming this to be correct, the happy results will soon appear in an improved religious life in the churches. Believers will enjoy more peace and joy in their own souls, new vigour will come into service, more victory will attend missionary efforts. There is always the witness of the Spirit to the teaching which acknowledges Jesus the Son of God and the Saviour of the world.

The Roman Catholic hierarchy in Ireland have issued a kind of manifesto on the question of the proposed University—which is to be subsidised by Government. In this they make a large apparent concession in accepting a preponderance of laymen on the governing body of the institution. When we remember how much the Roman laity are under clerical control, we do not need a very far vision to estimate the value of this concession. Another takes the form of throwing the doors open to all comers, like Oxford and Cambridge. This again sounds generous, till we realise that it will be only an extended opportunity of proselytism. It is an interesting commentary on this new "catholicity" of the Catholic Church, to find that the very same bishops in another manifesto make a claim to regulate the politics of the people. Such men are not likely to respect the religious convictions of non-Roman undergraduates.

Those anxious to be posted up in Scriptural argument, which is destructive of the claims of Popery, should read Dr. Dawson Burns's newly published pamphlet. "A Dispassionate Review of the Encyclical of Pope Leo XIII." The various arguments in the encyclical are dealt with seriatim, and brought to the bar of Scripture and ecclesiastical history, and finally of the Christian consciousness and reason. Certain of the positions developed by Dr. Burns are freshly put, notably that dealing with the entire absence of any claims to exceptional authority among the Apostles, being made by Peter in the Gospel narratives, in the Acts, or in his Epistles. We commend this striking brochure to those who have an opportunity of educating the young in the principles of Protestantism.

"The truth will out." In 1869 the correspondence of Napoleon I. was published by command of Napoleon III., who gave instructions that the editors "must pass over in silence any letters that might be unfavourable to the character of the great Emperor." A great mass of 900 such damaging letters were parcelled and put away, only to be brought to light in 1897. The Paris correspondent of the Daily News says with great force that > These letters, instead of appearing along with more creditable ones, rise up compactly in judgment against him. The cooked correspondence published in 1869 showed that Napoleon was a genius, but the letters that now come to light show he was also a monster.

It was not worth while concealing the truth; it could only be hid for a season, and now that it does appear its voice is all the more overwhelming.

"See that ye fall not out by the way." The wise advice of Joseph to his brethren needs continually to be repeated among brethren journeying homeward still. The adversary is ever seeking to sow discord among us, and appears to find a malignant satisfaction in making the Word of God the subject of controversy. One way to defeat his subtle schemes is to abide by sound principles of interpretation. There are various doctrines afloat which are incapable of proof, and no doctrine ought to be asserted which cannot be Scripturally proved. No doctrine can be so proved which is based upon allegory or parable or symbol, and not definitely affirmed in Scripture.

Evangelical men are righteously indignant when an attempt is made to show that we can be saved without an atonement, because there is nothing answering to atonement in the parable of the Prodigal Son. The answer to which is that no parable covers the whole subject to which it relates. It only illustrates that phase to which it applies. The Prodigal Son is one of five consecutive parables in one discourse, and none of them touches the question of atonement. They show the grace of God to the publicans and sinners—in the lost sheep, the lost coin, the younger son, and Lazarus; and the just dealing of God with the Pharisees—in the elder son, the unjust steward, the rich man who fared sumptuously every day. It is left to the later parable in Luke xviii. to express the atonement in the cry of the publican, at the time of sacrifice, "God be propitiated to me, the sinner."

We must be careful that we do not encourage a false method of interpretation by endeavouring to prove other views or fancies in the above way. The Church, e.g., is called "the bride, the Lamb's wife." But the Church also stands in other relations to her Lord. We must not push the bride relation to the exclusion of others. It is possible to turn the edge of an exhortation or precept or command by showing that it does not apply to a bride. And thus prophetic symbols, instead of making us wise unto salvation, as they were intended to do, may, by our misuse of them, have an opposite effect.

A natural and legitimate interest attaches to all discoveries that throw light upon the early days of Christianity. The charm which devout souls find in the words of the Lord is in some measure detected by the more curious in sayings that are attributed to Him in patristic and other literature. Quite a stir on a small scale was excited a short time ago when it was reported that Messrs. B. P. Grenfell and A. S. Hunt, of Oxford, had found in Egypt a leaf of a book of great antiquity covered with Logia (or Sayings) of Christ. The collection is believed to date from the second or third century, and those who have been anxiously awaiting the text of the Sayings with descriptive information will learn with pleasure that these are about to appear in a volume announced by Mr. Henry Frowde, of the Oxford University Press. In addition to reproducing the leaf by collotype process, it has been decided to print an edition for a few pence, with the help of a tone block, so that this treasure may be brought within the reach of everyone.

The Court of Appeal has reversed the decision of the Criminal Court which affirmed a betting enclosure to be a "place" within the meaning of the Act of 1853. This re-establishes the bookmaker's position, and legalises one of the most objectionable incentives to gambling. The case must assuredly be carried further, for the House of Lords to pronounce upon it.

The Claims of Self and Christ.

By Rev. THEODORE L. CUYLER.

THE continual conflict with every Christian is between self and Jesus Christ. Self is the old owner who does not like to be dislodged, and disputes the right of Jesus to be enthroned in the heart. Self sets up its own will and tries to have its own way. Self has abundant uses for the purse, and "cannot afford" to give money away that might buy a fine equipage and rare pictures, and other creature-comforts that make life agreeable. It keeps a sharp eye on the cheque-book, to see that too much is not bestowed on objects of charity, and it whispers artfully, "Remember how our expenses are increasing, and charity begins at home." Self watches the weather on Sunday morning—the one day in all the week when health is of paramount importance—and hesitates about the risk of wet feet or sitting in damp clothing. Self comes home late and mutters, "I am too tired for prayer-meeting to-night"; although it is never too tired for a party, a concert, or the opera. And so smooth-tongued self has an oily plea always ready; and if Christ's sentinel, a living conscience, is not there to challenge and silence the cunning seducer, self carries the day.

But the slighted and defrauded Saviour seems to say—what meaneth all this? Did I not die to redeem thee? Did I not purchase thy salvation with my precious blood? "Thou art mine." All thy possessions are but loans for which thou must give account. Thou art not thine own; thou art mine! I will put thee where it seemeth best to Me, and where it is most for thy soul's good; it may be on a bed of sickness, or in straitened quarters, or under a cloud of disappointment, or in a house of mourning. Thou art my child, and I appoint the lessons; thou art my vine, and I may use the pruning-knife if it will make the clusters more abundant. Be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee a crown of life!

What a different idea of life this gives us! Nothing else will put down and keep down the accursed spirit of selfishness but the constant sense of Christ's ownership of us. "Oh, honourable Jesus," exclaimed that king of Christians, John Bunyan, "Oh, thou loving Jesus! Thou hast wrested me from my old master, the devil. Thou deservest to have me, for Thou hast bought me with thy blood; Thou deservest to have all of me. Thou hast paid for me ten thousand times more than I am worth; for Thou wast slain, and hast redeemed me with thy blood. Thou hast saved me from death and hell."

When Jesus Christ says to you or me, "Thou art mine," that establishes a clear right to the whole of us. Our tongues must speak for Him, and our hands work for Him. If our brain forges a good thought, his image must be stamped on it. Our influence belongs to Jesus; how dare we surrender it to the demands of fashion? Christ redeemed us to be a "peculiar people"—peculiar in hating sin, peculiar in standing for the right, peculiar in doing business squarely, peculiar in giving generously of our substance, peculiar in obeying only one Master, peculiar in seeking to save souls, and peculiar in having well-springs of joy that never run dry. The more that we live as if Jesus Christ owned us the more people we will draw to Christ. A half-way Christian never makes any converts. Consecration to Jesus is the first step toward conversions to Jesus.

There is a very sweet and soul-cheering side to this truth of Christ's ownership of us. If we are Christ's, then He is pledged to take care of us. No one shall pluck us out of his hands. He will give us bread to eat that the world knoweth not of, and draughts from a well that never fails. If our income of money is small, then the incoming of our King into our souls makes us rich. A hard bed lies softer, when conscience smiles, and Jesus Christ makes his love to be our pillow. By-and-by when death comes, with spade and pall and the narrow house, then He who hath redeemed us will draw our deathless spirit closely to Himself and say, "Fear not! Thou art mine! Where I am, thou shalt be with Me, and for evermore!"

"Praying Always."

Philippians iv. 6, 7.

By Mr. GEORGE MÜLLER, Bristol.

I.—"WITHOUT CAREFULNESS."

THIS does not mean we are to live in a thoughtless, careless, unconcerned way. Far otherwise. It would be entirely improper if a man who has the prospect of being three months absent from home did not arrange his business affairs before he leaves home. But the meaning of the verse is "Be anxious about nothing" because it is the privilege of all God's children to cast our burdens on God and commit all our affairs into his hands.

First, then, it is his will that we should not be anxious under any circumstances in life, whether in great difficulty or need, in severe sickness, in heavy family, business, or spiritual trials. He has promised to carry all our burdens for us, to take on Himself all our difficulties, our cares, and our necessities. Our part is to bring in prayer all our affairs to God, and leave them in his hands.

Second, our prayer is to ascend to God under all circumstances—"in everything by prayer and supplication, with thanksgiving, let your requests be made known unto God." In everything, little as well as great.

We are naturally tempted to say, "Oh, this is such a trifling affair I must attend to it myself." But the little burdens very soon become heavy, if we carry them. God will make them so by way of chastisement, in order to teach us. Let us therefore in everything give ourselves to prayer.

A PERSONAL REMINISCENCE.

When it pleased God sixty-two years since to lay the orphan work on my heart, I asked God for money for helpers, for a suitable house, and even for guidance as to furnishing. In all these matters He helped me, until at last in answer to prayer everything was ready for the reception of orphans.

I then fixed a time to be in the vestry to receive applications for their admission. I sat there half an hour, an hour, an hour and a half, two hours, and not a single applicant appeared. On my way home I said to myself, "You have sinned. You have asked for money, for caretakers, for a house, for help to furnish, but you have not asked for orphans." It was not that I would not do it, but it had never come to my mind, as there were tens of thousands of poor destitute orphans in want of such a shelter.

But now I saw I had neglected this injunction, "In everything." I locked the door of my room, and casting myself down, confessed that I had sinned in not attending to this command of God, and that I deserved to be confounded in the whole business. I examined my heart, as I had done many times before, as to whether I really sought the glory of God in this matter, until in honesty of heart I could say, "I do seek not my own honour; if Thou couldst be more glorified by putting me to shame in bringing the whole to naught, I am content." After I had been on my face for a long time I rose up, assured that God would yet send the orphans for which I had now asked.

Next morning the first application came. Before a month had passed forty-two were received, and since then over 12,000 more. By the grace of God I learnt the lesson which I have never forgotten these sixty-two years, and I have been acting accordingly always since.

II.—"WITH THANKSGIVING."

However we may be situated, we have always abundant reason to give thanks. We have God left, our almighty Father; we have the Saviour, our heavenly Friend; we also have the Holy Spirit given to us, and abiding with the Church of God, notwithstanding her manifold failures and shortcomings and actual transgressions. Further, we have the Holy Scriptures, and the unspeakable privilege of our lot being cast with the children of God. What a great blessing is this! I know this from my own experience. I have been in positions and circumstances of great spiritual solitude, and I know the blessedness of living among the children of God.

Now, let this be laid to heart, that at all times and under all circumstances we have cause for thanksgiving. Mix praise with prayer. We must seek to ask for what is according to the mind of God. Invariably plead the merits of Christ; and never, never, never under any circumstances, refer to our own goodness, merit, or worthiness—because we have none. Further, we must have faith in the power and love of God. To question these is to lose the warrant to expect answers to prayer. God has shown his power not only in creation by the making of the world, but by the resurrection of Christ from the dead. He has given us the greatest proof of his love in the gift of his Son Jesus Christ. Again, "If I regard iniquity in my heart the Lord will not hear me."

III.—PERSEVERANCE.

In prayer we bring our matters before God; "supplication" implies a further degree of earnestness and perseverance. It may not be enough once or twice to bring matters before God; bring them again and again until the blessing comes. We lose much because we do not persevere in prayer. I would urge this upon Christian parents, who may have been for years praying for the conversion of their children. Because the answer does not come so soon as you expected, are you ready to give up, and thus lose the blessing? Go on waiting upon God till the answer comes. You are asking that which is according to the mind of God; therefore persevere. I have myself had to wait for a long time, when praying for persons who were laid on my heart, but in time the answer came.

Convalescent Home for City Workwomen.—The fifteenth annual report of the home at Woodford Wells is encouraging. During last year many visitors testified to the renewed health and strength the change had given them. The Home is especially for the use of girls and women who work at various trades in the city, and who number many thousands. Since it was opened, 3,400 visitors have stayed in it. Although not strictly speaking a free home, a great many of those who apply must enter free of charge, or not at all. It costs 8s. per week for each girl. Those who recommend cases pay that amount, and many of the girls themselves can pay 5s. per week. By helping this institution, philanthropists may do much to put some sweetness into lives that are often soured by the stress and storm of city lives. All communications, whether as to assisting the work, or sharing in its advantages, should be addressed to Miss Helen Reynolds, Epping New Road, Buckhurst Hill.

The Spirit of Jesus.

Acts xvi. 7, R.V.

By Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A.

IF this verse be compared with ver. 6, it becomes clear that this is only another epithet for the Holy Spirit. It is He who is known as the Spirit of Jesus, and it is a significant and beautiful appellation. No words could better set forth certain aspects of his chosen work.

I. A Time of Testing.

After some days Paul proposed to Barnabas that they should return to visit the brethren in every city wherein they had proclaimed the word of the Lord, to see how they fared. Barnabas suggested that they should take Mark with them as before, a proposition which was directly negatived by his companion; as Mark had deserted them on the threshold of their previous missionary journey, there was grave fear that he might do so again. To these fears he gave urgent private expression; but Barnabas attempted to over-ride them, partly, perhaps, because he desired to assume his former position as leader, and partly because of the tie of personal relationship between himself and his sister's son. When private remonstrance failed, the contention seems to have reached an acute stage, of which the Church became necessarily cognizant. The Church, however, seems to have felt that Barnabas was blameworthy, for the evangelist significantly remarks that when Paul chose Silas and went forth, "he was commended by the brethren to the grace of the Lord."

Be sure that whenever God's Joshuas stand before the angel, Satan seeks to resist and disable them. He knows where their strength lies, and the object of his attack is always lest we may become united with the Spirit of Jesus. Anything like intemperate and unholy feeling may do this. Be angry, therefore, and sin not. If you are compelled to differ from your fellow-workers, let it be in a spirit of love, forgiveness, and single-heartedness for the interests of the truth. If Lot quarrels with you, it is best to give him his own terms, and send him away. God will give you much more than he can deprive you of. Carefully abide in a spirit of perfect love, for love is the only atmosphere in which the Spirit of God is at liberty.

II. A Time of Spirit-communication.

Through regions rich in flowers and natural beauty, Paul and Silas traversed Syria and Cilicia, confirming the infant churches, which probably owed their existence to Paul's earliest effort; and so through the Cilician Gates to Tarsus, his native city. But there was no welcome for him there. Probably the old home was either broken up or for ever shut against him; and the friends travelled onward through the great volcanic plain, to which the mountain pass behind Tarsus conducted them. At last they reached Lystra and Iconium, so tragically associated with the former journey.

What a welcome Paul would receive! How many inquiries would be made after Barnabas! How much to tell and hear! There was, however, a special burden on the Apostle's heart. On the occasion of his previous visit, his attention had been arrested by a mere lad, who had been strongly attracted to him, had watched with a lad's enthusiastic devotion his teaching, conduct, purpose, faith, longsuffering, love, and patience, and perhaps had mingled with the little group that stood around the Apostle when he sank beneath the stones of those who a few days before had attempted to worship him. He asked for Timothy, and was glad to learn that he had not been faithless to the teachings and training of the godly women who had watched over his opening character, and instructed him in the Holy Scriptures. It would seem that the whole family was more or less closely associated with the infant church-life; so much so that, though the mother was a Jewess, she had not urged his compliance with the initial Jewish rite, but was quite willing to leave it in abeyance, according to the broad and liberal views which Paul inculcated.

All the reports about Timothy were favourable. He was well reported of by the brethren that were at Lystra and Iconium. The more Paul knew of him the more he was attracted to him, and finally proposed that he should accompany him as his own son in the faith. He administered the rite of circumcision, not because he deemed it obligatory, but as a matter of convenience, that there might be no obstacle to the admission of his young assistant to Jewish synagogues.

A simple ordination service was also held, in which Timothy was solemnly set apart for his great work. The elders gathered round and laid their hands on his bowed head and prayed. In answer to their believing intercession, he received the gift of sacred speech; and Paul, in after years, reminds him to stir up the gift that was in him through the laying on of his own hands, and put it out to interest by prayer and study and use.

Thus the Spirit of Jesus led his servant to call new labourers into the harvest field and endow them with special qualifications for their work. It appears, indeed, that Paul had remarkable power in these directions; for when he laid his hands on the twelve disciples at Ephesus, the Holy Spirit came upon them, and they spake with tongues and prophesied. So, afterwards, he does not hesitate to speak of himself as ministering the Holy Spirit by faith, as though it is possible for the man of faith to receive from God, on the behalf of others, rare spiritual bestowments. But this is only possible to those who are richly furnished with the supply of the Spirit of Jesus.

III. The Presence of the Spirit of Jesus was further manifested in the mysterious intimations which Paul received about his route.

Leaving the highland cities, on the central plateau of Asia Minor, the little group of missionaries essayed to go into the mighty populous cities of Asia Minor. What could they do better than bear the light of the Gospel to the teeming multitudes who sat in darkness and the shadow of death? But it was not to be. "They were forbidden of the Holy Spirit to speak the Word in Asia." In after years Paul would do some of the greatest work of his life in that very region; but just now the door was closed against him by the Holy Spirit. The time was not yet ripe for the attack to be made on these apparently impregnable bastions of the kingdom of Satan. Other lands needed even more urgently the blessed Gospel. The workers themselves required still further training in their holy ministry. So they took the only course open to them, and went through the region of Phrygia and Galatia.

It was probably during his tour on this occasion that the Apostle was attacked by the painful malady to which he refers in his Epistle to the Galatians, and which detained the little party among that impulsive and ardent people. "Ye know," he says, "that because of an infirmity of the flesh, I preached the Gospel unto you the first time, and that which was a temptation in my flesh ye despised not, nor rejected...I bear you witness that, if possible, ye would have plucked out your own eyes and given them to me"—as though his malady were connected with his eyes, already weak, and liable to acute inflammation.

On his recovery, the missionaries prepared to go still further north, and carry the Gospel to Bithynia, on the shores of the Black Sea; but here again they met with the prohibition of the Holy Spirit, and had no alternative but to take the main thoroughfare to Troas, whence the vision of the man from Macedonia led them across the Ægean Sea to Europe.

The guidance of the blessed Spirit consisted largely in prohibitions to take other courses than the right. If they turned to the left, to the province of Asia, they were stayed. If they turned to the right to Bithynia, again they were stayed. So as all doors were shut, they could only travel forward, and gathered, from there being no prohibition, that they were treading the prepared path for which they had been created in Christ Jesus.

Whenever you are not sure of your course, submit your judgment absolutely to the Spirit of God, and ask Him to shut against you every door but the right one. Say, "Blessed Spirit, I cast on Thee the entire responsibility of closing against me any and every course which is not of God. Let me hear thy voice behind me, whenever I turn to the right hand or left, remonstrating, arresting, and not suffering."

The Spirit of Jesus waits to be to each pilgrim heavenward what He was to Paul. Let us only be careful not to be disobedient to his voice, to avoid what He prohibits with a quick sensitiveness, and to run in the way of his commandments with enlarged hearts. "Teach me to do thy will, for Thou art my God; thy Spirit is good; lead me into the land of uprightness." Be content to be disappointed of your way, if you are thereby forced to take the way God has chosen. Our disappointments are his appointments.

Light in a Dark Corner.

FIVE years ago the church at Blackthorn-street Chapel, Bow, E., determined to undertake a work which, humanly speaking, seemed impossible. This included the erection of a building for the preaching of the Gospel, on a new site in the main thoroughfare, and the reconstruction and renovation of the old chapel, providing class-rooms, infants' schoolroom, soup-kitchen, etc., so as to adapt it to Sunday-school and general mission purposes. The scheme has now become an accomplished fact, and on July 1 meetings were held in celebration of its completion, and specially to mark the opening of the schools, in which accommodation has been provided for considerably over 1000 children.

At noon Rev. W. Cuff preached, after which Mr. T. A. Denny presided at the luncheon, and many helpers and friends gathered round the pastor and his helpers. After praise and prayer the pastor (Rev. T. J. Hazzard) stated that the entire scheme, including the site, had cost £5500, of which £4550 had been raised, thus leaving £950 to be provided. The Baptist Building Fund had offered a loan of £500 free of interest for five years, so that the immediate need was to liquidate the remaining £450. The work was no visionary castle in the air, there being already over 800 scholars and seventy teachers in the school, and with the better accommodation existing agencies would be strengthened and new ones inaugurated.

The Chairman rejoiced in what had been done, and hoped the required amount would be raised. In order to make a start in that direction, he offered £50 in addition to the £100 he had already given, provided the £400 was raised in two months. To this Mr. Seagram added £25, and Mr. Clayton £5, both these gentlemen speaking very highly of the scheme, and the work already accomplished. The founder of the church, Pastor J. R. Cox, and the secretary of the East London Baptist Ministers' Fraternal, most of whom were present, spoke kindly and sympathetic words.

At four o'clock Rev. F. B. Meyer, B.A., preached, and at eight o'clock Rev. Dr. Monro Gibson. There was also a praise and thanksgiving meeting conducted by Rev. G. P. McKay. The entire series of meetings passed off most successfully, and since then additional gifts have been received, leaving £335 to be raised in order to claim Mr. Denny's generous gift. Friends wishing to have fellowship in this work of winning the young for Christ, and sustaining a clear evangelical witness for God, in the midst of a very dark neighbourhood, should communicate with the secretary of the Building Committee, Mr. G. J. Michell, B.A., 41, Osborne-road, Forest Gate, E., or with Pastor T. J. Hazzard, 52, Addington-road, Bow, E.

Is My Bible Really True?

WHERE DID WE GET IT?

By Rev. CHARLES LEACH, D.D., Manchester.

VI.—The Apostolic Fathers (concluded).

LIKE Polycarp, Papias is not mentioned in the New Testament, but he knew many of the men and the friends of the men who are named in it. In St. Paul's Epistle to the Colossians you will find (iv. 13) that he mentions Hierapolis. This place, now in ruins, lay only a few miles from Laodicea, and was about 100 miles on the east of Ephesus. A Christian Church was early planted there, and the Apostle Philip is said to have settled at the place.

Papias was the Bishop of Hierapolis. He was the friend of Polycarp, from whom he received much instruction, and some have said that he was a disciple of the Apostle John. Papias wrote a work called, "Interpretation of the Sayings of the Lord." The work seems to have been a large one; but, unfortunately, it is lost. Whether it has perished out of sight, or is hid away among the dust and lumber of some library or monastery, no one knows. The last trace of the book seems to be about 1218 A.D. Fortunately, quotations from the work are preserved in the writings of Irenæus and Eusebius, and though the portions thus preserved are not nearly so numerous as we would like, they are very valuable indeed. I have told you how the Sinaitic MS. was discovered when it had been thrown into a basket to be carried to the fire. It is not many years ago since other precious works of the greatest interest and antiquity have been discovered; and if some day the work of Papias should be found, it would add one more treasure to our ancient documents, and throw further light upon our New Testament.

Papias was well acquainted with the daughters of Philip, says Dr. Dale, and would, doubtless, often hear from their lips the story which their father had told them of the chief events in the life of our Lord. It is said that Andrew settled in Asia Minor with the Apostle John, and that Papias knew both these Apostles; and many of the intimate friends of the Apostles were known to him. It will be interesting to look at a few lines from his work, which Eusebius has preserved for us:—

"On any occasion when any person came [in my way] who had been a follower of the Elders, I would inquire about the discourses of the Elders—what was said by Andrew, or by Peter, or by Philip, or by Thomas or James, or by John or Matthew, or any other of the Lord's disciples, and what Aristian and the Elder John, the disciples of the Lord, say. For I did not think that I could get so much profit from the contents of books as from the utterances of a living and abiding voice."

If you will look at this passage you will see how important it is. It shows us at once in what a favoured position this man was in regard to ascertaining the facts of the history contained in our New Testament. Notice carefully the following which is known concerning Papias:—1. He knew two men who were disciples of the Lord. 2. He knew the daughters of the Apostle Philip. 3. He had met men who knew many of our Lord's disciples. 4. He had conversation with them respecting the teaching of the disciples. 5. He preserved "books" which contained these accounts. 6. He added to the teaching of the books all he could learn from living men.

It is very evident that any word which this man speaks on the question of the New Testament will possess the greatest value. His testimony will be second only in importance to the New Testament itself. A man placed as he was, and taking the trouble to get the true account of our Lord's work on earth, will be sure to say what is worth hearing.

He tells us that Mark was a companion of Peter, and that Mark wrote a Gospel. He also tells us that Matthew wrote a Gospel in the Hebrew language. He appears also to be acquainted with the Gospel of St. John, to have quoted the early Epistle of St. John, and the Epistle of Peter. He knew the Book of Revelation, and maintained that it was a divinely-inspired book.

His testimony is not so full as that of Polycarp and Clement, but this is only because we know less of him. If we had his whole work, I have no doubt it would give greater testimony than either of the other Apostolic Fathers we have classed with him. His testimony amply confirms what the others have said; and altogether they give such a testimony as should make us all feel that our New Testament came from the hands of the disciples and Apostles of Jesus Christ.

These articles, so far written, in my judgment, may well make any person who reads them feel sure that his New Testament is not an invention. However unlettered a person may be who reads and loves his New Testament, he may continue to treasure and reverence it as the Word of Life, the Lamp of God, which has come to us from the holy Apostles themselves. Such a person, before reading these articles, believed in the Scripture, and accepted the Word of God, spoken through Jesus and his followers. Now, however, he may add to his belief the confidence which this knowledge imparts. Surely he may say, "I now know of a truth that this blessed book has come down the ages, for I have seen that holy men in the Church of God have possessed it ever since the first century of the Christian era. I know for myself, and shall be able to tell to others 'Where our Bible came from.'" In a further series I hope to continue the subject in other stages and aspects.

Conflict.

Eph. vi. 13-19.

Who the victory shall claim,
Conquest making of thy heart?
He who death and hell o'ercame,
Will his saving grace impart;
He can bid the tempter flee,
Sinner, let Him rescue thee!

See the fiery darts that fly,
Swift and cruel in their flight;
None immunity can buy
From their soul-corrupting blight.
Christian, ere on thee they fall,
Faith's bright shield shall quench them all.

Take the Spirit's mighty sword,
Wield it in the Saviour's name;
He will daily strength afford,
Guiding its unerring aim.
Soldier in the conflict, pray!
God will be thy strength and stay.

On thy feet the sandals wear
That shall make thy journeying fleet,
Gospel truth abroad to bear,
E'en than honeycomb more sweet:
Pilgrim, ever faithful be
To each task assigned to thee!

Take the breastplate Christ bestows,
He thy trusting heart will bless,
With a sense of sweet repose
In his love and righteousness!
Grace triumphant guards his own—
Trust his saving arm alone!

Helmet of salvation bright
On thy head should ceaseless shine,
Flashing in the noonday light,
'Neath that radiant glow Divine;
Girt with truth, how shalt thou be Strong for constant victory!

Let not fear thy heart oppress,
Flinch not in the conflict dire;
Thine own impotence confess,
Yet let hope thy zeal inspire:
Upward look with steadfast eye,
And thy Saviour glorify!

Sikhs of the Punjab.—The Khalsa Prayer Union has been formed in the spiritual interest of the Sikhs, and already numbers 800 members. It was founded in December last by Baba Makhan Singh Sodhi, and has adopted the watchword, "the Evangelisation of the Sikhs in this generation." Forms of application for membership may be obtained from the Central Hon. Secretary, Miss Garbutt, 37, Marlborough Hill, N.W.

Miss Weston's Work.

STEP by step, day by day for thirty years Miss Agnes Weston has been pushing forward the wheels of the work which is helping to make our British Navy temperate, pure, and Godfearing. Often the shoulder which was pressed to the wheel must have grown worn and bruised, but she has never shown it. Her courage has not worn thin with the years, and her indefatigable cheeriness infects all those who work with her.

The manner in which this work has grown is not the least remarkable thing about it. Once there was a Bible-class for boys of a single training ship held in a kitchen at Devonport on Sunday afternoons. Now, all the week long from Sunday afternoon to Saturday night, at Portsmouth and Devonport, there are meetings, Bible-readings, free-and-easy "Sociables and Temperance At-homes," thronged by men and boys from every ship in Her Majesty's Navy. There are regular temperance and Gospel meetings every week on board the training ships, where the boys, who will so soon be men, are being prepared for the work of their lives. Every ship of the line has its own temperance society, officered by seamen, who are pledged total abstainers, and all round the world there is a belt of Christian men, banded together, each on his ship, a witness for the faith that is in him.

Once, years ago, in fear and trembling at the responsibility it involved, backed up by the gifts and sympathy of friends known and unknown, Miss Weston and her life-long friend and helper, Miss Wintz, took a small house close to the Dockyard gates at Devonport, and opened it as a bright temperance public-house, where men and boys of the British Navy could get rest, refreshment, and recreation without alcohol. Now there are, at Devonport and Portsmouth, imposing, almost magnificent, blocks of buildings, which are in reality Royal Sailors' Rests. Little by little these buildings have grown. One house has been taken and then another adjoining. One block of cabins has been built, one set of bathrooms has been added. A hall has been needed and the liberality of friends of the work everywhere has provided it. The men have asked for more lockers where they can shut away their belongings while they are wandering on land or sea, and more have been forthcoming.

A work like this can never stand still. The Navy is increasing, and the men who man the Navy are growing in number. It follows that its very success makes it imperative for the work continually to go forward. The Portsmouth Rest has been enlarged quite recently, but the Devonport Rest is crowded out. On the last Queen's birthday it was a sight to be remembered. All day the bar was thronged, the boys from the training ship "Impregnable" filled their reading-rooms, men crowded every corner, and when night came four hundred sailors slept on the floors and tables, besides nearly six hundred who were accommodated in the proper sleeping places, the cabins and dormitories. And although such large numbers are not often without beds, yet, even with the forty new cabins which are in process of building, it is often a difficult task to stow away the imperious guests who will not be denied admittance.

More serious, perhaps, than the sleeping difficulty is the sitting difficulty. The hall at Devonport is quite inadequate. It seats barely three hundred, and on Tuesday evenings, on Sunday afternoons and evenings, at the Monday mothers' meeting, at the evening entertainment, or "free and easy," a large part of the audience has to sit outside the hall, and peep at the speaker from round a corner, or else not get in at all. This is a serious drawback to the work. A new building for services and meetings is wanted sadly. Miss Weston is therefore receiving, with much gratitude, gifts for a "Diamond Jubilee" block, consisting of Gospel Hall and Bible Class-room at the Royal Sailors' Rest, Devonport. S.

The Hants Village Mission.—The sound of the glorious Gospel has been heard in many a dark village in Dorset during the months of May and June. Good work in Hants and Sussex is now being happily carried on, and will be for several months to come, when the winter's work begins. We need a tent to hold 200, also a large number of Gospel books for distribution, and help to sustain this more than ever needed village mission.

Within Four Walls.

AN Indian catechism on moral subjects, written by a Hindu gentleman of high literary reputation, contains some points of interest. Of women it remarks:—

Q. What is the chief gate to hell?—A. A woman.
Q. What bewitches like wine?—A. Woman.
Q. Who is the wisest of the wise?—A. He who has not been deceived by women, who may be compared to malignant fiends.
Q. What are fetters to men?—A. Women.
Q. What is that which cannot be trusted?—A. A woman.
Q. What poison is that which appears like nectar?—A. Women.

Such are the views that heathenism has made possible.

"Woman," says an Indian proverb, "is a great whirlpool of suspicion, a dwelling-place of vices, full of deceits, a hindrance in the way of heaven, the gate of hell."

"Never put your trust in women," says another. "Women's counsel leads to destruction."

"Hear now the duties of woman," writes the Indian law-giver Manu. "By a girl, by a young woman, or even by an aged one, nothing must be done independently, even in her own house...Though destitute of virtue, or seeking pleasure elsewhere, or devoid of good qualities, yet a husband must be constantly worshipped by his wife."

This, indeed, is her religion, the sum and substance of which is, as an Indian woman writes:—

"To look upon her husband as a god, to hope for salvation only through him, to be obedient to him in all things, never to covet independence, never to do anything but that which is approved by law and custom."

With the exception of the poorest working woman, whose life is necessarily unsecluded, these views find their natural outcome in the zenana prison system. Never shall I forget the glimpse I got at Benares into the working of that system; never, I think, lose the memory of the wistful eyes that followed us as we went down the stairs and out of the last Hindu home I had the chance of seeing.

Miss Spence, who used to be at Doric Lodge, and is now working with the London Missionary Society at Benares, had taken me that morning to see some of her zenana pupils. We went to several houses, all alike in principle, though richer or poorer in contents—men's apartments in front, the women's place behind; the women, many or few as the case might be, living together on the courtyard, or in separate upstairs quarters, mother-in-law, young wives, daughters, and children shut up within four walls.

"Do you never go out?" "No."

"Would you not like to go?" "Yes."

"Surely you must have been sometimes?"

"Once I went down to the Ganges to bathe," a pretty young wife told us.

"She went in purdah," explained the elder woman; "went in a shut-up palki-gari early, very early in the morning, before it was light. She was back before the sun rose. No one saw her."

We looked round at the courtyard, at its mud floor and walls, its irregular doors leading into a few small rooms. The place seems quite a poor one, the rooms are low and dark, almost unfurnished—no rugs or carpets, chairs or tables, pictures, sofas, ornaments—nothing but rough unpapered walls, cooking utensils, and a bed or two. Here these half-dozen women spend their lives—the old mother, the blind girl, the two young daughters-in-law with their children. The neighbours who have called in to listen to the mem sahib live in just such another place next door, within four walls.

* * * *

We were waiting here for Ranee—waiting for her to dress—for her, at least, and her husband. It had been an unexpected triumph. We had called in to see her, had climbed the narrow stairs to her tiny bedroom (furnished with nothing but a bed) and had found pretty Ranee dressed in a simple half-transparent sari, and beaming with delight at our visit. She is the only woman in this Brahman house—a house as poor as it is proud—and spends her life in cooking and doing what small house-work is wanted in the narrow quarters she, her husband, her husband's two brothers, occupy. The father-in-law lives elsewhere usually, but is very fond of Ranee and had actually told Miss Spence one day that he would allow her to visit the Mission-house some time; but the promise was a dead letter, excuses being promptly made whenever fulfilment was proposed.

To-day, however, we pressed the husband, a slight, weak-looking creature, but devoted to his wife, whom he calls Ranee (queen) in compliment, to carry out the promise, and by dint of long persuasion had succeeded.

"She will not see a man?" he queried anxiously.

"No, no; there is no man at the zenana house."

"She must not be seen from the street!"

"You shall come with her, Kashi! You shall see her safely shut up in the carriage, and close all the windows yourself."

"Well," he conceded at last, after a long hesitation and discussion, "come back in fifteen minutes, and we will be prepared."

Fifty minutes or more had passed on other visits, and now we came back to the narrow alley, in through the short passage to the hot little back yard with its ruinous mud walls, through a breach in which a bit of the next-door yard is visible.

"Ranee!" A sound of shuffling upstairs. No one answers.

"Ranee!" A pause.

Presently the husband appears on the small balcony. "I am putting on my clothes," he remarks.

"We have waited more than fifteen minutes, Kashi!" "Ah, Miss Sahib, we possess no clocks."

Ranee's brilliant face looks smilingly over the light railing. They have both bathed and oiled themselves, and re-arranged their hair with special neatness. She is dressed in two or three delicate muslin saris, one over the other, each gayer than the one beneath.

After some more delay the husband comes downstairs.

"I have put on my best clothes," he remarks affably.

It is easy to smile approval, and rather difficult not to laugh, at the odd figure he presents, with his naked brown feet and legs surmounted by the usual bunch of white stuff—the dhoti—worn by the Hindu gentlemen, plus a sky blue shirt and European waistcoat, whose striped cloth front and cotton back are surmounted by yards of fine white muslin loosely twisted like a lady's scarf about his neck.

The anxious face of the young Brahman appears above the hole.

"You are sure, Miss Sahib, that she will not see a man?"

Not till we are seated in the palki-gari with every shutter closed, his younger brother inside with us and Ranee, and he himself upon the box, is Kashi satisfied—if then. The jolting roads jar the carriage shutters an inch or so apart as we drive, and Ranee glances shyly out, but the brother, a lad of twelve or fourteen, hastily shuts them up. Her momentary vision of the great world is over.

How that graceful Indian woman, in her jewellery and muslins, her lips dyed scarlet with the betel she was chewing, her brilliant dark eyes flashing with delight, enjoyed that dull drive in the hot darkness of the palki-gari, and the few minutes allowed her in the mission house!

The ladies dared not offer afternoon tea. To eat with us would have broken her caste; to suggest such a thing have been a faux pas. The husband was on tenterhooks lest some man should appear, and in about five minutes hurried her away back into the covered trap, and across town to the little sideway where she lives within four walls, cooking every morning in her tiny kitchen, waiting on her men folk, cleaning up the little house, looking forward daily to the missionary girl's visits, trying hard to learn to read, and praying for a son.

"I pray to all the gods, and now since you have come I pray to Jesus also," she would say.

"But the gods cannot hear you. You should pray to Jesus only."

Ranee looks up with her soft, wistful eyes—the message is so new.

* * * *

An elephant, almost life-size, was painted on the lower wall of the last house we went to, a large, commodious, rambling place, with half-a-dozen men lounging in one of the courtyards, in the midday siesta, and apparently no women anywhere. On a sort of lower roof, open to the hot sky, we found at last the two girls we had come to see, young, gentle-mannered creatures, who could not speak a word of English, and had not been visited much yet. We sat down on the baked-mud ruins of some old cooking places; Miss Spence brought out a primer, and the two girls pressed close to us with solemn, interested faces. Soon they were patiently attempting to spell out syllables and understand the pictures and meaning of the page—lost in a painful struggle with the mysteries of print.

The younger, a shrewd, thin child of perhaps thirteen, not married yet, strange to say, was the sharper of the two. Her companion, a placid-looking young wife, looked with hopeless eyes upon the primer, and seemed to take in little of what was said of Christ, though she evidently liked to have us there. Puzzling out the letters, her brown finger on the page, her dark young head bent earnestly over the task, she sat in front of me, her knees pressing unconsciously against mine, her little sister equally intent beside her, making a table of my lap. We could not stay long with them; the glaring heat of the afternoon sun warned us that time was passing.

It was so hard to go—so hard to look at those young faces, with their questioning, sad eyes, seeing them thus for the first and only time, unable to express to them the blessed truth of which one's heart was full, never to see them again until the great Day!

"I have hardly ever visited these girls," said Miss Spence in explanation of their evident ignorance and anxiety to learn. "There are so many houses! One can't get round them all."

They looked so sad and puzzled when we said that we must go.

"Come back soon," said the little one. Soon! Shall we ever go back?

We said good-bye and left them there in the women's quarters, finding our way downstairs through the rambling Hindu house till we came to the painted elephant at the entrance.

I looked back. They were standing, silhouetted against the hot Indian sky, wistfully looking over the parapet of the roof into the inner courtyard across which we had passed. I can never forget those faces—the dumb pleading of the eyes that followed us, the pathos of their ignorance and of their willingness to learn. Within those four walls we left them waiting—waiting for Christ—for you.

Soldiers' Christian Association.

Men belonging to the British Army spend so much time in barracks that witnessing for Christ by godly comrades in their midst is most important, and in that direction this Association is a means of usefulness, which strengthens rather than overlaps outside agencies, affording a bond of union among Christian soldiers all over the world, which is highly valued by members. As an auxiliary of the Y.M.C.A., very satisfactory growth has been seen, but an increased measure of support is necessary if the good work is to be maintained and extended at home and abroad. Many testimonies to the value of the Association have been received by the secretary, Mr. Arthur H. Wheeler, 3, Bellevue-terrace, Southsea.

Far away from the influence of chaplains and soldiers' homes, no less than at home, members find in this organisation a tie which binds their hearts together in Christian love, while they are encouraged to unite for aggressive Gospel work among their companions in the service. Visitation of troopships is undertaken, a Bible-reading union is in operation for the benefit of Association members, and stimulating monthly reports from branches are circulated through "News from the Front," a paper eagerly looked for and read by Christian men throughout the Army.

OUR DAILY HOMILY.

SUNDAY, July 11.

"Fear thou not, for I am with thee; look not around thee, for I am thy God."—Isa. xli. 10 (R.V. marg.)

We are all tempted to look around us, to see who is prepared to stand by and help us. We are apt, like the Apostle, to look at the winds and waves. Not so, says our God. Look not around, but look off to Me, look unto Me, and be ye saved, all the ends of the earth.

These exceeding great and precious promises quicken our desire to be able to establish our lineage as belonging to Abraham, and very gladly catch at the Apostle's assurance that those who have his faith may claim to be his children. It is good to know that we may be included in the Israel of God.

Now, troubled soul, look unto these words. They are spoken by one who cannot lie, and spoken for thee. They are as much meant for thee as though they had never been claimed by another, and God is prepared to fulfil them in thy life to the brim. He is with thee at this moment, whilst thou art pondering these words. He is thy God, and will never act unworthily of thy trust. Where thou art weakest and most easily overcome, He will strengthen thee. Where thou needest help, He will give his, so that thy difficult task shall be easily mastered. And when thou art too weary to walk, when no more strength remains in thee, when thou sinkest on the battlefield or the steep hill, He will uphold thee. Dost thou doubt? Behold at his right hand, Jesus sits, thy Lover and Saviour. It is a right hand of righteousness, that can never act unworthy of itself.

MONDAY, July 12.

"A bruised reed shall He not break, and the smoking flax shall He not quench."—Isa. xlii. 3.

This is characteristic of Jesus Christ. The devil destroys, Jesus constructs, but in constructing He always lays hold on any fragment of good in us, and builds from it. When there are 5000 to be fed He is sure to ask for as many loaves as can be got together, and the fact of their being barley is of no account.

Our great enemy argues so differently to our great Lover and Friend. He says, that is only a piece of smouldering tow, blow it out, it is not worth conserving. Jesus says, it is only smouldering, but there is the more reason why I should blow it into a flame. Satan says, that is only a bruised reed, trample it beneath thy feet; Jesus says, because it is so bruised, it needs very special tenderness, care, and skill to make anything of it, let me have it. Satan says, that is only a charred brand plucked out of the fire, cast it back again, it will never be of any use; Jesus answers, it cost me too much to pluck it out, and I am not going to cast it back again; besides if there is only a little left of solid wood, it needs the more solicitude to preserve it, and use what there is. Masterly skill put into a very tiny fragment may invest it with very great value. At home our mother was always sweet, but sweetest when we were ill or weary. It almost tempted us to sham, to be more coaxed. You need not sham with Christ, you are weak and broken enough. But those who are most worthless, get most manifestations of his love.

TUESDAY, July 13.

"Now thus saith the Lord."—Isa. xliii. 1-2.

Who is He that saith? He that created thee in the womb of time; that has moulded and formed thee in all the varying providences of life; that redeemed thee by his most precious blood; that knows and calls thee by thy name. When Prince Albert died the Queen cried, in the agony of her grief, "There will be no one now to call me Victoria." Ah, but there is always one who will call his own by name. Simon, Simon!

What doth He say? He fore-tells that there will be fire through which the ore of character must be passed, and waters which the pilgrim host must traverse. This is inevitable. He is too transparently truthful to engage us without telling the nature of his service. Through much tribulation we must enter the kingdom.

> The path of sorrow, and that path alone,
> Leads to the world where sorrow is unknown.

But in all our lot, God is willing to be our partner and companion. He has called us into fellowship with his Son, and He is faithful to see us through. The waters rise, the night is dark, the ford is hard to find, and footing is insecure, but He is at hand, steadying the feet, and keeping the head above the floods. The fiery furnace is heated sevenfold, so that the strongest soldiers in the armies of the world are consumed by its flame, but one like the Son of Man walks by his faithful witness, and makes the burning embers more delightful than the dewy sward of Paradise. The bonds will be burnt, and the captive limbs set free, but no hair of the head shall be burnt.

WEDNESDAY, July 14.

"O Israel, thou shalt not be forgotten of Me."—Isa. xliv. 21.

We think He has forgotten. We lie on our bed of pain, and He sends no chariot to fetch us home. We linger to extreme old age, and are lonely because all the companions of our youth have left our side, and it seems as though He had forgotten to send the ferry-boat across for his child. And the river-brink is cold. We toil all through the night against wind and wave, and it seems inexplicable that the Master tarries so long on the shore. We sit by our dead, and though we sent for Him four days ago, He has not come. We told Him that we had come to our last crust, but as yet no raven has brought us food.

When I was a very little boy, one stormy night, my father, who usually fetched me, when the weather was bad, forgot to call for me, and it grew later and later; all the other boys had been sent to bed, and I heard them proposing to send me, and I had never slept outside my father's house. I kept up as long as I could, and then my heart broke. It was only a momentary forgetting, however, for he came for me at last, through miles of storm, and love made amends. But not for a moment can God forget. He is never nearer than when He seems further. He has redeemed. His blood awaits its holy ministry of blotting out sin. He has tied up his heart with us. No: to thyself thou seemest forgotten, as a dead man, out of mind, but the Lord has graven thee on the palms of his hands, and thy need is ever before Him.

"Woe unto him that striveth with his Maker."—Isa. xlv. 9.

We may strive with God in two ways, saying, What makest Thou? or, He hath no hands; thus accusing Him of not having a definite purpose, or alleging that He is not taking the best method of accomplishing it. Have you ever questioned the love, or wisdom, or purpose of God in the moulding and education of your soul? Or have you questioned the benevolence of his methods? To do either of these is disastrous to peace of heart and growth in grace. We must believe that God is doing the very best for us, and doing it in the very best way.

God moulds us as a potter does his clay. In doing this, He comes to a point where our nature seems entrenched in all its might. We can yield everything but this. But not to yield this is to have yielded nothing. That is where the soul strives with God. It is the battlefield, the crisis, the crease-line of destiny. Is that thy case? I pray thee, yield as Jacob at Peniel, or one of two things will happen to thee. Either thou wilt be cast aside as a potsherd, to lie on the dust-heap with the potsherds of the earth, or thou wilt limp, halting on thy thigh to the end of thy pilgrimage.

FRIDAY, July 16.

"I have made, and I will bear."—Isa. xlvi. 4.

We must not press these words unduly, because we have doubtless warped our original constitution by habits of sin and selfishness, for which we are largely responsible. We may look to God for deliverance, but we cannot hold Him responsible.

But there are other attitudes of character and circumstances of life which are the direct result of God's appointment. He allowed us to be born with such a temperament, of such parents, and in such a home. He knew exactly what was to be the climate and colour of the land of our birth. He permitted us to begin our life-race with certain infirmities and disabilities, which have been apparently a great hindrance to our success. He has allowed us to enter a business, or become united in the marriage tie, which seems entirely hostile to our best interests. But all this should only cast us the more upon Him. "He will bear," as He hath borne, our griefs and our sorrows. It is when we touch the lowest depth of our trouble that we most clearly hear Him say, Child, my grace is sufficient for thee; thy weakness is that which the more calls forth my strength.

And not only so. By his grace He bears and upholds us in the circumstances in which He has placed us, but further He bears in patience and love much that our wilfulness puts upon Him. He bare our sins in his own body on the tree. How this should humble our pride and our self-will.

> Spirit of purity and grace,
> Our weakness pitying see!

O God, Thou hast made us, and not we ourselves; we are thy people and the sheep of thy pasture; bear with our wanderings and sins, till Thou hast made us what we would be and what Thou wouldst have us be.

SATURDAY, July 17.

"Come down and sit in the dust.—Isa. xlvii. 1.

To Israel the Divine summons is to arise from the dust, and sit on the throne; to Babylon to come down from the throne and sit in the dust. He that humbleth himself shall be exalted, he that exalteth himself shall be made low.

The sin charged on Babylon is her mercilessness. She was sent by God to execute judgment on the chosen people, but she performed her work very cruelly, and therefore she herself fell under the just judgment of the Almighty. The Jews were God's chosen instruments in consummating the death of Jesus, but because they did it with wicked hands, their city was left to them desolate.

God even now is judging nations, and we may well lift our prayers on behalf of our beloved country. She has been undoubtedly chosen of all the nations under heaven for great pioneering work. To colonise, to civilise heathen races, to make roadways across the ocean, to link the whole world by the nerves of telegraph wires, to carry the Gospel to every people—such has been her mission. But how much sin has mingled with its performance—the evil example of the soldiers, sailors, and civilians; lust, drink, fire-water, rapacity, land-grabbing. Let Great Britain be warned by the fate of Babylon.

Missionaries for Tanganyika.—A solemn and impressive farewell service was held in connection with the departure of Mr. and Mrs. W. Govan Robertson for Lake Tanganyika, Central Africa, in Free St. George's Church, Glasgow, on Saturday evening, June 27. Rev. D. D. Robertson, M.A., father of the missionary, presided. The London Missionary Society, with whom the missionaries are connected, was represented by Rev. A. N. Johnson, home secretary; Rev. Dr. Davis, late of Samoa; Revs. George Gladstone and E. Wareham, and Mr. R. W. Henry. There was a large attendance, and the addresses of the various speakers, including that of Mr. Govan Robertson, were listened to with the deepest interest. At the close, most of those present bade farewell to the young missionaries.

"Behold, What Love!"*

By Rev. H. M. WILLIAMSON, D.D.

WHEN our Lord was on the earth, at the memorable scene of his glory, standing near to the buried Lazarus, we are told that Jesus wept. Thank God, He did weep; and it is recorded that He is bone of our bone and flesh of our flesh. When the Jews saw Him weep, they said concerning the dead Lazarus, "Behold how He loved him!" If we have eyes to see and hearts to understand what all this means, surely every heart should say to-day, "Behold how He loved us."

This table speaks of love; speaks, indeed, as nothing else can, of the awful holiness and unswerving justice of the great God of heaven. But it specially speaks to us of love, speaks to us of the love of the Father who gave his Son to die for us, speaks to us of the self-sacrificing love of the Son who gave Himself up to the death for us, and of the love of the Holy Ghost in revealing to us this wondrous love wherewith He hath loved even sinners such as we are. But it specially speaks to us of the love of the Son; and we may well say, "Behold how he loved us."

Love is a wonderful thing, the strongest thing in the human breast—the love of a man for his fellow-man, the love of a woman for her child, the love of a husband for his wife. What shall we say of Christ's matchless love? It has in it all the greatness and infinitude of the love of God; and all the tenderness, nearness and gentleness of the love of man. It is the infinite God, who is Love, holding out his love towards us through a human heart. It comes so near us, that we can understand it. Above all, when we look at this broken bread and this poured-out wine, we all may exclaim to-day, "Herein is love, not that we loved God, but that He loved us, and sent his Son to be the propitiation for our sins."

May we realise, by the Holy Ghost, as we have not yet realised, the love of Christ. It is our sin, it is our misery, it is the weak thoughts we have of this love, that is incomprehensible. We ought to accuse ourselves daily of the beggarly thoughts we have of this love. Though it passeth knowledge, yet every one of us should feel how weak is our apprehension of it, how unworthy of Him who loved. God has so arranged as to call out and strengthen our love. May it be to-day a means of grace, so that we all may go away from this one table of the Lord with clearer views of the love of Jesus Christ. May we love Him henceforth till we go up yonder to the realm of love, with our own story, "Behold how He loved me."

Jesus Christ's love is expressed to us in various ways—in no way, perhaps, more than in this, when we understand it. But who understands it? Think of his love from eternity. We were alway in his purpose of love. "Before the foundations of the earth were laid, He loved me," the child of God may say. I was in the purpose of his heart, when He became incarnate. It was from love to such as I am that He became man. And when on earth how He loved us! Refresh yourself continually with the thought of that love.

The thoughts of Jesus are the thoughts of God, the words of Jesus are the words of God. His feeling towards men and sympathy towards the worst of sinners, his tenderness, long-suffering, and forbearance, all have a meaning when our eyes are opened to it. How longsuffering, forbearing, and tender He has been to me. We cannot fully realise here, but only yonder in eternity's story of each one of us, how "He loved me and gave Himself for me."

This ordinance, I apprehend, is intended for one thing especially beyond others. When the Gospel is preached, there is a sort of universality about it; but when the Master says to-day, "Take, eat," it is individualised, his love towards us, and is appropriated personally by each one of us. It is this which is the strength and marrow of our spirits, appropriating this wonderful love of Jesus Christ, as He gives not it but Himself over to us.

Who can talk or think of the love of the Master in his death and when He rose again, and not find Him as familiar as ever? During his forty days of resurrection life here his own were "children" still. As He was, so He is. He loves us just the same as when He was on earth. He is now the Risen One, but is still unchanged yonder. He loves us just as He did when He was on earth. His love is unchangeable.

Now may the Good Spirit, as we handle the memorials of his love to-day, cause each one to appropriate his love gift. "This is my body broken for you, my blood shed for you." Why, Lord, why? "Because I loved you and gave myself for you." He has loved, He loves now, He will love throughout the eternities; and so we may all say to-day, God helping us, "Behold how He loved us!"

After the company had partaken of the elements, Dr. Williamson continued his address as follows:—Whilst we have been sitting at this table of love, I trust that everyone of us has had much to say to the King, and much to ask of Him. None but the Heart Searcher can tell what are the requests which have been made to Him by each one of us. There is one request which, I think, will suit everyone of us—the reply of Esther to the question which King Ahasuerus put to her after the banquet, "What is thy petition, and it shall be granted unto thee." She asked her life and the life of her people. Doubtless, there has not been a communicant here who does not remember someone dear by ties of flesh and blood, but still condemned to death, because unforgiven. It is a grand opportunity when we get near the King and our hearts have gone out towards Him, to say, "O Master,

GRANT ME THE LIFE OF MY PEOPLE!"

It may be a son, a daughter, a brother or sister, or other kinsfolk. It is a favourable time, a grand and golden opportunity, as we are in fellowship with Him, to ask this; and if we ask it believingly, it shall certainly not be denied.

As we leave the table we may be feeling "Master, it is good to be here"; but that is not the way, and it is not good for us, though we may think otherwise. We must go down again to be witnesses for Jesus, and workers together with Him for the inbringing of that kingdom which is righteousness, peace and joy in the Holy Ghost. We are all going away, no doubt—I hope it is so—confessing what unfaithful witnesses we have been, while many an opportunity has been lost and is clean gone for ever. Many times have we been guilty of speaking for the Master in an unfortunate way, and we have to confess very much unfaithfulness. We have been asking forgiveness and, restoration. May we all go down to our different places and abodes because it has been as water spilled upon the ground; but warned by a thousand failures, may we cling to Christ, resolved, in his strength, to witness for Him and work together with Him until He comes, or we are caught up to meet Him yonder.

DISTRUSTING OUR OWN STRENGTH

I covet for myself and for you, to be able to write under our poor names this saying of the Apostle's, "Whose I am, and Whom I serve." God help every one of us to write afresh in our memories, in letters of love, "Lord Jesus, my Lord, my King—whose I am, and Whom I serve." Think of it every morning, before you see flesh and blood, and say, "Lord, what wilt Thou have me to do?" Remember that Paul, the saved sinner, used to say what you and I ought to try and say to our Master, if we have not yet done so, concerning our daily life and our hearts day by day, "For me to live is Christ."

Christ, a living principle—how hard is the lesson, as I conceive it, to have life in another, to have power in another, to have grace and strength in another. How long, while life lasts, I fear we struggle to have some of it in ourselves. Oh to be able to say uprightly, more and more, "For me to live is Christ; He is my living principle, and my guiding rule."

And then Christ the constraining motive. "The love of Christ constraineth me"—no lower motive or love. Love to us in his heart, our love back to Him. As we come under this royal law of love, we are Christians—no further, not a hair's breadth; and so should we add, in consciousness, what the Church is saying, what my moral nature is saying, "O Lord, Thou art my Master, what wilt Thou have me to do?" Then Christ shall be our last aim; and we shall seek that, whether in life or in death, Christ may be magnified in us.

The Lord help you, sisters, brothers all, so to live, "for me to live is Christ," till we meet yonder around the throne; thinking perhaps of this little scene here, where we have helped one another, pledged one another in fellowship, and pledged ourselves afresh to the Master. May we make it our motto, "Whose I am, and Whom I serve"; all going from this table, resolved, in his strength, to live thus until He come or we go to meet Him yonder.

* Address at the Communion of the Lord's Supper at Mildmay Conference, on Thursday, June 17.

Zenana Bible and Medical Mission.

ON Tuesday last week the workers of the Z.B. and M.M. assembled from all parts of the country for conference and prayer at Princess House, Brompton-road, W. The value of the meeting was enhanced by the opportunity afforded the home workers of hearing the great needs of India from the lips of several ladies from the foreign field. The morning meeting was presided over by the Hon. Gertrude Kinnaird, who explained that the object of the conference was to arouse more enthusiasm in the various associations and to increase the number of those interested in the work.

Miss Davies, from Aligarh, spoke very hopefully of the future. There were discouragements, she said, but these were never mentioned, and each day on reaching home they told each other all that was interesting and encouraging. The great difficulty in missionary work was to break down prejudice and superstition, but "by hammering on the brass you beat out the pattern," and by constantly telling these people of the love of God they would soon learn to believe in Him. Miss Davies told some touching stories of the terrible sufferings from famine. Several mothers had sold their girls for two annas (threepence) to buy food. One mother had cooked the food, but when it was set before her a feeling of remorse came over her, and she went and drowned herself. Mrs. Nikambé (wife of a native pastor from Bombay); Miss Gregory, from Patna; and Miss Penny, from Benares, gave particulars of their work.

Mr. W. T. Paton presided at the afternoon meeting, which was specially devoted to considering how best the work of the society could be promoted, and how to solve the perplexing problem of a probable deficit of £2500 at the end of the current year.

The Hon. G. Kinnaird pleaded earnestly for increased support and increased effort to enable them to maintain the existing work. The closing of a single station would mean closing the only opportunity that the women had of hearing the Gospel. They could not withdraw any of the missionaries without making a very great effort to raise the necessary funds. The famine relief work meant greater opportunities and fresh openings, therefore instead of decreasing the staff more missionaries were needed at every station. Miss Barlow, Lord Radstock, and Rev. A. R. Cavalier also spoke. At a third meeting, specially devoted to prayer, Lord Radstock gave an address.

Miss Fanny J. Crosby.

OUR portrait this week is of a sweet singer in Israel, one whose hymns are sung wherever the English language is used. In church and mission hall, in sailors' rest and soldiers' barracks, this singer's tuneful words are employed in the praise of God.

Frances (or Fanny) Jane Crosby was born in South East, Putnam County, New York, in 1820. When only six weeks old an affection of the eyes demanded attention, and, whether from improper treatment or the operation of causes beyond the reach of medical skill, the little one's power of sight entirely disappeared. As she grew, Frances developed a singularly happy disposition, and childhood was to her a period of unalloyed delight. In course of time she discovered that there was a sight-world in which she had no part, but she declined to be commiserated on the matter of her blindness, and at the age of eight thus expressed her view of the situation :—

Oh, what a happy soul am I!
Although I cannot see,
I am resolved that in this world
Contented I will be;
How many blessings I enjoy
That other people don't!
To weep and sigh because I'm blind
I cannot, and I won't.

We know little of the useful life of the subject of our sketch beyond what is related in a deeply interesting little volume which has been published, entitled Bells at Evening (2s. Morgan & Scott), giving a selection of her poems, secular and religious, the latter including many of her choice hymns. A biographical sketch, by Rev. Robert Lowry, is prefixed, and we shall continue our story by making brief extracts therefrom :—

"When about nine years old, she was taken by her parents to Ridgefield, Conn., where the family remained four years. After the death of her father, her opportunities for mental improvement were in a degree interrupted. This would have been a serious thing to her, but for the one happy event which turned and fixed the course of her life. At the age of fifteen she entered the New York Institution for the Blind. Here she remained as a pupil for twelve years. In 1847 she became a teacher, in which position she continued till 1858. She taught English grammar, rhetoric, and Roman and American history. This was the developing period in her life. The darkness that was upon the face of the deep gave place to the form and symmetry of intellectual expansion.

"The Bible, studded with golden texts, became a never-failing treasury to this blind girl passing up into womanhood. So tenacious is her memory, that in her early years she committed the first four books of the Old Testament, and also the four Gospels. Her hymns abound with phrases of Scripture which readily adapt themselves to rhythmic expression. Her mind is stored with much that she has learned from various authors, Once in possession of a thought of value, she assimilates it, reproduces it, makes it her own by putting on it the stamp of her individuality.

"On January 24, 1844, seventeen pupils were taken to Washington to give a practical demonstration before the Senate and House of Representatives, of the good results attending a systematic instruction of the blind. In this august presence, stirred by eloquent speeches and regaled with sweet singing, our gifted poet poured her soul out in words that held all hearers captive. From a poem of thirteen stanzas we select the following :—

'What though these orbs in rayless darkness roll?
Instruction pours its radiance o'er the soul;
And fancy pictures to the mental eye
The glittering hosts that 'lume the midnight sky.
O ye who here from every State convene,
Illustrious Band! may we not hope the scene
You now behold will prove to every mind
Instruction hath a ray to cheer the blind.'

"Three volumes of her poems have been published. The first was issued in 1844, entitled, 'The Girl, and Other Poems'; a second volume followed in 1849, called 'Monterey, and Other Poems;' and a third, 'A Wreath of Columbia's Flowers,' was issued in 1858. While these productions are all creditable to the author, it is in no wise on them that her fame is based. It is as a writer of hymns, especially as popularized in Sunday-schools for the last thirty years, that she has made a name for herself wherever the English language is spoken. Nor is her celebrity confined to people of her native tongue; in almost all quarters of the world her hymns have been translated, and are sung by Christian people everywhere.

"It was on February 5, 1864, that she wrote the first of that long series of hymns which has run up into the thousands. This hymn was written for W. B. Bradbury, who was then devoting himself to musical service among the young, and was followed by scores of others for use in various books which Mr. Bradbury edited. At Mr. Bradbury's funeral, this first hymn became invested with a kind of sacredness in being sung in connection with the musical exercises. Its opening lines read thus :—

'We are going, we are going
To a home beyond the skies.'

"As has already been intimated, Fanny Crosby does not mourn over the fact that she is blind. She is firmly of opinion that her blindness has proved a blessing. 'If I had not been deprived of sight,' she says, 'I should never have received so good an education, nor have cultivated so fine a memory, nor have been able to do good to so many people?' This is her consolation and her joy. She does not seem to need a special inspiration in order to write. She is very susceptible to a suggestion from without. One day, while meditating on the leadings of Providence, a friend came into her room and gave her ten dollars. The unexpected gift awakened a train of thought that formulated itself in one of her best hymns :—

'All the way my Saviour leads me.'

"At another time her attention was called to the sweet sense of security felt by the soul that puts its whole trust in Jesus. Instantly the thought began to take metrical form, and, almost as rapidly as the words could be put together, she had struck off, in the white heat of her own religious emotion, that hymn of faith and comfort,

'Safe in the arms of Jesus,' which at once she adopted as her favourite. Under a similar impulse, she wrote,

'Rescue the perishing;'

a hymn of wonderful usefulness, and which, in diction and sentiment, is scarcely to be surpassed by anything she has ever produced."

But we must stay quotation, and refer our readers to the book for other particulars of the author of "I am thine, O Lord," "So near to the Kingdom," "'Tis the blessed hour of prayer," "Hold Thou my hand," "Pass me not, O gentle Saviour," "Blessed assurance," and other pieces that have cheered saints and arrested sinners, helped in evangelisation and given depth to true devotion in all parts of the globe. There are two portraits of the poet; those who know some of her hymns will like to see others, and also to read her more general poetical writings.

Rome in India.

In almost every station in India there is a charitable undenominational institution called the "Friend in Need Society." It doles out small monthly sums to necessitous Europeans and Eurasians; provides board and lodging; pays railway fares, and in fact acts the part of Poor Law Board. It is managed by a committee, the secretary of which is not unusually the Church of England chaplain.

One fact which appears prominently is this: the vast majority of those relieved—in Southern India—are Romanists. In each case the story is the same, "Have you been to the priests?" "Yes, sir, but he said they are too poor, and I must go to the 'Friend in Need Society'"! On reference to the books of the Society one is struck by the fact that the priests and Romish community do not subscribe to the funds. In this station one priest subscribes one rupee monthly, but no Romish contribution comes as a matter of course; whereas, Protestants almost all subscribe, and Protestant churches send offertories.

This plea of poverty comes well from a system which has the largest buildings in the place, convents, schools, cathedrals, huge priests' houses; and whose priests and bishops drive about in carriages. What becomes of all the money screwed out of the Romish congregations? It certainly is not spent on the poor; and no greater proof of this assertion can be afforded than the books of the "Friend in Need Society."—Yours faithfully

Alfred Porcelli.

The Regulation of Vice.—The annual meeting of the Ladies' National Association for the Abolition of Government Regulation of Vice will be held on Friday evening, at 7.30, in St. Martin's Town Hall, Charing Cross. Mrs. Butler will (D.V.) preside, and several long-trusted leaders of the Abolitionist movement will speak on matters of extreme moment.

A Union of Peoples.

By ARTHUR BOOTH-CLIBBORN.

WE have recently been again reminded that God has made of one blood all the nations of men. But the surroundings of bayonets and cannon must also remind all Christians that fallen man has never been able to make nations but by blood shedding. Unions based upon carnal force are as deceptive as salvation by mere human morality. The fact that this union of races, and also the half-hour's union of religious denominations, took place between two lines of redcoats, arouses a feeling of the obligation under which our very spiritual existence places us to testify to the world that there is a uniting power as eternal as the other is transient—as real as the other is allusive. At Calvary we are given a blood relationship as far superior to all ties which bind fallen humanity as Christ is to Cain. Our King founded his Kingdom by shedding his own blood, not that of his enemies, and thus taught us that the way to save the unconverted, or to bring about union between Christians, is not carnal strife, but for each one to take up his cross, and "lay down his life for his brethren."

Loyalty to Christ can be as powerful a bond as loyalty to an earthly sovereign. Has He not made of one blood—the blood of Calvary—all the denominations of his saved people? One of the chief lessons of the union of peoples at the Jubilee must be that they each need each other in the exact ratio of their contrasts and differences. And do not Christians also generally need most those who are the least like them? Is not this so with widely contrasting members of our body, such as, for instance, the hand and the eye?

A glimpse into two united gatherings of Christains, which occurred just at Jubilee time, may not be unprofitable. At the

MANCHESTER CONVENTION,

Church of England, Society of Friends, Baptist, Independent, Congregationalist, Wesleyan, Salvation Army, were represented. The subject was ful salvation. The Spirit of God was powerfully present. There was much cordiality, simplicity, and naturalness, so that many remarked: "This is the most unconventional convention we have ever attended."

Though no particular method of working was sought, some 200 people rose at the end of the evening meetings and came forward to kneel at the front seats and seek the face of God—many in much brokenness. The cross and cross-bearing were dealt with in power. The chief chorus in the meetings was one come fresh from the Continent:—

> There alone in full salvation,
> Power and peace and consolation.
> Glory in humiliation,
> Come, my brother, to your cross.

The eminent Christian business man of Manchester who had organised the Convention, Mr. Frank Crossley, had been called home since the last gathering, but, with that sacrifice of personal feeling which all real Christian work calls for, his devoted wife and co-worker was on the platform at nearly every meeting, helping the leader, though taking little public part. To a Salvationist the Convention afforded a special privilege in public-house visitation with hard-working comrades of Cottonopolis. We met by arrangement at a specially godless corner of the city. There cannot be a much better lining to a convention coat than a couple of hours' salvation work in the public-houses before closing-time. God was with us in much power and love. Though we were put out of several, we were able to sing and speak and pray in many. I found the Manchester public-houses more tolerant than the average of Continental cafés, but the style of drinking is more grim, determined, and besotted. One poor man in a corner avowed to me sadly that he had that night returned to drink for the first time after two months' abstinence. After some quiet conversation, he agreed to give all up again and seek salvation; but we were interrupted by a shout, and turning round, I saw the publican, whom my comrades had "engaged" and thus kept away at the other end of the bar, come clambering over the counter. He put me out angrily with the words, "You are taking the bread out of our mouths." How true that the saving of a soul must always mean taking the "bread" of selfishness out of someone's mouth. All Christian worldliness, pride, love of money, and fear of man must die if dead souls are to live.

One of the two Manchester Salvationists who accompanied me, though only twenty-two years of age, knew most of the public-houses of the region by sad personal experience until rescued by the Salvation Army cohorts. There was a nice Jubilee-fellowship sound in hearing my brother "redcoat" give spontaneous testimony to the great good done in the region by the Crossley Mission Halls.

On the last evening my cousin, Rev. George Grubb, joined our party after the meeting, and we both agreed that we never felt God's presence more than in the short "services" we were able to conduct in several "parlours," though the landlady put us out of one with an oath in the name of her orthodoxy and church membership.

One hears on all sides, and from Christians of every denomination, that England is getting worse instead of better, and that religion has less and less hold upon the masses. Be that as it may, the Jubilee, seen through the thick atmosphere of the public-houses of England, looks as blood-red as the sun at sunset.

WITH THE C.I.M.

On Jubilee Tuesday—without any forethought or pre-arrangement having caused the coincidence of dates—a number of Christians of all denominations were gathered in the quiet hall of the China Inland Mission in the north of London. These united open meetings for waiting upon God and seeking a renewal of Divine life were led by Pastor Stockmayer. The Spirit of God was present in much power, and the united prayer which was offered for the Queen—just at that hour at St. Paul's—and for the nation and the people of God throughout the world, cannot have been ill-timed or unavailing.

The chief subject of the meetings was the fulness of Divine life for our entire being which comes when a whole sacrifice is laid upon the altar, and the subjection of the carnal life which ever operates for division and weakness among the people of God. Is it not just the pre-eminence of our noble Queen among the sovereigns of the earth and of Christian history that makes us see all the more clearly the humiliation behind the glory of the Jubilee, as we think of the real state of the most religious nation and colonies of the earth, and the moral condition of its armies in many places?

If the 120 seats could be brought into as complete a bankruptcy of all carnal force and carnal hope, and as complete a humiliation as that of the 120 disciples in the upper room, what might not follow? And why not? O for a Jubilee for our King!

At the Naval Review.

"HOW did you know you were off the British coast?" was a question once asked at an inquiry into the cause of a vessel which was wrecked.

"By the lifeboats which immediately put off to us," was the answer.

Surely the foreign seamen were equally aware they were in British waters when they saw their vessels boarded by Englishmen whose object was to offer them the written Gospels.

One is thankful to report the news that our brethren located at Portsmouth (including Mr Fison and Mr. Hogben) visited every foreign war vessel and distributed copies of the Gospels to the seamen, who received them thankfully. On board the huge Lepanto, the largest war vessel afloat, the Italian officers said, "You may go anywhere, and do what you like." The German commander wrote to Mr. Hogben, thanking him for his kindness and care of his men. Mr. Hogben was also able to invite a large number of the foreign seamen to tea on Sunday at the Welcome Mission. Only on board the Spanish man-of-war was any opposition seen, and then only by the chaplain, after nearly all the sailors had been supplied. May we not expect our God to bless and honour his own Word so largely distributed? Nor were the tens of thousands of excursionists who poured into Portsmouth forgotten by the Lord's servants.

The Sunday League alone brought down 24,000 people on Sunday, and workers were busy giving away suitable booklets, etc. Two or three brethren gave away 6000 in half an hour. Thinking there would be need of special open-air preaching on Southsea Common, Mr. F. Cockrem requested me to go down to represent the Open-Air Mission. The tremendous storms we experienced somewhat interfered with our plans, but we were able to combine our forces, and on the Sunday evening specially we had a protracted and large open-air service, at which definite cases of blessing were seen.

Mr. Fison, of the Bethesda Mission, and Mr. Denning, of the Southsea Tent Mission, being present with all their workers; bright singing, with solos and addresses by many brethren, kept the meeting going till nearly ten o'clock. The storm of Saturday drove some hundreds of people into the tent, where Mr. Elliott, the evangelist, welcomed them to the shelter afforded, and then for an hour preached and sang the Gospel to them.
